An English-Latin Gradus, or Verse Dictionary, intended to simplify the Composition of Latin Verses, by Classified Meanings, selected Epithets, Synonyms, &c. By A. C. AINGER, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge, and H. G. WINTLE, M.A., Christ Church, Oxford, Assistant Masters in Eton College. 418 pp. Crown 8vo, 9s.

Little Arthur's Histories.

England, from the Earliest Times, continued down to 1878. With 36 Woodcuts. 1s. 6d.

France, from the Earliest Times to the Fall of the Second Empire. Maps and Woodcuts. 2s. 6d.

Mrs. Markham's Histories.

England, from the First Invasion by the Romans down to the year 1850. 100 Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

France, from the Conquest of Gaul by Cæsar down to 1878. 70 Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

Germany, from the Invasion by Marius to 1850. 50 Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

Eton College Books.

The Eton Latin Grammar. An Entirely New Work for Advanced Students. By F. H. RAWLINS, M.A., and W. R. INGE, M.A. 6s.

The Eton Elementary Latin Grammar. By A. C. AINGER, M.A., and H. G. WINTLE, M.A. 3s. 6d.

Also, by the same Editors.

A First Latin Exercise Book. Adapted to the above Grammar. 2s.

The Preparatory Eton Grammar. Abridged from the above Book. 2s.

The Eton Fourth Form Ovid and Tibullus. With Notes by H. G. WINTLE. 2s. 6d.

The Eton Horace. THE ODES, EPICURES, AND CÆCILIUS SECULARIS. With Notes by F. W. CORNISH. Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Eton Exercises in Algebra. By E. P. ROUSE and A. COCKSHOTT. Crown 8vo, 3s.

Eton Exercises in Arithmetic. By Rev. T. DALTON, M.A. Crown 8vo, 3s.

Standard School Books.

Electricity: The Science of the 19th Century. By E. M. CAILLARD. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The Invisible Powers of Nature. Some Elementary Lessons in Physical Science for Young Beginners. By E. M. CAILLARD. 6s.

Kirkes' Handbook of Physiology. Edited by W. MORRANT BAKER and V. D. HARRIS. Illustrations. 14s.

A Dictionary of Place Names. Giving their Derivations. With Introduction by JOHN S. BLACKIE. 7s.

A Short Practical Hebrew Grammar. With Analysis and Vocabulary. By Prof. STANLEY LEATHER. 7s. 6d.

Newth's First Book of Natural Philosophy. Small 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Oxenham's English Notes for Latin Elegiacs. With Rules of Composition. 3s. 6d.

Hutton's Principia Græcæ. Grammar, Delectus, Exercise Book, with Vocabulary, &c. 12mo, 3s. 6d.

Lyell's Students' Elements of Geology. A New Edition. By Prof. MARTIN DUNCAN. 60 Illustrations. 9s.

* DETAILED CATALOGUE SENT GRATIS BY POST ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
HOWELL'S CRITICISM AND FICTION, by J. A. NOBLE	209
HERKLESS'S LIFE OF CARDINAL BEATON, by ARTHUR GALTON	210
GORDON'S THE FOLK OF CARLEBY, by W. WALLACE	211
THE STORY OF THE "IMITATIO CHRISTI," by the Rev. S. KETTLEWELL	212
BOHM, BAWERK'S POSITIVE THEORY OF CAPITAL, by J. BONAR	213
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	213
SOME BIOGRAPHICAL BOOKS	214
NOTES AND NEWS	215
ORIGINAL VERSE: "THE ANTIQUITY OF MAN," by Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS	216
OBITUARY: WILLIAM HENRY WIDGERY	216
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	217
THE CLARENDON PRESS ANNOUNCEMENTS	217
MESSESS. MACMILLAN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	218
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	218
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Illawo White's Sonnet—"Night and Death," by J. D. C.; Cleopatra and other River-Names, by the Rev. E. McClure; The Study of Celtic in Scotland, by Alfred Nutt; The Date of Kipl's Spanish Toy-Boys, by Dr. Arnold Schriber; The Little-late Prize at Trinity College, Dublin, by the Rev. John A. Cross	219
HISTORICAL DICTIONARY OF THE HUNGARIAN LANGUAGE, by A. J. PATTERSON	220
THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS	221
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The First Introduction of Buddhism into China, by Herbert J. Allen; "Kad'sman," by Theo. G. Pinches	221
SCIENCE NOTES	221
SOME ARCHAEOLOGICAL BOOKS	222
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Sikelos on the Egyptian Monuments, by Prof. Sayce	222
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	223
STAGE NOTES	223
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	223

A HIGHLY Recommended ENGLISH GOVERNESS seeks RE-ENGAGEMENT in a Family. Is a lady by birth, and teaches thorough English, and Arithmetic, Latin, Science, French (France), German (Germany), some Italian, good Music and Singing. Very pleasing and companionable. Age 26. Five years' experience.—Miss E., Messrs. Biver's Governess Agency, 288, Regent Street, London, W.

BRIGHTEST AFRICA.—Capt. EDW. C. MORE is OPEN to ENGAGEMENTS for his Central African Lectures.—Address 22, Montague Road, Hornsey, London, N.

AS CURATOR OF MUSEUM or LIBRARY.—A practical Gentleman, who has travelled for many years, seeks an APPOINTMENT.—Address M. M., THE ACADEMY, 27, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

RUGBY.—TO LET (near School), from Sept. 20th, HOUSE, containing 2 Reception and 6 Bedrooms, Bath room, and every convenience. Good walled-in garden.—For apply J. Youg, Oxford Street, Rugby.

IMMEDIATE POSSESSION.

HANDSOME SUITE OF ROOMS, Second Floor.—Opposite British Museum Gates—suitable as offices or superior residential chambers. £35 to £145, according to requirements.—HAYWARD, 50, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury. Also, NEAR SAME, ARTS and CRAFTS STUDIO, or OFFICE, with Workshop.

TO ARTISTS and others.—TO be LET, excellent STUDIO and snug BACHELORS' QUARTERS combined, in central position, and midway between City and West-end. Studio has uninterrupted north-east and top lights. Cooking and Attendance by resident housekeepers. Electric light, hall porter, &c.—Apply to HORSKNEAR, 65 and 66, Chancery Lane; or to the Manager, Chancery Lane.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

GLADWELL BROTHERS' FINE ART GALLERY, 20 and 21, Gracechurch Street, E.C.—A dissolution of partnership being in progress, the remaining STOCK, accumulated during the past half century, is now being SOLD for cash, without regard to publication prices.

GLADWELL'S important SALE of FINE ART STOCK is now in progress, and will be continued for a short time only, as the partnership heretofore subsisting will be dissolved on Dec. 31 next. A large portion of the Stock will be sold for cash at less than half price.—GLADWELL BROTHERS, 20 and 21, Gracechurch Street.

CATALOGUES. FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand. TWO per CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT. For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

COUNTY OF MONMOUTH.
The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint the following Members of a Staff of Travelling Teachers in Technical Subjects for the County of Monmouth:
A LECTURER in CHEMISTRY and METALLURGY.
A LECTURER in GEOLOGY and MINING.
The stipend of each Lecturer will be £200 per annum, together with travelling expenses.—Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be sent in not later than SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 13th, 1891, to the undersigned, from whom further information in regard to the duties of the Staff may be obtained.
IVOR JAMES, Registrar.
Cardiff, August 28th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

THE DEPARTMENTS OF ARTS, SCIENCE, and ENGINEERING and the NORMAL DEPARTMENTS for INTERMEDIATE and ELEMENTARY TEACHERS will OPEN on MONDAY, OCTOBER 27th, 1891. The Lectures and Classes are open to Men and Women. For Prospectuses and information concerning Scholarships, &c., apply to IVOR JAMES, Registrar.
University College, Cardiff,
August 11th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in GEOLOGY. The stipend of the Lecturer will be £200 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded on or before TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. For further information apply to IVOR JAMES, Registrar.
Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a PROFESSOR of MINING. The stipend of the Professor will be £500 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded on or before TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. For further information apply to IVOR JAMES, Registrar.
Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

THE THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, BALA, NORTH WALES.

The College will be OPENED on the 28th and 29th of this month. Principal FAIRBAIRN will PREACH at 5 p.m. on MONDAY, the 28th. COMMUNION SERVICE at 9 a.m. on TUESDAY. FORMAL OPENING of the College at 10.30. THE ENTRANCE EXAMINATION will be held at 9 a.m. on WEDNESDAY, the 29th. For Prospectuses apply to the Registrar, The Rev. ALUN JONES, Plasgrae, Bala.

THE MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

SESSION 1891-92.
FACULTIES OF ARTS AND SCIENCE.
THE NEXT SESSION commences on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th, 1891.
A Syllabus, containing full information as to the various courses of instruction, lecture days and hours, fees, entrance and other scholarships, &c., is published by Messrs. Consinn, New-street, Birmingham, price 2d. by post, 3d.
Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Secretary, at the College.
R. S. HEATH, Principal.
Geo. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.
Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge.
Professors—Seely, King's Coll.; Dr. Duleken, Rudolph, Lowman, Louis Diehl, Signor Garcia, Larpet, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.
Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL for the COUNTY PALATINE OF LANCASTER.

The Technical Instruction Committee of the Lancashire County Council is prepared to receive applications for the appointment of DIRECTOR of TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION and ORGANIZING SECRETARY. The applicant to state whether he is prepared to give the whole of his time to the duties of the office.
Candidates must be over 25 years of age and under 50, and the elected candidate will be expected to enter on his duties on the 6th November, 1891.
Salary £200 per annum with a reasonable allowance for travelling expenses.
The official will not be eligible for a pension, and the appointment is to be determinable by a six months' notice in writing on either side.
A statement of the duties will be supplied on application.
All applications with testimonials to be sent to me, the undersigned, before the 30th day of SEPTEMBER, 1891.
FRED. C. HUTTON, Clerk of the County Council.
County Office, Preston,
1st September, 1891.

INEXPENSIVE, SOUND EDUCATION

at SCHORNE COLLEGE, WINSLOW.—Nearly Five Hundred Army and Navy Boys, Clergy Sons, Medical, &c., have been educated in either the Classical or Modern Side, and the School has a good record. Thirty numbers a year. Boys over 15 preparing for Oxford Examinations, Army Preliminary, Cambridge Locals, Coll. Precep. Exams., &c., 40 guineas.—Rev. Dr. JAMES.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL OF MUSIC,

114, Cambridge Street, Warwick Square, S.W.—Miss O'REILLY, late student Royal College of Music, and Mrs. FEDAR, A.C.M. prepare students in PIANO and THEORY for the Royal College of Music. Fee per term £4 4s. Term begins OCTOBER 1st. Prospectuses

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE,
Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
Every Evening, at 8, THE TRUMPET CALL.
Messrs. Leonard Boyne, J. D. Beveridge, L. Rignold, C. Dalton, Douglass, East, Russell, Leigh, Keith, Drew, J., and W. Northcote, &c.; Mesdames E. Robins, Campbell, Leigh, and Clara Jecks.

AVENUE THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. GASTON MAYER.
Every Evening, at 9, "YVETTE," a musical play without words, by Michel Carré (author of "L'Enfant Prodigue") and M. Romond, with music by M. A. Godeghe, will be produced by Mr. Gaston Mayer.
Preceded at 8.20, by operetta,
THE TWO BLIND.

COMEDY THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrey, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, W. Wyles, and G. Giddens; Mesdames Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.15, by ROSABEL.

CRITERION THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 8.30, MISS DECIMA.
Messrs. David James, Charles Conyers, Chauncey Olcott, Templar Saxe, W. Dale; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Josephine Findlay, Lucy Buckstone, F. Frances, and Nesville.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.
Sole Lessee and Manager, Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Every Evening, at 8, A SAILOR'S KNOT.
Messrs. Charles Warner, Charles Glenney, Edmund Gurney, Julian Cross, W. Luig, F. McViears, A. Phillips, F. Dobell, T. Terriss, R. Power, W. Staunton, and Harry Nicholls; Mesdames Millward and Fanny Brough.

LYCEUM THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 8.15, Augustin Daly's Company, in A NIGHT OFF.
Messrs. Lewie, Drew, Clarke, Leclercq; Mesdames Ada Rohan, Gilbert, Irving, Prince.

LYRIC THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15, LA CIGALE.
Messrs. H. Monkhouse, E. W. Garden, Eric Lewis, John Peachey, and C. Hayden Coffin; Mesdames Annie Schubert, Annie Rose, F. Melville, St. Cyr, and Ellis Jefferies.
Preceded, at 7.30, by LOVE and LAW.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.
Proprietor, Mr. CHARLES WILMOT.
Every Evening, at 8, A ROYAL OCCURE.
Messrs. Murray Carson, G. W. Cockburn, Eardley Turner, T. W. Percyval, J. A. Welch, Henry de Solla, F. Victor, T. Alker, Dwyer, Ludlow, &c.; Mesdames Leslie Bell, Georgie Esmond, Lillian Scoble, Louie Wilmot, Louisa Wyatt, Madge Herrick, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT-BASING.
Every Evening, at 8, ARKANA-POGUE.
Messrs. Henry Neville, Wilfred E. Shine, Basset Roe, Chas. Ashford, Henry Bedford, John Carter, T. Vermer, T. Kingston, and Arthur Ducre; Mesdames Amy Roselle, John Carter, and Ella Terriss.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.
Under the sole direction of Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
Every Evening, at 9, L'ENFANT PRODIGE.
A Musical Play without words;
M. Cortes, M. de Gasperi, M. Louis Gougat; Mdlle. Jane May, Madame Schmidt, Mdlle. Francesca Zanfretta.
Preceded, at 8, by THE 15TH OF OCTOBER.

SAVOY THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'LYLY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, and C. Ponds; Mesdames L. Snyder, A. Cole, C. Tinnie, Saumarez, Shalders, Briant, and Kate James.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 8.15, THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR.
A COMMISSION.
And at 10, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL.
Messrs. B. Thomas, F. Dawson, C. Coutts, C. P. Little, W. L. Branscombe, Lucy, and G. Grossmith; Mesdames E. Chester, B. Lamb, D. Drummond, S. Grey, and Norreys.

STRAND THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDGON.
Every Evening, at 8.15,
THE LATE LAMENTED.
Messrs. Willie Edgouin, H. Standing, H. Eversfield, G. P. Hawtrey, F. Cape, S. Barraclough, and A. May; Mesdames Cicely Richards, E. Moore, E. Phelps, and V. Bennett.
At 8, BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 9, THE MISCHIEF MAKER.
Preceded, at 8.15, by THE SEQUEL.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.
Lessee, Mr. THOMAS THORNTON.
Every Evening, at 8.30, MY SWEETHEART.
Preceded, at 8, by WELL MATCHED.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES—RECENT DECISIONS—CASES OF THE WEEK—CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS—SOLICITORS' CASES—REVIEWS—NEW ORDERS—GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE—COURTS—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION—APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, WC..

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

- BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
- SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,
- POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
- PIES. Also,
- ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
- TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
- SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

JAPANESE POTTERY,

WITH NOTES

Describing the Emblems, the Poetical Associations, and other thoughts and subjects employed in the Decoration of the Wares, an Account of the Festivals, and of some of the Customs of Japan.

By JAMES L. BOWES.

Imperial 8vo, cloth, 600 pp., with Plates, £2 12s. 6d.
The "Extra Illustrated Edition" half-morocco, gilt top, £6 6s. (Only a few copies left.)

Japan Mail.—"It is a noble book... a book of the most valuable and genuine character. It is evident that Mr. Bowes has brought together a really representative collection, and that he has made every specimen it contains the object of careful research and intelligent scrutiny."
China Telegraph.—"Few are entitled to speak with absolute authority, but of these Mr. Bowes stands foremost. Virtually a complete history of the art. To the true connoisseur it needs little recommendation."

The Academy.—"Produced with singular care and completeness... A worthy sequel to the author's previous labours in the cause of Japanese art."

The Times.—"Worthy of its subject and its author."

The Art Journal.—"Remarkably free from mistakes."

The Saturday Review.—"Let us repeat our admiration of Mr. Bowes' beautiful and enticing volume."

The Architect.—"A guide for the collector, and the best of its kind."

The Builder.—"Not only one of the most beautiful, but one of the most useful and rational books upon Japanese art which has been published in England."

Notes and Queries.—"To collectors his books are as authoritative as is to the lover of Elzevirs the priceless book of Mr. Willems."

St James's Gazette.—"The volume is one in which the connoisseur will delight."

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited
Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL.

Just published, crown 4to, over 300 pages, fully illustrated, and handsomely bound in cloth, price 21s.

ROCKINGHAM CASTLE and the WATSONS. By CHAS. WISE.

ELLIOT STREET, 22, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON; Messrs. W. E. & J. Goss, Market Place, Kettering; and (by order) from any Bookseller.

PITMAN'S SHORTHAND

IS WRITTEN BY

93 per Cent. Reporters

(Vide Printers' Register),

AND

98 per Cent. Clerks

(Vide Western Morning News).

Write for POCKET ALPHABET (free), or send 6d. for the "PHONOGRAPHIC TEACHER," to your nearest Bookseller, or to the Publishers,

ISAAC PITMAN & SONS,
AMEN CORNER, E.C.; BATH, and NEW YORK.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons

on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other

Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

BLACKWOOD'S EDUCATIONAL LIST.

A NEW ENGLISH GRAMMAR.

Blackwood's Elementary Grammar and Composition. Based on the Analysis of Sentences. With a Chapter on Word-Building and Derivation, and containing numerous Exercises. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.

"A very valuable book... A junior text-book that is calculated to yield most satisfactory results."—Schoolmaster.

A Working Handbook of the Analysis of SENTENCES. With Notes on Parsing, Paraphrasing, Figures of Speech, and Prosody. For Senior Pupils and Pupil Teachers. 1s. 6d.

"The book deserves unstinted praise... One of the best and soundest productions on analysis of sentences we have yet met with."—Schoolmaster.

Just published, price 1s.

Manual Instruction—Woodwork. Designed to meet the Requirements of the Minute of the Science and Art Department on Manual Instruction. By GEORGE ST. JOHN, Undenominational School, Handsworth, Birmingham. With 100 Illustrations.

"An excellent little manual, which ought to prove extremely useful alike to teachers and scholars... It is a capital little book."—Carpenter and Builder.

Rev. James Stormonth's Dictionary of the English Language. Carefully Revised by the Rev. P. H. PHELP, M.A. Library Edition, half-morocco, 31s. 6d. Handy Edition, 7s. 6d. School Edition, 2s.

Professor Nicholson's Manual of Zoology. Seventh Edition, Rewritten and Enlarged. Post 8vo, with Engravings, 18s.

Text-Book of Zoology. Fourth Edition, Enlarged. Crown 8vo, with Engravings, 7s. 6d.

Introductory Text-Book of Zoology. Sixth Edition. 8s.

Outlines of Natural History. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

Manual of Palæontology. By Professor NICHOLSON, D.Sc., F.G.S., &c., and R. LYDEKKER, B.A. Third Edition. 2 vols., 8vo, 1,621 pp., 1,410 Illustrations, 63s.

Dr. Page's Introductory Text-Book of Physical GEOGRAPHY. Revised and Enlarged, by Professor LAFWORTH. Twelfth Edition. 2s. 6d.

Advanced Text-Book of Physical GEOGRAPHY. Revised and Enlarged. With Engravings. Third Edition. 5s.

Introductory Text-Book of Geology. With Engravings. Twelfth Edition, Revised. 3s. 6d.

Advanced Text-Book of Geology. Sixth Edition. With Glossary. 7s. 6d.

Rev. Dr. Mackay's Outlines of Modern Geography. 188th Thousand, Revised. 1s.

Intermediate Geography. Sixteenth Edition, Revised. 2s.

Elements of Modern Geography. Fifty-third Thousand, Revised. 3s.

Manual of Modern Geography. Eleventh Thousand, Revised. 7s. 6d.

Professor Minto's Manual of English Prose Literature, BIOGRAPHICAL and CRITICAL. Third Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Characteristics of English Poets, from Chaucer to Shirley. New Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Dr. Cuthbertson's Primer of Geometry. Sixth Edition. 1s. 6d.

Dr. Pott's and Rev. C. Darnell's Aditus Faciliores: an Easy Latin Construing Book. Tenth Edition. 3s. 6d.

Aditus Faciliores Græci: an Easy Greek Construing Book. Fourth Edition. 3s.

Dr. Ross's Practical Rudiments of the Latin Language. Third Edition. 1s. 6d.

Rev. John Gerard's Stonyhurst Latin Grammar. 3s.

Rev. J. Hunter Smith's Greek Testament Lessons. With Maps. 6s

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

FIVE NEW NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER A CHARM."
BEACON FIRES.

By E. WERNER,
Author of "Success."
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

RULING the PLANETS.

By MINA E. BURTON.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "HER OWN COUNSEL."
EVELYN'S CAREER.

By the Author of "Dr. Edith Romney."
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"It is pleasant to notice a novel written with so much thought, feeling, and discernment of character."—Guardian.

NOW READY.

SO NEAR AKIN.

By M. A. BENGOUGH.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A clever and original novel told with a humour and artistic despatch which promise well for the future of the author."—Queen.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MR. BAZALGETTE'S AGENT."
VIOLET MOSES.

By LEONARD MERRICK.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A good novel, and one that is written with taste."—Observer.

A NEW EDITION.

A LDYTH.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL,
Author of "The First Violin."
In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NOVELS OF JANE AUSTEN.

EMMA.

"My delight is to read English novels, particularly those written by women. Miss Austen, Miss Ferrier, &c., form a school which in the excellence and profusion of its productions resembles the cloud of dramatic poets of the great Athenian age."—Guzoz.

LADY SUSAN.—THE WATSONS.

With a Memoir of the Author by the Rev. J. C. AUSTEN-LEIGH.
"I remember Miss Mitford's saying to me: 'I would almost cut off one of my hands, if it would enable me to write like your aunt with the other.'"—The Rev. J. E. AUSTEN-LEIGH.

MANSFIELD PARK.

"I recollect the time when these charming novels, almost unique in their style of humour, burst suddenly on the world. It was sad that their writer did not live to witness the growth of her fame."—Sir HENRY HOLLAND'S "RECOLLECTIONS."

NORTHANGER ABBEY.—PERSUASION.

"Read Dickens's 'Hard Times' and another book of Pliny's 'Letters.' Read 'Northanger Abbey,' worth all Dickens and Pliny together. Yet it was the work of a girl. She was certainly not more than twenty-six. Wonderful creature!"—Macaulay's Journal, August 12, 1854.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.

"S. T. Coleridge would sometimes burst out into high encomiums of Miss Austen's novels as being, 'in their way, perfectly genuine and individual productions.'"—The Table-Talk of Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

SENSE AND SENSIBILITY.

"First and foremost let Jane Austen be named, the greatest artist that has ever written, using the term to signify the most perfect master over the means to her end."—George Eliot.
In 6 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.; or separately, 6s. each, at all Booksellers.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

A New Vol. of "The Adventure Series."

THE STORY of the FILIBUSTERS.

By JAMES JEFFREY ROCHE. To which is added "The Life of Colonel David Crockett." Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"The record of their adventures is thrilling..... With boys the book should be a prodigious favourite..... 'The Life of Crockett' is very quaint and amusing reading."—Notes and Queries.

The Ridout Letters.

TEN YEARS of UPPER CANADA, in PEACE and WAR, 1805-1815. Being the Ridout Letters, with Annotations by MATILDA EDGAR. Also an Appendix of the Narrative of the Captivity among the Shawanese Indians, in 1788, of THOMAS RIDOUT, afterwards Surveyor-General of Upper Canada; and a Vocabulary compiled by him of the Shawanese Language. Frontispiece, Portrait, and Maps. Royal 8vo, cloth, bevelled edges, 10s. 6d. [Just ready.]

By the Rev. Austin Phelps, D.D.

MY NOTE-BOOK. Fragmentary

Studies in Theology and Subjects adjacent thereto. By AUSTIN PHELPS, D.D., LL.D., Author of "My Study, and other Essays," &c. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

By Sarah M. B. Piatt.

AN IRISH WILD-FLOWER: Poems.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"All more or less breathe the true poetic afflatus."—Fremont's Journal.

"The Cameo Series."

Vol. 2. WORDSWORTH'S GRAVE, and other Poems. By WILLIAM WATSON. Second Revised and Enlarged Edition. Fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

"NOTE ON A NEW POET.

"In its own kind, I venture to say, since 'In Memoriam' burst upon us, we have not heard from any new tongue quite so authentic a voice, so large an I whole an utterance; we have not met anywhere with such close marks of kinship to the sanest work of the great English singers."—Mr. GRANT ALLEN, in the Fortnightly Review for August.

Vol. 7. A MINOR POET. By Amy

LEVY. Second Edition. With Portrait. Fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, 3s. 6d. [Next week]

Second and Cheaper Edition.

BABOO ENGLISH as 'tis WRIT.

Being Curiosities of Indian Journalism. By ARNOLD WRIGHT. Demy 16mo, paper, 6d.; cloth, 1s. [Ready.]

"A most amusing little volume."—Daily Graphic.

THE PSEUDONYM LIBRARY.

Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

The Best Books for Holiday Reading. Handy for the Pocket in Size and Shape.

"Delightful books to hold."—Saturday Review.

"Dainty little volumes."—Athenaeum.

1. MADAMOISELLE IXE. By LANOE FALCONER. Seventh Edition.
2. THE STORY of ELEANOR LAMBERT. Second Edition.
3. A MYSTERY of the CAMPAGNA, and A SHADOW on a WAVE. Second Edition.
4. THE SCHOOL of ART. Second Edition.
5. AMARYLLIS. Second Edition.
6. THE HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE, and other Stories. By LANOE FALCONER. Second Edition.
7. A RUSSIAN PRIEST. Second Edition.
8. SOME EMOTIONS and a MORAL. By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS. [Next week.]

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's STANDARD NOVELS FOR SUMMER READING.

Crown 8vo, fancy boards, 2s.; cloth uniform, 2s. 6d. each.

LORNA DOONE. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

SENIOR PARTNER. By Mrs. RIDDELL.

CLARA VAUGHAN. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

THE GUARDIAN ANGEL. By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

HER GREAT IDEA, and other Stories. By Mrs. WALFORD.

THE CASTING AWAY of Mrs. LECKS and Mrs. ALESHINE; and THE DUSANTES. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudler Grange."

SOME ONE ELSE. By Mrs. CROKER.

ADELA CATHCART. By GEORGE MAC DONALD.

CRIPPS the CARRIER. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

DRED. By HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

THE VASTY DEEP. By STUART CUMBERLAND.

DAINIES and BUTTERCUPS. By Mrs. RIDDELL.

GUILD COURT. By GEORGE MAC DONALD.

MARY ANERLEY. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

In uniform crown 8vo, volumes, cloth, 6s. each.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.

IN FAR LOCHABER.

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a HOUSE-BOAT.

THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN.

A DAUGHTER of HETH.

IN SILK ATTIRE.

KILMENY.

THREE FEATHERS.

SUNRISE.

LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.

By THOMAS HARDY.

In uniform crown 8vo volumes, boards, 2s.; and cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

FAR from the MADDING CROWD.

THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.

THE TRUMPET-MAJOR.

THE LAODICEAN.

THE RETURN of the NATIVE.

THE HAND of ETHELBERTA.

A PAIR of BLUE EYES.

TWO on a TOWER.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

Uniform crown 8vo volumes, half-leather, 3s. 6d. each.

AN OCEAN FREE LANCE.

THE FROZEN PIRATE.

A SEA QUEEN.

THE LADY MAUD.

MY WATCH BELOW.

JOHN HOLDSWORTH, CHIEF MATE.

JACK'S COURTSHIP.

A STRANGE VOYAGE.

A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.

THE WRECK of the "GROSVENOR."

LITTLE LOO.

BETWEEN the FORELANDS.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstons House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.;
And of all Booksellers.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 12, 1891.

No. 1010, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Criticism and Fiction. By W. D. Howells. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

IN these days of rapid newspaper reviewing the critic who writes with some deliberation may take it for granted that he has been more or less forestalled; and it is quite unnecessary to say here that Mr. W. D. Howells's latest work contains much that is—and that is obviously meant to be—intensely irritating to the English reader. Perhaps—so far, at any rate, as the sensible English reader is concerned—Mr. Howells might have been rather more successful in his not very amiable endeavour if his intention had been made less apparent: for there is no better aid to the keeping of one's temper than an implicit or explicit declaration that some one is determined you shall lose it. Still, a modest but very satisfactory measure of success has already been achieved; for Criticism and Fiction has made some English reviewers so very angry, that in their anger they have become almost as unreasonable as Mr. Howells himself, an effect which must be very soul-satisfying to the humorist who has produced it.

Now Mr. Howells may be very wrong-headed—he certainly does his best to make us think him so—but there is no doubt whatever that he has both sincerity and ability; and when a sincere and able man writes about the art to which he has devoted his life, all the wrong-headedness in the world can hardly prevent him from saying something which will be in some way instructive to those who know the art of “prospecting,” as the gold-seekers say, for instructiveness. Mr. Howells's book will never be studied with profit, save by the readers who feel and resolutely remember everything that is implied in that useful phrase, “the point of view.” All criticism—except, indeed, that scientific criticism which everybody has heard of and no one has ever seen—consists of a record of something observed from a certain point of view; and few questions that can be asked concerning any critic are more important than these: (1) “Is his point of view, on the whole, well chosen?” and (2) “Does he appear able to see that, howsoever well chosen it be, it is only one point of view from which, as a matter of course, only one aspect of the object is discernible?” It would be absurd to say that either of these questions, if asked concerning Mr. Howells, can be answered in the affirmative, for his point of view is often chosen whimsically and occupied too exclusively, and therefore his criticism lacks that highest value which is given by the qualities of soundness and discrimination; but in virtue of its ability and sincerity it achieves a lucid directness, which is helpful in an indirect sort of way by its clear exhibition of the tyrannical dominance of the point of view.

The well-known writer who said that the study of Mr. Howells's critical discourses was an illiberal education, hit the mark in a way that he did not intend. The careful study of a book like Criticism and Fiction is intellectually educational, just in the same way that the sentences of bad syntax submitted to a schoolboy for correction are grammatically educational; for in both instances the perception of what constitutes rightness in thought or expression is made vivid to the student by a clear presentation of the effect produced by wrongness, as the sight of the drunken Helot was supposed to inspire in the Spartan youth a lasting appreciation of the grace of temperance.

In a little volume containing fewer than 200 pages Mr. Howells provides us with a varied and miscellaneous assortment of obiter dicta. Like the Walrus in his memorable conversation with the Carpenter, he has come to the conclusion that “the time has come to talk of many things”—of the follies of critics, of the crimes of editors, of the fatuities of Sir Walter Scott, of the supreme greatness of Mr. Henry James, and of the general superiority of everything American over everything English—but his main theme is the glorification of realism, as realism is understood in the “rarefied and nimble air” of the Western continent, and a denunciation of the effete idealism of writers like Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, and others who are still regarded as masters and standards by their fog-and-soot-breathing countrymen. One remark inevitably suggested by such an undertaking is perhaps too obvious to be worth making—the remark that when people in general find something to enjoy and admire in two diverse products of human intelligence and activity, it is surely a waste of time to exalt one of these products by the cheap expedient of depreciating the other. If a reader, for example, is intensely interested in A Fearful Responsibility, and is also intensely interested in The Heart of Midlothian, or even in King Solomon's Mines, he is certainly a gainer, at any rate in innocent pleasure, by his catholicity of taste; and he may well resent any attempt to prove to him that enjoyment of the first is only legitimate when accompanied by a conscious distaste for the other two. Mr. Howells is very hard upon the critic whose view of criticism is summed up in the formula “I know what I like”; but his whole treatment suggests the impression that he himself gives to his personal preferences the validity and authority of universal rules, for with the unreasoning impetuosity of strong emotion he refuses to see that the work which he admires must needs have the defects of its qualities, and that, on the other hand, the work which he dislikes can hardly fail to have the qualities of its defects.

The fiction which Mr. Howells calls romantic or idealistic aims, let us say, at beauty or impressiveness, to attain which it may be sometimes necessary to leave the beaten track of ordinary experience: the fiction which he calls realistic aims at easily recognisable veracity of presentation, and the materials for such presentation are of course to be found most plentifully in those portions of the beaten track which are most continually trodden. No judicially-minded person would declare either of these ends to be unworthy of a literary artist; but he would admit that in striving after the former there is a danger of deviating from veracity and lifelikeness, and that in the attainment of the latter there is a not less real danger of falling into insignificant triviality. But—if the remark may be made without providing another illustration of English bad manners—Mr. Howells is not judicially minded; at any rate, he does not so show himself in these pages. His point is not that “idealistic” fiction may deviate from the essential truth of human nature and history, but that it must so deviate—that by its very existence this truth is flouted and set at naught. On the other hand, he maintains that the art which he loves can never be trivial, because—this is really what he seems to say—in any truthful presentation of life, or of any part of it, there is no such thing as triviality; and so of the writer after his own heart he remarks that “in life he finds nothing insignificant; all tells for destiny or character; nothing that God has made is contemptible. He cannot look upon life and declare this thing or that thing unworthy of notice.”

It is not easy to extract a consistent theory of the art of fiction from utterances which have frequently the apparent inconsistency which belongs to all impulsive writing; but I will endeavour to put into a few sentences the impression of one reader who has done his best to understand what Mr. Howells is driving at. Of course, his primary axiom is that truth is the only legitimate end of fiction; and if, like Pilate, we ask “What is truth?” the answer seems to be that truth is the special kind of accuracy in delineation which can be tested by the ordinary person of ordinary experience—the man in the street; and as the only delineation to which this test can possibly be applied is that of things perfectly familiar to such a judge, the quality of theme or treatment objected to on the ground of alleged “triviality” is really the essential quality—the quality which is not to be avoided, but rather to be diligently sought after. Thus, he maintains that “Jane Austen was the first and the last of the English novelists to treat material with entire truthfulness”; and his precise meaning is made clear by a sentence on another page in which he says that among Miss Austen's successors “it was Anthony Trollope who was most like her in simple honesty and instructive truth”; for what Jane Austen and Trollope have in common is the constancy of their attachment to the familiar table-lands of life and their avoidance of its less frequented but not less real heights and depths.

In expressing his admiration for the author of Emma and Pride and Prejudice, Mr. Howells will have the sympathy even of the “poor islanders” who think that Scott, Thackeray, and George Eliot are also great novelists; but they will not think it necessary to believe with him that her kind of truth is the only kind of truth worth having, or even that it is the kind of truth best worth having. For example, the conversation of the loquacious Miss Bates, at the time when the present of a joint of pork and the interest of the latest item of local news contend for supremacy in her mind, is simply perfect, and there is of course a sense in which perfection cannot be bettered; but the conversation of Maggie Tulliver in that last interview with Stephen Guest, when she resolves to forego the satisfaction of a great love, that she may know the sombre joy of fidelity to a great duty, is not one whit less perfect, while the inspiring motive is surely more profoundly interesting.

"Yes," Mr. Howells would reply, "it is more interesting to the poor islander, and the fact of its being so is a sufficient proof of his barbarity." True art, it would seem, is essentially democratic art, and the democracy can estimate much more precisely the emotions excited by a loin of pork than they can estimate the emotions called into activity by a momentous moral crisis. Therefore the conclusion is plain—that the dealer in moral crises is necessarily a coarser, more barbaric, in every way inferior, person. This reads like a travesty, but that it is so will hardly be the opinion of those who read the sentence in which Mr. Howells says:

"The love of the passionate and the heroic, as the Englishman has it, is such a crude and unwholesome thing, so deaf and blind to all the most delicate and important facts of art and life, so insensible to the subtle values in either, that its presence or absence makes the whole difference, and enables one who is not possessed by it to thank Heaven that he is not as that other man is."

Surely there could hardly be a more melancholy illustration of the tyranny of the point of view than the spectacle of a man like Mr. Howells deliberately thanking Heaven that he had emancipated himself from "the love of the passionate and heroic," in either its English or any other form. Of course the emancipation is not so complete as he fancies it. In various books bearing the name of W. D. Howells upon their title-page—notably in a beautiful and pathetic chapter towards the close of A Hazard of New Fortunes—there is enough of passion and of heroism to delight and satisfy even an Englishman; but it is a pity that in a mood of petulant contempt he should allow himself even to seem scornful of these high themes and that sympathetic treatment which, so long as man is man, either in the Old World or in the New, will never lose their fascination. The homely everyday things of life—the selection of a house, the treatment of a tiresome guest, the success of some small social manoeuvre—will always provide material for the fine art of fine artists; but none the less will imagination go out towards lofty endeavours, and great renunciations, and forlorn hopes of duty, and will feel even the terrible, but often tonic, attraction of those sombre crises in which a man stakes and loses his soul.

One has a sense of shame in assuming the rôle of prophet of the obvious; but really it is at present the obvious rather than the new or the strange which stands in need of prophets and defenders. It is not, however, necessary to prolong the discussion, and space is wanting for comment upon other issues raised by Mr. Howells in the course of his divagations. His criticisms upon critics have sometimes a certain appearance of force; but they lack intellectual point and utility, because we are never sure whether Mr. Howells means by "the critic" the man in whom educated judgment is reinforced by wide knowledge, or the head reporter who "does the reviews" for a third-rate provincial journal. Upon the latter the eloquence of a man in Mr. Howells's position is surely wasted; whereas if he is thinking of the former it is whimsically paradoxical to hint that all authors are superior to all critics (p. 35), or to state explicitly (p. 42) that "the crudest expression of any creative art is better than the finest comment upon it." Much more valuable than these random hits at criticism "in the abstract," are the strictures upon the noisy clique who are raising the cry for freedom from the very slight restrictions which have been placed upon the scope of art by the vote of the respectable English-speaking races. As Mr. Howells points out, the writers who lament that they cannot treat life veraciously, because public taste, dominated by "the young person," frowns upon the artistic presentation of "passion," would seem to have no conception of any passion but one, the appetite—more or less perverted—of the sexual instinct. They are free to deal with a number of passions—with hate, grief, avarice, ambition, envy, loyalty, and friendship; and every sensible person who has reached maturity knows that Mr. Howells is right when he says "all these have a greater part in the drama of life than the passion of love, and infinitely greater than the passion of guilty love." But, then, these passions demand brainwork for their effective delineation: they are really artists' subjects; while, on the other hand, the clumsiest journeyman can hardly miss the vulgar interest of a divorce court romance. When there is a two-headed calf at a fair the showman needs no eloquence to draw the pennies from the pockets of the rustics; and the right name for the novel of morbid eroticism is the two-headed calf of literature. In the interests of art one may surely object to the motive of morbid sexuality, not because it is "free" or immoral, or improper, or unpleasant, but because it is so very, very cheap.

This is a desultory review of a desultory book. Should it come under Mr. Howells's notice he will probably see in it various examples of the besetting sins of "the critic"; but the writer hopes he will also perceive that an honest attempt has been made to treat seriously utterances the matter and manner of which too often render seriousness of treatment by no means easy.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

Cardinal Beaton, Priest and Politician. By John Herkless. (Blackwood.)

THERE can be no occupation more pleasing to an historian than to make a good biography. In general histories events, not individuals, are prominent; only the greatest characters are distinguished in the narrative, and even they must lose something of their importance and of their human interest: in the moving crowd they are rather names than familiar acquaintances; their private life, their peculiarities, their motives and intentions, cannot be set forth at large; but, in the pages of a biographer, if he be a lettered, an industrious, and a skilful person, the maker of history may live again:

"Amidst a thousand entertaining and instructive episodes," as Boswell says, "the Hero is never long out of sight, for they are all in some degree connected with him; and He, in the whole course of the history, is exhibited by the Author for the best advantage of his readers."

A writer of biography, therefore, should be an historian, and something more. In addition to the learning and to the wide view of the historian, with his knowledge of what precedes and follows, the biographer must be equipped for his task by a long and intimate familiarity with the character and with the age he is to illustrate. He should possess much human sympathy, or he will not be able to appreciate his hero and to make him interesting. No pedant can be a good biographer; and all our modern accuracy cannot endow an author with wit and literature, nor insure for his readers an entertaining life. Above all, the author must have a sober judgment, a critical restraint, and unflinching tact; he must know, like Boswell, how to subordinate the whole narrative to his leading personage; but still, his regard must not run away with his impartiality: he must neither attenuate his hero nor give him an importance which he does not in reality possess. If these rare qualities be granted to a biographer, we have a true artist, the creator of a life, not a mere editor of materials nor a compiler of letters and remains. And he may employ his genius in two ways. He may confine himself, like Suetonius or Walton, to writing perfect lives, adding little stroke on stroke, until the man described, Caligula or "Holy Mr. Herbert," be reanimated for us, as though we had conversed with him, or were perusing his own diaries and meditations. The other way of making a biography is to compose what is known as "A History of the Life and Times" of some illustrious person, such as Dr. Middleton's Life of Cicero. If this be well done, we may expect to view the hero intimately, and to form some opinion about his place and function in the history of the world or of his country.

Mr. Herkless has not succeeded in giving us a life of either kind. Those who knew little of Cardinal Beaton, when they began to read, will know little more when they have finished. A history already intricate is left still more tangled and perplexing; and in these barren pages we obtain no distinct view at all of the Cardinal himself. It was the purpose of Mr. Herkless, I imagine, to write a history of the life and times of Beaton; and in Mr. Hume Brown's Buchanan he might have chosen an excellent model for his purpose. In that volume the hero is presented minutely, justly, and in a most human way; and the general history is narrated with great accuracy and power. In addition to these excellences, new facts were collected or explained by Mr. Brown; infinite labour was bestowed upon the work, and it produced not only the standard Life of Buchanan, but was a valuable contribution to the history of Scotland. If a Life be not entertaining as an individual history, and not valuable as a book of reference, it is not easy to justify its existence; and when it is full of positive errors or of dubious criticisms, when it is very empty of indispensable knowledge, its justification is impossible.

The chief errors of Mr. Herkless arise from his want of familiarity with Catholic usages and institutions: they are of two kinds, errors of actual fact; and errors caused by a superficial knowledge, by imperfect criticism. For instance, he says,

"Beaton, while in Deacon's orders, may have married Marion Ogilvy; but it is highly improbable, since he was destined to the profession of the Church, and his marriage might have proved fatal to his entrance to the priesthood."

Now here are almost as many errors as words. In the Oriental Churches, whether Orthodox or in communion with Rome, a deacon may marry, and may then take priestly orders and retain his wife; but after he is a priest, he may not enter upon the estate of matrimony. In the Western Church a priest may not marry, nor may a deacon; it is the sub-diaconate which debars a cleric from the married state. But a married man may be ordained if his wife be dead, or if by mutual consent they agree to separate and to bind themselves to the religious calling. If, therefore, Beaton had gone through the form of marriage while in deacon's orders, the ceremony would have been void without a papal dispensation. Had he been regularly married while in minor orders, or before his ordination, that of itself need not "have proved fatal to his entrance to the priesthood." Upon the same page Mr. Herkless talks of Mazarin's connexion with Anne of Austria; and he thinks the Cardinal may have been married, "because he was only in deacon's orders." Here again is the same ignorance about the Roman discipline with regard to orders and matrimony; and there is an implied confusion about the cardinalate. A cardinal deacon need not be in deacon's orders; he may be above them or below. Cardinal Newman, as to orders, was a priest; but as to precedence, only a cardinal deacon. Dr. Manning is an archbishop, but he is only a cardinal priest. Several great cardinals in history were neither priests nor deacons, but were only in minor orders. Mr. Herkless then compares Cranmer's marriage with Beaton's: the marriage of a professed Reformer who had broken with Rome and with mediaevalism, whose great object was to restore the primitive discipline, cannot be compared with the licence of a cardinal, whose great object was to maintain the existing state of things. In these passages I have given examples of Mr. Herkless's positive errors, of his insufficient familiarity with Catholic usages, and of the false judgments which these defects have led him into. His mistakes in this particular passage culminate at the end of it, where he says:

"had he been married before he took full orders, and had he continued in wedlock after he became a priest, his children could not have been acknowledged legitimate."

There are several worthy men at this time in orders in the Roman Church in England, who have been married, but whose children are perfectly legitimate; and even in the scandalous times of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, though mistresses were too easily tolerated, it would not have been tolerated that a man should "continue in wedlock after he became a priest."

"In Germany the Reformation was at first purely religious," says Mr. Herkless again; "afterwards it was political as well as religious, if the Peasants' War is to be accounted part of the general Reformation movement."

It might be more correct to describe the Peasants' War as a social "movement"; and in saying that the German Reformation was purely religious, Mr. Herkless appears to forget the deep and ancient jealousy of Rome, the long quarrels of the Emperors and Popes, the innumerable differences in Church and State, in nature and in customs, which led up to the German revolt from the Italians. "In England," says Mr. Herkless again, "the first Reformation dates from Henry's search for a divorce court." To say this, is not only to ignore the social and religious discontent of the fourteenth century, but it is to profess one's ignorance of the ancient constitution of the English Church, of the royal supremacy which was exercised by the Saxon kings and maintained by the Normans, of the laws of Henry II., and of the long series of anti-papal measures which were enacted and enforced by the Plantagenets. But Mr. Herkless's knowledge of the English Church, and of the English Reformation, may be measured by his statement that Henry VIII. "sent Fisher to the stake." Nor is his knowledge sounder when he talks of the Reformation. "It is to be remembered," he says, "that before the Reformation prelates and priests were almost the only men fit for the offices of state which were not military." So far is this from being true that the history of the Middle Ages in almost every country will afford a long roll of illustrious politicians who were not ecclesiastics. On the other hand, Mr. Herkless thinks that the influence of the clergy "might have ceased" in the sixteenth century "as laymen grew in capacity." If he had read his More and Erasmus with greater care, he would have learned from them that the cultured laity of the Renaissance were not disposed to envy the superior learning and manners of the clergy.

It must not be thought that I have selected passages unfairly. Wherever Catholic things are treated, I find errors like those I have displayed; nor are the errors confined to ecclesiastical affairs. Lord William Howard is described sometimes as "Lord Howard": this is like the "Sir Gladstone" or the "Lord Disraeli" of a French newspaper. A lady is described as "the divorced daughter of Lord Erskine."

That peer may have had a daughter who was divorced from her husband; but it is not usual to speak of a father divorcing his children. And Mr. Herkless is as lawless with his English as with his facts: "Henry was not long of following up the Cardinal's futile attack," he says; and in another place he speaks of patrons "gifting great wealth to the Church"; "Beaton, we are safe to conclude, was not hesitant, but only reticent from motives of worldly wisdom." We may be allowed to wish also, in conclusion, that Mr. Herkless had been more "hesitant" about innovating upon the use of words, and more "reticent" in bestowing his judgments and his compositions upon the public.

ARTHUR GALTON.

The Folks o' Carglen. By Alexander Gordon. (Fisher Unwin.)

IN spite of outbreaks of sheer intellectual helplessness—like "Oh! for the pen of a Walter Scott, or, on a lower scale, of a Robert Louis Stevenson, or even of a J. M. Barrie, to describe these nights so full of fun, frolic, gossip, and healthy human bucolic wisdom!"—this is a good book of an uncommon kind. It is not an attempt to preach through representations of rustic character, to idealise them, or with their help to caricature Scotch nationality for the amusement of English readers. It is, above all things, a realistic book—a reproduction of the life that is actually lived in a Northern country parish, to which the name of Carglen is given, and the bleak unloveliness of which has entered into the souls of its inhabitants. Mr. Gordon has not the gift of style like Mr. Stevenson, or, as he himself would say, not quite intelligibly, "even of J. M. Barrie." He is deficient in power of condensation. Occasionally he falls into provincialisms and even banalities, simply because the right words do not seem to rise readily to his pen. Yet The Folks o' Carglen is far too important and interesting a book to be dismissed with a line, like so many of the books produced by the dozen which profess to describe Scotch life of to-day, and still more of yesterday, and which are no better than Carlylian "duds."

Mr. Gordon's strength lies in portraiture. He seats himself in a corner of one or other of those centres of spiritual (and sometimes of spirituous) activity in a Scotch country parish—the kirk, the school, the farm-kitchen, the "smiddy," and the village inn—and there he photographs the folks he sees. There is scarcely one of his portraits that is not carefully finished; there are several that are among the best works of this class that have recently been produced in Scotland. To this second smaller and better class belongs Amos Gibb, the smith and Free Church elder. The conversations in the "smiddy" in the smith's presence, and about him outside of it, are quite as good as anything of the kind that have appeared in Scotch literature of this particular kind before Mr. Barrie began to immortalise Thrums. An equally excellent, but more idealised, portrait is that of Joe Forbes, or "Awttheist Joe," who dies as he lived. The scene between him, when he is on his deathbed, and the Rev. Morrison Dean, the Free Church minister, is worthy of George Macdonald at his best.

"Noo," says the dying man, "jest tell a' Carglen that Awtheist Joe deed as he lived, carin' nae ae straw for ony kirk or hoodiecrawl priest. Ye can tak' this for your text neist time ye munt the pu'pit: 'A sparrow canna fa' tae the grun' without my Father,' an' ye can say this: Joe Forbes was a sparrow in the big han' o' God A'mighty. Ae day he found a little birdie sair shot by the gamekeeper chiel. It was on its back, but its wee een were on the sweet blue sky, far, far, up there. 'The God that made ye maun care for ye,' said he tae it, 'an' it deed in his han'.' Maister Dean, I dee like unto that sparrow. Ye're great on damnation, but I'm great on salvation."

The Rev. Patrick Spens the clerical schoolmaster, Francie Kemp the Radical, and the spitfire Laird, are not quite such elaborate portraits as the smith and the "awtheist," but they are quite as life-like.

Mr. Gordon is hardly so successful in representing nature in its wildest moods, or life in its gregarious aspects, as he is in portraying personages and oddities. He is too diffuse, too prone to moralising. There is no moonlight in his pictures; there is no eeriness in his treatment of Scotch superstitions. One never tires of the "smiddy," but one does tire very decidedly of the kirk and the school. There is a suggestion of padding of the magazine article sort in "The Sons of the Soil," "Camping out in Carglen," and "Red Letter Days in Carglen." Other papers, however, deserve to be much better spoken of. One is reminded both of "The Cottar's Saturday Night" and of "The Jolly Beggars" by "In a Farm Kitchen," although it is written in prose. But Burns does not supply this paper with its inspiration, but only with its quotations.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

THE BOOKLOVER'S LIBRARY.—The Story of the "Imitatio Christi." By Leonard A. Wheatley. (Elliot Stock.)

In the early portraits of the author of the remarkable book to which "The Story" relates, the painters in several instances have contrived to introduce on the open pages of a book this motto or saying, which, it has been said, he was in the habit of frequently repeating: "I sought for rest, but found it not, except in little corners and in little books"—it is written partly in Latin, and partly in Dutch—meaning that, from his own experience, he had usually found rest for his soul in retirement, away from the busy throng of the world, not in the study of lengthened and learned works, but in little books calculated to sustain the mind in devout meditation. And it is this idea or principle that he seems to have carried out in writing his many short treatises. He did not attempt to write large and learned works, like those of Thomas Aquinas who lived about 150 years before his time, that would require laborious attention and much thought. The Kempen Brother, being of a humble mind, and acting on the sentiment that so strongly possessed him, brought out a number of small works, with short, pithy sentences, having a certain degree of rhythm in them, giving complete thoughts in few words, which would commend themselves to the reader, as in no way wearying. Hence we find that precious book, the Imitatio Christi, is in the form of a small codex, for it contains four books or treatises in one book. They were each at first written separately, and designed to be used singly. Each has a separate title; and though all are of a spiritual character, they differ from one another. The title of the first book is taken as the title for the whole four books, and gives the keynote, as it were, to the entire volume. Indeed, it is well known that the words "Imitatio Christi" are taken from the first words of the first chapter. This chapter, it will be noticed, has two titles, the first of which is "On the Imitation of Christ." The book begins, "'Qui sequitur me, non ambulat in tenebris,' saith the Lord"; and this first line is also the title which the author has given to this book in the catalogue to the celebrated volume which he wrote out with his own hand and dated A.D. 1441. He mentions all the four books separately, and places them first before a number of other small treatises, so as to make of them a large codex, though the size of it is small considering what it contains. The unknown contemporary author also, in giving a complete catalogue of the works written by Thomas a Kempis, names the four books separately; yet here they are not put first, but after a few other titles; still the books of The Imitation are named together, one after the other. Thus the books, though individually alluded to, were nevertheless early associated together. And there seem to have been an endeavour and desire to regard them as one book even before the author's death. For in the catalogue of another MS. which has the dates of 1470 and 1471 attached to two separate treatises, they are spoken of as one, after this manner, "Liber de Imitatione Christi, qui continet in se quatuor libros."

Thomas a Kempis no doubt at first wrote for those who lived a conventual life; but his writings being small, as well as of a practical character, they were well suited for others living in the world, but devoutly inclined. They could be more easily carried about, and were more suited for retirement, than larger works; they could also be more readily copied out, and thereby be brought within the reach of many more readers. And when the invention of printing came, they appeared to be admirably adapted for circulation. And being found acceptable, from meeting a want in the soul of man, they were diligently sought after, and became widely spread. The Imitation, as one book, was eagerly read by those longing for divine light, especially as the time of the Reformation drew nigh, when many were thirsting for a taste of the waters of Life, that they might know more of the new Life that bringeth salvation. But little as the book of The Imitation was, it would not have been so heartily welcomed unless it had contained, in a condensed and practical form, words of notable wisdom, beyond what the world had hitherto enjoyed.

There are many things of deep interest connected with this precious volume, and those desirous of learning the various particulars in a short compass cannot do better than possess themselves of "The Story" of it. In the first chapter, we have something of its character given; in the second there is much information about the German mystics. In the next, the sources whence the author, to some extent, drew his thoughts for the work. Then in another chapter we have a short sketch of the Brothers of Common Life; and in the following chapter a sketch of the life of the author. In the seventh chapter there is an account of Prof. Hirsche's investigations respecting the copy written out by Thomas himself. Then "The Story" enters upon the exciting controversy, "Who wrote The Imitation?" giving many particulars about the MSS., printed editions, and translations. In the last three chapters will be found the opinions of various writers on The Imitation. Then, what the author of "The Story" calls a "Chrestomathy" of extracts from The Imitation; and lastly, a Chrestomathy from the other works of Thomas a Kempis. "The Story" abounds with quotations drawn from other treatises on all the questions alluded to; yet it is not a mere compilation, but put together with great skill, research, and ability. In going over so much ground and touching upon so many facts, it is not to be wondered at that some errors should occur. Thus, on p. 178, the writer intimates that in 1710 Hickee brought out a translation of The Imitation. But is it certain that this ever existed? There lies before me the 1710 edition—a translation, not of The Imitation, but of some other genuine works of Thomas a Kempis, by George Hickee, D.D., with the interesting Preface alluded to, where the claims of various individuals for the authorship of The Imitation are given. The error may have arisen from its being called "The Christian Pattern, or, the Imitation of Jesus Christ." But to prevent its being thought to be a translation of The Imitation, the name of the four books it contains are specified on the title-page. The 1710 is a second edition, so that there must have been one earlier. In the next paragraph it is said that a translation (i.e., of The Imitation) was issued in 1715 by "the learned nonjuror, Robert Nelson. But can this be correct? For, in looking into the second edition of Nelson's book (1717) it will be found to contain a translation, not of The Imitation, but of other works of Thomas a Kempis, not found in Hickee's book, and a few selected pieces from other writers. Its sub-title is, "Rules to Live above the World." And then, in a note to this, we are told that the British Museum does not possess a copy of this, which is called "The Christian's Pattern." But this title belongs to Hickee's book, published a few years before. And the reason why the British Museum does not possess a copy of Nelson's translation of The Imitation may be that this learned man never made a translation of it at all. This is an exceptional point where some confusion has arisen, and will require a little careful revision. "The Story" is neatly got up, and is pleasant to read. S. KETTLEWELL.

The Positive Theory of Capital. By E. von Böhm Bawerk. Translated, with Preface and Analysis, by W. Smart. (Macmillans.)

DUE attention was called to Dr. Böhm Bawerk's important book in the ACADEMY of May 4, 1889. More fortunate than most foreign economists, even of the first rank, he has not waited long for a translator. Mr. Smart, who translated the History of Theories of Interest, has performed the same service for its sequel, the Positive Theory of Capital, and with equal success. In his "translator's preface" he gives a clear and good outline, in his own words, of the main arguments of Dr. Böhm Bawerk's book. He has left English economists no excuse for neglecting their brethren in Austria.

The very acrimony of the attacks which have been made and met from time to time recently, in the pages of German economical journals, has served to show that the Austrian economists are at least no longer ignored in Germany. Dr. Böhm Bawerk, in a recent number of Conrad's Jahrbücher für Nationalökonomie (July, 1891), has himself given a review of German, Italian, and Dutch works bearing on the subject of value, which is to the Austrian school the foundation of all economics. His article seems to bring the discussions to a head, and, we may hope, to a close, for the present. But his own particular contribution to economics is presented in the book now before us, and is in many ways quite original. The importance of the element of time in economical questions, and especially in regard to the theory of interest on capital, has never before been so fully and luminously demonstrated. The volume includes incidentally the author's account of the general doctrine of value, showing its close connexion with the special doctrine of interest; and it might perhaps have been well if Dr. Böhm Bawerk had allowed his translator to incorporate the whole instead of a part of his two early articles on the subject in Conrad's Jahrbücher. References (as on pp. 130, 137) to the files of a foreign periodical are tantalising to English readers.

The translation is done with fidelity, and yet with a freedom that goes far to banish any obtrusive symptoms of a German original. There are no doubt many renderings open to cavil (in what translation were they ever wanting?). "Consumption-goods" has not an English sound; why reject the time-honoured "consumable goods"? "The law of costs"—why not the English singular instead of this German plural? Surely Rentenfonds is not exactly the same as "rent-fund (p. 1)," supposing that we ever used the expression.

The translation has had the benefit of the author's revision; but there is little departure from the German edition, except in the dropping of ephemeral controversy. We still read (on p. 382): "Every other commodity has a predetermined subjective value to the one who wishes to buy it. Labour has not." The correctness of this antithesis was questioned by Prof. Edgeworth in the ACADEMY; and Dr. Böhm Bawerk has lost a good opportunity of withdrawing (or else of defending) the former proposition, which seems quite contrary to the Austrian faith.

No fault can be found with Mr. Smart's rearrangement of books and sections; but the reader ought perhaps to have been warned that the books and chapters of the translation do not correspond to the books and sections of the original German.

JAMES BONAR.

NEW NOVELS.

Violet Moses. By Leonard Merrick. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Dr. Sinclair's Sister. By E. Grey. In 3 vols. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

Mahme Nousie. By G. Manville Fenn. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

An Octave of Friends. By E. Lynn Lynton. (Ward & Downey.)

The Fatal Request. By A. L. Harris. (Frederick Warne.)

Disinherited. By M. M. Black. (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

The Mystery of a Type-Writer. By B. Fairlee. (Shanklin: The Jester Office.)

NOBODY who has a sneaking fondness for fiction of the penny novelette and shocker class need expect much pleasure from the perusal of Violet Moses. It is probably his excessive and freely declared abhorrence of that class of literature that has landed the writer of this story in the opposite extreme, and in this we think he has erred. For however extravagant or vulgar the penny novelette may be, it does, as a rule, resort to methods of arousing human emotion and securing human sympathy which, if somewhat time-honoured and hackneyed, are at least acknowledged to be, in good hands, the best available for the purpose. Mr. Merrick, however, will have none of these; so that, instead of diversified action, with judiciously introduced surprises and a plentiful admixture of realistic description, we find in Violet Moses a careful avoidance of anything like sensational incident, and an overabundance of the analytical element. To be sure it is sensible analysis; there is a dry matter-of-fact truthfulness about the writer's remarks which makes his story now and then delightful reading. But the majority of us are interested mainly in the facts themselves, and care no more for the antecedent complexities of motive than, in reading the details of a prize-fight, we should care for an explanation of the precise adjustment of bodily muscles which produced the knock-down blow. The title of the book naturally prepares us to expect something about Jews, and we get it. The first volume tells how Allan Morris, journalist and novelist, endeavoured unsuccessfully to win the heart of Violet Dyas, a motherless girl, living with her aunt in Chester; and the second and third volumes describe how, after Violet has been driven, in sheer desperation, into a marriage with Leonard Moses, Hebrew stockbroker of Lothbury and Maida Vale, the old lover turns up again, and, though securing an avowal of her affection, fails in his endeavour to persuade her to elope with him. Though Jews abound in the latter part of the narrative, we do not obtain much insight into their social life, the gambling proclivities of a certain circle resident in or about Maida Vale obtaining the largest share of attention. On the whole, this is a clever and polished, but not a moving, novel; and the writer's arbitrary assignment of motives for action in the leading characters has the effect of leaving little to the imagination. Indeed, almost the only thing so left is the probable upshot of the events narrated in the last chapter; for the book ends quite abruptly with the retirement of Allan in a heartbroken condition from the presence of the woman who has resisted his solicitations; and, judging from the man's unscrupulous perseverance, and the complaisance of the wife who allows him an interview and admits her passion for him, one feels naturally inclined to infer that the interview will be repeated, and that her ultimate seduction is a mere matter of time.

Dr. Sinclair's Sister is a specimen of that curious and yet unfortunately rather common production, a novel evolved from the inner consciousness. It bears every mark of being the work of some recluse or dreamer, gifted with exuberant fancy and imperfect faculties of observation, who, with the best intentions in the world, has in his three volumes violated all conditions of intrinsic probability without any compensating merits of treatment or style. There is scarcely a character in the book that is not bizarre and unnatural. The saturnine, self-centred egoist, Marc Sinclair, a country doctor, is far too gloomy and forbidding a creature to awaken in us much interest; his devoted sister, Claire, though ridiculously oversensitive and morbidly scrupulous, is less intolerable, because rather more resembling ordinary flesh and blood. Then we have a Church of England minister, who, rather oddly—for the book is, as a rule, remarkably free from solecisms—is commonly described as "the Reverend Liddon," a man whose earnestness and intensity of purpose are more conspicuous than his common sense. These and a half-crazy German violinist, who apostrophises his instrument, and lives generally in dreamland, constitute the leading personages of the story, so far as there is any story at all. As in Violet Moses, so in this book, the reflective and moralising element is a feature prominent to the point of being wearisome; it is all so good and true and improving—and so dull. Nor in his narrative of special incidents does the writer better succeed in holding up the mirror to nature. The abominable rudeness and impertinences of Mrs. Forrester would never be tolerated in any decent society; the behaviour of "the Reverend Liddon" in accepting an invitation to an "At Home," and availing himself of the occasion to denounce the godlessness of the unoffending guests, is a diplomatic blunder far more fatal than any crime to his chance of securing that popularity which the episode is represented to have gained for him among his new parishioners; the grotesque extravagances of Franz Humbert could scarcely be met with outside a lunatic asylum. It may seem ungracious to speak slightly of a book so unexceptionable in tone and so thoroughly well-meaning. Yet it is possible to maintain a high tone and convey grand moral and religious truths and yet depict men and women as they really are.

In Mr. George Manville Fenn we have a novelist of an altogether different type. It is not without relief that we turn to an author who is content to write a story for its own sake, and who neither betrays any anxiety to point a moral with each fresh chapter, nor attempts the task of anatomising the mechanism of human action. The title role is furnished by the widow of a French planter in Hayti, one Venus Dulau, a mulatto, whose title of "Madame" has been softened in negro pronunciation into "Mahme," while the fantastic prænomen of "Venus" has passed through the stage of "Venousie" into "Nousie." Further than this we are not bothered with any specimens of negro dialect. The tale mainly concerns Madame Dulau's daughter Aube, who is sent to a convent in Paris for her education, and on her return to Hayti narrowly escapes a horrible death at the hands of the Voudou, a religious sect who—according to recent reports—still keep up in the island a hideous species of fetish worship, originally imported from Africa. Mahme Nousie is not by any means the author's best work, but his name is sufficient guarantee that the book is lively and interesting.

Few things are more difficult to a reviewer than the task of commenting upon a rechauffé in book-form of stories that have already seen the light in the pages of periodical magazines. Readers are already acquainted with them, and have gauged their merits; and the critic has nothing before him but the useless task of supplementing views already formed by a tardily-delivered judgment of his own, which nobody listens to; while no scope whatever is offered for the exercise of one of his most useful and necessary functions, namely, the forecasting of the verdict which public opinion will pronounce a month or six weeks hence upon the work under notice. Fortunately, in the case of An Octave of Friends, no reviewer's opinion is required. The stories are, some of them, twenty or thirty years old; their author has made her mark in the world of literature, and no one will begrudge a welcome to the reappearance of some of the tales that charmed us in the days of our youth. That a collection of stories written in the period of crinoline, croquet, and the violent purples of the newly invented aniline dyes, should contain internal evidence of their antiquity is a fact which has not escaped the author; but she urges that "the sketches are still true of the people one daily meets in Vanity Fair. Like all caps made for types, not individuals, they fit as well to-day as yesterday."

And in this she is perfectly right.

The leading incident in A Fatal Request is a case of killing which the perpetrator declares to be "no murder." Mr. Silas Burritt meets his death in a railway accident, caused by a collision with some petroleum trucks which envelope the wrecked train in flames. When his lifeless body is examined, it is found that death has resulted not from burning, but from a bullet wound in the brain. Who fired the fatal shot is a mystery which is not cleared up until the last chapter, when a friend who had accompanied him on the railway journey explains that he shot Mr. Burritt at the latter's own request upon finding it impossible to extricate himself from the mass of burning wreckage. There is plenty of vivid description and some lively touches of humour in the story.

Nothing but commendation was bestowed in the ACADEMY on Miss Black's earlier story, Between the Ferris, when it appeared; and Disinherited is in no way behind it in fidelity of portraiture, while in some respects it is more interesting in conception and written with a stronger hand. Old Lady Hearnhurst, a woman upwards of ninety, who during nearly half a century of widowhood has cherished an implacable hatred towards her husband's family, extending even to the unoffending grandchildren, though in all other ways the kindest-hearted and most charitable of women, is a more finely executed character than any we remember in this author's works.

It would almost seem as if the advertising demon had begun to invade the realms of fiction. At any rate, it seems scarcely possible to account for the extraordinary pains taken by the author of The Mystery of a Type-Writer to sound the praises—address of head office in all cases included—of a certain type-writing firm, a "bucket-shop" proprietor, and a largely puffed electropathic appliance, except upon the hypothesis that he (or she) is executing a commission for the parties most interested. This feature of the work is to be regretted, because the story as a whole is constructed upon a praiseworthy pattern, and the style is crisp and incisive. The concluding portion is an implied condemnation of the behaviour of judge and jury in the Maybrick case.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

SOME BIOGRAPHICAL BOOKS.

The Young Emperor. By Harold Frederic. (Fisher Unwin.) This is an extremely readable book. The young Emperor, of course, is William II. of Germany, whom all London went out to see the other day. Mr. Frederic is a hero-worshipper, but he cannot fairly be described as a blind worshipper. He recognises that his idol has faults, and calls his work a study in character-development on a throne. He describes him first as an impressionable young man who had imbibed disrespect for his parents from Prince Bismarck. It is notorious that even in State documents the ex-Chancellor could not refrain from insulting allusions to the Crown Princess, who was both an Englishwoman and a Liberal. Later on, when the Crown Prince's fatal illness began, we find his own son ranged among those who would keep him from the throne. After his father's death, the first that the world heard of the new Emperor was his proclamations to the army and navy.

"In this country which gave birth to the art of printing, this Germany wherein Dürer and Cranach worked and Luther changed the moral history of mankind, and Lessing cleared the way for that noble band of poets of whom Goethe stands first and Wagner is not last, it seemed nothing less than monstrous that a youth called to be Emperor should see only columns of troops and ironclads."

In these proclamations there was but a passing allusion to his father, who was then lying dead under the same roof. On the day of his father's funeral—a simple military affair very different from the magnificent ceremony of his grandfather's lying in state—William II. addressed the Prussian people. This was generally admitted to be a more satisfactory performance.

"Pondering upon the marked difference between this address and the excited and vain-glorious harangue to the fighting men of Germany which heralded William's accession, it occurred to me to inquire whether or not Dr. Hinzpeter had in the interim made his appearance at Potsdam. No one could remember, but the point may be worth the attention of the future historian."

Dr. Hinzpeter was the Emperor's tutor before the evil influences of Bonn and Bismarck had begun to harden the young man. We are still, however, in 1888, and Dr. Hinzpeter's return to power was not till the Westphalian strikes in 1890. For nearly a year after the Emperor's accession the ascendancy of the Bismarcks was complete. If any one still doubts the wisdom of his act in dispensing with Bismarck, let him compare the history of Germany before and since the Chancellor's fall—let him contrast the position the German Emperor enjoys to-day with his dubious reputation of three years ago. When he visited Rome in 1888, he behaved in such a manner that the Pope confided to certain members of his household the fear that he was a conceited and headstrong young man, whose reign would end in disaster. Nor did he fare better in Russia. When he hurried, an uninvited guest, to St. Petersburg to greet the Czar even before he had visited his two allies of the Triple Alliance, his reception was of the coldest. Worse was to follow. When the Czar three weeks later paid a visit to Stuttgart, he passed through Berlin both going and coming.

"apparently for no other purpose than to insult the Kaiser by stopping for an hour each time inside the railway station, as if there were no such people as the Hohenzollerns to so much as leave a card upon."

Nor was the Emperor less unpopular in democratic England than in autocratic Russia. The welcome he received last July from the people of this country would not have seemed possible two years ago, when he was still in the leading strings of the Iron Chancellor. Egotism seems to have played its part in the determination of William II. to dispense with the Bismarcks; but while making this admission, no one who knows Germany can now dispute the wisdom, and, indeed, the absolute necessity of the step. In January, 1890, the Reichstag was approaching the close of its three years' term. The anti-Socialist penal laws would lapse in September of that year unless renewed. Prince Bismarck was, of course, in favour of their prompt renewal.

"His enemies had secretly been preparing for the defeat of these laws in the Reichstag, and now in the middle of the month found that they had secured an absolute majority. They conveyed this fact to the Kaiser, with the obvious corollary that the time had arrived for him to take the popular lead in his empire, and make an issue on this question with his Chancellor. William saw the point, and reluctantly took the decisive step."

We must refer our readers to Mr. Frederic's own pages if they wish to follow the incidents of this deeply-interesting but still little-known episode in German history. The fall of the Bismarcks was an historical drama that deserved, and will doubtless find, its Browning. The historian's verdict will unquestionably be one of unqualified approval of the Emperor's conduct, though Teniel's masterly cartoon of the old pilot's leave-taking blinded many Englishmen at the time. A year and more has now passed with no Bismarck at the helm, but so far from the Ship of State having suffered, never before has her course been so smooth. Mr. Frederic truly says that "since the foundation of the empire, Germany has not known such another tranquil and comfortable period. Nothing has arisen calculated to make men regret the ex-Chancellor's retirement. Almost every month has contributed some new warrant for the now practically unanimous sense of satisfaction in his being out of office."

We cannot close this brief notice of a most interesting and thoughtful volume without paying a tribute to Mr. Frederic's condensed and pregnant style. It is not often that a book can be pronounced absolutely free from padding, but this can be said of the present work.

Sir William M'Arthur, K.C.M.G. By Thomas M'Cullagh. (Hodder & Stoughton.) It has been our good fortune from time to time to review the interesting biographies of successful merchants, such as that of Sir George Burns, that have been published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. We are unable to say that the present volume is an addition to their number. And yet the subject of this biography was a model of all that a merchant and member of parliament should be. The fault does not lie with Sir William, but with his biographer. Mr. M'Cullagh is a painstaking and well-meaning writer, but more we are unable to say. The solemnity with which trivial details are recorded is ludicrous; and even when events are sad and serious, the telling of them is marred by stilted language. The following is a sample of Mr. M'Cullagh's treatment: Sir William died very suddenly in the Underground Railway. Says his biographer:

"The life which was begun at Malin, in the county of Donegal, on July 6, 1809, after running a course of seventy-eight years four months and ten days, was ended underground in a carriage on the Metropolitan Railway, at or near Praed-street Station, Paddington, on November 16, 1887, about eight minutes before eleven o'clock in the forenoon."

There are also expressions made use of that hardly commend themselves. Sir William M'Arthur visited Baalbek and took part in a mission service among the ruins. Mr. M'Cullagh records this simple fact as follows:

"Sir William M'Arthur prayed at the conclusion, with (as Mr. Allen testifies) great enlargement and pleading power."

Sir William M'Arthur for seventeen consecutive years represented Lambeth in parliament. This was in itself no mean achievement, but we cannot congratulate Mr. M'Cullagh on his treatment of this branch of his subject. He seems utterly unable to grasp the significance or reasons for Sir William's declining popularity and ultimate defeat. As Sir William's parliamentary career illustrates an interesting chapter in recent political history, we propose briefly to refer to it. When he was first elected for Lambeth in 1868, the fact that he was connected with the Corporation was no drawback to his candidature. The same was not the case in 1885. In 1868 the City returned three Liberals pledged to support Mr. Gladstone's Irish policy; and on a vacancy being caused by the death of the fourth member (a Conservative), his place, too, was filled by a Liberal. Thus it came about that aldermen had not to go far afield to find safe seats, and the metropolitan constituencies were represented by city magnates, such as Lawrence, Lusk, M'Arthur, and others. But at the election of 1874 the rift within the lute became visible. Lawrence and M'Arthur were, it is true, again returned, but by a much reduced majority. By the election of 1880, London Radicals began to look askance at Corporation Liberals, and to demand reforms nearer home than Ireland. A Lambeth Advanced Liberal Association had been formed, which evidently thought the "40,000 aborigines in Lambeth" more in need of their member's attention than "the aborigines of the Gambia, Natal, and Fiji." Fortunately for the sitting members, a split in the Liberal ranks was avoided, and for the third time their gallant Conservative opponent (Mr. Morgan Howard) was defeated. It required, however, no prophet to foretell that opposition to their return for any of the new divisions of Lambeth in 1885 was certain. Sir William would have been well advised had he sought the suffrages of another constituency. He was badly beaten, not only by a Conservative, but also by a Radical rival. Thus ended in misfortune a useful and honourable career.

"The ultra-Radical was unsuccessful," says Sir William's biographer, "but succeeded in keeping out of Parliament the Christian philanthropist, who by representing Lambeth had represented Newington for seventeen years; who made free of toll seven bridges across the Thames; who protected Dulwich in his old borough from the presence of a convict prison; who pleaded for the rights of aboriginal races in many lands; and who, without the firing of a shot or the sacrifice of a life, added a new colony to the British Empire."

While we regret as much as his biographer that anything but death terminated Sir William's parliamentary career, we cannot regard his defeat as a personal one. At the elections of 1885 the Radicals of London would not have returned an angel from heaven had he been connected with the City Companies. This sentiment must have been strong indeed, if such a man as Sir William M'Arthur was sacrificed to it. There is a great difference between being generous and charitable, but Sir William was both. He was a man sincerely religious, not merely with lip-service, but in deed and word. His religion was no mere farrago of set phrases. We will conclude our notice by quoting from a letter of one who in many points resembles Sir William—the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon (p. 332):

"His [Sir W. M'Arthur's] liberal support of every movement for the benefit of our fellow-men, and his zeal for the interests of the oppressed in all lands are matters of public notoriety. He is a good man and true, and has worked laboriously in his place in parliament, and out of it, for such measures and movements as promote religion, good morals, and freedom."

"RULERS OF INDIA."—Clyde and Strathnairn, by Major-Gen. Sir O. T. Burne. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) When it has been said that this is a lively little account of military operations in India during the suppression of the Revolt of 1857, the limits of permissible praise have been fully reached; for the book—small though it be—can hardly be said to have any reason of existence. Clyde and Strathnairn, in the first place, were in no sense "Rulers of India"; and, for the rest, no more books on the Mutiny are wanted; nor, if they were, is the gallant general the man to write them. He evidently possesses little knowledge of the language or history of the people of India; and he is content to quote with unhesitating faith the narrow opinions of Lord Lawrence on the non-political origin of the outbreak, while he writes with utter carelessness upon all but the purely professional details which have been abundantly related in other and more serious works. Thus we are told that "the modern city of Delhi was founded by the Emperor Jahangir in 1631"; whereas any "selected candidate" could tell us that in 1631 Jahangir had been dead nearly four years, and that the city was founded by Shah Jahan, whose name, indeed, it commonly bears to this day. The Rani of Jhansi is called "Ganga = Bhai"—the latter word, being masculine and equivalent to "brother," could never be given to a woman

(the true word, of course, is Bai, or "Bye," as commonly written). European names fare little better, for Gen. Van Cortlandt, of the Punjab army, is called here "Courtland"; while Col. Steuart, of the 14th Light Dragoons, figures as "Stewart." Nor, indeed, are the military operations always related with due spirit or even accuracy—see, for example, the lame account of the taking of Gwalior at p. 147, which does much less than justice to the harebrained audacity of Lieut. Rose, and does not mention his more fortunate companion, Waller, at all. One or two extracts from private letters and an occasional footnote are valuable. The anecdote of Capt. (now Gen. Sir R.) Meade in a note, p. 146, is not mentioned in the current histories, and is worth preservation. By sheer coolness and personal influence he persuaded the armed and excited Gwalior mutineers to give up the palace of Sindhia without a struggle, thus saving many lives to both sides. The merits of officers are so often measured by bloodshed that an instance to the contrary deserves our hearty admiration. The next best thing in the book is the contrast—of which more might have been made—between the cautious proceedings of the old soldier of fortune whom the men called "Sir Crawlin' Camel" and the headlong vigour of the chivalrous dandy, Sir Hugh Rose.

Lewis Cass. By Andrew C. McLaughlin. (Boston, U.S.: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) This latest volume of the admirable series of "American Statesmen" treats of one whose name is not very well known on this side of the Atlantic. It is likely that a considerable number of readers of this notice will ask, "Who was Lewis Cass?" never having heard of him, or, at any rate, never having associated him with any movement important enough to dwell in their memory. Yet, in his own country and in his day, he was a prominent man; and, if not a statesman of the first rank, coming, for instance, far below Quincy Adams, Jefferson, and Clay, was still sufficiently important to be entitled to a place in such a series as this. The opening up of the "North-West"—the Michigan district—of America is attributed largely to him; and this, probably, was the most truly useful work he did. For the rest, he was an active politician on the usual lines—successively a Governor, a Member of Congress, a Senator, a Secretary of State, and even a candidate for the Presidency. He was a party to the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law; and if in this and other slavery compromises he showed no remarkable astuteness, it should be remembered that greater men than he blundered. There was not the reason for doubting his motives which existed in the case of Webster. Of the present biography it must be said that its writer has industriously gathered together all it was necessary to know about Cass, that he has written his narrative clearly, and that, if somewhat of an enthusiast, he has, on the whole, done substantial justice to the subject of his memoir. The publishers invite attention to the improved method they have adopted in binding the book, "by which a remarkable combination of strength and flexibility is secured." The claim seems to be justified by the fact; and, at any rate, we may congratulate Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. on having abandoned that system of binding with wire which had no merits and many faults.

NOTES AND NEWS.

READERS of Forty Years in a Moorland Parish will be glad to hear that not only literary fame but also ecclesiastical honour have reached its author, though late. The new Archbishop of York has conferred upon the Rev. Dr. J. C.

Atkinson the canonry and prebend of Holme, in recognition of his long services in the diocese and also of his work in literature. Though no stipend is attached to the office, it carries with it the privilege of taking books out of the Chapter Library, which is especially rich in historical works connected with the North of England. We hear that the publishers were at first doubtful whether they would sell 500 copies of Forty Years in a Moorland Parish; whereas the public have already demanded several thousands in less than six months, and the entire illustrated edition has been subscribed in advance of publication.

THE QUEEN has just accepted a copy of Miss Marie Corelli's Romance of Two Worlds. The presentation was not effected in the usual formal method, but through the medium of one of the Ladies-in-Waiting, with the result that Her Majesty was pleased to intimate by telegram through Lady Churchill that she would like "all Marie Corelli's works." The set of volumes (as published by Messrs. Bentley), specially bound in white and gold, have therefore been despatched by Queen's Messenger from Buckingham Palace direct to Balmora.

PROF. SALMONÉ, who left England last January for a tour in Mesopotamia, Egypt, Syria, Smyrna, and Constantinople, returned to London a fortnight ago. He is now engaged on an important work, entitled Muhammadian Dominion. The book will be in two parts—the first treating of the character, customs, and folk-lore of the Arab-speaking subjects of the Sultan; and the second of the government and condition of the country in the past and present.

A VOLUME entitled Joseph, from the pen of the Rev. H. G. Tomkins, author of The Life and Times of Abraham, will be published by the Religious Tract Society on October 1 as one of the series entitled "By Paths of Bible Knowledge." This work will give the results of Mr. Tomkins's long and laborious study of all ancient oriental sources bearing upon the history of Joseph—a subject sketched out by himself more than ten years ago, in a most interesting and scholarly discourse delivered before the members of the Victoria Institute, which was noticed in the ACADEMY for 1880, page 340.

PROF. ZUPITZA, of Berlin, is editing for the Chaucer Society specimens of the unprinted texts of the "Canterbury Tales," choosing for this purpose "The Pardoner's Tale," which, by the way, possesses peculiar interest for story-comparers, as it not only permeated with European literature in the middle ages, and has long existed in slightly different forms among the Arabs, Persians, and Ottomans, but has its prototype in one of the Jātakas, or Buddhist Birth-Stories. One of the inedited texts of the "Canterbury Tales" is preserved in the Hunterian Museum at Glasgow, and it would appear to have remained till now unexamined by Chaucerian scholars. It is fairly written in double columns of some fifty-six lines each, and according to the colophon was done by Godfrey Spurling and his son Thomas, of Norwich, in the year 1476. The MS. is unfortunately imperfect, wanting the general prologue (or frame-story) down to the description of the Franklin, the first leaf beginning with the line:

"His table dormant in his halle alweye."

The order of the Tales is different from that observed in most, if not all, other texts, and two of them (the Shipman's and the Prioress's) are given a second time. In this text the Pardoner does not follow the Doctor, as in the Ellesmere MS. for instance, but the Second Nun; yet it should have followed the Shipman, since in the prologue to the Shipman's Tale, the host of the Tabard begins with reference to the Pardoner's Tale, which he says they have just heard. Mr. W. A. Clouston has transcribed for Dr. Zupitza, with permission of Prof. Young, the keeper of the Hunterian Museum, the Pardoner's Preamble and Tale from the Glasgow MS.—which is near akin to the Rawlinson and Ellesmere MSS.—and supplied some notes of the variations which this text presents to those already printed for the Chaucer Society.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS will publish in the autumn, A Lost God, by Mr. F. W. Bourdillon, author of "Aucassin and Nicolette," with three full-page illustrations, by H. J. Ford; also the posthumous poems of Philip Bourke Marston, edited with biographical sketch, by Mrs. Louis Chandler Moulton. Both will be limited issues.

Hungary and its People is the title of a work just completed by Mr. Louis Felbermann. It deals with the origin of the Hungarians, and the thousand years' history of that country, giving also a description of the Carpathian Mountains, the Snow Alps, the Lowlands, and other parts of Hungary and Transylvania, as well as of the manners and customs of the various races under the crown of St. Stephen's. The book will be a handsome crown octavo volume, profusely illustrated, and is dedicated to Countess Deym, wife of the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador. It will be published by Messrs. Griffith, Farran & Co.

MR. A. E. WAITE'S new book, called The Occult Sciences, will form a sort of cyclopaedia of information on matters interesting to theosophists and students of the black arts. The work has been edited by Mr. George Redway, and will be published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trübner & Co.

MESSRS. F. V. WHITE & Co. will shortly publish a new novel, in three volumes, by B. M. Croker, entitled Interference.

MR. G. A. HENTY has taken as the subject of one of his forthcoming Christmas books the story of the Nile Expedition, under the title of The Dash for Khartoum. Several British officers occupy prominent positions in Mr. Henty's narrative.

ANOTHER of Mr. Henty's new volumes, Held Fast for England, is concerned with the siege of Gibraltar, one of the memorable episodes in British history which has not yet been treated in the form of historical fiction. Messrs. Blackie & Son are the publishers.

A TALE of adventure by Mr. H. B. Mariott Watson, entitled The Web of the Spider, and dealing with New Zealand and the Maoris, will shortly be issued by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. The action of the story takes place in the heart of the "King Country" at the time of the native wars of 1863-64.

MESSRS. MORISON BROTHERS, of Glasgow, will publish early in November The Black Cross: a hypnotic romance, by Mr. W. Hamilton Seymour, who is already well known as a writer of sensational stories.

MR. GIBBINGS will issue at once a limited edition of a little work by Mr. J. G. Lewis, of Canterbury, entitled Christopher Marlowe: outlines of his Life and Work. Mr. Henry Irving, who takes a great interest in the memorial scheme, has accepted the dedication.

A NEW work on Revelation, by Mr. William Griffiths, entitled Divine Footsteps in the Bible, is announced for early publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. have arranged to publish this season cheap illustrated editions of their "Treasure Island Series," consisting of the following volumes:—King Solomon's Mines, by Rider Haggard; Kidnapped, Treasure Island, The Master of Ballantrae, and The Black Arrow, by Robert Louis Stevenson; and The Splendid Spur, by Q. The three first-mentioned books will appear next week, and the others as soon as the special illustrations which are being prepared are ready.

THE utility of the Gentleman's Magazine for historical and genealogical purposes is so well known that the completion of the first volume of a new index will no doubt be widely welcomed. Ayscough's index nominum failed so signally in the matter of ready reference that the Index Society projected a new one. The early issue of the third part of the index to the biographical and obituary notices for the period 1731-1780 is now announced by the British Record Society, with which the Index Society was amalgamated a short time ago. Application for copies of the complete volume should be made to the society's agent, Mr. G. Clark, 4, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

MR. LOWELL has bequeathed all his MSS. and correspondence to Prof. Charles Eliot Norton, making him his literary executor; and he has given to the library of Harvard College the option of selecting any of his books which they do not already possess.

THE fourteenth annual meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom will open at Nottingham on Tuesday next, September 15. In addition to exhibitions of artistic bindings in the Castle Museum, and of library appliances at the University College, Mr. W. H. K. Wright, of Plymouth, the energetic editor of the Journal of the Ex Libris Society, has also undertaken to get together a collection of book-plates from public libraries.

THE Deutscher Schriftsteller-Verband meets at Berlin to-day (Saturday); and the Association Littéraire et Artistique Internationale will hold its annual congress at Neuchâtel from September 26 to October 3.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE ANTIQUITY OF ART.

(Paleolithic Man.)

To J. G.

A SAVAGE, in a bleak world, on a waste,
'Midst fir-tree-cover'd mountains, led his life:
The claws and fangs of mighty beasts he faced—
A hunter, seeking food for child and wife.

And, on the smooth wall of his cavern lair,
The image of a reindeer once he drew,—
Small, to the life, with faithful lines and fair,
That all its antler-branchings copied true.

Was he a savage? No! a Man. The dew
Of pity touch'd him; the sweet brotherhood
Of Nature's general offspring well he knew:—
Humane, he loved; ingenious, understood.

More:—the desires that kindling hearts inflame,
To leave dull rest, and court congenial woe—
The Love of Beauty, and the Thirst for Fame,
Throb'd faintly in that huntman long ago!

And, friend! the self-same passion in his breast
That stirr'd, and wrought to permanence divine
One form of grace, most touchingly express'd,
Stirs in your heart to-day, and stirs in mine!

GEORGE DOUGLAS.

OBITUARY.

WILLIAM HENRY WIDGERY.

WE regret to record the death, at the early age of thirty-five, of Mr. W. H. Widgery, whose name will be known to many of our readers as that of an able writer and lecturer on educational subjects.

Mr. Widgery was a native of Exeter, and was educated at Hele's School and the Grammar School in that city, subsequently obtaining a scholarship at St. John's College, Cambridge. He graduated in 1879 as eighth Senior Optime, ill-health having prevented him from obtaining the higher mathematical honours which he had been encouraged to hope for. In 1880 he was one of the winners of the Harness prize, his essay ("On the First Quarto Edition of 'Hamlet'") and that of Mr. C. H. Herford being declared equal in merit. He took the degree of M.A. in 1882, and afterwards became a master in University College School, where he was highly successful as a teacher, and continued to hold that position until his death. In 1886 he studied for some time in Germany, giving his attention chiefly to comparative philology and modern languages.

A remarkable series of articles on "The Teaching of Languages in Schools," contributed by him to the Journal of Education, was reprinted as a pamphlet in 1888, and attracted considerable attention both in England and Germany. A long and highly favourable review of it appears in the last number of the Englische Studien, and a Swedish translation is stated to be in preparation. An Exeter newspaper says that Mr. Widgery had been commissioned by the United States Government to prepare a report on the educational department at the Paris Exhibition, and that this was all but completed at the time of his death. Although his published work was inconsiderable in quantity, it was marked in no common degree by vigour and independence of thought; and there can be little doubt that if a few more years of life and health had been granted him, he would have attained a distinguished reputation among educational writers. His personal qualities gained for him the cordial esteem and affection of all who were brought into association with him, and his premature death will be deeply regretted by a very wide circle of friends.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for September contains a number of interesting articles. Prof. Iverach gives us some notion of Dr. H. H. Wendt's views on the Fourth Gospel. Many readers will, we hope, be stimulated to acquaint themselves with the original work. It is most gratifying to find that such a conservative writer can learn from one who is scarcely to be labelled "orthodox." Mr. Lock gives a second study on Early Christianity. With delicate insight he discusses on the "Christology of the Earlier Chapters of the Acts." Prof. Milligan apparently concludes his exegetical papers on the "Resurrection of the Dead." Prof. Marshall continues his researches on the Aramaic Gospel, on which we shall for the present make no further comment. In the present paper he shows much ability in treating of the Galilean dialect, and explains certain divergences in the Synoptic Gospels by the assumption of Galilean dialectal forms in the Aramaic MSS. of the Gospels. Mr. Peyton considers our Lord's Third Temptation. The paper is eloquent and suggestive. Might not the writer have mentioned Milton's probable location of the "very high mountain" in the Taurus range? "The Agamemnon of Aeschylus, the Oedipus of Sophocles, the Heracleidae of Euripides are the Isaiah, the Job, the Micah of the Greeks"—that is a striking remark. Prof. Sanday notices Dr. Marcus Dods on the Gospel of St. John kindly but discriminately. Is he not slightly too academical, however? Does he quite realise the nature of the task set before Dr. Dods? Is it not the right plan in popularising to convey as much information as possible in the course of the book, rather than to pack it in an introduction and notes? And do not Prof. Sanday's concluding remarks almost cut the nerve of psychological exegesis, so far as it relates to our Lord? Can the Christian interpreter say with a half-instructed disciple, "Depart from me," &c.?

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for September contains an important article by Dr. Kuonen on Hatch's Hibbert Lectures and Toy's Judaism and Christianity; also critical notes on Isaiah xl.-lxvi., by Dr. Oort (who has been entrusted with the preliminary work on Isaiah for the new Dutch version of the Old Testament); and a notice of Kautzsch and Socin's documentary German edition of Genesis, and of Kautzsch's Die heilige Schrift, part I, by the same reviewer.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

CLARENDON PRESS ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Theology, &c.—"Nouum Testamentum Domini Nostri Iesu Christi Latine, secundum Editionem S. Hieronymi," ad Codd. mss. fidem recensuit I. Wordsworth, Episcopus Sarisburiensis; in operis societatem adsumto H. I. White, Partis i., fasc. iii., "Euangelium secundum Lucam"; "A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament," based on the Lexicon of Gesenius, as translated by E. Robinson, edited by Francis Brown, S. R. Driver, and C. A. Briggs; "A Concordance to the Septuagint," edited by the late Edwin Hatch, and H. A. Redpath, demy quarto, fasc. i.; "The Peshito Version of the Gospels," edited by G. H. Gwilliam, fasc. i.; "Legenda Angliae," edited by C. Horstmann; "Helps to the Study of the Prayer Book."

Greek and Latin.—"The Dialogues of Plato," translated into English, with analyses and introductions, by B. Jowett, third edition, revised; Plato, "The Republic," Greek text, edited with prolegomena, &c., by B. Jowett and Lewis Campbell; "The Inscriptions of Cos," by E. L. Hicks and W. R. Paton; "Notes on the Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle," by J. A. Stewart; Purves' "Selections from Plato," new edition, by Evelyn Abbott; "Thucydides," Book i., edited by W. H. Forbes; Euripides, "Cyclops," edited by W. E. Long; Plutarch's "Lives of the Gracchi," edited by G. E. Underhill; "A Greek Prose Primer," by J. Y. Sargent; The "Annals" of Tacitus, edited by H. Furneaux, vol. ii., completing the work; Quintilian, "de Institutione Oratoria," book x., edited by W. Peterson; Cicero, "de Oratore," book iii., edited by A. S. Wilkins; The "Georgics" of Virgil, edited by C. S. Jerram; "The Poets of the Augustan Age," vol. ii., by the late W. Y. Sellar, with memoir by Andrew Lang, and portrait.

Oriental.—"Thesaurus Syriacus," editit R. Payne Smith, fasc. ix.; "A Catalogue of the Turkish, Hindustani, and Pushtu MSS. in the Bodleian Library," by H. Ethé, part ii.; "A Catalogue of the Armenian MSS. in the Bodleian Library," by Dr. S. Baronian; "A Collo-type Reproduction of the Ancient MS. of the Yasna, with its Pahlavi Translation, A.D. 1323, in the possession of the Bodleian Library"; "The Four Hundred Quatrains," Tamil text, with translation, &c., by G. U. Pope; and "A Bengali Grammar," by John Beames.

General Literature.—"The Letters of Samuel Johnson, LL.D.," in 2 vols., edited by G. Birkbeck Hill; a new edition of Sir G. C. Lewis's "Government of Dependencies," by C. P. Lucas; "Catalogue of Rawlinson MSS. (D) in the Bodleian Library," by W. D. Macray; "Two of the Saxon Chronicles Parallel," a revised text, edited by C. Plummer, on the basis of an edition by John Earle; "Geography of Africa South of the Zambesi," by W. Parr Greswell; "Hymns and Chorales for Colleges and Schools," selected and edited by John Farmer.

Modern Languages.—"Specimens of Mediaeval French," edited by Paget Toynbee; Molière,

"Le Misanthrope," edited by W. H. G. Markheim.

History, Biography, Law, &c.—"Origines Islandiae: The Landnamaboc," &c., edited, classified, and Englished by the late G. Vigfusson and F. York Powell, in 2 vols.; "The English Peasantry in the Thirteenth Century," by P. Vinogradoff; "The Song of Dermot and the Earl": An Old French Poem on the Invasion of Ireland, edited by Goddard H. Orpen; "A History of England from the Accession of Henry IV. to the Battle of Bosworth Field," by Sir James H. Ramsay, in 2 vols.; "Hastings and the Rohilla War," by Sir John Strachey; "A History of Sicily," by E. A. Freeman, vols. iii. and iv.; "A History of the United States of America," by E. J. Payne, vol. i.; "Italy and her Invaders," by Thomas Hodgkin, vols. i. and ii., new edition; "French Revolutionary Speeches," edited by H. Morse Stephens; "Sir Walter Raleigh: A Biography," by William Stebbing; "Isaac Casaubon," by Mark Pattison, second edition revised; "Life and Select Works of John Arbuthnot, M.D.," by G. S. Aitken; Sohm's "Institutes of Roman Law," authorised English translation, by J. C. Ledlie; "Law and Custom of the Constitution": part ii., "The Executive," by Sir W. R. Anson; "The Land Revenue Systems, and Tenures of British India," by B. H. Baden-Powell, in 3 vols.

The English Language and Literature.—"Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary," part iv., section i., edited by T. N. Toller; "A New English Dictionary, founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society," part vi. (clo—consigner), edited by James A. H. Murray; "A Translation of the Beowulf in English Prose," by John Earle; "The Complete Works of Chaucer," edited by W. W. Skeat, in 5 vols.; Bunyan's "Holy War," &c., edited by Edward and Mabel Peacock; "Selections from Swift," edited by Henry Craik; Thomson's "Seasons," and "Castle of Indolence," edited by J. Logie Robertson; Wordsworth's "White Doe of Rylstone," &c., edited by W. Knight.

Mathematics, Physical Science, &c.—"Mathematical Papers of the late Henry J. S. Smith, Savilian Professor of Geometry in the University of Oxford," with portrait and memoir, in 2 vols.; "Plane Trigonometry without Imaginaries," by R. C. J. Nixon; "A Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism," by J. Clerk Maxwell, new edition; "A Manual of Crystallography," by M. H. N. Story-Maskelyne; "Elementary Mechanics," by A. L. Selby; Weismann's "Lectures on Heredity," vol. ii., edited by E. B. Poulton.

Sacred Books of the East.—Vol. xxx., The Grihya-Sûtras, translated by H. Oldenberg, part ii.; vol. xxxii., Vedic Hymns, translated by F. Max Müller, part i.; vol. xxxvi., Milinda, translated by T. W. Rhys-Davids, part ii.; vol. xxxvii., The Contents of the Nasks, as stated in the Eighth and Ninth Books of the Dinkard, translated by E. W. West; vols. xxxix., xl., The Sacred Books of China; Tao Teh King, &c., translated by James Legge; vol. xli., The Satapatha Brâhmana, translated by J. Eggeling, part iii.

Anecdote Series.—Collations and extracts of the Kâmya text of the Satapatha Brâhmana, I-IV., by J. Eggeling; Firdausi's "Yûsuf and Zalikhâ," edited by H. Ethé; "A Collation of the Greek text of portions of Aristotle with Ancient Armenian Versions, by F. C. Conybeare; "Collations from the Harleian MS. of Cicero" (2682), by A. C. Clark; "The Elucidarium," edited from a dated Welsh MS. of the 14th century, by John Rhys and J. M. Jones.

Rulers of India.—"Asoka: and the Political Organisation of Ancient India," by T. W. Rhys-Davids; "Aurangzeb: and the Decay of the Mughal Empire," by Sir W. W. Hunter;

"Albuquerque: and the Portuguese in India," by H. Morse Stephens; "Madhu Rao Sindhia: and the Hindu Reconquest of India," by H. G. Keene; "Lord Clive: and the Establishment of the English in India," by J. Seeley; "Ranjit Singh: and the Sikh Barrier between our Growing Empire and Central Asia," by Sir Lepel Griffin; "Mountstuart Elphinstone: and the Making of South-Western India," by J. S. Cotton; "Lord William Bentinck: and the Company as a Governing and Non-trading Power," by Demetrius Boulger; "Earl Canning: and the Transfer of India from the Company to the Crown," by Sir Henry S. Cunningham.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

General Literature.—"Mahdiism and the Egyptian Soudan," being an account of the rise and progress of Mahdiism, and of subsequent events in the Soudan to the present time, by Major F. R. Wingate, Assistant Adjutant-General for Intelligence, Egyptian Army, with 10 maps and numerous plans; "Essays on some Controverted Questions," by Prof. T. H. Huxley; "The Complete Poetical Works of James Russell Lowell," with portrait and introduction by Thomas Hughes, uniform with the one-volume editions of the poems of Tennyson, Wordsworth, Shelley, and Matthew Arnold; "The New Calendar of Great Men," edited by Frederic Harrison; "The English Town in the Fifteenth Century," by Alice Stopford Green, in 2 vols.; "Horae Sabbaticae," Essays reprinted from the Saturday Review, by Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, Bart.; "Two New Volumes of Essays," by E. A. Freeman, i. Historical, ii. Miscellaneous; "Some Aspects of the Greek Genius," by Prof. S. A. Butcher; "Dr. Schliemann's Excavations at Troy, Tiryns, Mycenae, Orchomenos, Ithaca, presented in the light of recent knowledge," by Dr. Carl Schuchhardt, Authorised Translation by Miss Eugenie Sellers, with Appendix on latest Researches by Drs. Schliemann and Dörpfeld, and Introduction by Walter Leaf, illustrated with two portraits, maps, plans, and 290 woodcuts; "Pictures from Shelley," being a series of twenty-four plates, drawn by F. C. Dell, engraved by J. D. Cooper; "Cranford," by Mrs. Gaskell, with 100 illustrations by Hugh Thomson, uniform with the "Vicar of Wakefield"; "Nurse Heatherdale's Story," by Mrs. Molesworth, with illustrations by Leslie Brooke; "The Last of the Giant Killers," a Fairy Tale, by the Rev. Dr. J. C. Atkinson; "Blanche, Lady Falaise," by J. H. Shorthouse; "The Railway Man and his Children: a Novel," by Mrs. Oliphant, in 3 vols.; "Jerusalem," by Mrs. Oliphant, with fifty illustrations (uniform with "The Makers of Florence," &c.); "The Makers of Florence," by Mrs. Oliphant, édition de luxe, with twenty additional plates reproduced from line engravings after pictures by Florentino artists; "Nevermore," by Rolf Boldrewood, in 3 vols.; "That Stick," by Charlotte M. Yonge, in 2 vols.; "Battles, Bivouacs, and Barracks," by Archibald Forbes; "Tim: A Story of School Life," by a New Writer; "The Formal Garden in England," by Reginald Blomfield and F. Inigo Thomas, with illustrations; "Beast and Man in India," by J. L. Kipling, with numerous illustrations by the author; "The Inferno of Dante," translated, with a Commentary, by A. J. Butler, uniform with his editions of the "Purgatorio" and "Paradiso"; "An Introduction to the Theory of Value," by William Smart; "Public Finance," by Prof. C. F. Bastable; "The Government of Victoria (Australia)," by Prof. Edward Jenks of Melbourne; new volumes of the "English Men of Action"—"Montrose," by Mowbray Morris, "Rodney," by D. G. Hannay; new volumes of "Twelve English Statesmen"—"Chatham," by John Morley, "Queen Elizabeth," by Prof. Reesly; "A Short History of the English People," by John Richard Green, illustrated, in monthly parts, from October, 1891; "The Cambridge Shakespeare," vol. iv.; "The Globe Shakespeare," India paper edition; "A History of Early English Literature," by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, in 2 vols.; "The Study of English Literature: A Plea for its Recognition and Organisation at the Universities," by J. Churton Collins; "Tennyson for the Young," with notes and preface by Canon Ainger; limited editions on hand-made paper of the following volumes in "The Golden Treasury Series"—"The Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics," "The Republic of Plato," "The Pilgrim's Progress," "Bacon's Essays," "The Book of Praise"; "Poems by the late William Cauldwell Roscoe," edited by his daughter, Elizabeth Mary Roscoe; "A Vision of Life: Semblance and Reality," by W. Gifford Palgrave; "Recollections of a Happy Life," being the Autobiography of Marianne North, edited by her sister, Mrs. J. A. Symonds, with portraits, in two volumes; "The Correspondence of James Smetham," with an introductory memoir and portrait.

Theology.—"Two Volumes of Essays," by Bishop Lightfoot—(1) Theological, (2) Miscellaneous; "Village Sermons," by the late Dean Church; "Lincoln's Inn Sermons," by F. D. Maurice, in 6 vols., monthly from October; "New and Collected Edition of Archdeacon Farrar's Sermons"; "The Leading Ideas of the Gospels," by the Right Rev. William Alexander, Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, new edition, revised and enlarged; "The Divine Library of the Old Testament," lectures delivered at St. Asaph by Prof. A. F. Kirkpatrick; "The Gate Beautiful and other Bible Readings for the Young," by the Rev. Hugh Macmillan; "Introduction to the History of the Canon of the Old Testament," by Prof. H. E. Ryle; and "Bible Stories" (second series), by the Rev. A. J. Church, illustrated.

Science.—"The Pioneers of Science," by Prof. Oliver Lodge, with portraits and other illustrations; "Electricity and Magnetism," a popular treatise, by Amédée Guillemin, translated and edited, with additions and notes, by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson, with numerous illustrations, uniform with the English editions of M. Guillemin's "The Forces of Nature" and "The Application of Physical Forces"; "A Complete Treatise on Inorganic and Organic Chemistry," by Sir Henry E. Roscoe, and Prof. C. Schorlemmer: vol. iii.—Organic Chemistry; and the Chemistry of the Hydrocarbons, and their Derivatives, or Organic Chemistry, six parts, part vi.; "A Text-Book of Physiology," illustrated, sixth edition revised, part iv., comprising the remainder of book iii., "The Senses and Some Special Muscular Mechanisms," and book iv., "The Tissues and Mechanisms of Reproduction," by Prof. Michael Foster; "Text-Book of Comparative Anatomy," by Prof. Arnold Lang, of Zürich, issued as the ninth edition of Edward Oscar Schmidt's "Handbook of Comparative Anatomy," translated into English by Henry M. Bernard and Matilda Bernard, with preface by Prof. Ernst Haeckel, in 2 vols., illustrated; "Materials for the Study of Variation in Animals," part i., Discontinuous Variation, by William Bateson, illustrated; "The Diseases of Modern Life," by Dr. B. W. Richardson, new and cheaper edition; "Ligation in Continuity," by C. A. Ballance and Dr. Walter Edmunds, with illustrations and plates; "The Dietetic Value of Bread," by John Goodfellow, with illustrations; "On Colour Blindness," by Thomas H. Bickerton, illustrated (Nature Series).

Educational.—"Scholia Aristophanica," being such Comments and Adscripts to the text of Aristophanes as are preserved in the Codex Ravennas, arranged, emended, and translated by the Rev. Dr. W. G. Rutherford; Classical Library (new volume), Pindar—"Isthmian Odes," by J. B. Bury, a companion volume to Mr. Bury's recent edition of the Nemean Odes; Classical Series (new volumes), "Cicero in his Letters," edited, with introduction and notes, by Prof. R. Y. Tyrrell; "Plautus—Captivi," edited by A. R. S. Hallidie; "Thucydides," book ii., edited by E. C. Marchant; "Thucydides," book v., edited by C. E. Graves; Elementary Classics (new volumes), "Caesar—De Bello Civili," book i., edited by Malcolm Montgomery; "Herodotus—Tales from Herodotus," edited by G. S. Farnell; "Xenophon—Complete Works," translated, with introductions and notes, by H. G. Dakyns, vol. ii., with maps and plans; "A Short Manual of Philology for Classical Students," by P. Giles, uniform with Dr. Gow's "Companion to School Classics"; "Analysis of English History," by Prof. T. F. Tout; "Historical Readers for Elementary Schools," adapted to the several standards. Edited by Edward J. Mathew; "Historical Lessons in English Syntax," by Dr. L. Kellner; Tennyson—"The Princess," edited by P. M. Wallace; "Aylmer's Field," edited by W. T. Webb; "A Short Historical Grammar of the German Language," translated and adapted from Prof. Behaghel's "Deutsche Sprache," for the use of English schools, by Dr. Emil Trechmann; "The Geography of the British Colonies"—"Canada," by George M. Dawson; "Australia and New Zealand," by Alexander Sutherland; "Commercial German," by F. C. Smith; "The Algebra of Co-Planar Vectors and Trigonometry," by R. B. Hayward; "The Elements of Trigonometry," by Rawdon Levett and A. F. Davison; "Progressive Mathematical Exercises for Home Work," in two parts, by A. T. Richardson; "The Geometry of the Circle," by W. J. McClelland, illustrated; "Mechanics for Beginners," by the Rev. J. B. Lock, part i., Mechanics of Solids, part ii., Mechanics of Fluids; "A Graduated Course of Natural Science for Elementary and Technical Schools and Colleges," by B. Loewy, part. ii., Second Year's Course; "Methods of Gas Analysis," by Dr. Walter Hempel, translated by Dr. L. M. Dennis; and "Nature's Story Books," I., "Sunshine," by Amy Johnson, illustrated.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

MANUEL de bio-bibliographie et d'iconographie des femmes célèbres depuis les temps les plus reculés jusqu'à nos jours. Paris: Nilsson. 25 fr.
MULLER, S. La Maison hollandaise au temps de Louis XIV. Utrecht: Beijers. 25 fr.
RENAN, Ernest. Pages détachées. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY.

GESCHICHTSQUELLEN der Grafsch. Glätz. Hrg. v. Bolkmer u. Holaus. 5. Bd. 1346—1390. Habelschwerdt: Franke. 2 M. 50 Pf.
KNULL, E. Die Geschichte Palnatokis u. der Jomsburger, nach der jüngsten altnordischen Bearbeitung erzählt. Graz: Leuschner. 1 M. 30 Pf.
ORCULLI, W. Die Anfänge der schweizerischen Eidgenossenschaft. Bern: Wyss. 7 M.
REINHARDT, G. D. Tod d. Kaisers Justinian. Nach den Quellen dargestellt. Göttingen: Bihling. 1 M. 20 Pf.
URKUNDEN u. REGESTEN zur Geschichte der Burggrafen u. Freiherren v. Hammerstein. Hannover: Hahn. 90 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

BATAILLON, E. Recherches anatomiques et expérimentales sur la métamorphose des amphibiens anoures. Paris: Masson. 4 fr.
BRUNOT, Ferd. La doctrine de Malherbe d'après son commentaire sur Desportes. Paris: Masson. 10 fr.
DU BOIS-REYMOND, E. Ueb. die Grenzen d. Naturerkenntnis. Leipzig: Veit. 2 M.
FESTSCHRIFT zur Feier d. 50jährigen Doctor-Jubiläum, Dr. K. W. v. Nageli in München u. Dr. A. v. Kölliker in Würzburg gewidmet. Zürich: Müller. 40 M.
HAGEN, J. G. Synopsis der höheren Mathematik. 1. Bd. Arithmetische u. algebraische Analyse. Berlin: Dames. 30 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

BIBLIOTHEK,assyriologische, hrsg. v. F. Delitzsch u. P. Haupt. 3. Bd. 2. Abth. 3. Lfg. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 18 M.
 REINACH, Salomon. Chroniques d'Orient: documents sur les fouilles et découvertes dans l'Orient hellénique de 1833 à 1880. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 16 fr.
 SCHÖNBACH, A. E. Altdeutsche Predigten. 3. Bd. Graz: "Styria." 9 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BLANCO WHITE'S SONNET—"NIGHT AND DEATH."

St. Leonards: Sept. 1, 1891.

Few English sonnets have been so highly and unreservedly praised by the best critics as this, which was written by a Spaniard, and got into print by an accident. It would almost seem as if its production was also an accident; for White, so far as is known, wrote but one other poem, and it was of no superlative quality. "Night and Death" first appeared, with a dedication to Coleridge, in the Bijou for 1828; and although the Bijou was only an "annual," this splendid sonnet was not its chief glory, for it also first gave to the world Coleridge's "Youth and Age," "Work without Hope," and "A Day Dream." The curious history of "Night and Death," and how it found its way into the Bijou through an oversight of Coleridge's, is related by the late D. M. Main in the notes attached to the poem in his Treasury of English Sonnets and his Three Hundred Sonnets—those in the latter correcting and supplementing the information contained in the former. In the Treasury two versions were given: one from a "corrected" copy made by White in 1838, and printed in his Life (1845, iii. 48); the other, from a transcript believed to have been made from an autograph copy about 1832-4. The text of the latter is the same as that printed in the Bijou, but neither Mr. Main nor the transcriber was aware at the time that the sonnet had been printed there. Both versions were included by Mr. William Sharp in his Sonnets of the Century. Each had the same eleventh line:

"Whilst fly, and leaf, and insect stood revealed," which has puzzled or vexed all admirers of the poem; but Mr. Sharp took courage, and, adopting a suggestion of Mr. Main, substituted "flower" for "fly"—an excellent emendation, though quite unauthorised.

But all the while there was another and better text lying perdu. Quite recently, a lady who had been reading Mr. Sharp's collection sent him a copy of the sonnet, which had been given to her by a friend of Blanco White, who had received it a great many years ago, probably, though not certainly, from White himself. Mr. Sharp kindly made me acquainted with this very interesting MS.; and having received permission to make it public, he allows me to send you this note, as he is himself at present travelling.

A comparison of this newly-discovered text with those of 1828 and 1838 leaves little doubt that it is of later date. The readings which vary from those texts are in every case, I venture to think, decided improvements. The most conspicuous instance, perhaps, is the substitution in the eleventh line of "bud and flower" for "fly and leaf," but it seems to me the emendations in the tenth and the fourteenth lines are equally happy.

That your readers may be enabled to judge fairly of White's labor limæ, I will ask you to grant space for all three texts: I. is that of the Bijou for 1828; II., the amended text of 1838 printed in the Life; and III., the text of the MS. with which Mr. Sharp has been favoured.

J. D. C.

I.

NIGHT AND DEATH,

A SONNET.

Dedicated to S. T. Coleridge, Esq., by his sincere friend, Joseph Blanco White.

Mysterious night, when the first man but knew
 Thee by report, unseen, and heard thy name,
 Did he not tremble for this lovely frame,
 This glorious canopy of light and blue?

Yet 'neath a curtain of translucent dew,
 Bathed in the rays of the great setting flame,
 Hesperus, with the host of heaven, came,
 And lo! creation widened on his view!

Who could have thought what darkness lay concealed

Within thy beams, oh Sun? Or who could find,

Whilst fly, and leaf, and insect stood revealed,
 That to such endless orbs thou mad'st us blind?

Weak man! Why to shun death, this anxious strife?

If light can thus deceive, wherefore not life?

II.

NIGHT AND DEATH.

Mysterious Night! when our first parent knew
 Thee from report divine, and heard thy name,
 Did he not tremble for this lovely frame,
 This glorious canopy of light and blue?

Yet 'neath a curtain of translucent dew,
 Bathed in the rays of the great setting flame,
 Hesperus with the host of heaven came,
 And lo! Creation widened in man's view.

Who could have thought such darkness lay concealed

Within thy beams, O Sun! or who could find,
 Whilst fly, and leaf, and insect stood revealed,
 That to such countless orbs thou mad'st us blind!

Why do we then shun Death with anxious strife?

If Light can thus deceive, wherefore not Life?

III.

SONNET TO NIGHT.

By BLANCO WHITE.

Mysterious Night! when our first parent knew
 Thee by report Divine, and heard thy name,
 Did he not tremble for this goodly frame,
 This glorious canopy of light and blue?

But through a curtain of translucent dew,
 Bathed in the hues of the great setting flame,
 Hesperus with the Host of Heaven came,
 And lo! Creation broadened to man's view;

Who could have guessed such darkness lay concealed

Within thy beams, O Sun? or who divined,
 When bud, and flower, and insect lay revealed,
 Thou to such countless worlds hadst made us blind?

Why should we then shun death with anxious strife?

If Light conceals so much, wherefore not Life?

CILURNUM AND OTHER RIVER-NAMES.

London: Sept. 5, 1891.

I have been interested in Prof. Rhys's derivation of "Cilurnum." The name had previously been identified with the "Choller" in Choller-ton or Chollerford. Indeed, there are good reasons for considering the ancient name of what is now called the "North Tyne" to have been "Cilurn," and that the previously mentioned places, which are some four miles apart, took their names from the river. Perhaps Prof. Rhys can tell us if celurn may not possibly be a loan-word from the Latin callarium or O. French chaldron, which gives us our "cauldron." At any rate, we seem to have to deal in the Cilurnum of the Notitia with a common river-termination: Cf. Portus Adurni (Notitia), Lawern in Worcester (Cart. Sar. vol. i. p. 307), Lawerne Wyll, Suffolk (Cart. Sar. vol. ii. A.D. 854), Lavern, a river in Merionethshire, Lavern, a river in Renfrewshire. Curn-ca (Ptolemy's κορίσιος) now Churn (see Cart. Sar. vol. i. p. 417). Churn, a rivulet in Perthshire, and Carne a rivulet near Manchester.

I have lately had my attention directed to the numerous rivers in Great Britain called Stour, and venture to put forward the following explanation of the form. Leland in his Itinerary says (vol. viii. p. 98), "Dowr, alias Stour-ryver, riseth out of the Ponde of Hales Owen . . . thens to Kidour (? Cyd-dwr = meeting of the waters) and renneth through the mydle of it." Thus Kidderminster and Stourport are on the same river, and take their names from it. Stour I take to be Isdour, meaning the low portion of the Dour. Leland gives (p. 94, vol. viii.) a confirmatory form. "Lowe isse Kenen, that is to say the lowe quarter about Kennen River." He had evidently been informed that it was the lower waters of the river.

Of other compounds of Is in river names I have instances. Isaf = lower, may follow a river name with the same meaning, and it is worth while considering whether the Thame may not have thus become the Thames (Tham-isaf). Prof. Rhys, I know, thinks Dour to be a comparatively modern form, and the Stours are fairly ancient. I cite the following early forms of Dour. "Andever water (Andover) passeth through this bridge" (Leland's Itin. 3, 83); Cendefer river (Cart. Sar., vol. vi., p. 148); Micheldever, near Cendefer, in Hants; Candover in Teviotdale (Mon., Annals of Teviot); "Caledofre or Caldour" (ibid.); Condever, name of a Hundred in Shropshire; "out of Warcham (Dorset) by north is a great bridge of VI. arches over Trent Ryver, alias Pyddildour" (Leland, Itin. vol. iii. p. 69). I have evidence to show that the early Dobar = water has not been uniform in its "degradation," and that the dwr form and the dever form have co-existed from an early date.

EDMUND McCCLURE.

THE STUDY OF CELTIC IN SCOTLAND.

London: Sept. 9, 1891.

In the last volume of Waifs and Strays of Celtic Tradition, I spoke of the Scotch academic world as, with rare exceptions, neglecting "its birthright," the study of Celtic antiquity. For this I am taken to task by a friendly critic in the Saturday Review (September 5), but I venture to think that his apology for the Scotch academic world more than justifies my strictures.

My critic writes with such authority that I take it he must be a Scotchman, and his statements may therefore be accepted as accurate. "Scotch professors are mostly English; they have no more Celtic 'birthright' than a Dutchman; Finnish is just as familiar to them as Gaelic; only one man in Scotland is paid a stiver to work at Celtic; professors have to correct hundreds of weekly exercises; Celtic literature is nobody's business in Scotland."

By "academic world" I meant not only the teaching staff, but also the authorities responsible for the organisation of teaching. The Saturday Reviewer confirms what I said respecting their neglect of Celtic; indeed, his language is much stronger than mine. But is his defence of the teaching staff quite valid? I venture to hope that to be an Englishman does not necessarily imply indifference to Celtic studies. In any case, let us look at what has been done abroad.

The bases of Celtic philology were laid by Zeuss; it was not his "business"; he was not "paid a stiver for it"; his work was carried on by Ebel, who was a Gymnasiallehrer and had most certainly "weekly exercises" to correct, and by Windisch, whose "business" is comparative philology and Orientalism, but who has, nevertheless, done more for the study of Middle-Irish than any man living except Mr. Whitley Stokes. The "business" of Prof. H. Zimmer is comparative philology and Sanskrit; but he has found the time to revolutionise Celtic archaeology, and he certainly has not been paid a stiver for it. It was no "business" of M. H. Gaidoz; but he started the Revue Celtique, the most admirable journal of its kind in existence. Celtic philology is no "business" of Ascoli, of Kuno Meyer, of Thurneysen, or of Güterbock.

Again, I used the words "with few exceptions." I had chiefly Mr. MacBain in my mind. He is a grammar school master, and has, I presume, weekly exercises to correct; but no man has done more to promote and popularise the scientific study of Celtic in Scotland save the late Alexander Cameron, of Brodick.

In conclusion, I would fain hope that many who, like myself, have no drop of Celtic blood in their veins, yet look upon the study of Celtic antiquity as part of the intellectual birthright of every British subject, and hold that to abandon this birthright to German scholars is a national scandal and disgrace.

ALFRED NUTT.

THE DATE OF KYD'S "SPANISH TRAGEDY."

Freiburg, i. B. : Sept. 1, 1891.

In the ACADEMY for August 22—which, unfortunately, did not reach Freiburg before yesterday—my esteemed friend Prof. Brandl, of Göttingen, has given intelligence of a hitherto unknown copy of the 1594 edition of "The Spanish Tragedy." As he refers to my recent work on Shakspeare's "Titus Andronicus," I beg to state that I certainly did not on p. 91 express any doubts "whether the drama ["The Spanish Tragedy"] might not have been written much later than hitherto supposed." I only tried to show that there was no reason for fixing its date before 1588. I do not at all object to 1589, and am very glad to learn that Prof. Brandl is of opinion that "this date would, both on external and internal grounds, perfectly suit the play." Weak as his argument may perhaps appear to some critics, the order of succession of the plays, "Titus Andronicus," "Spanish Tragedy," "Hamlet" (original draft), as proposed in my book, can only be in favour of Prof. Brandl's view.

ARNOLD SCHIRÖER.

THE LITLEDALE PRIZE AT TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN.

St. John's Vicarage, Little Holbeck, Leeds :
Sept. 7, 1891.

Mr. Harold Littledale, professor of English literature at the Baroda College, and a few other friends of the late Dr. R. F. Littledale, have contributed a small sum of money (£207) to establish an English literature prize in Trinity College, Dublin, in memory of Dr. Littledale. Before I hand over the money which has been collected to Trinity College, may I mention the matter in your columns in case any reader of the ACADEMY might wish to add a contribution to a memorial which represents a side of Dr. Littledale's character which is not specially represented by the other memorials of him? Contributions might be sent to me, or I am sure that Dr. J. K. Ingram (Trinity College, Dublin) would also receive them.

JOHN A. CROSS.

SCIENCE.

HISTORICAL DICTIONARY OF THE HUNGARIAN LANGUAGE.

Lexicon Linguae Hungaricae Aevi Antiquioris. Magyar Nyelvtörténeti Szótár a legrégibb nyelvemlékektől a nyelvújításig. Edited by Gabriel Szarvas and Sigismund Simonyi for the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. (Budapest : Hornyánszky ; London : Kegan Paul & Co.)

LIKE other people, the Hungarians too are working at an historical dictionary of their language, and have by this time a fair prospect of seeing it completed. This is owing not only to the zeal and industry of a small number of devoted students who have been engaged on the task for the last sixteen years, but in part to the common sense of the Hungarian Academy, which decided that they must content themselves with what could be accomplished within a reasonable time, and leave the care of perfecting the work to those who shall come after them. In fact, there is even now a great mass of material in MS. which has not only not been printed, but has not even been examined, in spite of the extensive researches which the political changes of 1848 and 1867 rendered possible, by doing away with the jealousy and suspicion with which the government and the old families regarded any intrusion into their archives.

It was at first proposed to restrict the dictionary to the codices, i.e., the works in MS. from the times preceding the invention of printing; but it was decided that the harvest would not be sufficiently abundant to repay the labour of gathering it in. On the other hand, to include the whole vocabulary of the language from the earliest times up to the present day would render the task needlessly difficult, and withal engage the editors in what has been well called the "endless dispute" between the "Neologists" and the "Orthologists"—the inventors of new words on the one hand and the champions of the purity of the language on the other. The limits ultimately fixed for the Historical Dictionary were from the earliest times to the commencement of the so-called nyelvújítás "renovation of the language," which began in the last quarter of the last century. Here, however, no hard and fast chronological line is drawn. While Kazinczy and Bárocz began their innovations before the year 1780 and are consequently excluded from the Dictionary, other writers, for instance Gvadányi, continued to write in the old language and to keep their vocabulary free from the new words down to the very last years of the century. Gvadányi is consequently referred to freely in the work before us.

So much for the terminus ad quem. With regard to the terminus a quo it should be observed that, while Hungarian records reach much further back than those of any other Finn-Ugrian language, we have nothing earlier than the eleventh century, and of that date but very little. The first printed Hungarian book is the version of The Epistles of St. Paul by Komjáthy, printed in 1539. If there were any Hungarian books printed before that date, they have disappeared and left not a trace behind. The MSS. preceding that date have all been examined for this dictionary.

It is proposed to complete the Thesaurus Linguae Hungaricae by publishing two dictionaries after this one is finished—one of the literary language since the innovations of Kazinczy and his disciples, and another of the local dialects.

In the work before us the subjectivity of the editors—Profs. Szarvas and Simonyi—is as far as possible excluded or reduced to a minimum. The words are concisely interpreted in Latin and German. Wherever the old dictionaries furnish such interpretations, their interpretations are given. Where they fail, the editors have furnished new ones, but printed in such a way as to clearly indicate their source. With regard to the Latin interpretations, they have in the first place looked for an equivalent in the classical language; but where that failed them, they have helped themselves with mediaeval and ecclesiastical Latin. In some cases, however, they have given up the hope of finding a suitable Latin equivalent, and have contented themselves with a German interpretation, e.g., mégszépülés: verschönerung, das schönerwerden. Indeed, there are derivative compound words to which they could not find a corresponding German word, but have had to explain it by a German phrase or periphrasis. In other cases a Latin interpretation alone is given without any German one accompanying it.

The main feature of the work, on which most stress was laid in the directions that the Hungarian Academy drew up for the guidance of the editors, is the quotations. Not only every word, but every several meaning of each word, has to have its existence proved and justified by at least one appropriate quotation. The editors are not allowed to insert any examples of their own composition. As far as possible the earliest occurrence is marked by a quotation. It is to be further observed that, while the leading or main word is printed according to the present current orthography of the Hungarian language, the quotations are given in the spelling of the books from which they are respectively extracted. This is a point of obvious importance; but the editors seem to have had not a little trouble in getting their assistants to carry the principle out consistently, and in their preface cite some instructive examples of the difficulty often found in disentangling from the vague and uncertain orthography of the old writers the real form, pronunciation, and meaning of a word.

Of course the primary use of the Dictionary is to foster and facilitate the study of the older language among the Hungarians themselves. Indeed, there are few countries in which the study of its past literature is more needed than in Hungary. If the national language is to retain its special characteristics amid the rising flood of foreign innovations, the Hungarians must follow the old counsel, antiquam exquirite matrem. At the same time this Dictionary cannot fail to be of service to all who take an interest in the philology of the so-called Turanian languages. Besides being an historical dictionary, it is so arranged as to put before the student in the clearest light the etymological connexion of the words. Even a moderate acquaintance with the etymology of Hungarian words would show the untenable nature of many conjectures professing to be based upon their supposed affinities.

A. J. PATTERSON.

THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS.

THE International Congress of Orientalists has continued to hold daily meetings, which have been very fully reported in the Times and other daily journals. We must be content here to mention one or two papers of special interest.

On Friday, September 4, Surgeon-Major H. W. Bellew read a paper upon "The Ethnology of Afghanistan"—a subject he is known to have studied for many years. For this reason, and because the chairman of the meeting seems to have approved his views, it is necessary to enter a protest against both his methods and his conclusions. Put shortly, Dr. Bellew claimed to have proved that certain existing tribes of Afghanistan are the descendants of Greeks transplanted thither twenty-four centuries ago, for no other reason than that the names agree. The Barakis, for example, are alleged to be the modern representatives of the exiles from Barkè in Libya, of whom Herodotus speaks, though, as Dr. Bellew admits "of the Baraki tribal traditions nothing is known for certain, and next to nothing of their peculiarities in respect to domestic manners and customs. Of their own Baraki dialect very little is known to others; and from the very meagre vocabularies of it which have hitherto been obtained, no definite opinion can be formed, though it is probable that careful examination would disclose a good sprinkling of Greek elements."

We confess that we prefer even Herodotus as an ethnologist to his latest commentator.

Of a very different character was a paper read on Tuesday, September 8, by Mr. Charles Johnston, of the Bengal Civil Service, entitled, "The necessity of Ethnographical Studies to Philological Research, as illustrated by the Bengali Language." Taking for his material the vernacular dialect spoken in the central district of Murshidabad, as opposed to the Sanskritised language written and printed at Calcutta, he tried to prove that philology yielded the same results as those now accepted by ethnologists—namely, that the population of Bengal is mainly non-Aryan. An elaborate analysis of the vocabulary showed that one fourth of the words—and especially the names of common objects—are not of Sanskrit origin, and that even Sanskrit words are modified according to definite phonetic laws. In grammar the characteristics are:

"For the substantive, cases formed by a joined nouns of position, instead of by inflection; number formed by adjoined nouns of multitude; gender expressed by adjoined nouns of sex; case-terminations identical for singular and plural. For the verb, the three voices expressed by verbal nouns with adjoined auxiliaries, all other conjugations but that of the auxiliaries tending to disappear. In a word, the whole language tends to become reduced to nouns, joined together to express declension and conjugation."

Mr. Johnston's general conclusion was that the agglutinative grammar of vernacular Bengali was directly caused by the attraction of the agglutinative grammar of the indigenous races of Dravidian or Indo-Chinese origin, who are now admitted to form the great bulk of the population of the country.

On the same day, Dr. H. Schlichter read a paper upon "The Indian Ocean of Antiquity." He claimed to have established the identity of the two most important points on the coast of East Africa mentioned in the Periplus—namely, Cape Aromata with the modern Ras Aswad, and not with Guardafui; and Rhapsium with the modern Ras Mumba Mku, south of Zanzibar. He further argued that the Ophir of Solomon must be sought for in Africa and not in Asia, because of the evidence of Egyptian inscriptions, which show that the Hebrew name for "ape" was borrowed from Egypt, and also that the animal in question was a tailless baboon and not a monkey proper.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE FIRST INTRODUCTION OF BUDDHISM INTO CHINA.

Tenby: Sept. 1, 1891.

In the Babylonian and Oriental Record for May, 1891, Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie mentions a short statement from the twenty-eighth chapter of Szematsien's Historical Records, to the effect that the Emperor sent for the holy men who were the Siemmen Tezkaio and his companions; and points out that, inasmuch as Siemmen is like a transcription of Sramana, the presence of Buddhist missionaries in China at that time is thereby indicated. In this he is quite right. But he further says that this statement has been hitherto unobserved, that the term Siemmen occurs only once more, and that in the same chapter of Szematsien; and he gives B.C. 219 as the date when Buddhism entered China. In these assertions it seems to me that he has made a mistake.

I referred to the statement of Szematsien in an article entitled "Similarity between Buddhism and early Taoism," published in vol. xv. of the China Review (October to December, 1886); and I think I may therein fairly lay claim to have discovered that Buddhism was introduced into China as early as the year B.C. 221, from the fact of the Emperor having cast some metal or golden images of Buddha, as well as bells, there having been a great famine that year. My information was taken from the sixth chapter of Szematsien's Historical Records, where the facts are given under the dates when they severally occurred. The term Siemmen is mentioned in that chapter too, a fact which Prof. de Lacouperie has failed to notice. Holy men seem to have been sent for twice. The first expedition was that of Hsüfu, in the year B.C. 219, who set out, accompanied by several thousand young men and maidens, for the sacred islands of Penglai, Fangchang, and Yingchow, where holy men resided, and landed, as some say, in Japan, and did not return. The second expedition, in the year B.C. 215, seems to be the one that Prof. de Lacouperie refers to.

I will quote from my article referred to above:

"Dr. Williams says that Buddhism found little favour in China before the Han dynasty, while other authors declare that the religion was not introduced into China until the Emperor Mingti, seeing a metal image of the Western god in a dream, was told that this was Buddha, and sent envoys to India for teachers of the doctrine (A.D. 65). The Historical Records of Ssumachien tell us, however, of metal images and holy men long before this date. In B.C. 221 the Emperor Shihuang (the First) melted his weapons, cast some bells and twelve 'metal men' (Kinjen), each weighing 1,000 piculs, he having already seen some metal images at Lint'ao. The Buddhist recluses seem to have first established themselves in that part of China now known as Shantung and Chihli, for in B.C. 219 the same Emperor sent for a holy man said to reside on the island of Penglai, supposed to lie off the Shantung coast; and again in B.C. 315 Lusheng, a native of the state of Yen, was sent to request the presence of a Siemmen called Kaoshih or Tzekao. I presume Siemmen represents S'ramana, an ascetic or hermit. Again, in the year B.C. 120, the Chinese general Hochüping, having gained a decisive victory over the Hsintu, a tribe said to have had their headquarters somewhere in the present province of Kansu, carried off as a trophy a 'metal man' stated to have been used in worshipping heaven. A commentator adds 'the Buddhists venerate these metal men, and they are now called Buddhist images.'"

Looking at the statement about sending for the Siemmen Tzekao, as mentioned in the twenty-eighth chapter of the Records, we have no certain date to guide us; but there is no doubt about the date when we refer to the sixth chapter, for the several events are there arranged in chronological order.

HERBERT J. ALLFY.

"KADASHMAN."

London: 8. pt. 7, 1891.

In my letter upon the discoveries of the American expedition to Babylonia, published in the ACADEMY of September 5 (see p. 199, footnote), I hazarded the conjecture that, in the Kassite royal names, Kadašman-Turgu and Kadašman-Bel, the element kadašman is composed of a noun and a pronoun (possessive), namely "trust" and "my" (so read, instead of "any"). I did not state it as a certainty, because the Kassite vocabulary, published by Prof. Fried. Delitzsch in his Kossäer, pp. 25-26, gives kadišman as equivalent to tukultu, "trust" (without the possessive pronoun). The idea that I had in my mind at the time, however, was that the compiler of the vocabulary probably did not know the real meanings of the groups which he was tabulating. This probability seems now to be almost a certainty; for there is hardly any doubt that the first part of the word, kadiš (kaleš, kadiš), is none other than the kadiš of the Babylonian Canon of Kings (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology for May, 1884, p. 195), and the Gaddās of the text quoted by me in the Babylonian and Oriental Record for February and March, 1887 (pp. 54 and 78). The omission of the suffix man implies that Kadiš (or Gaddās) is a word by itself, as is also indicated by the termination āš (ēš, iš), which is the common Kassite ending of nouns. According to the Babylonian Canon, Kandiš reigned (for sixteen years) about 1570 or 1670 B.C.

In l. 26, from the end of the second column of my letter, for "Nišum [?]," read "Nannar"—i.e., Nannaros, the Moon-god.

THEO. G. PINCHES.

SCIENCE NOTES.

PROF. W. F. R. WELDON will deliver at University College, London, a course of lectures during the coming session on "The Decapod Crustacea," specially addressed to senior students who intend to pursue original investigations in zoology.

The winter session of the London hospitals begins on October 1. At St. Thomas's, the prizes will be distributed by Sir George Humphrey, of Cambridge; and at the Middlesex Hospital, an introductory address will be delivered by Dr. William Duncan.

AN election to the Coutts Trotter studentship, at Trinity College, Cambridge, will take place next month. Applications from candidates must be sent to the secretary of the Coutts Trotter studentship committee, on or before October 15. The studentship is tenable for two years, and is for original research in physiology or physics.

FINE ART.

SOME ARCHAEOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Studies of the Gods in Greece at Certain Sanctuaries Recently Excavated. By L. Dyer. (Macmillans.) It was a happy idea which prompted Mr. Dyer to call his book The Gods in Greece, and to say with Landor, "Better stand upon the fragments of antiquity and look about us." The fragments of antiquity have been sufficiently uncovered now, in various sites, for it to be expedient that the results of the spade-work should be put together and summarised for the public; and Mr. Dyer has shown a very true judgment in recognising the value and the interest which the myths, the usages, and—if such a word may be permitted—the creeds of paganism gain by being studied along with the remains, however shattered, of their local habitations. It is not everyone who can visit the home of Demeter and Kora at Eleusis—that strange building which was not exactly a temple, but "unique because on no other Greek site has there been found a meeting-house built, as this one was, for the celebration of a definite ritual." Few travellers, however easy a journey to Greece may be made, can track Dionysos from the North to Icaria and from Icaria to Athens, can visit in the flesh the island-haunts of Aphrodite, or see "the wealth of flowers, gold and red," on the sacred isle of Delos. But even to look upon these things at secondhand is to feel a quickening within one of all the knowledge and all the feeling which classical study has imparted. The legends and the ritual become for us meaning things, no mere matters for a Dictionary of Antiquities, but pregnant with suggestions of all the pious or joyous emotion which once clung to them. Mr. Dyer has done well, not only in telling us where a god came from and how his legend and his character were affected by other legends, by competition, by the growth of morality, by national history, or by the hand of art, but still more in making us feel what each deity really was to the believer. Sometimes the worshipper sought for aid, and such are the cases of which we hear most frequently in the literary sources; but often, too, the men—and yet oftener perhaps the women—looked up to their god for example, for strength, and for comfort. Within the wide field of cults which Greek tolerance recognised, something could be found to suit everyone, to give relief from every trouble—some similar woe of a divine sufferer, some expression of his will, some instance of his grace. The points in which what was told or seen at Eleusis touched and eased human trouble and yearning were many; but in Demeter's story in particular we find portrayed "woman's love and care and need for woman." Here, too, was "the home impulse" and that of "love for her own"—"peace bought with the price of sorrow, love mingled with sadness"; while in Persephone we have "the eternal type of a daughter dearly loved and lost." In short, Greek religion was no mere collection of mysterious fables, no cold pantheon of statue-like forms; it was in its day a centre of warm emotions, and those not only warlike, not only the excitement of the vintage, or the rude outbursts of animal passion. It was the prompter of high and ideal feelings, the refiner of life, the consolation of the sad. To have firmly grasped this is a merit in Mr. Dyer for which we can cheerfully forgive him some want of order and a rather ditbyrambic style.

"ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF MYSORE." Inscriptions at Sravana Belgola. By Lewis Rice. (Bangalore.) Mr. Rice, who is secretary to the native government of Mysore, has applied himself for the last twenty years to studying the history of that State, both ancient and modern. In this handsome quarto—which we could wish were somewhat better printed—he publishes the entire series of inscriptions at Sravana Belgola, a Jain village in Western Mysore, known even to the incurious by a colossal statue that crowns a neighbouring hill. Upon the statue itself Mr. Rice does not throw much light, though he gives an excellent photograph of it for frontispiece. He is unable even to decide whether it is hewn out of the mass of the hill, as Fergusson thought. According to measurements made in 1871, when advantage was taken of the scaffolding erected for the ceremonial anointing of the figure, its total height is about 56 feet, and its breadth across the shoulders 26 feet. Like all Jain images, it is stark naked. According to an inscription below, it was erected or made by one Chamunda Raya, in honour of Gomata; and its date is probably the end of the tenth century A.D. Not the least curious thing about it is that the pedestal has engraved on it a scale, exactly corresponding with the metre, which is evidently the scale employed by the sculptor. The greater part, however, of Mr. Rice's book is devoted to the inscriptions, nearly 150 in number, which he has been the first to decipher. Though we cannot admit the excessive antiquity, or the inferences drawn therefrom, which Mr. Rice claims for the oldest, we must none the less cordially thank him for the patient labour he has expended upon a comparatively thankless subject. Of the more important inscriptions he gives facsimiles; all of them he prints three times over: in Kanarese characters, in Roman transliteration, and in English. Many of them merely record voluntary suicides by fasting, in performance of the vow known as salikhana. The latest of these is dated 1809 A.D.; and it is surmised that the practice is not yet extinct. Others are of importance as helping to determine the still obscure history of Southern India, and the no less obscure history of the Jain religion. One or two mention the name of Chandragupta, who, Mr. Rice will have it, is none other than the Sandracottus of the Greeks. But even granting this identity, it is a very long step to infer, as Mr. Rice seems to do, that we are brought face to face with a document coeval with the rock edicts of Asoka. As a matter of fact, the oldest inscription here, though in Sanskrit, is written in Canarese characters resembling those which may be assigned to the fifth century A.D. The utmost, therefore, that Mr. Rice has proved is that Chandragupta's name was associated with this spot about eight hundred years after his death.

Archaeologisch-Epigraphische Mittheilungen aus Oesterreich-Ungarn. (Vienna: Tempsky.) Jahrgang xiv. The fourteenth volume of this excellent publication consists mainly of newly discovered inscriptions, among them a marble slab from Tomi (Constantia), belonging to the pre-Roman, that is, purely Greek period, and mentioning the appointment of guards to patrol the gates and prevent attacks from Carian pirates, τὰς τῶν Καρίων περιτὰς εἰσβολὰς. From the latter part of the inscription, which contains in reality two decrees, it appears that the measure was successful, ἀποκατασταθῆναι τὸν ἔθμον ἐς βελτίους ἐλπίδας. A Latin inscription found at Ofen (Aquincum) gives the career of Julius Septimius Castinus, governor of Pannonia and Dacia. It is not quite clear why certain inscriptions are printed twice, first by one contributor on pp. 80-81, and later by another on pp. 132-4. Besides epigraphic material, we have a further report on the excavations still being carried out at Carnuntum. As this is almost the only attempt in Europe to lay bare a Roman fortress of the first rank and to discover its plan and arrangement, it deserves the attention of all scholars. Would that some of our English antiquaries would follow the example! Several of the fortresses in the north of England are well worth examination, though they cannot compete in importance with Carnuntum; but as yet even Chesters and Rutchester have only been partially explored, and the work lately undertaken in the south by the Society of Antiquaries, at Silchester, will hardly tell us, important as it is, much about any Roman fortress.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SIKELS ON THE EGYPTIAN MONUMENTS.

Queen's College, Oxford: Sept. 4, 1891.

Students of antiquity are aware that in the time of the XIXth and XXth Dynasties Egypt was twice invaded by a great confederacy of tribes from Libya and the islands and coasts of the North. The names of the tribes who came from the North have been identified with various well known populations of Southern Europe and Asia Minor. Among them are the Shakalsha, in whom Egyptologists have been disposed to see the Sikels or Siculi of classical history.

Some years ago I expressed doubts in the ACADEMY in regard to many of these identifications, and more especially that of the Shakalsha with the Sikels. Lately, however, I have seen reason to believe that my scepticism was not justified by facts.

I have recently had occasion to examine closely the photographs of the casts of the ethnographic types depicted on the Egyptian monuments which Mr. Flinders Petrie made for the British Association four years ago. The head of the Shakalsha represented on the façade of Medinet Habu startled me greatly. It stands out among the heads of the other populations of the North defeated by Ramses III. by its entire unlikeness to any of them. On the other hand, it bears an extraordinary resemblance to the Roman heads made familiar to us by busts and coins. The type is markedly Latin, and offers a striking contrast to the other ethnographic types represented by the Egyptian artists.

The conclusion which ethnology thus forces upon us has just received a remarkable confirmation from archaeology. Mr. Petrie has discovered among the foreign pottery of Kahun—a settlement of the XIIIth Egyptian Dynasty—fragments which "closely resemble, in colour, form, and decoration, the earliest Italian black pottery." Similar pottery has been found by M. Naville at Khatanch along with scarabs of the XIIth and XIIIth Dynasties (see Illahun Kahun and Gurub, by W. M. Flinders Petrie, p. 10). At a somewhat later date the connexion of Sicily with the eastern part of the Mediterranean has been proved by the excavations of Sgr. Orsi on behalf of the Italian government in the neighbourhood of Syracuse. The prehistoric tombs in this locality have shown that the "Mykenaeen" type of culture extended as far as Sicily; the distinctive pottery and forms of ornamentation, as well as the dagger-shaped bronze swords, which characterise the civilisation of Mykenae and other prehistoric Aegean sites, having been found in abundance in them. Mr. Petrie's excavations in the Fayûm have at last settled the age of this civilisation, and made it clear that it was in large measure dependent on intercourse with Egypt. For the proofs of this his important article in the last number of the Journal of Hellenic Studies xii. 1 (pp. 199-205) must be consulted. The glass and pottery alone, which the archaeological exploration of Greek lands has recently brought to light, leave no doubt as to the constant intercommunication which must have existed between Egypt and the peoples of the Aegean at the very period to which the Libyan and Northern invasions belong.

That the Sikels should have taken part in these invasions is not wonderful, when we consider their geographical position. They came as the allies of the Mashuash or Maxyes, who, as we know from classical geography, inhabited Tunisia. The nearest "Northern" neighbours of the Maxyes beyond "the sea" would necessarily have been the inhabitants of Eastern Sicily; and it is well known that it is just in this part of the Mediterranean that there has always been a bridge and natural passage from Africa to Europe.

The difficulty formerly attaching to the identification of the Shakalsha with the Sikels from the supposed fact that they were circumcised has been removed by Dr. Max Müller, who has shown that the hieroglyphic expression has been mistranslated, and that it was the Libyans and not their allies from beyond the sea who were circumcised (see the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, January, 1888).

A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE first volume of the next of Mr. Henry Wallis's interesting and valuable contributions to the history of Persian pottery (especially of lustre ware before the sixteenth century) is almost ready for publication. It will deal with the collection (well-known, at least, by reputation to all lovers of oriental pottery) made by Mr. F. Du Cane Godman. This is specially rich in lusted tiles of the thirteenth century, and lusted vases, to each of which subjects one section of this volume will be devoted. Like other similar publications by Mr. Wallis, it will be fully illustrated after drawings by the author. The chromolithographs have been executed by Mr. Samuel J. Hodson. Besides the specimens from the Godman collection, there will be figured many rare examples from the Industrial Museum at Vienna, from M. Marcel Dieulafoy's discoveries at Susa, M. E. Pottier's "finds" at Myrina, and other collections, public and private.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. announce two new volumes in their "Antiquarian Library"—Symbolism in Christian Art and Heraldry, both written by Mr. F. E. Hulme; and also a second edition of the Rev. Herbert W. Macklin's Monumental Brasses, in the same series.

It is announced that the excavations being conducted at the old city walls of Chester have, during the past week, resulted in the discovery of four inscribed stones and several pieces of monumental sculpture, which are all believed to date back to the Roman-British period.

WE do not know whether Charterhouse has any reason for being specially artistic, but it is the only public school which, so far as we are aware, supports a publication illustrated by school boys, "old boys," and masters. The fifth number of the Greyfriar (there are only three each year), with its picturesque cover, is now before us. It contains an article on "Sir William Blackstone as a Carthusian," a translation into German of one of Mr. F. W. H. Myers' shorter poems, "Some Records of Godalming Parish Church," and other papers, including notes on "Current Carthusian Art." Some of the illustrations are better than others, but they all reach a fair level; and the example of the periodical is one which might be followed with advantage by other schools.

THE religious tendencies of contemporary art furnish M. Henri Mazel with an interesting subject for an article in L'Art (No. 653), which is illustrated from the designs of M. Hippolyte

Flandrin in the Church of Saint Germain des Prés at Paris, and of M. Puvion de Chavannes in the Panthéon. In the subsequent number M. Léonce Bénédite reviews the Salon of 1891, with drawings by MM. Etienne Dinet, Léon Conturier, Emile Friaut, and J. J. Weertz, after their pictures. Perhaps the most charming of the illustrations for August is a facsimile of a study of a nude female figure by M. E. Lévy.

Is it not time that we had some handy official record of the acquisitions and "mouvements" of our national museums? The Bulletin des Musées, published monthly under the direction of the "Beaux Arts" and "Musées Nationaux" at Paris, would be a cheap and useful model for such a record. The number for July 25 contains a portrait of Mr. Alma Tadema, after a drawing in chalk by M. Paul Renouard, recently acquired by the Luxembourg, which forms one of a series of five portraits of English artists which have been engraved for the Graphic.

THE STAGE.

AFTER the unveiling of the Marlowe Memorial at Canterbury, by Mr. Henry Irving on Wednesday next, September 16, the Mayor of Canterbury will give a luncheon, at which many men of letters, dramatists, and actors will be present.

THE Belgian dramatic congress which meets once in three years to award a prize to the best dramatic production of the period, has just bestowed this year's prize upon Maurice Maeterlinck's "Princesse Maleine." This year's congress was presided over by M. Fétis, who made his report to the Minister of Instruction on Wednesday, September 9. As was recently announced, Mr. Heinemann has an English translation of "Princesse Maleine" in the press, and we hear that Mr. Oscar Wilde is to preface it.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have issued this week, in a compact little volume, Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's play of Saints and Sinners, which had such a run at the Vaudeville nearly seven years ago. The author has prefixed a preface of some twenty pages, and also appended the article on "Religion and the Stage," which appeared at the time in the Nineteenth Century.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Duke of Gloucester's Birthday Ode. By H. Purcell. (Novello.) This work is the fourth published by the Purcell Society since it was established in 1876, for the purpose of doing justice to the memory of the composer. The rate of progress is slow; to mention only the operas and dramas, not more than two out of forty-five have been printed. English musicians ought to take a pride in supporting a society which is endeavouring to display both the greatness and the diversity of Purcell's genius. The Odenow under notice was composed only a few months before the death of the composer; and Mr. W. H. Cummings, in his prefatory remarks, tells us that the work was printed from the copy used by Purcell at the birthday performance. The words are supposed to have been written by Nahum Tate. The music, consisting of solos and choruses, is bold and dignified. The alto solo "Sound the Trumpet" with trumpet solo is extremely characteristic, and the final number (in five parts) "Then Thames shall be Queen" combines simplicity with grandeur. Surely there is some mistake in the voice parts (1st and 2nd alto) of bar 1, page 38; the fourth bar on the next page would seem to suggest the correct reading. A pianoforte part has been printed under the composer's score.

Sonata in C Minor, for the organ. By J. Matthews. (Weekes.) One always gazes at a title of this kind with a certain amount of curiosity. Has the matter determined the form, or has the composer made up his mind to write a Sonata whether or no? It must be confessed that in playing through the three movements of Mr. Matthew's Sonata, we feel that he has shown more boldness than discretion in selecting one of the severest forms of musical art. His subject matter—with exception of the theme of the final Fugue—lacks interest, and in the art of development he does not show a practised hand. The Finale is the best of the three movements, but here, also, there are weaknesses. Allegretto and Reverie for organ by the same. Mr. Matthews appears to better advantage in these shorter pieces, but even here his want of experience shows itself.

Sonata in C Minor, for the organ. By R. Ernest Bryson Forsyth. Another Sonata! Here, at any rate, we find thoughts clearly expressed and cleverly developed. Still the composer is hampered by the form; it was only in the hands of the great masters who conquered it that it ceased to be a fetter. There are some specially good points in the development section of the Allegro of Mr. Bryson's work. The slow movement is flowing. The Fugue at the end is good, though on the whole somewhat heavy.

Romance sans paroles pour violoncelle avec accompagnement de piano, par F. T. Radoux (Woolhouse), is a light, graceful, and effective solo, dedicated to the clever boy cellist, Jean Gérardy. Réverie pour violoncelle, par Jean Gérardy (Woolhouse), is a light piece, which already has an attraction in the name of its composer. Gage d'Amour, Mélodie pour violoncelle, par Alex. S. Beaumont, is a smooth and melodious song without words; this piece, too, is dedicated to Gérardy.

A Lost Love. By Alfred Stella. (Paterson.) There is a good deal of feeling in this song, particularly in the minor part. The Closing of Day, by Annie E. Armstrong (Paterson), has a graceful and refined melody; the music, however, scarcely catches the spirit of the words. By Islay's Shores. By A. Stella. (Paterson.) This song may be praised for its healthy "Old English" flavour, but what about the Scotch colour of the words? The Abbey Portal. By McConnel Wood. (Paterson.) The melody is rather uncommon, and there are some good chord progressions in the accompaniment. The refrain may be found in Donizetti's "Lucia."

Pastoral Album. Songs of Spring and Summer. By Alfred Moffat. Op. 28. (Paterson.) These are two-part songs with pianoforte accompaniment. They are short and simple, but are well-written and pleasing. The music reminds one of Mendelssohn, and now and then of Schumann, while Scotch cadences impart to it quaint colouring. All the songs are good; but "Gentle Zephyrs" and "The Haymakers" are those we like best, as the most original.

The Better Land. By Francesco Berger. (Curwen.) This is a collection of eight two-part songs for the use of classes in schools. The music is smooth and graceful. No. 3, "To Daffodils," is quaint, though, at times, the harmonies are rather hard. Herrick's line, "And having pray'd together," is printed "Having pray'r together." "The Owl" is a good number, and "Rustic Fun" is neat and clever.

BLACKIE & SON'S EDUCATIONAL LIST.

READING.

The Century Readers. Fully Illustrated and bound in cloth.
 First Primer. 2d. | Second Primer. 3d.
 Infant Reader. 6d.
 First Reader. 8d. | Fourth Reader. 1s. 4d.
 Second Reader. 8d. | Fifth Reader. 1s. 6d.
 Third Reader. 1s. | Sixth Reader. 1s. 6d.

Readings from Standard Authors. With Notes, &c. Cloth, 1s. 3d. each.
 Robinson Crusoe. | Sir Walter Scott.
 Mary Queen of Scots. | Addison's Spectator.

The Sovereign Reader. Scenes from the Life and Reign of Queen Victoria. By G. A. HENTY. Illustrated. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

The Dickens Reader. Selected Passages from the Works of CHARLES DICKENS, arranged and annotated for Class Reading. With a Biographical Notice of the Author. Cloth, 1s. 4d.

The Prologue to the Canterbury Tales of GEOFREY CHAUCER. With Life, Notes, and Index to Difficult Words. By E. F. WILLOUGHBY. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Shakespeare's Plays. Carefully Edited, with Notes. Cloth, 8d. each.
 King Richard II. | King John.
 Julius Caesar. | As You Like It.
 Macbeth. | Merchant of Venice.
 Henry the Eighth. | The Tempest.
 Hamlet, 12s. pp., 16d. | King Lear, 12s. pp., 10d.

WRITING.

Vere Foster's Copy-Books. These Books have been designed by MR. VERE FOSTER to carry out the principle of clear and legible handwriting, and to afford a simple, rapid, and elegant style of writing for general correspondence.

The ORIGINAL SERIES. In 18 Numbers, at 2d. each.
 The BOLD WRITING SERIES. In 21 Numbers, at 2d. each.
 The PALMERSTON SERIES. In 11 Numbers, at 3d. each.

ARITHMETIC.

Blackie's Complete Arithmetic. Cloth, 1s.; or with Answers, 1s. 6d. The Answers separately, 6d.

A Practical Arithmetic on an entirely New METHOD. By JOHN JACKSON. Third Edition. Cloth, 4s.

Blackie's Tot-Cards of Addition in Money, in facsimile of written figures. 44 Cards, containing 2,000 Totals, and Four Answer Cards, in case, 2s. 6d.

Examination Arithmetic. Containing 1,200 Arithmetical Problems and Exercises (with Answers), selected from Examination Papers, &c. Classified by T. S. HARVEY. Cloth, 2s.—KEY, 4s. 6d.

ENGLISH.

Compendious English Grammar, with Exercises. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

English Composition Exercises. Comprising Short Stories, Subjects and Hints for Essays, Rules and Models for Letters, &c. Cloth, 1s.

Stories and Essays. A Sequel to "English Composition Exercises." Cloth, 1s.

The English Language and Literature. an Outline for Schools. By DAVID CAMPBELL. Cloth, 6d.

LATIN.

Dr. Burns's Praxis Primaria: Progressive Exercises in writing Latin, with Notes. Ninth Edition. Cloth, 7s.—KEY, 3s. 6d.

FRENCH.

Practical French Grammar. With Exercises and Vocabulary. By C. O. SONNTAG. Cloth, 2s.

ELOCUTION.

Select Readings and Recitations. With Rules and Exercises on Pronunciation, Gesture, Tone, and Emphasis. By GEO. W. BAYNHAM. Sixth Edition. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

MYTHOLOGY.

Myths and Legends of Ancient Greece and Rome. By E. M. BERENS. Illustrated from Antique Sculptures. New Edition. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

DICTIONARIES.

Concise English Dictionary. Literary, Scientific, Etymological, and Pronouncing. Based on Ogilvie's Imperial Dictionary. By CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D. Cloth, 10s. 6d.; half-morocco, 15s.

Ogilvie's Student's English Dictionary: Etymological, Pronouncing, and Explanatory. With about 300 Engravings on Wood. Roxburghe, 7s. 6d.; half-calf, 10s. 6d.

Ogilvie's Smaller Dictionary of the English Language. Abridged from the "Student's Dictionary." Cloth, 2s. 6d.; Roxburghe, 3s. 6d.

* * BLACKIE & SON'S CATALOGUE of EDUCATIONAL BOOKS post free on application.

DRAWING.

Poynter's South Kensington Drawing Books. Produced under the direct Superintendence of E. J. POYNTER, R.A., and sanctioned by the Committee of Council on Education. With Instructions and Diagrams attached to the Examples, in order to simplify the work of both Teacher and Pupil. Each book contains fine Cartridge Paper for Drawing on.

Freehand for Children. 4 Books, 4d. each.
 Freehand, Elementary Design. 2 Books, 3d. each.
 Freehand, First Grade, Ornament. 6 Books, 1d. each.
 Freehand, First Grade, Plants. 6 Books, 1d. each.
 Freehand, Second Grade. 4 Books, 1s. each.

* * The Designs are published also on Cards.

ADVANCED SERIES.

Elementary Human Figure. 4 Books, 6d. each.
 Advanced Human Figure. 3 Books, 2s. each.
 Figures from the Cartoons of Raphael. 4 Books, 2s. each.
 Elementary Perspective Drawing. 4 Books, 1s. each.

Poynter's Drawing Books for the Standards
 A Series of New Designs, with Selections from "Dyce's Drawing Book." Produced under the direction of E. J. POYNTER, R.A., and approved by the Science and Art Department. In 8 Books at 2d. each, and 20 Books at 3d. each.

* * The Designs are published also on Cards.

Vere Foster's Drawing Books. Approved by the Science and Art Department. With Instructions, and Paper for Drawing on.

NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS.

In 70 Numbers at Twopence each.

Freehand Series, 20 Numbers. | Geometrical Series, 12 Nos.
 Landscape, 12 Numbers. | Perspective, 4 Numbers.
 Animals, 12 Numbers. | Model Drawing, 4 Numbers.
 Human Figure, 4 Numbers. | Shading, 2 Numbers.
 Blank Exercise Book.—40 Pages of Drawing Paper.
 Published also in Eighteen Parts at Ninepence each.

HISTORY.

A History of the British Empire. With Illustrations. Genealogical Tables, Maps, and Plans, by EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A., late Scholar of Clare College, Cambridge. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Outlines of the World's History. Ancient, Medieval, and Modern. By EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A. With numerous Illustrations, and 8 Coloured Maps. Cloth, 6s. 6d.

Also in separate Parts.

Part 1. Ancient History, 1s. | Part 3. Medieval History, 1s.
 Part 2. Greece and Rome, 2s. | Part 4. Modern History, 2s. 6d.

A Synopsis of English History: or, Historical Note-Book. Compiled by HERBERT WILLS. Cloth, 2s.

An Epitome of History, Ancient, Medieval, and Modern. For Higher Schools, Colleges, and Private Study. By CARL PLOETZ. Translated with extensive Additions by W. H. TILLINGHAST. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY.

Blackie's Geographical Manuals, for Middle-Class and Higher Schools. By W. G. BAKER, M.A.

No. 1. REALISTIC ELEMENTARY GEOGRAPHY. Embracing Direction, Maps, and Definitions, with many Illustrations and 2 Coloured Maps. Cloth, 1s. 6d.
 No. 2. THE BRITISH EMPIRE. Part I. The Home Countries: England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. With 7 Coloured Maps, &c. Cloth, 2s.

No. 3. THE BRITISH EMPIRE. Part II. The Colonies and Dependencies. With 6 Coloured Maps and numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.
 THE BRITISH EMPIRE, complete in 1 vol., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Commercial Geography: a Complete Manual of the Countries of the World. By Dr. CARL ZEPHEN. Translated by FINDLAY MUIRHEAD, M.A. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

A Pronouncing Vocabulary of Modern Geographical Names, newly Ten Thousand in number. By GEORGE G. CHISHOLM, M.A., B.Sc. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Physical Geography. An Elementary Treatise for Use in Schools. Illustrated. Cloth limp, 4d.

SCIENCE FOR BEGINNERS.

Mechanics. With Woodcuts. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Animal Physiology. By VINCENT T. MURCHE. With Coloured Plates and Diagrams. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Botany. By VINCENT T. MURCHE. With numerous Woodcuts. Cloth, 1s.

Chemistry. By W. JEROME HARRISON. With numerous Illustrations. Cloth, 1s.

Magnetism and Electricity. By W. G. BAKER, M.A. With numerous Woodcuts. Cloth, 1s.

Agriculture. With Woodcuts. Cloth, 1s.

SCIENCE.

Deschanel's Natural Philosophy. Translated and Edited by Prof. J. D. EVERETT, D.C.L. Eleventh Edition, Revised throughout. Copiously Illustrated. Medium 8vo, cloth, 18s. In Parts, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

Part I. Mechanics, &c. | Part III. Electricity, &c.
 Part II. Heat. | Part IV. Sound and Light.

Outlines of Natural Philosophy. A Text-Book of Elementary Physics. By Prof. EVERETT. New Edition. With numerous Illustrations. Cloth, 4s.

Elementary Text-Book of Physics. By Prof. EVERETT. Illustrated by many Woodcuts. Fifth Edition, Revised. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

Earth Knowledge: a Text-Book of Physiography. By W. J. HARRISON and H. R. WAKEFIELD. Part I. Elementary, 1s. 6d. Part II. Advanced, 2s.

An Elementary Text-Book of Geology. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S. Copiously Illustrated. Cloth, 2s.

Elementary Botany. By JOSEPH W. OLIVER, Lecturer on Botany at the Birmingham Midland Institute. Cloth, 2s.

Magnetism and Electricity. By W. JEROME HARRISON and CHARLES A. WHITE. Numerous Illustrations. Cloth, 2s.

The Arithmetic of Magnetism and Electricity. By ROBERT GUNN, Science Lecturer, Glasgow School Board. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Light, Heat, and Sound. By CHARLES H. DRAPEL, D.Sc. Lond., Head Master of the Woolwich High School. Fully Illustrated. Cloth, 2s.

Inorganic Chemistry: Theoretical and Practical. With a Course of Chemical Analysis and a Series of Examples in Chemical Arithmetic. By Prof. A. HUMBOLDT SEXTON. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Text-Book of Organic Chemistry. By Prof. A. BERNTHSEN, Ph.D. Translated by GEORGE M'GOWAN, Ph.D., Demonstrator in Chemistry University College of North Wales, Bangor. Cloth, 10s.

An Elementary Text-Book of Physiology. By J. M'GREGOR-ROBERTSON, M.A., M.B. Numerous Illustrations. Cloth, 4s.

Elementary Text-Book of Dynamics and HYDROSTATICS. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A., Assistant Lecturer on Mathematics at the University College of South Wales. Second Edition, Enlarged. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

Theoretical Mechanics. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A. (Oxon.), Author of "Elementary Text-Book of Dynamics and Hydrostatics." Cloth, 2s.

An Elementary Text-Book of Applied MECHANICS. By DAVID ALLAN LOW, Head Master of the People's Palace Technical Schools. Cloth, 2s.

MATHEMATICS.

First Mathematical Course. Comprising Arithmetic, Algebra (to Simple Equations), and the First Book of Euclid. With Answers, 2s.; without Answers, 1s. 9d.; Answers, 6d.

Euclid's Elements of Geometry. With Notes, Examples, and Exercises. Arranged by A. E. LAYNG, M.A., Head Master of Stafford Grammar School. Books I. to VI., with XI., and Appendix; and a wide Selection of Examination Papers. Cloth, 4s. 6d.
 Books I. to IV., in 1 vol., 2s. 6d.; Book I., 1s.; II., 6d.; III., 1s.; IV., 6d.; V. and VI. together, 1s.

Mathematical Wrinkles. Consisting of Six Sets of London Matriculation Papers in Mathematics, with full Solutions. By Dr. W. T. KNIGHT. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Blackie's Elementary Algebra. From Notation to Easy Quadratic Equations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. With Answers, cloth, 2s.

Algebra. Up to and including Progressions and Scales of Notation. By J. G. KERR, M.A. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Algebraic Factors. How to Find Them and How to Use Them. Enlarged Edition. By Dr. W. T. KNIGHT. Cloth, 2s.—KEY, 3s. 6d.

Elementary Text-Book of Trigonometry. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A. New Edition, Revised and Extended. Cloth, 2s.

Elementary Mensuration, Lines, Surfaces, and SOLIDS. With numerous Exercises. Cloth, 10d.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 49 AND 50, OLD BAILEY.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1011.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

On October 25th will be published, in 2 vols., royal 8vo, 900 pp., with many Illustrations, at £2 2s.

GOSSIP of the CENTURY. By the Author of "Flemish Interiors," "De Omnibus rebus," &c.

ENGLAND and the ENGLISH in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By W. C. Sydney. 2 vols., 24s.

"Mr. Sydney has succeeded in picturing the men and women, costumes and pastimes, coffeehouses and clubs, vices, follies, and superstitions of the past century in a highly graphic and realistic manner. . . a useful and delightful book."—Daily Telegraph.

A SUMMER in KIEFF. By Isabel Morris. Illustrated by Cochrane Morris. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Her journal is one of the brightest and freshest books of travel of the season."—National Observer.

"She has a clear eye for the characteristic features of Russian life and manners, and records her impressions in a style that is distinctly lively and readable."—Saturday Review.

MODERN AUTHORS: a Review and a Forecast. By Arthur Lynch. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"No more just and generous utterance in respect to the great realistic master of French fiction (Zola) have I ever read."—Black and White.

AN OCTAVE of FRIENDS. By Mrs. Lynn Linton. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A decidedly entertaining collection of sketches and stories."—Daily Telegraph.

NOTES on MEN, WOMEN, and BOOKS. By Lady Wilde. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"They are acute and lively."—St. James's Gazette.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL STUDIES. By A. W. Buckland, Member of the Anthropological Institute.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Has certainly brought together an immense wealth of facts, and besides giving us his own criticisms, he has stated the theories held by our leading authorities in paleontology, so that his book is a storehouse of information and speculation on the obscure beginnings of our race."—Daily Telegraph.

"The book deserves to be widely read."—Morning Post.

TWO YEARS AMONGST the SAVAGES of NEW GUINEA. With an Introductory Chapter on North Queensland. By W. D. PITCAIRN, F.R.G.S. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 5s.

"This is a capital work of travel. It records in an unpretentious fashion the experience of a couple of years on the coast of New Guinea and the neighbouring isles; it narrates some thrilling adventures by sea and land; and the author, without having much literary polish, has a happy knack of telling his story clearly and dramatically."—Morning Post.

NEW NOVELS.

MISS WENTWORTH'S IDEA By W. E. Norris, Author of "Matrimony," "The Rogue," &c. 2 vols., 21s.

OF THIS DEATH—By Mrs Vere Campbell, Author of "The Crime of Keziah Keene." 2 vols., 21s.

CAPTAIN LANAGAN'S LOG. By E. Downey (F. M. ALLEN). 1 vol., 3s. 6d.

"I have no doubt of your enjoying the ray vigour of 'Captain Lanagan's Log.'"—Truth.

THE TRIAL of PARSON FINCH. By Somerville Gibney, Author of "John o' London," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Is written with a simple directness which gives it an air of reality, and the character of the parson is especially well drawn."—Standard.

NEW NOVELS.

HUMBLING HIS PRIDE. By O. T. C. James. Author of "The New Faith," "The Blindness of Memory Earle." 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

"It has good points and an excellent tone. Consistent vigour is shown in the sketch of the central figure."—Morning Post.

"Page after page shows that the author possesses a true humour."—Speaker.

ORLANDO FIGGINS. By Mrs. Alfred Marks (Mary HOPPUS). Crown 8vo, 6s.

"'Orlando Figgins' is a little tragedy in homespun, told with the greatest art and delicacy."—Athenaeum.

DECK CHAIR STORIES By Richard Pryce, Author of "Just Impediment," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Extra crown 8to, with upwards of 100 Illustrations, 25s.

PICTURESQUE LONDON. By Percy Fitzgerald, M.A., F.S.A.

"It contains an immense store of interesting information with an abundance of well-drawn and executed engravings."—Standard.

2 vols., demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 30s.

A COLONIAL TRAMP: Travels and Adventures in Australia and New Guinea. By Hume Nisbet.

"Two volumes of very sprightly and attractive travel talk. He has an excellent sense of humour, and his volumes are full of entertaining stories."—St. James's Gazette.

"One of the most instructive and entertaining of modern books of travel."—Spectator.

2 vols., demy 8vo, with about 100 Illustrations, 30s.

SOCIAL LIFE UNDER the REGENCY. By John Ashton.

"The volumes are liberally illustrated. Mr. Ashton does not possess the historian's severe and solemn art. His purpose is rather to picture for us with easy and yet accurate touch the scenes amid which history was enacted and those by whom it was enacted. . . The volumes are well worth reading."—Daily News.

"Bright and pleasant reading. . . One of the chief merits of the two volumes is that they reproduce in excellent style a large number of contemporary caricatures by Gilray, Rowlandson, Cruikshank, and others."—Times.

TWO BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

THE LITTLE LADY of LAVENDER. By Theodora ELMSLIE. Illustrated by Edith Scannel. 3s. 6d.

"It is one of the best stories intended for, or at least about, children that have appeared since 'Little Lord Fauntleroy.'"—Academy.

TRASH. By Mrs. Blagden. 3s. 6d.

"This is an excellent gift-book for young people."—Good Women.

THREE BOOKS FOR BOYS.

A TALE of THREE NATIONS. By J. F. Hodgetts 3s. 6d

THE BEACHCOMBERS. By Gilbert Bishop. 3s. 6d.

PRINCE DICK of DAHOMEY. By James Greenwood 3s. 6d.

THE ROUND TOWER of BABEL. By E. Downey (F. M. Allen). At all Bookstalls, Is.

WARD & DOWNEY, YORK STREET, W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Table listing contents with page numbers, including 'THE APOLOGY OF ARISTIDES', 'BUCHHEIM'S GERMAN BALLADS', 'MAJOR CLARKE'S FORTIFICATION', etc.

Mr. WILLIAM HEINEMANN begs to announce that he will publish on SEPTEMBER 23rd, "THE SCAPEGOAT: a Romance." By HALL CAINE, Author of "The Bondman," &c. In 2 vols.

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE and ART, ROYAL COLLEGE of SCIENCE, STEPHENS GREEN, DUBLIN.

SESSION 1891-92. The Royal College of Science supplies courses of instruction in the Sciences applicable to the Industrial Arts, especially those which may be classed broadly under the heads CHEMICAL MANUFACTURES, ENGINEERING, and MINING.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY. Professor W. F. R. WELDON, M.A., F.R.S., will deliver, during the ensuing Session, a COURSE OF LECTURES on "THE DECAPOD CRUSTACEA," intended specially for Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON (LADIES' DEPARTMENT).

In this department Lectures are given to Ladies in the various subjects of University Education by Professors and Lecturers on the Staff of King's College. The Lectures are adapted for Ladies above the age of 16.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD. Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton, Cambridge). Professors—Sedley, King's Coll.; Dr. Dulcken, Rudolph, Lowman, Louis Dielh, Signor Garcia, Larpent, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.

HUDDERSFIELD TECHNICAL SCHOOL.

FRENCH AND GERMAN. The Governors will shortly appoint a TEACHER OF FRENCH and GERMAN, to commence duties in January next.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL of MUSIC, 114, Cambridge Street, Warwick Square, S.W.

Miss O'REILLY (late student Royal College of Music) and Miss FEDARB, A.R.C.M., prepare students in PIANO and THEORY for the Royal College of Music. Fee per term £4 4s. Term begins OCTOBER 1st. Prospectuses on application.

NATURAL HISTORY MUSEUM, Cromwell Road, London, S.W.

SWINEY LECTURES ON GEOLOGY. In connection with the British Museum. Professor H. ALLEYNE NICHOLSON, M.D., D.Sc., F.G.S., will deliver a COURSE OF TWELVE LECTURES on "THE GREAT AGENTS OF GEOLOGICAL CHANGE," on MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, and FRIDAYS, at 3 p.m., beginning 5th OCTOBER and ending 30th October, 1891.

SCHOOL for the DAUGHTERS of GENETLEMEN.—Sea air and home life, with thorough education and good masters. Only twelve are received.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERTS.—The Thirty-sixth Annual Series of these world-renowned Concerts will commence on SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10th, at 3. Conductor, Mr. AUGUST MANSS.—Full prospectus free on application to the Manager, Crystal Palace, S.E.

ROCKINGHAM CASTLE and the WATSONS. By CHAS. WISE. Just published, crown 4to, over 266 pages, fully illustrated, and handsomely bound in cloth, price 21s.

CANON DRIVERS NEW BOOK. Just published, in post 8vo, price 12s.

AN INTRODUCTION to the LITERATURE of the OLD TESTAMENT. By S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 28, George Street. London: SIMPSON, MARSHALL, HAMMOND, KENT, & Co., Limited. To be had of all Booksellers.

BRIGHTEST AFRICA.—Capt. EDW. C. MORE.

AS CURATOR of MUSEUM or LIBRARY.—A practical Gentleman, who has travelled for many years, seeks an APPOINTMENT.—Address M. M., THE ACADEMY, 27, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

RUGBY.—TO LET (near School), from Sept. 20th.

TO ARTISTS and others.—TO be LET, excellent STUDIO and snug BACHELOR'S QUARTERS combined, in central position, and midway between City and West-end.

COPYRIGHT WANTED to Publish Musical Work on a Poem from "HEART VISIONS and REALITIES," 1889.

FRENCH CONVERSATIONAL LESSONS.—A LADY, who has been engaged for eight years in conducting large public English Classes for la villa de Paris, and also for the Association Polytechnique in that city, is now desirous of teaching FRENCH who wish to continue their fluency of speech in the French language.—Address F. T. M., care of Mrs. Evans, 62, Blomfield Road, Maids Hill, W.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE.

GLADWELL BROTHERS' FINE ART GALLERY, 29 and 21, Gracechurch Street, E.C.—A dissolution of partnership being in progress, the remaining STOCK, accumulated during the past half century, is now being SOLD for cash, without regard to publication prices.

GLADWELLS' important SALE of FINE ART STOCK is now in progress, and will be continued for a short time only, as the partnership heretofore subsisting will be dissolved on Dec. 31 next.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

AN INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of FLOWERLESS PLANTS: Their Structure and Classification. By ALFRED W. BENNETT, M.A., B.Sc. (London), V.P.L.S., &c. Reprinted, with Additions and Alterations, from the Fourth Edition of "Hendry's Elementary Course of Botany." GURNEY & JACKSON, 1, PATERNOSTER ROW (Mr. VAN VOORST'S Successors).

- Mathematics, Mechanics, and Professor H. HENNESSY, F.R.S. Mechanism ... Descriptive Geometry, Drawing, Professor THOMAS F. PIGOT, C.E., Engineering, and Surveying ... M.R.I.A. Chemistry, Theoretical and Prac- Professor W. N. HARTLEY, F.R.S., tical, and Metallurgy ... F.C.S., F.R.S.E. Physics, Theoretical and Prac- Professor W. F. BARRITT, tical ... F.R.S.E., M.R.I.A. Geology ... Professor G. A. J. COLE, F.G.S. Mining and Mineralogy ... Professor J. P. O'REILLY, C.E., M.R.I.A. Botany ... Professor T. JOHNSON, D.Sc., F.L.S., Dean of Faculty for Session. Zoology ... Professor A. C. HADDON, M.A., F.Z.S., M.R.I.A.

The Courses of Chemistry, Physics, Botany, and Zoology are recognised by the Royal University of Ireland, and certificates of attendance are granted to medical and other students attending the Courses, and the Chemical, Practical, Botanical, and Zoological Laboratories.

Programmes may be obtained on application at the College, or by letter addressed to the Secretary, Royal College of Science, Stephen's Green, Dublin. The first term of the Session will commence on Monday, the 5th October.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES (ABERYSTWYTH).

The Council of the College invite Applications for the CHAIR of PHYSICS, vacated by Professor D. E. JONES on his appointment as Director of Technical Instruction for Staffordshire. Commencing salary £200. Particulars may be obtained of the Principal, at Aberystwyth.—Applications, together with testimonials, should be forwarded to the Hon. Secretary, 27, Chancery Lane, London, W.C., on or before the 10th inst. The Professor will be required to commence work immediately.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

COUNTY OF MONMOUTH. The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint the following Members of a Staff of Travelling Teachers in Technical Subjects for the County of Monmouth:—

A LECTURER in CHEMISTRY and METALLURGY. A LECTURER in GEOLOGY and MINING. The stipend of each Lecturer will be £200 per annum, together with travelling expenses.—Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be sent in not later than SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10th, 1891, to the undersigned, from whom further information in regard to the duties of the Staff may be obtained. Your JAMES, Registrar. Cardiff, August 28th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

THE DEPARTMENTS of ARTS, SCIENCE, and ENGINEERING and the NORMAL DEPARTMENTS for INTERMEDIATE and ELEMENTARY TEACHERS will OPEN on MONDAY, OCTOBER 5th, 1891. The Lectures and Classes are open to Men and Women. For Prospectuses and information concerning Scholarships, &c., apply to University College, Cardiff, August 11th, 1891.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.'S NEW LIST.

INTRODUCTORY SCIENCE TEXT-BOOKS.

- PETROLOGY. By F. H. HATCH, Ph.D., F.G.S. With 43 Illustrations. 3s. 6d. Second Edition. "A model of what a student's text-book should be; clear, concise, and yet full."—Literary World.
- BOTANY. By EDWARD AVELING, D.Sc., Fellow of Univ. Coll., Lond. With 271 Illustrations. 4s. 6d. "The best and most practical elementary text-book of botany in the English language."—National Observer.
- PHONETICS. By LAURA SOAMES. With Preface by DOROTHEA BEALE. 6s. "Miss Soames has earned a further claim to the gratitude of every right-minded and conscientious teacher, for whom the manual will prove a welcome and useful guide."—Education.
- POLITICAL ECONOMY. By R. T. ELY, Professor of Political Economy at Johns Hopkins University. 4s. 6d. "It shows, as no other book has ever shown, what the scope of economic study is. The entire field is mapped out, and the survey is from the right standpoint, the sociological."—Prof. F. H. GIDDINGS.
- ETHICS. By Professor GIZYCKI and Dr. STANTON COIT. 4s. 6d. "Admirably arranged. It is a book which will stimulate thought."—Spectator.

* Other Works in active preparation.

PARALLEL GRAMMAR SERIES.

Edited by Professor E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A. (Oxon.).

NOW READY.

- ENGLISH GRAMMAR. By J. HALL, M.A., Head Master of the Hulme Gram. School; A. J. COOPER, F.C.P.; and the EDITOR. ACCIDENCE, 1s. ANALYSIS and SYNTAX, 1s. In One Vol., 2s.
- ENGLISH EXAMPLES and EXERCISES. By M. A. WOODS, Head Mistress of the Clifton High School, and A. J. COOPER. Part I. (ACCIDENCE), 1s. Part II. (ANALYSIS), 1s.
- LATIN GRAMMAR. By Prof. E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A. (Oxon.). ACCIDENCE, 1s. 6d. SYNTAX, 1s. 6d. In One Vol., 3s.
- FIRST LATIN READER and WRITER. By C. M. DIX, M.A. (Oxon.). 1s.
- SECOND LATIN READER and WRITER. By C. M. DIX. 1s. 6d.
- FOURTH LATIN READER and WRITER: Livy Lessons. By J. C. NICOL, M.A., and Rev. J. HUNTER SMITH. 1s. 6d.
- FRENCH GRAMMAR. By L. M. MORIARTY, M.A. (Oxon.), Assistant Master at Harrow, late Prof. of French in King's College. ACCIDENCE, 1s. 6d. SYNTAX, 1s. 6d. In One Vol., 3s.
- FIRST FRENCH READER and WRITER. By R. J. MORICH, Chief Modern Language Master in the Mancs. Gram. Sch.; and W. S. LYON, M.A. (Oxon.). 1s. 6d.
- GERMAN GRAMMAR. By KUNO MEYER, Ph.D., Lecturer in German in University Coll., Liverpool. ACCIDENCE, 1s. 6d. SYNTAX, 1s. 6d. In One Vol., 3s.
- FIRST GERMAN READER and WRITER. By Prof. E. A. SONNENSCHN. 1s.
- SECOND GERMAN READER and WRITER. By W. S. MACGOWAN, M.A., LL.M. (Cantab.). 1s. 6d.

READY VERY SHORTLY.

- THIRD LATIN READER and WRITER. By C. M. DIX, M.A.
- GREEK ACCIDENCE. By Prof. SONNENSCHN.
- SECOND FRENCH READER and WRITER. By Prof. P. E. BARRIER.
- SPANISH GRAMMAR. By H. B. CLARKE, B.A. (Oxon.), Taylorian Scholar in Spanish. Also, FIRST READER and WRITER.

EDITED BY PROFESSOR H. NETTLESHIP, M.A., AND J. E. SANDYS, LL.D.

DICTIONARY of CLASSICAL ANTIQUITIES, MYTHOLOGY, RELIGION, LITERATURE, and ART. Adapted from the Work of Professor SEYFFERT, by HENRY NETTLESHIP, M.A., Professor of Latin Literature in the University of Oxford, and J. E. SANDYS, LL.D., Public Orator in the University of Cambridge. With over 150 Illustrations, crown 4to, double columns, 21s.; Presentation Edition, 22s. 6d.

The Times says:—"At once more concise and more comprehensive than the well-known Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities which has so long held the field in this country, and is now re-appearing in a new and enlarged edition. For that very reason it will be more adapted to the requirements of certain classes of students, while its scholarly execution and its copious illustrations render it, within its limits, a formidable rival."

RIDDLES of the SPHINX: a Study in the Philosophy of Evolution. By a TROGLODYTE. 8vo, 12s.

Introductory—Agnosticism—Scepticism—Pessimism—Reconstruction—The Method of Philosophy—The Metaphysics of Evolution—Formulas of the Law of Evolution.—Man and the World—Man and God—Immortality—Conclusion.

"It is distinguished by real literary charm, and often rises to eloquence."—Westminster Review.
"A book of very considerable force and interest. His thinking is genuine and his writing is good."—Nat. Observer.

NEW VOLS. OF "SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES."—Each 2s. 6d.

- The Modern State. By PAUL LEROY-BEAULIEU.
- Collectivism and the Socialism of the Liberal School. By A. NAQUET.
- The London Programme. By SIDNEY WEBB, LL.B.
- Distributing Co-operative Societies. By Dr. LUIGI PIZZAGOLLO. Edited by F. J. SULLIVAN, M.A. (Oxon.). "A succinct and exhaustive discussion."—Times.
- Outlooks from the New Standpoint. By E. BELLOUT BAX.
- Modern Humanists: Sociological Studies of Carlyle, Mill, Emerson, Arnold, Ruskin, and Spencer; with an Epilogue on Social Reconstruction. By J. M. ROBERTSON. "Every page indicates thoughtful study."—Manchester Guardian. "Mr. Robertson's style is excellent—may, even brilliant; and his purely literary criticisms bear the mark of much acumen."—Times.
- Neighbourhood Guilds. By Dr. STANTON COIT. "A suggestive little book."—Pall Mall Gazette.
- The Co-operative Movement. By BEATRICE POTTER. "The ablest and most philosophical analysis of the movement."—Spectator.
- The English Republic. By W. J. LINTON. "An interesting view of a stage in the history of Radicalism."—Athenaeum.
- The Origin of Property. By FUSTEL DE COULANDES. Edited, with Introductory Chapter on the "English Manor," by Prof. W. J. ASHLEY, M.A. (Oxon.). "Indispensable to the student of constitutional history, as well as to the economist."—Glasgow Herald.

SOME STUDENTS' TEXT-BOOKS.

- Botany, Practical, Elementary Text-Book of. Edited from Prof. W. SCHRÖDER, by Prof. W. HULLHOUSE, M.A. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. With Additional Cuts. 8vo, 9s.
- Botany, Elementary Text-Book of. By Prof. W. PRANTL and S. H. VINES, D.Sc., M.A. Sixth Edition. 8vo, 9s.
- Microscope, in Theory and Practice. By Prof. C. NAGELI and Prof. S. SCHWENDENER. Illustrated. 8vo, 2s.
- Petrographical Tables for the Microscopical DETERMINATION of ROCK-FORMING MINERALS. By Prof. H. ROSENFELD. Edited by F. H. HATCH, D.Sc. 4to, limp cloth, 3s. 6d.
- Vital Statistics, The Elements of. By A. NEWSHOLME, M.D. With Tables, Diagrams, &c. 7s. 6d. 2nd Edition.
- Zoology, Elementary Text-Book of. By Prof. W. CLAU. Edited by ADAM SEDGWICK, M.A., F.R.S. Examiner in Zoology to Univ. Lond., and F. G. HEAVY, M.A. I. General Introduction; Part 2 to 4 Insects. 21s. Second Ed. II. Mollusca to Man. 19s. Third Ed.
- The Musician: a Guide for Pianoforte Students, By RIDLEY PRENTICE. In Six Grades. Each 2s. Contains Analyses of well-known pieces, progressively arranged, enabling the pupil to write a study of musical form with ordinary pianoforte practice.
- Greek and Latin, Comparative Grammar of. By Prof. VICTOR HANSEN. Translated by R. T. ELLIOTT, M.A. (Oxon.). 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- Pedagogy, The History of. By Prof. GABRIEL COMPAYRÉ. Translated, with an Introduction, Notes and Index, by Prof. W. H. PEARCE, M.A. 6s.
- Froebel's Letters on the Kindergarten. Translated from Froebel's Edition of 1877 by EMILIE METCALLE and H. KEATLEY MOORE, B.A., B.Mus. 3s.
- History of Philosophy. By Dr. J. E. ERDMANN. Edited by Prof. W. S. HOGAN. [Second Edition.] I. Ancient and Medieval. 15s. II. Modern. 15s. III. Since Hegel. 12s.
- A NEW ELEMENTARY GEOGRAPHY.
- School Geography: Junior Course. By A. SONNENSCHN and Prof. KIRCHHOFF (Halle). With 14 Full-Page Plates and numerous Cuts and Diagrams. 2s. 6d.
- Historical Chart of the XIII. Century. By A. M. C. Designed for the use of University Extension and other Students and Teachers in Elementary Schools. 32 by 22. 6d. net. On roller. 1s. 6d. net.

NEW VOLS. of SONNENSCHN'S CHEAP LIBRARY EDIT. of STANDARD AUTHORS.

- DYCE'S SHAKESPEARE. New Edition in 10 vols., 8vo, 45s. net. This well-known Edition of Shakespeare, with the Rev. A. Dyce's Copyright Text, Notes, Biography, Glossary, &c., is universally regarded as the Standard Library Edition. Originally published at £9, it is now for the first time issued at a popular price.
- PEPYS'S DIARY and CORRESPONDENCE. Edited by Lord BRAYBROOKE. 4 vols., 8vo, 18s. net. A verbatim reprint of the 1848-49 Edition (5 vols.), which contained numerous additions, and which has been long out of print. It includes the Copyright Matter (which has been specially purchased), Notes and Appendices, Life of Pepys, and a copious Index, &c.
- LETTERS of HORACE WALPOLE. Selected and Edited by Professor C. D. YONGE, M.A. 2 vols., 8vo, 8s. net.
- WHITE'S SELBORNE. The Standard Edition by Bennett. Thoroughly Revised by J. E. HARTING, F.R.S., F.Z.S. Engravings by Bewick. 4s. net.

PREVIOUS VOLUMES (each 4s. net).

- PRESCOTT'S Conquest of Mexico.
PRESCOTT'S Conquest of Peru.
PRESCOTT'S Ferdinand and Isabella.
MOTLEY'S Dutch Republic.
COUNT HAMILTON'S Memoirs of Gramont.
SAINT-SIMON'S Memoirs. 3 v.
PERCY'S RELIQUES. Edited by H. B. Wheatley. 3 v.
WHEATLEY'S Samuel Pepys and the World he Lived In.
WALPOLE'S Anecdotes of Painting. 3 v. 80 Ports.
BOSWELL'S Johnson. Edited by P. Fitzgerald. 3 v.
WEIR'S Modern Europe.
HASSENCAETZ'S History of Ireland.
TURNER'S Short History of Art. Fully Illustrated.
SIR G. W. COX'S Little Cyclopaedia of Common Things.

Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.'s New Catalogue (containing over 600 Works) will be sent free to any address.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE, LONDON.

STANDARD WORKS FOR THE LIBRARY.

Mr. Frith's Reminiscences.
New and Cheaper Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

The Private Life of Marie ANTOINETTE. By HENRIETTE FELICITE CAMPAN, First Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen. With 2 Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

Dean Hook: his Life and Letters.
Edited by the Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS, Vicar of Woolbeding, Author of "Life of St. John Chrysostom," &c. The Popular Edition. With Index and Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

Recollections of a Literary Life.
With Selections from Her Favourite Poets and Prose Writers. By MARY RUSSELL MITFORD. Crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

Letters to a Friend. By the late CONNOR THIRLWALL, D.D., Bishop of St. David's, and Edited by the late Dean STANLEY. A New and much Enlarged Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with a Portrait, 6s.

The Lives of Painters: Hogarth, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Gainsborough, Fuseli, Sir Thomas Lawrence, Turner. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. Crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

The Life of the Rev. Richard HARRIS BARHAM. Author of "The Ingoldsby Legends." By his Son, the Rev. RICHARD H. DALTON BARHAM. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

The Lives of Wits and Humour-ISTS: Swift, Steele, Foote, Goldsmith, the Colmans, Sheridan, Porson, Sydney Smith, Theodore Hook, &c. &c. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. In Two Vols., crown 8vo, with Portraits, 12s.

Our Old Actors. By HENRY BARTON BAKER, Author of "French Society from the Fronde to the Great Revolution." With a Portrait of Peg Woffington. Popular Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Lives of Statesmen: Burke and Chatham. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. Crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

A Memoir of the late Rev. John RUSSELL ("Parson Russell"), of Tordown, North Devon. By the Author of "Dartmoor Days," "Wolf-Hunting in Brittany," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with a Portrait.

The Life of Oliver Cromwell.
From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Eighth Edition. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

The Life of Mary, Queen of Scots.
From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Sixth Edition. Crown 8vo, with 2 Portraits, 6s.

The Fifteen Decisive Battles of the WORLD. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. Thirty-second Edition. With Plans. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Life of Viscount Wolseley.
By CHARLES RATHBONE LOW, late Indian Navy, F.R.G.S. 1 vol., crown 8vo, with a Portrait, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST OF SCHOOL BOOKS.

VICTOR HUGO'S QUATRE-VINGT-TREIZE. Edited by JAMES BOIELLE, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Senior French Master at Dulwich College. Authorised Copyright Edition. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Now ready.]

FRENCH REVOLUTION READINGS.
Edited, with Helps for Composition, by A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Camp Hill, Birmingham, and C. M. DIX, M.A., Assistant Master at the Oratory School, Birmingham. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. net. [Now ready.]

HENRY GREVILLE'S PERDUE.
Edited by JAMES BOIELLE, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Senior French Master at Dulwich College. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Now ready.]

DUMAS'S MONTE CRISTO. Edited by FRANCIS TARVER, M.A., Senior French Master at Eton College. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Now ready.]

MODERN FRENCH READINGS.
Edited, with Helps for Composition, by A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Camp Hill, Birmingham. Second Edition. Cloth, crown 8vo, 3s. [Now ready.]

DUMAS'S LES TROIS MOUSQUETAIRES. Edited by F. C. SUMICHRAST, Assistant Professor of French in Harvard University. Cloth, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Now ready.]

The BEGINNERS' BOOK in GERMAN.
Illustrated with Humorous Pictures. By SOPHIE DORNIOT. Square 8vo, boards, 4s. 6d.

GERMAN LESSONS. By W. O. COLLAR, A.M., Author of "The Beginners' Latin Book." With Notes, Selections for Reading, and Vocabulary. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

GERMAN EXERCISES. By J. FREDERICK STEIN, Instructor of German in the Boston High Schools. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE MERCANTILE ARITHMETIC.
By Dr. R. WORMELL, D.Sc., Head Master of the Central Foundation Schools, Cowper Street. A complete Text-Book, specially adapted for Training in Commercial Methods. Large crown 8vo, cloth. [In the press.]

A TEXT-BOOK OF MECHANICS By Dr. R. WORMELL. Adapted for the Requirements of the Science and Art Department and other Examinations. With numerous Illustrations. [In the press.]

AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK of MAGNETISM and ELECTRICITY. By Dr. WORMELL. Embodying the Results of the latest advances in the Science. [In the press.]

LECTURES on SOUND, LIGHT, and HEAT. By Dr. WORMELL. A New Edition, Revised. The Course will be published separately. Price 1s. each.

AN INTRODUCTION to CHEMICAL SCIENCE. Edited by B. P. LASCELLES, M.A., Assistant Master at Harrow School, and R. P. WILLIAMS, of the English High School, Boston. Second Edition. With 50 Illustrations. Cloth, red edges, 3s. 6d.

A COURSE of BENCH-WORK in WOOD
A Handbook for Teachers and Pupils in Technical Schools and Manual Training Classes. By W. F. M. GOSS. With over 300 Illustrations. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

PROF. YOUNG'S ASTRONOMICAL WORKS.

1. A GENERAL ASTRONOMY. Royal 8vo, 550 pp., with 250 Illustrations, half-morocco, 12s. 6d.

2. ELEMENTS of ASTRONOMY. Crown 8vo, 470 pp., with numerous Illustrations, half-morocco, 7s. 6d.

3. A SCHOOL ASTRONOMY. Cloth, crown 8vo, 6s.

AS YOU LIKE IT, CORIOLANUS, HAMLET, and other Plays of Shakespeare. Edited for School use by HENRY N. HUDSON, LL.D. Each Play separately. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

ALLEN and GREENOUGH'S LATIN GRAMMAR. Revised Edition. Crown, 488 pp., half-morocco, 6s.

Critical Review.—"No worker in Latin grammar, and no teacher of Latin grammar, can dispense with the book."

PRACTICAL LATIN COMPOSITION.
With Extracts for Translation from Caesar, Nepos, Livy, and Cicero. By W. C. COLLAR. Crown 8vo, 5s. The volume serves both as a Latin Reader and a Composition Book, the teaching of translation and composition thus proceeding simultaneously.

Athenaeum.—"We should like to see the use of this royal road to the mastery of Latin in all fourth and fifth forms made compulsory."

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD,
37, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's STANDARD NOVELS FOR SUMMER READING.

At Prices ranging from TWO to SIX SHILLINGS.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

Cloth gilt, 6s. each.

IN SILK ATTIRE.
A DAUGHTER of HETH.
THREE FEATHERS.
LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.
KILMENY. | SUNRISE.
STRANGE ADVENTURES of a HOUSE-BOAT.
IN FAR LOCHABER.
THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN.
THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.
STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON!

By R. D. BLACKMORE.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

LORNA DOONE. (Thirty-fifth Edition.)
CLARA VAUGHAN.
MARY ANERLEY.
CRIPPS the CARRIER.
CHRISTOWELL.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

In uniform crown 8vo volumes, half-leather, gilt top,
3s. 6d. each.

AN OCEAN FREE LANCE.
THE FROZEN PIRATE.
A SEA QUEEN.
A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.
THE LADY MAUD.
THE WRECK of the "GROSVENOR."
JOHN HOLDSWORTH, CHIEF MATE.
MY WATCH BELOW.
JACK'S COURTSHIP.
A STRANGE VOYAGE.
LITTLE LOO.
BETWIXT the FORELANDS.

"That richly-gifted chronicler of the great waters. Mr. W. Clark Russell, whose knowledge, imagination, and graphic power, each being excellent of its kind, unite in a marine style which has no modern parallel."—Daily Telegraph.

By THOMAS HARDY.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

FAR from the MADDING CROWD.
THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.
THE TRUMPET-MAJOR.
THE HAND of ETHELBERTA.
A PAIR of BLUE EYES.
TWO on a TOWER.
THE RETURN of the NATIVE.
A LAODICEAN.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

DONALD ROSS OF HEIMRA

By WILLIAM BLACK,
Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c.
SECOND EDITION.
3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"An admirable story."—Athenaeum.
"One of the very best of Mr. Black's works, and his best is very good indeed."—Illustrated London News.

A MAN'S CONSCIENCE

By AVERY MACALPINE.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"The studies of character are cleverly consistent throughout, and Mr. Macalpine, with his genial analysis of the feelings, can be pathetic as well as humorous. The story is powerfully worked out, and we are left in doubt till the last as to the denouement."—Times.
"An extremely interesting and well-written story."—Scotsman.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.;
And of all Booksellers.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 19, 1891.

No. 1011, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscripts.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

"TEXTS AND STUDIES, CONTRIBUTIONS TO BIBLICAL AND PATRISTIC LITERATURE." Edited by J. A. Robinson. Vol. I., No. 1, The Apology of Aristides. Edited and Translated by J. Rendel Harris. With an Appendix by J. A. Robinson. (Cambridge: University Press.)

THIS is the first of a projected series of "Biblical and Patristic Studies" which Cambridge scholars have initiated, in, we may presume, a spirit of friendly and learned rivalry with the "Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica" of the sister university. The series commences with an admirable edition of the hitherto missing Apology of Aristides, and is auspiciously signalled by some literary discoveries of undeniable interest and importance.

Coupled with the similar work of Quadratus, the Apology of Aristides had long been known by fame to patristic scholars. Eusebius and Jerome both mention the work, and give a few indications of its character and some scanty gleanings of tradition as to its author; but "until recent times"—to quote Mr. Rendel Harris—

"all that could be said on the subject of these lost Apologies was that we had Eusebian tradition for their existence, Eusebian authority for their date, and a Eusebian extract from one of them as a specimen of sub-apostolic defence—a mere brick from a vanished house."

During the last two centuries various reports have been current as to the existence of Aristides' Apology in different monastic libraries, e.g., in that of the Monastery of Mount Pentelicus and at Mount Athos; but, as in the case of so many more of the lost works of antiquity accredited to the imperfectly investigated stores of ancient monastic libraries, the reports were not followed by the actual discovery of the missing book.

Some time ago, however, the Armenians of the Lazarist Monastery at Venice published an Armenian translation of the opening chapters of the lost Apology of Aristides. The fragment was received with incredulity by some critics, notably by M. Renan, but may now—especially in view of the corroboration of more recent discoveries—be held to have established its claims to genuineness. This was followed in 1889 by a discovery of still greater importance—viz., a Syriac version of the entire missing Apology. The discovery was made by Mr. Rendel Harris in a volume of Syriac extracts preserved in the library of the convent of St. Catherine upon Mount Sinai; and the fortunate discoverer gives us a description of the MS., as well as a translation with notes of this Syriac recension.

"It never rains but it pours" is an apophthegm which has been found applicable to more than one conjuncture of literary events, and is signally appropriate to the succession of brilliant discoveries of which the Apology of Aristides has been the object. In addition to the Armenian fragment and the Syriac translation, Mr. Robinson—the general editor of "Texts and Studies"—chanced to light upon what would seem to be the original Greek text of Aristides' work. This discovery was at once so curious and striking that I must allow Mr. Robinson to narrate it in his own words:—

"While Mr. Harris was passing the preceding pages through the press, he kindly allowed me to read the proof-sheets of his translation of the Syriac. Shortly afterwards, as I was turning over Latin Passions at Vienna, in a fruitless search for a lost MS. of the Passion of St. Perpetua, I happened to be reading portions of the Latin Version of the 'Life of Barlaam and Josaphat,' and presently I stumbled across words which recalled the manner and the thought of Aristides. Turning back to the beginning of a long speech I found the words, 'Ego, rex, providentia Dei veni in mundum; et considerans celum et terram, mare et solem et lunam, et cetera, admiratus sum ornatum eorum.' The Greek text of Barlaam and Josaphat is printed in Migne's edition of the works of St. John of Damascus; and it was not long before I was reading the actual words of the Apologist himself, 'Ἐγώ, βασιλεὺς, προοίσι θεοῦ ἦλθον εἰς τὸν κόσμον, κ.τ.λ.'"

In short, Mr. Robinson found that the Greek speech in the well-known mediaeval legend of Barlaam and Josaphat was the long lost original text, probably somewhat curtailed, of the Apology of Aristides. The importance, from the standpoint of general literature, as well as from that of ecclesiastical history, of this remarkable "find" needs no emphasising. In respect of the latter we now possess a Greek as well as a Syriac version of Aristides' work, and are therefore in a position to form a critical estimate of its character and importance.

In arriving at this estimate every reader of the work will be compelled to acknowledge his obligations to the critical labours of Messrs. Rendel Harris and Robinson. The textual discoveries they made are of such intrinsic importance that if they had allowed them to stand by themselves—to tell their own story—no one could have blamed them; but they have added to their texts such an extensive apparatus criticus of notes, dissertations, and indices as almost to have exhausted every point of interest which the Apology of Aristides could properly claim. At the same time, no thoughtful reader could possibly doubt whether the work was worth the varied erudition and critical ability expended on its elucidation. On the question of date, e.g., we have an elaborate discussion, tending to show that the Hadrianic date adopted by Eusebius is probably wrong, and that the work must be referred to the reign of Antoninus Pius—"die Blüthezeit der Christlichen Apologetik" as Hagenbach calls it. Again, in reference to Jerome's statement that Justin Martyr imitated Aristides, we have a comparison of parallel passages showing that the imitation has no greater basis of support than a few verbal similarities. But the most valuable features in the elucidatory portion of the book are the careful comparisons instituted between the Apology of Aristides and other Christian writings of the same period, e.g., the Didache and "the Preaching of Peter," as well as its bearing on the Canon. Here the learned editors, though they cannot be said to have discovered, have helped to confirm, the historical truth of that aspect of Christian thought and teaching which we owe to the Didache. They have shown that the Apology of Aristides bears witness to an age when the Gospels, as we have them, were as yet unwritten,* when—as in the Didache—the spirit and tendency of the New Testament, rather than its actual words, constituted the regulative principle of Christians (cf., p. 84); when the worship and doctrine of the various churches were determined primarily by their own special needs or traditions; when Jewish rites and modes of thought continued to be mingled with those of Christianity (cf., p. 13); when, in short, the notion of a Christian church as an organised whole, with distinctly defined orders of ministers and a generally received code of beliefs and usages, was as yet in a condition of fluctuating vagueness; when even the Eucharist—the most primitive and authoritative of Christian rites—was not differentiated either by special times or elements from ordinary sacred meals—all of which were in fact eucharistical (pp. 49 and 94). As a rule, our editors have shown themselves keenly alive to this pre-ecclesiastical aspect of Christianity, and to the renewed corroboration it has received from the Apology of Aristides, but with one notable exception: they evince too great an eagerness to extort from a few broken sentences—ostensibly setting forth the historical traditions of Christians—the elements of a definitive Symbolum Fidei, after the form of the Apostles' Creed. As several of the articles thus formulated are confessedly supposititious, we must regret that they have in this particular instance seen fit to depart from the critical and impartial attitude which they are generally careful to maintain.

With reference to the substance of the Apology, and bearing in mind that it was submitted by a philosopher of Athens to one of the most cultured of the later Roman emperors, it cannot be said that its ratiocination is of the most convincing kind. This, e.g., is Aristides' argument against sun-worship. (It may be compared in respect of philosophic scope with the Emperor Julian's fourth oration "in praise of the Sovereign Sun"):

"So too those have erred who have thought concerning the Sun that he is God. For lo! we see him that by the necessity of another he is moved and turned, and runs his course; and he proceeds from degree to degree, rising and setting every day in order that he may warm the shoots of plants and shrubs, and may bring forth in the air, which is mingled with him, every herb which is on the earth. And in calculation the sun has a part with the rest of the stars in his course, and although he is one in his nature, he is mixed with many parts according to the advantage of the needs of men; and that not according to his own will, but according to the will of Him that ruleth him. Wherefore, it is not possible that the Sun should be God, but a work of God; and in like manner also the moon and stars."

* The single reference to a written Gospel (p. 82) is too vague to support any definite conclusion.

But the chapter of all others in the Apology of Aristides which is most interesting and important is what its editors have termed the Christological passage. I must find room for a few extracts in order that my readers may compare it with the parallel passages of the Didache. The insistence on ethical duties rather than on dogmatic beliefs is very strongly marked:

"Now the Christians, O King, by going about and seeking have found the truth, and as we have comprehended from their writings they are nearer to the truth and to the exact knowledge than the rest of the peoples. For they know and believe in God the maker of heaven and earth in whom are all things and from whom are all things. He who has no other God as his fellow; from whom they have received those commandments which they have engraved on their minds, which they keep in the hope and expectation of the world to come; so that on this account they do not commit adultery nor fornication, they do not bear false witness, they do not deny a deposit nor covet what is not theirs. They honour father and mother; they do good to those who are their neighbours, and when they are judges they judge uprightly; and they do not worship idols in the form of man, and whatever they do not wish that others should do to them they do not practise towards anyone; and they do not eat of the meats of idol sacrifices, for they are undefiled; and those who grieve them they comfort and make their friends; and they do good to their enemies; and their wives, O King, are pure as virgins, and their daughters modest, and their men abstain from all unlawful wedlock and from all impurity in the hope of the recompense that is to come in another world. But as for their servants or handmaids, or their children, if any of them have any, they persuade them to become Christians for the love that they have towards them, and when they have become so they call them without distinction brethren."

I have no room to insist on the importance of this early account of early Christian teaching and practice, or to dwell on the significance, not only of what it contains, but of what it omits. I have only to commend to the attention of all readers interested in the early history of Christianity and the genesis of the Christian church this very remarkable document, the importance of which it seems hardly possible to exaggerate. The editors have done their work, on the whole, in a manner deserving of all praise; and if future "Texts and Studies" prove to be distinguished by similar critical insight and erudite industry—that they should be signalised by such brilliant discoveries is, of course, an impossibility—the series should command the support of all who are interested in biblical and patristic literature, whether in England or on the continent.

JOHN OWEN.

GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.—Balladen und Romanzen. Selected and arranged, with Notes, &c., by C. A. Buchheim. (Macmillans.)

PROF. BUCHHEIM has added to the "Golden Treasury Series" a selection from the German ballad-literature, which fully deserves to be regarded as a companion volume to the Deutsche Lyrik which he published in the same series several years ago. The latter has long been a favourite with students and lovers of German poetry in the form in which it attained its most perfect development; and the present volume will earn an equal success from its fulness, the taste with which the selection has been made, and its useful though brief commentary.

The Englishman is entitled to look upon the German ballad-literature with especial interest, because it is a poetic form of modern growth, of which the appearance of Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry in 1765 was the primum mobile. That book inspired the unhappy Bürger with his "Lenore," which has made the round of the whole wide world, and from which Prof. Buchheim dates "the birth of the modern ballad in Germany"; and Percy and Bürger together inspired the contemporary Herder and Goethe. The collection before us contains nothing of earlier date than productions of these authors; and herein the editor shows a wise discrimination. Some of the older ballads, indeed, show power and feeling, as

"Es waren zwei Edelkönigskinder Die hatten einander so lieb;"

or "das jüngste Schwesterlein,"

"Ich will keinen Weck, ich will keinen Wein, Will nur ein kleines Sargelein;"

but there is none among them which for form can be worthily placed with the polished work of the classic poets of the last century. In the ballad proper—that is to say, in the narrative poem which, in shorter form, approaches the epic—Bürger in "Lenore" and "der wilde Jäger," Schiller in his legends from the Greek, Uhland in "Klein Roland" and "das Schloz am Meere," Heine in the "Wallfahrt nach Kevlar" or "Edith Schwanenhals," have reached the highest point of excellence. Goethe, on the other hand, is at his best in the Romanze, if by this word we are to understand a poem of feeling rather than of action—a poem leaning to the lyric side, such as "der Erlkönig," or "der König in Thule," or the exquisite "Veilchen," which trodden by the Liebchen's foot yet di's happy:

"Und sterb' ich denn, so sterb' ich doch
Durch sie, durch sie,
Zu ihren Füßen doch."

Uhland and Heine, again, can claim the crown in both of these forms of poetry.

It is somewhat remarkable to observe in how many instances several poets have taken up the same subject. Thus the Lorelei, who was invented by C. Brentano in this century, has been treated also by Heine and Immanuel. Heine and Uhland have both sung of Bertran de Born. O. Ludwig has sung "das Lied von der Bernauerin," who had already been immortalised in an old ballad of the pre-Bürger epoch. This repeated selection of a subject is probably mainly due to the comparative youthfulness of the German ballad-literature.

Prof. Buchheim seems to have forgotten no poet of the highest excellence, though room might perhaps have been found for a specimen of Fouqué, and, still more, of Arndt. On the other hand, he has given a rich selection of ballads by writers whose names are usually associated with other forms of literature, and by poets of the present day—a wise plan, in that it reveals to us authors who are as yet little known beyond their own country.

The editor's brief notes, and especially his introductory sketch of the Ballad in Germany, will be found very instructive.

FRANK T. LAWRENCE.

Fortification. By Major G. Sydenham Clarke. (John Murray.)

THE main object of this work is to explode "formulas" in one great department of the military art. Fortification has always fallen into the hands of men of "science," and not of practical soldiers; and when ideas have been expressed in stone—costly structures intended to last for centuries—these naturally tend to become obsolete. Major Clarke has laboured to oppose hard facts to theories of fortification and its work in the past; and the present is a fitting time for his studies, for fortification is in a state of transition, by reason of the immense changes caused by the material inventions of the age. His book, however, is not destructive only: it constructs a scheme of fortification of its own; and it contains a series of chapters on coast defences, elaborated carefully by the industrious author. Taken as a whole, it is an extremely able treatise: it shows profound study, mature reflection, and, most distinctly, sound sense and judgment; the information it abounds in is well-digested; and it deals intelligently with the problems of an abstruse subject. We do not agree, in all respects, with Major Clarke in his historical summaries; and probably his theories may be open to question on the part of professional experts. But he has certainly written an excellent book on a part of the art of war not enough explored, and always liable to be obscured by pedantry; and though this volume, it is likely, will not be popular, it is of great value to the student of war. The plans and illustrations are copious and good; but a glossary of terms ought to have been added: the general reader has no conception of the meaning of "caponniers" and "fausse braises," and he cannot thread a maze of "covered ways" and "escarps."

Major Clarke reviews, in the first instance, the subject of permanent fortification on land. It is singular, he remarks, that the master of the art, chiefly known for his contributions to the defence, was really the one who achieved most in furthering the attack of strong places. But ravelins and bastions attract the eye, and endure; siege batteries disappear, when they have done their work; and Europe inclined, for a century and a half, before the defensive genius of Vauban. Major Clarke under-estimates the illustrious Frenchman; but he was less original than Montalembert, and Carnot, who did not, however, supplant him; and the supposed perfection of his system was largely due to the imagination of experts, who took delight in its mathematical niceties and engineering subtlety. It passed into an axiom in the eighteenth century, that even the best fortresses of the type of Vauban cannot resist an attack for a length of time; and Major Clarke has shown that the famous sieges of the great war of the Spanish Succession attained their object within a few weeks. The reason was partly due to the fact that Vauban's method of attack overcame the defence—but this is omitted by Major Clarke; it may be also ascribed, in part, to the circumstance that in the military, as in the naval art, the eighteenth century was an era of routine, when that which was usual was deemed certain. Until the epoch of the French Revolutionary wars it had become a proverb that a fortress must fall if invested; but Napoleon, though the sieges of his time were few, insisted that the defence must stand an assault; and the resistance of Saragossa, and other places, would have amazed generals of the days of Marlborough and Saxe. Major Clarke is hardly correct in hinting that Torres Vedras opened a new era; the lines were really a recurrence to the well-known system adopted towards the close of the seventeenth century, for the defence of extensive tracts of frontier, and continued by Daun and even by Frederick; and it was less the conception of them that does honour to the Duke, than the heroic attitude of the great soldier, who confronted, in this way, the might of Napoleon. Until the close of the great war with France, the attack was still considered superior to the defence; and permanent fortification was held to be at best an obstacle that must yield. The sieges, however, of the Turkish war of 1828-9 told the other way; and a new age really began with the great sieges of Sebastopol and Kars in 1854-5. These sieges were in the day of the old artillery; and, considered as a whole, the defence triumphed, and prevailed decisively over the attack. But—and this is the point to be borne in mind—the success that was gained was not due to permanent fortification, or any system; it was to be ascribed to works improvised on the spot by a man of genius, and an accomplished soldier; it was the result not of "science" devised on a desk, but of what may be called siege tactics intelligently applied.

This book hardly explains, with sufficient clearness, why mere earthworks, hastily designed and raised, have proved better defences than long constructed fortresses. In the first place, considerable parts of Vauban's places were the mere gimcrack of the engineer; that intricate display of flanks and salients, of tenailles, lunettes, and devices of the kind, were often formidable on paper only, as the illustrious Villars said, even in his time. In the next place, fortresses of the eighteenth century, as was especially seen in the Peninsular War, were not able to resist even the old ordnance; they yielded to the heavy smooth-bores of the Napoleonic era. But the most important reason was certainly this: the regular fortress is a known obstacle; the assailant can calculate how to reduce it; but improvised earthworks operate as a surprise; made suddenly they smite the besiegers' lines, rake his trenches, ravage and disconcert his troops; they have the advantage of an attack in flank and rear, infinitely superior to a frontal attack. Sebastopol, no doubt, is an exceptional case; a man of rare gifts conducted the defence, and a great arsenal yielded guns without stint; but the Mamelon and Todleben's irregular works defeated the allies for many months; and no regular works have accomplished as much. The moral is not that fortification of a permanent kind is to be eschewed; it is that permanent fortification, on worn-out systems, is not as good as less ambitious defences may be, and requires a complete reform in this age. The epoch of rifled cannon and of huge projectiles has come into existence since 1854-5; and it was, at first, supposed that the defensive power of fortresses would be immensely diminished. The contrary, however, has been plainly the case. It was forgotten that the defence might have as powerful guns as the attack, in the great mass of instances; and that it was much aided by modern small arms; and the failure of fortresses in recent wars may usually be traced to the essential defects of permanent fortification on the old lines. No doubt a few small places were shelled, and made to yield, in a few hours, in the war of 1870; but, taken as a whole, the fortresses of France resisted quite as long as in the days of Marlborough; and Paris completely baffled the enemy, and succumbed not to attack, but to the stress of famine. The experiences, too, of the American War of 1861-65 are in the same direction.

Apart from the question, foreign to this work, of the strategic value of strong places under the peculiar conditions of modern war, it has been now established that the attack of fortresses does not necessarily master the defence; that permanent fortification of the eighteenth century has become obsolete, and is of little use; and that it may be inferior to extempore works, constructed, for the occasion, by capable men. This leads us to consider the important subject, what permanent fortification ought to be; for it is idle to suppose that it could not be made more formidable than improvised defences. Major Clarke summarily condemns the whole system of structures and forts advocated by the school of which Brialmon is perhaps the leader. He considers them certain to prove costly failures. His scheme of permanent fortification on land is essentially a return to the great entrenched lines, of which Torres Vedras is the best known specimen, but brought up to the standard and the requirements of the age. Given a site chosen for strategic purposes, he would construct a series of powerfully armed redoubts, connected by field works, and not only small, but artificially screened from the view of the enemy; he would extend these over a prolonged space; and these should be the essential elements of a passive defence. But the defence should be active as long as possible; with this object, an artillery force and large bodies of troops should hold positions beyond the redoubts, to manoeuvre and fight; and the lines should be connected by roads and railways, to make the communications of each part, and of the whole, easy. A huge entrenched camp, constructed upon these principles, would, doubtless, be a most important obstacle: very probably it could defy an assault; it might, perhaps, change the result of a campaign; it certainly would delay an invasion; and it may prove to be the true type and model of permanent fortification on land, in war, though the question will still remain, whether in most circumstances it could not be turned, or masked, and thus rendered useless, except so far as it might detain an enemy—the real object, we should remark, of Vauban, and of every engineer who has laboured in this field.

Major Clarke adds a dissertation on coast defences, but we have no space left to comment upon it. The conditions of the problem, he says with truth, have completely changed since the great war with France; ships cannot now cope with shore batteries; and he has clearly shown, after a careful inquiry, that the armour-clad ships of every navy are unfit to contend with good coast defences. His ideal of fortification of this kind resembles that which he has before described; but its works must necessarily be more contracted; and he has dwelt especially on the guns required to arm them. Major Clarke evidently thinks that our coast defences, constructed after the siege of Sebastopol to protect our arsenals, are ill-designed; but he does not disclose what ought to be kept a secret. Yet the subject is not, perhaps, of supreme importance: the power of England to defend her shores depends upon her command of the sea; and were this lost or impaired, no coast defences could probably long avert a disaster.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

French Fiction of To-day. By Mme. M. S. Van de Velde. In 2 vols. (Trischler.)

MME. VAN DE VELDE has written a book which is full of interest, ignorance, and information. Those who have little or no acquaintance with the work of contemporary French novelists will learn a great deal from her pages. She has really read the authors about whom she writes, and she writes about Zola, Daudet, Maupassant, Bourget, Cherbuliez, Theuriet, and Pierre Loti, among other writers who are certainly of importance, who are quite well known in this country by name, but (with the exception of the first two) often by name only. She also writes about Gustave Droz, Ludovic Halévy, "Gyp," and others, who, though of much less importance, are both interesting in themselves, and typical of much that is characteristically French and modern. She writes, too, about persons like Georges Ohnet, who, though of no importance whatever to the critic or the student of literature, are most valuable from the purely historical point of view, as showing—a point which Emile Hennequin insisted upon in his theory of scientific criticism—the qualities of the public which buys the immense editions.

Mme. Van de Velde has a certain knack of stringing together her facts and opinions in a distinctly readable way. She tells us about authors and their books and their houses and their friends, just like an intelligent woman with whom one is talking about literary people. Living in Paris, knowing the men she is writing about, she is able to give us a great many personal details which are very satisfactory to inquisitive minds. Then she has none of that insularity which is so provoking in the ordinary Englishman who writes about foreign affairs. She is remarkably free from prudishness, and also from the foolish affectations of "emancipated women." She neither shrieks nor swaggers; she writes of literature as literature, not ignoring the question of morality in connexion with works of art, but not reducing art to the level of a treatise on morality. According to her lights she is always an honest critic.

To write, however, a really good book, it is not enough to be honest and open-minded. One's suspicion is aroused by the first two sentences of the preface.

"For many years eminent men of letters in France have exhaustively reviewed contemporary English and American fiction in such first-class magazines as La Revue des Deux Mondes, La Nouvelle Revue, and others equally well known. Copious extracts, sometimes complete translations, have made people across the Channel familiar with the works of E. Yates, Wilkie Collins, G. Eliot, Julia Kavanagh, T. Hardy, Bret Harte, G. Meredith, Whyte Melville, Henry James, William Black, Rhoda Broughton, T. B. Aldrich, and a host of others."

Now this is scarcely the list which a competent English critic would make of the typical English and American novelists of the day, nor are the names arranged in precisely the order of merit or of demerit. Then, further, does Mme. Van de Velde really suppose that the average Frenchman, or even the highly cultured Frenchman, has ever so much as heard the names of Whyte Melville or Julia Kavanagh? I should be surprised if he had heard more than the name of even George Meredith. Passing on, I come to another significant and suspicious sentence on p. 7:

"Our descendants will be able, by perusing Zola, Delpit, Daudet, Maupassant, Catulle Mendès, and their contemporaries, to reconstruct our epoch, to form a just idea of our generation."

Zola, Delpit, Daudet! This recalls to me a conversation I had not long since in France with a lady who was more than ordinarily acquainted with contemporary English literature. We had been talking of Meredith, of Hardy, of Henry James: "And Phillips, is there not Phillips?" she said, and she referred me to the Tauchnitz immortality of As in a Looking-glass.

After reading the two sentences I have quoted, I was not surprised to find that Mme. Van de Velde's sense of proportion in regard to the authors she discusses is somewhat peculiar. Chapter V. deals with Georges Ohnet and Hector Malot. It covers forty pages, or exactly twice the space devoted to Guy de Maupassant. The analysis of M. Ohnet's works—"It is not likely that La Grande Marnière or Lise Fleuron will live in the future as classical representative French novels," the author does confess—ends thus:

"In summing up George [sic] Ohnet's qualifications as a writer of fiction, the impartial judgment must be that his novels are interesting and attractive to the majority of those who habitually read light literature, that women especially delight in them, with the consciousness that their partiality is one which they can openly confess, while at the same time they satisfy a perfectly avowable aspiration towards sentiment and idealised love."

What this astonishing sentence really implies is this, that M. Ohnet has certain qualities of an unliterary kind which bring him a large number of readers. This is perfectly true; but it might have been said (without anything about "avowable aspiration" and "idealised love"), and so the matter should have both begun and ended. There is really nothing more to say. Why then give us all these pages, all this analysis? In the latter part of the chapter, six of the pages allotted to M. Hector Malot are taken up with Vices Français, a story which has no importance beyond the fact that it is a version of the Dilke case. Mme. van de Velde herself sums up thus:

"When Hector Malot lent his pen to such a cause in the new departure of Vices Français, he added nothing to his reputation as a man of letters."

Why then discuss the matter? Worse still, far worse, so bad indeed that the author feels obliged to apologise, is the sixteen-page notice of a phantasm like "Ary Eclair," the pseudonymous and malicious author of Le Roi de Thessalie, which no one ever supposed to have literary merit. The tail end of the chapter is given to Mme. Adam, who is not, properly speaking, a novelist, and so need have no place in the book at all. Once brought into the mixed company of these two volumes, she should have had the place deserved by the most distinguished woman of contemporary France.

Chapter iv. of vol. ii. deals with Henri Lavedan and Catulle Mendès—a curious combination—and just about three times as much space is given to the former as to the latter. M. Lavedan has written some pretty tales of no very great consequence, and there is no harm in saying a good word for him, especially as his tales are virtuous; but conceive the sensations of the abonné of La Vie Parisienne, who chances to open one of these brilliant blue volumes and finds twenty-one pages all about Manchecourt! As for the notice of M. Mendès, it is really well done on the whole, with a singular freedom from prejudice; but it contains a piece of side-criticism which is more utterly and incredibly absurd than anything else in the book. In speaking of Catulle Mendès Mme. Van de Velde says:—

"Paul Hervieu and J. H. Rosny follow him closely, not because they servilely copy him, but on account of a same capacity for investing ideas with the magic of words."

Without taking M. Paul Hervieu into consideration, imagine the idea of M. Rosny having any relation whatever with M. Mendès, least of all in regard to the "magic of words"! It would be about as reasonable to say that Mr. Frank Danby's clever realistic novel, A Babe in Bohemia, showed the special influence of Mr. Pater. M. Rosny is an extremely able writer, who will probably never really make his mark in France, simply because he is utterly lacking in that "capacity for investing ideas with the magic of words" which M. Catulle Mendès possesses to such a remarkable degree.

If this remark about M. Rosny touches the acme of absurdity, the meagre five-page notice of the Brothers de Goncourt reaches the height of injustice. In many ways the two most important figures in modern French prose, Mme. Van de Velde merely "finds it impossible to pass [them] absolutely without mention." This is all she says about the novels which M. Edmond de Goncourt has written since the death of his brother:

"La Faustine [sic], the story of an actress, and Chérie are both weak and dull; Les Frères Zemgano [sic] alone retain some of the vitality which characterised Renée Maupérin [sic], whose illness and death occupy one third of the book." All one can say of this farrago of nonsense is that a person capable of writing such a sentence could alone be capable of forming such an opinion. ARTHUR SYMONS.

Some Distinguished Indian Women. By Mrs. E. F. Chapman. (W. H. Allen.)

THERE is, it may be safely said, no civilised society in which women have had a worse time than that of the Hindus. In spite of all that the enthusiastic Colonel Tod has said of Rajput chivalry, the sense of respect for maternity, and of pity and tenderness for the infirm, belongs not to the natural man, and is not evolved by Oriental breeding. It may be that the little book whose title appears above may seem to throw a certain amount of illustrative light on the causes of this; for it confirms the common remark that Hindu women, and their Muslim sisters also, alike in virtue and in mental force, have always proved formidable competitors to the stronger sex. It is, therefore, perhaps as much to instinctive dread of female merit as to a mere spirit of domineering that we must attribute the systematic oppression, as well as repression, with which Hindu women have long been treated. But the most galling part of the yoke seems to be the pretence of contempt with which it is pressed down upon the necks of the sufferers. During her husband's lifetime the Hindu woman is apparently regarded as an objectionable animal, and only tolerated as one endures a necessary evil. When he dies she receives—so one of them has said—"the abuse and hatred of the community as the greatest criminal upon whom Heaven's judgment has been pronounced." Mrs. Chapman is of opinion that it will take years of education and experience to counteract in the minds of average Hindus the belief of their superiority to women. The student of history—aided by her—will hope for better things. Many instances are on record in which Hindu women have shown themselves superior to the average men and even to the heroes of their age and country. It has been the object of Mrs. Chapman, in the pretty little book under notice, to show that this is by no means a thing of the past; and to cite names of Hindu ladies of our own time worthy to be named with those of Sita and Sakuntala; of the Rani Durgavati of Mandla; and of Rupmati, the Malwa Lucretia, whose poems have lived three hundred years.

In a pleasant Introduction the author generalises the subject and mentions several Hindu ladies who are taking a prominent part in society. In the body of her work she gives special accounts of five more—two being Maratha, two Bengali, and one Parsi—by whom the cause has been and still is daily advanced. Anandabai, the female physician, has indeed passed away, and one of the Bengali ladies has sunk into a too early grave; but the work of the one and the well-earned fame of the other remain as a call to survivors, while they score the rocks of time with the high-water mark of modern Indian intellect. That the daughter of a Calcutta Babu should, before she was of age, have produced a quantity of really good English verse and prose, good translations of Hugo, and a passable novel of French life, seems enough to throw even the brilliant Marie Bashkirtseff into a certain degree of shade. Of the remaining "distinguished women" one is a princess, whose appearance in England was one of the events of the jubilee year; and two are eminent for an energy and learning that would have been remarkable in any sex, age, or country.

In concluding, let us respectfully offer one word of warning, which enthusiastic ladies may repel as the suggestion of unregenerate man, but which deserves reconsideration from the points of view afforded alike by honour and prudence. The reformers of Indian social life should be careful not to strain their opportunities. It is a good thing that the secluded women of the East should have the medical attendance of skilled female practitioners; but it is not so well if under this guise the patients are persuaded to desert their homes and abandon their national creeds. What would the British husband think of a Hindu who should abuse his hospitality by endeavouring to take his wife and daughters to live at Benares in the practice of polygamy and the worship of idols? Yet that would only be a fair retaliation if our fair medical missionaries are to be allowed to baptize while they bathe, and write their prescriptions on the fly-leaf of a tract. Anandabai abandoned her husband, went to the United States, became a Christian, graduated as a physician, and died before she was thirty. One cannot but think of Lord Houghton's lines about "a man's best things," and ask if it does not hold good of woman also. Nothing could have a more blighting effect upon the cause of social reform in India than a belief that Zenana-visiting led women to neglect their homes. Yet we trace in this book some tendency towards a course of conduct which might make the Hindus suppose that the dominant class treated them dishonourably; and nothing could more cause the enemy to blaspheme.

H. G. KEENE.

A GERMAN HISTORY OF SPAIN IN THE FOURTEENTH CENTURY.

Geschichte Spaniens, vornehmlich im 14. Jahrhundert. Von Dr. Friedrich Wilhelm Schirrmacher. (Gotha.)

DR. SCHIRRMACHER has followed up his Geschichte Castiliens im 12. und 13. Jahrhundert (see ACADEMY, Vol. XX., p. 487, December 31, 1881) with an equally interesting volume on the fourteenth century—beginning from the reign of Pedro III. of Aragon, 1276, down to the death of Pedro the Cruel, March 13, 1369.

The work is distinguished by all the good qualities of its predecessor. The period treated of is even better adapted to bring out the merits of Dr. Schirrmacher's style and method. The epoch is that of the full efflorescence of chivalry, when its maxims were really a power in the world, and the conduct of kings and nobles was more or less influenced by its conventional code of honour. The age is peculiarly suited to the picturesque historian; the age of the Sicilian Vespers, of the battles of the Salado, of Cressy, Poitiers, and Navarette, of the life of the Black Prince, and of Don Pedro of Castille himself, with the strange vicissitudes of his life and his tragic end. These and other events, as far as they touch on Spanish history, are clearly and forcibly depicted by Dr. Schirrmacher. If we place him among the picturesque, instead of among the philosophic historians, it is only because, though he tells, and tells well, the story of events, he seldom pauses to trace them to their hidden causes. He is accurate as well as picturesque; he writes directly from the best Spanish, Catalan, Arabic, French, and English, contemporary sources; he is familiar with the proceedings of the Cortes; he weighs the worth of each writer, and of each class of evidence, and forms his own opinion thereon. The only marks of carelessness that we have discovered are the too frequent misprints in the Latin and Spanish of the notes, especially in the appendices; but this is comparatively a trifling matter. Here and there a document is overlooked which might have added a still brighter colour to his narrative—e.g., in the matter of the duel between Charles of Anjou and Pedro III., he seems to be unaware that Don Pedro did actually go to Bordeaux in the disguise of a horse-dealer, and ride round the lists at midnight, thus saving his conscience. Of Pedro the Cruel, Dr. Schirrmacher takes, on the whole, a more favourable view than do most of the older historians. He dilates upon his indulgence to his half-brothers in the early part of his reign, and maintains that Ayala's evidence in the Cronica, written at the command of Don Enrique of Trastamara, is not to be depended on; and he supports this view in an appendix by a comparison with the Abreviada, which he considers to be an early draft of the longer chronicle. He acquits Don Pedro of the murder of his queen, Doña Blanca. In a Catalan document, printed in 1888, on the proposal of a marriage between Maria de Padilla's son and an Infanta of Aragon in 1362, Don Pedro asserts that he had married Maria, not only before his marriage with Doña Blanca, but again after her death. Our author believes that all, or nearly all, the executions of Don Pedro were merited, and that the punishment was not more severe than that made legal by the Cortes of Alcalá in 1348. But, granting this, the fact still remains that these executions were done without a shadow of a trial, often when the victim had appeared in confidence before the king; that they were done by his express order, by his immediate attendants, and almost in his presence, and in haste, thus depriving them of all character and value as judicial acts.

It is unfair to require of an author more than he professes to give. He should be tried by his own standard, and can be condemned only if he fail to reach that. Dr. Schirrmacher certainly attains the former. He is for this period in German what Prescott has hitherto been in English for the reigns of Ferdinand and Isabella and of Philip II.; and there is no better history for the general reader than these. But still there are some points in the history on which our author has not perhaps sufficiently insisted. The history of Spain and of Spanish institutions is one of continually arrested development. It is impossible to say what kind of Roman-Gothic kingdom might have been formed in Spain, parallel to the Carolingian monarchy in France; but all chance of such formation on normal lines was cut short by the invasion and conquests of the Arabs. So, too, feudalism, except in parts of Catalonia, never attained its full development in Spain. It remained there in a state of arrested growth. It did not wholly assimilate, nor supersede, the older tribal clannish state of society which long remained in the north. And if thereby Spain escaped some of the worst abuses of the feudal system, if the institution of the behetria was beneficial to the lower vassals and to the labourer, this faculty of changing and choosing lords served as a cloak for treason in the case of the nobility and higher vassals of the Crown, and many of the disasters of this period were aggravated by it. So, too, the early establishment of payment to the deputies, of which the first traces appear in 1250, and the demand for which appears in the Cortes of Valladolid, 1351, led to their complete subjection to the Crown, and consequent uselessness and ultimate extinction. Matters like these are not quite sufficiently noticed; and they are perhaps purposely avoided. This history, as it stands, should be a favourite with all who love to read the story of events, told in a clear and picturesque manner, where accuracy is not sacrificed to brilliancy.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

NEW NOVELS.

Caspar Brooke's Daughter. By Adeline Sergeant. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Man's Conscience. By Avery Macalpine. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

Dorrie. By William Tirebuck. (Longmans.)

Was He Justified? By C. J. Wills. (Spencer Blackett.)

In a Canadian Canoe, &c. By Barry Pain. (Henry.)

The Haunted House in Berkeley Square. By Eddic Vredenburg. (Trischler.)

The Sandeliff Mystery. By Scott Graham. (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

A Doubting Heart. By Annie Keary. (Macmillans.)

MISS ADELINE SERGEANT is generally a pure and healthy writer, and there is much that is graceful and sympathetic in Caspar Brooke's Daughter. Brooke is a literary man who has married a woman of title. An estrangement arises soon after their union, through the mistaken jealousy of the wife. They separate, and their one child, a girl named Lesley, is sent to a French convent. The story opens when she leaves, at the age of nineteen, a tall, refined, and beautiful maiden. It has been arranged that she is to spend one year with her father, the next with her mother, and then to choose between the two. She learns from her mother the miserable story of her long separation. A very brief experience of her father convinces her that he is a man not only of deep culture but of noble instincts, and that he is not to blame for the misunderstanding with her mother. Caspar Brooke has found leisure from his writings to do a great deal towards elevating the working men and women of North London, and Lesley discovers that those among whom he has long unselfishly laboured cherish for him a deep affection and esteem. By-and-by the wife comes to divine the same facts for herself; and mainly through the happy influence of Lesley, the lives of her parents become once more united. This work lifts the veil from much that is pitiful and painful in the lot of the London poor, and it is calculated to do considerable good in eliciting a helpful sympathy with their woes. Its interest is by no means exhausted in its plot; it is a novel to ponder over.

A Man's Conscience transplants us to other scenes. Mr. Avery Macalpine shows us a young English aristocrat working as a farmer in the backwoods of America. To the horror of his worldly-minded mother he falls in love with Millicent Alastair, the lovely daughter of an uncouth and uncanny a Scot as ever went out to the Far West. The worst of it is that Godfrey Alleyne is half pledged to an English girl of his own rank, and a kinswoman, Gwendolen Alleyne. In a strait betwixt two, it is here where his conscience comes into play. Gwendolen heroically tells him to follow it, even to his marriage with her rival if it should be necessary; but Godfrey's mother, Lady Galbraith, goes out to the States, and absolutely forbids the prairie flower to dare to think of her son. A good deal of trouble ensues on all hands. Eventually, Godfrey, who succeeds to the title and estates of Galbraith, marries Gwendolen, and Milly pairs off with a parson who has been very attentive to her during her illness. The author furnishes some striking pictures of Transatlantic scenery, and also describes vividly the course of a Western storm. We like him better on this ground than when discussing social and political theories.

Mr. Tirebuck's Dorrie is an extremely touching and realistic picture of Liverpool life. It is impossible not to feel a certain sympathy with his heroine, Dorinda Holt, though her conduct on more than one occasion appears to be foolish and indiscreet. Her experiences in some of the music-hall dens and other infamous places are very powerfully told; and the book shows what a vast remedial work of a social and moral character still remains to be achieved in our large towns. The story attaching to Dorrie's birth is interesting and well wrought out. She is the illegitimate daughter of one of the wealthiest of Liverpool merchants. But her mother early put her away from her—for ever as she thought. The warning injunction, "Be sure your sin will find you out," once more holds good, however; and mother and child are brought together after the strangest vicissitudes. But they are only reunited in death, for both expire under tragical circumstances. Mr. Tirebuck writes vigorously, and his story is certainly one of profound human interest.

Whether the question asked of Mr. Wills's hero, Was He Justified? be answered in the affirmative or negative, we scarcely think the author himself was justified in the publication of his work. It is a nauseating record of lust and crime; and if—as Mr. Wills seems to indicate in his Prologue—certain qualities are transmitted by ancestors to succeeding generations, nothing decisive in this respect can be affirmed concerning the central figure of his story. Robert L'Estrange takes his beautiful young Jezebel of a wife out to sea and drowns her, when he discovers that she has been a nobleman's mistress before her marriage. But in this case the woman had actually sinned; in the case of L'Estrange's ancestor described in the Prologue, the wife had only been suspected of infidelity. Her husband starved her to death believing in her guilt; and when he afterwards discovered her innocence, he committed suicide over her remains in the family vault.

Mr. Barry Pain has a decided sense of humour, and a hearty laugh may be got out of his stories and sketches. In a Canadian Canoe consists of a series of fragmentary papers, half essay and half story. The author now and again gives utterance to a pretty conceit, as when he remarks that "Music is masculine, Art is feminine, and Poetry is their child. The baby Poetry will play with any one; but its parents observe the division of sexes. I suppose you know that Art and Music are separated now. They sometimes meet, but they never speak."

There is occasionally an American touch in his humour. For example:

"A man made himself believe that he loved Bradelby's sister, and he never got any better. He just pined away and married her. Perhaps you don't realise what that means—but you never met Bradelby's sister."

The best things in the volume are the classical burlesques grouped under the title of "The Nine Muses minus One." They are really clever and full of esprit. The author also happily hits off the man with a "cause." "He was something—one of those things that make a man want to lead a higher life, and collar most of the conversation." The whole volume is excellent fooling, with here and there a dash of wisdom. We shall be curious to see what Mr. Pain does when he deviates into sober sense.

Nothing can be said from the literary point of view for The Haunted House in Berkeley Square. It is a shilling shocker dealing with hypnotism and somnambulism, and there is one ghastly incident recorded.

We presume there is a market for such stories, otherwise they would scarcely be written and published.

A new edition has been called for of Miss Keary's beautiful story, A Doubting Heart. It was the last work of this lamented author; and it reveals all her careful and delicate workmanship, though with a distinct reminiscence of a greater writer, Jane Austen.

A cheap edition is also published of The Sandcliff Mystery, by Scott Graham. It is a well constructed story, and the mystery which attaches to the death of the Countess of Manorbier is maintained almost to the last. Apart from this tragedy, the novel is one of undoubted interest, and it is written with some skill.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME BOOKS ON SOCIAL SUBJECTS.

The English Republic. By W. J. Linton. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Kineton Parkes. (Sonnenschein.) The English Republic was issued, in varying forms, during the years 1851-55. It was one of the numerous small papers which, ever since Socialism and Parliamentary Reform were agitated, have been appearing and disappearing with astonishing rapidity. Robert Owen was responsible for several; Mr. George Jacob Holyoake has started many. It seemed necessary that not only every "ism," but every shade and variety of the "ism," should be represented in the weekly, monthly, or quarterly press. Many of these little serials have been foolish enough in both design and execution; but a few contain some of the best work of brilliant men and women, who have since distinguished themselves in literature, art, and politics. The English Republic is one of these; and, in the case of Mr. Linton, must be named this further merit, that he has never turned his back on his old principles. So far from being ashamed of what he preached when he was young, he has now expressly declared to Mr. Parkes that, "though there is much he would wish bettered in its expression, there is nothing he has written during a literary life of half a century that he would recant." Mr. Linton's character is well expressed by Mr. Parkes when he says: "His was a large nature; and the art of engraving was never a mere profession with him, but part of his life, just as was his love of liberty and of poetry." Herein we see one great secret of his success. To Mr. Linton's acuteness as a thinker the present volume is strong testimony. From the Radical standpoint, he judged well the needs of the hour when he wrote; and it is a significant fact for people who boast of "progress" that the needs of the present hour are such as to make the reprint timely. Mr. Linton's protest was largely against "Christian" Socialism, and it is at least as effective against its successor—"State" Socialism. Not that Mr. Linton is such an individualist as, say, Mr. Auberon Herbert. He believes (unless, indeed, the working of the Education Act has changed his views) in the State control of education. And the education he would advocate is not merely the reading, writing, and arithmetic which the State has for some time been trying to teach to the children of poor people, but includes for all classes "the cultivation of the moral and religious sentiment" as well as "explanations of the divine laws of duty." School Boards as at present constituted could hardly take these things in hand. Here and there in the writings is extravagance of statement, for example, where Mr. Linton speaks of Foucault as one who "boldly offers to be pander to all and any of the lusts of man." Such instances are, however, more rare in Mr. Linton's writings than in the writings of most propagandists. His level is usually higher. For example:

"Why want you freedom for yourself? As a mere personal gain? Nay, but as the ground in which you may grow to your fullest height of uprightest manhood" (p. 117).

"Swindling is a shabbier sort of stealing" (p. 14).

"Equality and freedom are but means, not ends; their true significance the unchecked opportunity of growth" (p. 201).

"There is yet work and worth before us" (p. 201).

These are sentiments worthy of Mazzini—his friend and a contributor to the English Republic. The definition of liberty as "the unchecked opportunity for growth" should stand with the often quoted definitions of John Stuart Mill and Herbert Spencer. Mr. Parkes has been judicious in the introduction he has written and the selection he has made; but we are not sure that his arrangement is the best. We think the original order should have been followed and the division into chapters dispensed with. We hope the book will be widely circulated, for it is full of ideas which the social reformers of our day would do well to "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest."

Our Fields and Cities; or Misdirected Industry. By Scrivener C. Scrivener. (Fisher Unwin.) The measure of this book can be taken from its motto, "Latifundia perdidere Italiam ex provinciae." After chapters on the Trentside, Notts, Lincolnshire, and Hertfordshire, the author discovers that "something is terribly far wrong." Fourteen more chapters treat, among many other subjects, of socialistic distribution of the land, of tithes, foreign trade, game-preservation, markets, and the decay of agriculture. This is a tolerable list of subjects to expound in 173 pages; and, naturally, sarcasm, denunciation, and a few statistics form the chief weapons in the author's armoury. He has sneers for almost everyone, and for many institutions, for tradesmen, civilisation, farmers, clergy, churchyards, New River shareholders, horse dealers, even for the Merchant Tailors, merely because they happen to own a village school and do their duty by annually visiting it. His vigorous style may be exemplified by (p. 15) "Economy and Christianity! The one is a fraud; the other, as now presented to mankind, is cant, the second power of a lie." Again (p. 18), in some strictures on the absence of gentlemen's seats in the Fens, he says "the absence of country gentlemen means the absence of a certain amount of valetud and flunkeyism, from which, I think, the Fen districts enjoy a blessed immunity." Offences against good taste, solecisms, and bad grammar abound. Here is a bunch easily gathered—"going for it"; "summoning one of its own bishops, he of Lincoln to wit"; "Mr. Giffins" (presumably for the statist Mr. Giffen); "you and your friends"; "we and herself." For a choice specimen of Carlyles the following may be selected:

"Over the Huntingdonshire ground, where the shoe-stitchers have extended—in fact, just within the boundary of Northamptonshire—the thousand and a few working people want light in the street; they think the community at large should pay for lamps and paraffin oil, express themselves in procession of torchlights. Respectability expresses itself on horseback, quite accidentally going out on urgent business there—tries to ride through procession—fails—returns curlicolling [sic] on horse, too young for the business, sadder and wiser. Respectability ignoring its best friend has been observed of able editors in times past."

Mr. Scrivener's grievances seem to be that the land is not nationalised; as he expresses it, he wishes "for municipalisation of the land," and for all governors to be removable at the people's pleasure. Tithes are to be devoted to "reconstructing society on a co-operative basis." Usury, i.e., money at interest, is his special bugbear. There is too much pasture land ("partridge prairie" is his elegant phrase), and all arable land ought to be cultivated from twenty-one to twenty-four inches in depth. These measures do not sound very attractive. Farmers and owners of land may be trusted to know their own interests, and the imperial welfare in the opinion of most men is not served by promoting a nation of small freeholders. Denunciation, however scathing, will certainly not stop the influx of villagers into large cities. The "perfumed seigneurs who retire to the clubs and drink deeply" perhaps carry on the government of the country, as a whole, better than the removable governors of Mr. Scrivener's ideal State. But it is needless to pursue the subject. This dull, pretentious, vulgar, and profane book may be discussed with one more citation. Let asparagus eaters tremble. Under the new Municipal Republic, what will be their fate?

"Of all the vulgar sights to be seen in this vulgar 'society' of ours, I do not know one that grieves me more, as sheer snobbish vulgarity, than that of a perfumed seigneur taking what he—poor thing—thinks the delicate morsel of the purple tip from a frightful drumstick. These poor effeminate creatures have never tasted the full flavour of green asparagus, and befool themselves with the idea that, because the 'common herd' cannot afford to pay five or ten shillings for a farthing's worth of delusion, asparagus is a useful article to enable them to assume the manners of a Cromwell, while they have the brain of a baboon."

Tries at Truth. By Arnold White. (Isbister.) Mr. Arnold White says that these essays, most of which are reprinted, with alterations, from the Echo, "are not intended for experts, but for thoughtful people." This is not very kind to the experts, though no doubt they deserve it. Even some of the thoughtful people, however, may find Mr. White not very helpful, and possibly may be irritated by the calm confidence with which he expresses strong opinions on very difficult questions. The sterilisation of the unfit to be secured by changes in the marriage laws and otherwise; the necessity of refusing admittance to foreign immigrants arriving without means or baggage; the founding of small colonial settlements whither to send our surplus agricultural population; the proper direction of charity, drink, over-crowding, the poor law, and General Booth's scheme—these are some of the subjects on which Mr. White writes a series of brief, earnest, and dogmatic essays.

We may briefly notice some more volumes of Messrs. Sonnenschein's "Social Science" series. Mr. Herbert M. Thompson describes his essay, The Purse and the Conscience, as an attempt to show the connexion between economics and ethics. The principle "of applying ethical considerations to economic problems, and bringing ethical tests to bear where matters of economic conduct come in question," does in all conscience need enforcing, and Mr. Thompson indicates some important cases of its application in a very temperate argument and with well-chosen illustrations. It is a good principle, but there is some danger that it should be got hold of by the wrong people. It is a principle of action; and the less that the economist, as economist, has to do with action the better. When everybody does exactly what he ought to do, we may celebrate the union between ethics and economics. In the meantime there is every reason, on the economist's side, at any rate, for rigorously maintaining their separation.

M. LAFARGUE and others who build revolutionary structures on the doctrine of the ancient collective ownership of land would profit greatly by a study of M. Fustel de Coulanges's essay on The Origin of Property in Law, a translation of which, by Mrs. Ashley, together with an introductory chapter by Prof. W. J. Ashley on the English manor, has also appeared in Sonnenschein's Social Science series. Never did theory seem more firmly established than that of collective ownership till it was subjected to the destructive criticism of M. Fustel de Coulanges. In the course of his great work on the history of political institutions, which, though cut short by his premature death, has raised him to a chief place among modern historians, he had occasion to examine the authorities out of which Von Maurer and others constructed the famous Markgenossenschaft; and he came to the conclusion that the evidence gave not the slightest support to the theory. In this essay, which originally appeared in the Revue des Questions Historiques, he brings together the results of his inquiry. He follows Von Maurer and his disciples through their citations, and shows with an almost cruel care that they have misunderstood, misquoted, and misapplied the texts on which they have relied. He does not dispose of the collective theory. He professes that his aim is not to combat it, but merely to examine the authorities on which it has been based. Yet if the theory is to survive his attack, it will have to be restated in fresh terms, qualified in many ways, and supported by new evidence. The question is, indeed, a grave one, and M. Fustel de Coulanges has at least shown that it is yet unanswered. As Prof. Ashley says:—

"The history of the mark has served Mr. George as a basis for the contention that the common ownership of land is the only natural condition of things; to Sir Henry Maine it has suggested the precisely opposite conclusion that the whole movement of civilisation has been from common ownership to private. Such arguments are alike worthless if the mark never existed."

Crime and its Causes. By William Douglas Morrison. It is a common and comfortable theory that crime diminishes with the spread of education, and no doubt the statistics of crime seem to support the theory. Mr. Morrison shows that it is unfounded. Whether we compare the number of grave offences committed or the total number of convictions, crime has kept pace with the population during the last twenty years. And not in England only, but in France, in Germany, in the United States, and in Australia crime appears to be on the increase. This being so, there are few subjects more worthy of investigation than the causes of crime, and at the same time there are few on which it is more useless to reason without a sufficient basis of facts. Fortunately, the facts are being laboriously collected by an army of inquirers, the Italians leading the way. They have enabled Mr. Morrison to bring together many interesting reflections on the causes of the crime, and his own experience as a prison chaplain gives weight to his opinions on the treatment of criminals. Hardly any conclusions can be safely drawn from the curious facts which he quotes with regard to the relation to crime of climate and the seasons; and the evidence as to its connexion with mental and bodily disease is conflicting, and as yet not very valuable. But he is probably right in his argument that neither actual destitution nor poverty counts for much among the causes, that is, the direct causes, of crime, and that the only hope of diminishing the habitual criminal population is to lessen the number of recruits, most of whom are to be found among lads between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one. Mr. Morrison's book does not carry us very far, but it forms a very good introduction to the subject.

OF Miss Beatrice Potter's work on The Co-operative Movement in Great Britain, we can speak in terms of almost unqualified praise. Co-operation has suffered a good deal from the somewhat indiscriminate enthusiasm of its admirers, and there was much need for a calm and sympathetic account of its history, its present position, and its prospects. Such an account Miss Potter has given. She treats the movement "as one aspect of that larger movement towards an industrial democracy which has characterised the history of the British working-class of the nineteenth century." Its importance does not lie in the extent of the field which it covers. At present, indeed, it touches only an insignificant part of the national industry, and, as Miss Potter shows, there are clear limits to its indefinite extension. But its field of influence is great and indefinite. For the moral qualities necessary for a fully-developed democracy are those which the small band of co-operators have displayed; and the progress of democracy will be in proportion to the extent in which their methods and experience are introduced into the administration of the parish, the municipality, the county, and the state. Miss Potter appears to us to have looked at her subject from the right point. Certainly no better account of co-operation has yet been written.

We have before us another volume on the same subject, The Co-operative Movement To-day, by Mr. G. J. Holyoake (Methuen's series of "Social Questions of To-day"). It shows co-operation as seen by an enthusiastic co-operator, whose early enthusiasm has not been abated by the many disappointments which the movement has experienced. It contains interesting matter, but on the whole it is not a very valuable contribution to the literature of the subject. There is an insufficient sense of proportion in Mr. Holyoake's judgments, and he suffers much from the rhetorical bias.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW will be the English publishers of the new Riverside edition of the works of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, in fourteen volumes, ten for the prose and four for the poems, illustrated with four portraits. Dr. Holmes has himself annotated the poems, and has written new prefaces for several of the prose volumes, each of which will have its own index. There will be a large paper edition.

A SECOND supplement to Mr. Whitley Stokes's edition of the Anglo-Indian Codes is now in type, and will be published next month by the Clarendon Press. It contains the new Code of the Law of Guardian and Ward (Act viii. of 1890), and the legislation and judicial decisions (so far as they affect the other Codes) from May 31, 1889, to May 31, 1891.

AN elaborate History of the British Standing Army is in preparation by Col. Walton, and will be published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trübner & Co.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. have in the press a selection of Waterloo Letters, consisting of correspondence, hitherto unpublished, bearing on the operations of the 16th, 17th, and 18th of June, 1815, by officers who served in the campaign. The volume has been edited, with explanatory notes, by Major-General H. T. Siborne, and will be illustrated with numerous plans of the battlefield.

THE same publishers announce a drawing-room edition of Mr. Lewis Morris's A Vision of Saints, with twenty full-page illustrations from the old masters and from contemporary portraits.

MR. HALL CAINE's new romance, The Scapegoat—the scene of which is laid in Morocco—will be published by Mr. Heinemann, in two volumes, on Wednesday next, September 23.

THE O'Clery is preparing for press a work on The Making of Italy, which will shortly be published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trübner & Co.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNHEIN & Co. will publish next month a Browning Cyclopaedia, by Dr. Edward Berdoe, one of the most active members of the Browning Society. This volume will deal with the whole of the poet's works, and will contain a commentary on every poem, with explanations of all obscurities and difficulties arising from the historical allusions, legends, classical and archaic phraseology, and curious out-of-the-way terminology which make Browning so difficult for the ordinary reader. The book will be published simultaneously in America by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW announce a new series by representative men in the Church of England, and in the chief branches of Nonconformity, which will be published under the general title of "Preachers of the Age." The volumes will each contain some twelve or fourteen sermons or addresses specially chosen or written for the series, with photogravure portraits reproduced, in most instances, from unpublished photographs. It is also proposed to add to each volume a bibliography of all the books published by the author. The following volumes have already been arranged for:—Living Theology, by the Archbishop of Canterbury; The Conquering Christ, and other Sermons, by the Rev. Dr. Alexander Maclaren, of Manchester; Verbum Crucis, by the Bishop of Derry; Ethical Christianity, by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes; Sermons, by Canon W. J. Knox-Little, of Worcester; Light and Peace, and other Sermons, by the Rev. Dr. Henry R. Reynolds, President of Cheshunt College; Faith and Duty, and other Sermons, by the Rev. Dr. A. M. Fairbairn, Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford; Plain Words on Great Themes, by the Rev. Dr. J. Oswald Dykes, Principal of the English Presbyterian College, London; Sermons, by the Bishop of Ripon; Sermons, by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, Pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle; Agonistic Christi, by the Very Rev. Dr. William Lefroy, Dean of Norwich; and Sermons, by the Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge.

MESSRS. EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE have in the press The Law in the Prophets, by the Rev. Dr. Stanley Leathes.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE are about to publish, in connexion with Messrs. W. Hodge & Co., of Glasgow, a series of volumes of old Scottish poetry, under the title of "The Abbotsford Series." Among the contents of the first volume will be selections from Thomas the Rhymer, Blind Harry's Chronicle, Andrew of Winton, &c.

MR. ALFRED BEAVEN'S Illustrated Memorials of Old Chelsea is nearing conclusion. The complete volume will be issued by Mr. Elliot Stock during the present season.

MR. WILLIAM ANDREWS, of Hull, has nearly ready for publication Bygone Northamptonshire. It will deal with the history, famous men and women, folk-lore, legends, &c., of the county.

A NEW writer for boys, Mr. Robert Leighton, will publish this season, through Messrs. Blackie & Son, The Pilots of Pomona, a story of Orkney life. It is a narrative of adventure of a breezy healthy kind, while the primitive fisher-folks' sayings and doings make a picturesque setting to the tale.

MESSRS. ISBISTER will publish next month a cheap edition, in one volume, of Mary Howitt's Autobiography, with numerous illustrations.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE have now in the press the second edition, revised and extended, of Ethica, or the Ethics of Reason, by Scotus Novanticus (Prof. S. S. Laurie), author of "Metaphysica Nova et Vetusta."

MISS MILLARD, of Teddington, has acquired a copy of Matthew Arnold's Rugby prize poem, Alaric at Rome, of which she believes that only one other copy is known to exist—that described a little while ago by Mr. Edmund Gosse.

THE French Minister of Public Instruction has just given the title of Officier d'Académie to three members of the National Society of French Teachers in England: Prof. H. Lallemand, of University College; M. A. Dupuis, of King's College; and Mme. E. Veltz, head mistress of Essex House School, Woodyard Green, Essex.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE third number of the Economical Journal, to be published at the end of this week, will contain several papers dealing with questions of the day. Mr. John Rae writes about the evidence that has already been taken by the Labour Commission, and also about the eight hours day in Australia; Mr. John Macdonell examines the Acts for the regulation of railway rates, suggesting that all parliamentary interference should be reduced to a minimum; Mr. W. H. Bishop takes a very optimistic view of the economical future of Argentina; and Mr. John R. Martin discusses recent changes in our banking system. Among other articles we may mention—"Land Revenue in Madras," by Mr. H. St. A. Goodrich; "Women's Work in Leeds," by Miss Collet; "The Rehabilitation of Ricardo," in the form of a review of Prof. Alfred Marshall's recent book, by Prof. W. J. Ashley; and a summary of contributions to economic history in Germany during the last six years, by Prof. W. Hasbach.

WE understand that a poem of some length, by Mr. Arthur L. Salmon, will appear in Blackwood's Magazine, entitled "A Monk of Rouen."

THE October number of Good Words contains an illustrated article on "Cowper and his Localities"; and in a paper entitled "Instances of English Thrift," Canon Blackley points out that in almost every instance which came under his notice secrecy was a concomitant of thrift.

THE number of Cassell's Saturday Journal, to be published on September 23, will form the commencement of a new volume. It will contain the opening chapters of two new serial stories of to-day, entitled "Tracked to Doom," by "Dick Donovan," and "An Excellent Knave," by J. Fitzgerald Molloy. Among the other contents of this number will be a personal sketch of Mr. J. R. Robinson, of the Daily News (forming the first of a series of articles on "Editors of To-day"); "Parisian Cafés and their Frequenters"; "The Tell-Tale Hand," a complete story by Richard Dowling; "All for All," a new feature, containing a variety of entertaining notes; and humorous illustrations by Frederick Barnard and J. F. Sullivan, &c.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Antiquary for September is a very good number. Mr. Robert Steele contributes an article on alchemy in England which well repays the reader. Alchemy has got a bad name with shallow people on account of the silly superstitions and groundless beliefs with which it was connected; but it must not be forgotten that the alchemists were the scientific chemists of the middle ages, and that to their fantastic researches we owe much of our knowledge of the properties of inorganic substances. Dr. Barber's paper on surnames is amusing, but his theories must be accepted with caution. It is possible that this or that modern name may have reached us from remote Norse or Frisic antiquity; but every student of our records knows that in the Norman time, except in some rare instances, men did not bear hereditary surnames. When these useful distinctions arose, the old tongues had become forgotten. The suggestion that Powell is connected with the name of the apostle of the Gentiles requires confirmation; we believe it to be a contracted form of Ap Howel. Slack may come from the Norse Slakii, but it is far more likely to be taken from the north country Slako—a hollow between two hills, a ravine. The ducal name of Howard is certainly not from Hogward, as Mr. Gladstone suggested some six or seven years ago; but we think that there is equally little reason for deriving it from the Norse Há-varðr. There cannot be much doubt that it comes from Hayward or Heyward, a manorial officer whose function it was to take care that the fences within his jurisdiction were in good repair. Mr. Langdon's coped stones in Cornwall, and the Rev. J. C. Cox's notice of a grave slab at Easington in the county of York, remind us how important it is in the interest of archaeology that we should have a catalogue of mediæval tomb-stones. The brasses have for the most part had careful rubbings made of them, but the sculptured stones are almost as unknown as they were in the darkest days of the last century. Two articles are continued from previous numbers: the Inventories of Church Goods in the Reign of Edward VI., by Mr. Page; and the catalogue of burials in the Priors of the Black Friars, by Mr. Palmer.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

FRÜH—HERBST—NEBEL.

Oh sweet, oh soft, this interbreathing space Between deep draughts of labour; soft and sweet
This pause the year makes with slow sauntering feet,
'Twixt summer, autumn, and pure snow's embrace.
Now the grey mists blown from some far-off place
Of Boden See or Rhein Thal, merging, meet
At dew-fall round the mountains, flow and fleet,
Stream into air when morn ascends apace.
Now thoughts that summer-through like hounds did chase
Their quarry, dream, or silent sessions keep.
Love now clings cloud-like round the soul; thy face,
That troubled, trembled, questioned, floats with deep
Tender persuasion o'er the fields of sleep.
Oh soft, oh sweet, this transient autumn grace.
JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.
Davos Platz: August 29, 1891.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Theology.—"The Old Testament in Greek according to the Septuagint," edited by Prof. H. B. Swete, vol. iii.; "The Philocalia of Origen," the Greek text edited from the manuscripts, with critical apparatus and indexes, and an introduction on the sources of the text, by J. Armitage Robinson; "A short Commentary on the Hebrew and Aramaic Text of the Book of Daniel," by A. A. Bevan; "A Harmony of the Gospels in the Words of the Revised Version," with copious references, tables, &c., arranged by C. C. James; "Texts and Studies: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature," edited by J. Armitage Robinson, vol. i., No. 4: The Fragments of Heraclion, the Greek text with an introduction by A. E. Brookes, vol. ii., No. 1: A Study of Codex Bezae, by J. Rendel Harris; No. 2 The Testament of Abraham, by M. R. James, with an appendix containing translations from the Arabic of the Testaments of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, by W. E. Barnes; "The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges"—The Books of Ezra and Nehemiah, by Prof. H. E. Ryle; The Book of Ezekiel, by Prof. A. B. Davidson; The Epistles to Timothy and Titus, by the Rev. A. E. Humphreys; The Second Epistle to the Corinthians, by the Rev. J. J. Lias; and The Book of Joshua, by J. S. Black.

General Literature.—"The Growth of British Policy," by Prof. J. R. Seeley; "The Growth of English Industry and Commerce in Modern Times," by the Rev. Dr. W. Cunningham; "A Discourse of the Commonwealth of this Realm of England," first printed in 1581, and commonly attributed to W. S., edited from the MSS. by Elizabeth Lamond; "Natural Religion in India," the Rede Lecture delivered in the Senate-House on June 17, 1891, by Sir Alfred Lyall; "The Origin of Metallic Currency and Weight Standards," by Prof. W. Ridgeway; "Milton's Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity, L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, and Lycidas," edited, with introduction, notes, and indexes, by A. W. Verity; "Milton's Samson Agonistes," by the same editor; "Liber Niger": "The Black Book, with other Customs and Statutes of the Church of Lincoln," arranged by the late Henry Bradshaw, edited from the papers of the author by the Rev. C. Wordsworth; "Ma'âlâ-i-shakhsî sayyâh ki dar kaziyya-i-Bâb navishtâst" (a Traveller's Narrative written to illustrate the Episode of the Bâb), Persian text, edited, translated, and annotated, in 2 vols., by Edward G. Browne; "The History of the Law of Prescription in England" (York Prize Essay, 1890), by T. A. Herbert; "Digest XIX. 2, Locati Conducti," translated, with notes, by C. H. Monro; "The Science of International Law," being a general sketch of the historic basis of the rules observed by states in their normal and abnormal relations in the past and the present, by Thomas Alfred Walker; "The Influence and Development of English Guilds" (Thirlwall Prize Essay, 1891), by F. Aidan Hibbert; "The Destruction of the Somerset Religious Houses and its Effects" (Prince Consort Dissertation, 1890), by W. A. J. Archibald; "The Early History of Frisia, with special relation to its Conversion" (Prince Consort Dissertation, 1890), by W. E. Collins.

Greek and Latin.—"Sophocles": the Plays and Fragments, with critical notes, commentary, and translation in English prose, by Prof. R. C. Jebb, part v.: Trachiniae; "Cicero. Pro Plancio," edited by the Rev. Dr. H. A. Holden, new and revised edition; "Homer's Odyssey," the text edited in accordance with modern criticism by Arthur Platt; "Livy," book ix., with notes and introduction by Rev. H. M. Stephenson; "Lucian. Menippus and Timon," with notes and introduction by E. C. Mackie; and "Thucydides," book vii., with notes and introduction by the Rev. Dr. H. A. Holden.

Mathematical and Scientific.—"Catalogue of Scientific Papers compiled by the Royal Society of London": vols. i.-vi. for the years 1800-1863, vols. vii.-viii. for the years 1864-1873, new series for the years 1874-1883; "The Collected Mathematical Papers of Prof. Arthur Cayley," vol. iv. (to be completed in 10 vols.); "A History of the Theory of Elasticity and of the Strength of Materials," by the late I. Todhunter, edited and completed by Prof. Karl Pearson, vol. ii.: Saint-Venant to Sir William Thomson; "A Treatise on Elementary Dynamics," new and enlarged edition, by S. L. Loney; "Solutions of the Examples in a Treatise on Elementary Dynamics," by the same author; "An Elementary Treatise on Plane Trigonometry for the use of Schools," by E. W. Hobson and C. M. Jessop; "Arithmetic for Schools," by C. Smith; "Solutions to the Exercises in Euclid," books i.-iv., by W. W. Taylor; "A Treatise on Thermodynamics," by J. Parker; "A History of Epidemics in Britain," vol. i., from 664 A.D. to the extinction of the plague in 1666, by Dr. Charles Creighton; "Catalogue of Type Fossils in the Woodwardian Museum, Cambridge," by H. Woods, with preface by Prof. T. McKenny Hughes; and "Examination Papers for Entrance and Minor Scholarships and Exhibitions in the Colleges of the University of Cambridge."

MESSRS. LONGMANS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

General Literature.—A Supplementary Volume to Mr. Froude's History of England, entitled "The Divorce of Catherine of Aragon: the Story as Told by the Imperial Ambassadors resident at the Court of Henry VIII," in usum laicorum; the third and concluding volume of Samuel Rawson Gardiner's "History of the Great Civil War, 1642-1649," bringing the narrative down to the execution of Charles I.; "Poems," by William Edward Hartpole Lecky; "Annals of My Early Life, 1806-1846," by Charles Wordsworth, Bishop of St. Andrews, to be followed by "Annals of My Later Life," treating of the events of more recent years; a volume of "Angling Sketches," by Andrew Lang, illustrated by W. S. Burn Murdoch; "The Blue Poetry Book," edited by Andrew Lang, with numerous illustrations by H. J. Ford and Lancelot Speed; "Voices Populi," by F. Anstey, reprinted from Punch, second series, with illustrations by J. Bernard Partridge; "The Memoirs of the Baron de Marbot," translated from the French, in 2 vols.; "General View of the Political History of Europe," by Ernest Lavisse, professor at the Sorbonne, translated, with the author's sanction, by Dr. Charles Gross; "The Perplexed Farmer": How is he to meet Alien Competition? three lectures given at Brussels before the Belgian Royal Central Society of Agriculture, by George Ville, translated from the fourth French edition, with additional matter supplied by the author, by William Crookes.

Travel.—"Seas and Lands," by Sir Edwin Arnold, fully illustrated from photographs; "Dr. Liddon's Tour in Egypt and Palestine in 1886," by his sister, Mrs. King; "Persia and the Persian Question," by the Hon. George Curzon, with maps, illustrations, appendices, and an index, in 2 vols.; "With Axe and Rope in the New Zealand Alps," by George Edward Mannering; "The Land of the Lamas": Notes of a Journey through China, Mongolia, and Thibet, by William Woodville Rockhill, with maps and illustrations; "About Ceylon and Borneo": being an Account of Two Visits to Ceylon, One Visit to Borneo, and How I came Home and was Rocked to Sleep on the Bosom of—well, "The Suez Canal," by Walter J. Clutterbuck, with illustrations; "The Country of the Vosges," by Henry W. Wolff, with a map.

Fiction.—"Darkness and Dawn": or Scenes in the Days of Nero, an historic tale, by Archdeacon Farrar, in 2 vols.; "With My Friends": Tales told in Partnership, by Brander Matthews, with an introductory essay on the art and mystery of collaboration; "Where Town and Country Meet," by Mrs. Baldwin.

Theology, &c.—"The History of my Life": an Autobiography, by Bishop Oxenden; "The Problem of Scepticism," by the Rev. Alexander J. Harrison; "The Inheritance of the Saints," or, Thoughts on the Communion of Saints and the Life of the World to Come, collected chiefly from English writers by L. P., with a Preface by Canon Scott Holland; Edersheim's "History of the Jewish Nation," new edition, revised by H. A. White; "Happiness in the Spiritual Life"; or, The Secret of the Lord, a series of practical considerations, by Canon William Clavell Ingram; "The Spirit of Man": an Essay on Christian Philosophy, by the Rev. A. Chandler; "Anthropological Religion": The Gifford Lectures delivered before the University of Glasgow in 1891, by Prof. F. Max Müller; "A Manual of the Science of Religion," by Prof. Chantepie de la Saussaye, translated by Mrs. Colyer Fergusson (née Max Müller), revised by the author; "Essays, Reviews, and Addresses," by Dr. James Martineau, in 4 vols.

Science.—"Fragments of Science," being detached Essays, Addresses, and Reviews, by Prof. Tyndall; "Solutions," by Prof. W. Ostwald, of Leipzig, being the fourth book, with some additions, of the second edition of Ostwald's "Lehrbuch der Allgemeinen Chemie," translated by M. M. Pattison Muir; "An Introduction to Human Physiology," by Dr. Augustus D. Waller; "Quain's Elements of Anatomy," the tenth edition, edited by Prof. Edward Albert Schäfer, and George Dancer Thane (in three volumes); Vol. II. Part II., "Myology, Angiology," by Prof. Thane; "The Principles of Chemistry," by Prof. D. Mendeléeff, of St. Petersburg, translated by George Kamensky, and edited by A. J. Greenaway, in 2 vols.; "Outlines of Theoretical Chemistry," by Prof. Lothar Meyer, of Tübingen, translated by Profs. P. Phillips Bedson and W. Carleton Williams; "The Dynamics of Rotation," by A. M. Worthington; "Elements of Materia Medica and Therapeutics," by C. E. Armand Semple, with numerous illustrations.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Exploration and Travel.—"My Personal Experiences in Equatorial Africa as Medical Officer of the Emin Pasha Relief Expedition," by Thomas Heazle Parke, with map, portrait, and numerous illustrations from drawings by Paul Hardy, Stanley Berkeley, and Lieut. Stairs; "Seven Years in the Soudan": being a Record of Explorations, Adventures, and Campaigns against the Arab Slave-Hunters, by Romolo Gessi Pasha, collected and edited by his son, Felix Gessi, with portraits and numerous illustrations from sketches on the spot; "Lord Randolph Churchill's South African Travels," including his Survey of Mashonaland and his Study of Life at Johannesburg, illustrated with sketches made on the spot by Captain Giles; "A Winter Cruise in Summer Seas": or, How I Found Health, by Charles C. Atchison, illustrated by Walter W. Buckley; "At the Antipodes": Travels in Australia, New Zealand, Fiji Islands, the New Hebrides, New Caledonia, and South America, 1888-1889, by G. Verschuur, translated by Mary Daniels, with numerous illustrations and map; "A Transatlantic Holiday": or, Notes of a Visit to the Eastern States of America, by Dr. T. Fitz-Patrick, with illustrations; "The Philippine Islands": a Historical, Geographical, Ethnographical, Social, and Commercial Sketch of the Philippine Archipelago and its Political Dependencies, by John Foreman, with map and frontispiece; "Bombay and Western India," by James Douglas, dedicated to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, with maps and plans, fourteen full-page photogravures, and over 100 other illustrations, in 2 vols.; "The Best Tour in Norway," by E. J. Goodman, with full-page illustrations and route map; "Sport and Work on the Nepaul Frontier," being twelve years' sporting reminiscences of a pioneer planter in an Indian frontier district, by the Hon. James Inglis ('Maori'), with twenty-two illustrations in chromo-lithography; "The South Italian Volcanoes": being the Account of an Excursion to them made by English and other geologists in 1889 under the auspices of the Geologists' Association of London, with papers on the different localities by Messrs Johnston-Lavis, Platania, Sambon, Zezi, and Mme. Antonia Lavis, including the bibliography of the volcanic districts and 16 plates, edited by Dr. H. J. Johnston-Lavis.

General Literature.—"The Life of Christopher Columbus," an examination of the historical and geographical conditions under which the western continent was disclosed to Europe, with an inquiry into the personal history of Cristoval Colon, by Justin Winsor, with maps and numerous illustrations; "William Hogarth," a memoir, with bibliography and catalogue of prints and paintings, by Austin Dobson, with numerous illustrations and steel plates; "The Life, Friendships, and Letters of Joseph Severn," by William Sharp, with photogravure portrait, numerous facsimiles of letters, and other illustrations; "Life and Letters of Charles Keene," by George Somes Layard, with portrait and 15 full-page and 44 smaller illustrations; "Edmond Scherer's Essays on English Literature," translated, with a critical introduction, by George Saintsbury; "The Life of Robert Coates," better known as "Romeo" and "Diamond" Coates, the "Amateur of Fashion," by John R. and Hunter H. Robinson, with two portraits; "The Tombs of the Kings of England," by J. Charles Wall, with 57 illustrations drawn and engraved by the author; "Our English Homer," by William White; "The Queen's Prime Ministers (new volumes)"—"The Marquis of Salisbury," by H. D. Traill; "Viscount Palmerston," by the Marquis of Lorne; "The Earl of Aberdeen," by Sir Arthur Gordon; "The Life and Career of the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald," based on the work of Edmund Collins, revised, with additions to date, by G. Mercer Adam, with portrait and other illustrations; "Women of the Time," being a dictionary of authenticated biographical records of eminent women of the day, revised to date and edited by Charles F. Rideal; "Outlines of Roman History, from B.C. 753 to A.D. 180," by A. Bickersteth; "The Glacial Nightmare," by Henry H. Howorth; "Life of an Artist," an autobiography by Jules Breton, translated by Mary J. Serrano, with portrait.

Fiction.—"Godiva Durleigh," by Sarah Doudney, in 3 vols.; "Even Mine Own Familiar Friend," by Emily Martin, in 2 vols.; "The Rector of Amesty," by A. M. Browne, in 3 vols.; "A Red Sister," by C. L. Pirakis, in 2 vols.; "Prairie and Bush," by George Dunderdale; "The Valley Council," or, Leaves from the Journal of Thomas Bateman, of Canbelego Station, N.S.W., edited by Percy Clarke, with illustrations; "A Dark Place of the Earth," by Alfred Clark, Forest Department, Ceylon; "Stories by Rudyard Kipling," library edition, in 2 vols.—vol. i. contains: "Soldiers Three," "The Story of the Gadsbys," "In Black and White"; vol. ii. contains: "Wee Willie Winkie," "Under the Deodars," "The Phantom Rickshaw"; "Mrs. Dines' Jewels," by W. Clark Russell; "Lowe's Shilling Novels"—I. "A Creature of the Night: an Italian Enigma," by Fergus Hume; II. "A Dream of Millions, and other Stories," by M. Betham Edwards; III. "The Lynn's Court Mystery," by Denzil Vane; IV. "Bobby: a Story of the Supernatural," by "Vesper"; V. "East Coast Yarns," by Dr. P. H. Emerson.

Books for the Young.—"Caesar Cascabel," by Jules Verne, illustrated with 80 full-page engravings; "The Boy Settlers," by Norah Brook, illustrated; "The Secret of the Magian; or, The Mystery of Ecbatana," by A. Laurie, illustrated; "An Inca Queen; or, Lost in Peru," by J. Evelyn, illustrated by Lancelot Speed; "Roger Ingleton Minor," by Talbot Baines Reed, illustrated; "How Martin Drake Found his Father; or, Wanderings in the West," by G. Norway, illustrated by Lancelot Speed; "Harper's Young People," volume for 1891; "The Playtime Library": a New Group of Story Books for Children, illustrated, I. "The Squire's Nieces," by E. M. and A. Huntingdon, II. "Some Little Britons in Brittany," by Jennett Humphreys; and "Our Armies," described and illustrated by Richard Simkin, containing one hundred facsimile water-colour drawings, together with the descriptive text of the British Cavalry, Artillery, and Infantry, Indian Native Cavalry, Artillery, and Infantry, and the army of the past.

Science.—"Theory and Analysis of Ornament, applied to the Work of Elementary and Technical Schools," by Francois Louis Schauer-mann, with 263 illustrations; "Answers to the Questions on Elementary Chemistry," theoretical and practical (ordinary course), set at the examinations of the Science and Art Department, South Kensington, 1887 to 1891, by John Mills, illustrated, in 2 vols.; "Chemistry for Students," consisting of a series of lessons based on the syllabus of the Science and Art Department, and specially designed to facilitate the experimental teaching of elementary chemistry in schools and evening classes, by John Mills, numerous illustrations; "Decorative Electricity," by Mrs. J. E. H. Gordon, with a chapter on Fire Risks by J. E. H. Gordon, and numerous illustrations by Herbert Fell, engraved on wood by J. D. Cooper; and "A Complete Treatise on the Electro-Deposition of Metals," comprising electro-plating and galvanoplastic operations, the deposition of metals by the contact and immersion processes, the colouring of metals, the methods of grinding and polishing, &c., translated from the German of Dr. George Langbein, with additions by William T. Brannat, illustrated with 125 engravings.

Fine Art.—"The Flowers of Japan and the Art of Floral Arrangement," by Josiah Conder, Professor of Architecture, and Architect to the Japanese Government, with illustration in colours by Japanese artists, text beautifully printed in Japan; "Historic Bindings in the Bodleian Library," a quarto book, containing 24 plates, reproduced by orthochromatic photography from the originals, and fully described by W. Salt Brassington; "The Grammar of the Lotus": a new history of classic ornament as a development of sun worship, with observations on the bronze culture of prehistoric Europe as derived from Egypt, based on the study of patterns, by W. H. Goodyear, with upwards of 1000 illustrations in 67 pages of plates and 200 text cuts; and "Artistic Japan": an illustrated journal of arts and industries, by S. Bing, Vol. VI.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Dramatic Works of Arthur W. Pinero," in monthly parts, each containing a complete play, together with its stage history—Part I., "The Times," Part II., "The Profligate," Part III., "The Hobby Horse"; "The Works of Heinrich Heine," translated by C. G. Leland—Vols. II. and III., "Pictures of Travel," Vol. IV., "Book of Songs," Vols. V. and VI., "Germany"; "The Life of Heinrich Heine," by Dr. Richard Garnett; "The Posthumous Works of Thomas de Quincey," edited by Dr. A. H. Japp—Vol. II., "Conversation and Coleridge"; "Stray Thoughts," by Ellen Terry; "The Princess Maleine": a Drama in Five Acts, translated from the French of Maurice Maeterlinck, by Gerard Harry, with portrait, and an introduction by Oscar Wilde; "Mahomet": a Drama, by Hall Caine, with a portrait; "A Series of Original Letters by Eminent Russians," including Count Tolstoi on the Persecution of the Jews in Russia; "Gossip in a Library," by Edmund Gosse; "Woman—Through a Man's Eyeglass," by M. C. Salaman, with illustrations by Dudley Hardy; "Girlhood": an Open Letter to Young Girls, by E. Chester; "Little Johannes": an Allegory of the Poet's Soul, by Dr. Van Eeden, translated from the Dutch by Clara Bell, with an introduction by Andrew Lang, and illustrations by Dudley Hardy; "Magonia": a Poem, by C. G. Leland (Hans Breitmann); "Poems, New and Old," by William Watson; "Heinemann's Scientific Handbooks"—"Geodesy," by J. Howard Gore; "A Manual of Bacteriology"; "The Canadian Guide-book," by C. G. D. Roberts, with many maps and illustrations.

Fiction.—"The Scapegoat," a Romance, by Hall Caine, in 2 vols.; "Woman and the Man," by Robert Buchanan, in 2 vols.; "Oriole's Daughter," by Jessie Fothergill, in 3 vols.; "Mammon," by Mrs. Alexander, in 3 vols.; "The White Feather," by "Tasma," in 3 vols.; "The Tower of Taddeo," by Ouida, in 2 vols.; "Not all in Vain," by Ada Cambridge, in 3 vols.; "According to St. John," by Amelie Rives; "A Question of Taste," by Maarten Maartens; "Daughters of Men," by Hannah Lynch; "Inconsequent Lives," a Village Chronicle, by J. H. Pearce; "The Penance of Portia James," by "Tasma"; "A Battle and a Boy," by Blanche Willis Howard; a new novel by Boyeson; a novel, with special reference to the great discoveries in the field of electricity, by Thomas A. Edison and G. P. Lathrop; also a new series of Short Fiction, in monthly volumes.

New volumes of "Heinemann's International Library"—"The Commodore's Daughters," by Jonas Lie, translated from the Norwegian by G. Hughes and H. L. Brækstad, with an introduction by Edmund Gosse; "Det Flager," by Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Theological and Philosophical.—"History of the Church," by Prof. W. Moeller, translated from the German by the Rev. Andrew Rutherford, in 2 vols.; "A History of Æsthetics," by Bernard Bosanquet, forming a volume of "The Library of Philosophy"; "Studies in Hegel's Philosophy of Religion," by the Rev. Dr. J. Macbride Sterrett; "Outlines of the Philosophy of Religion," by Hermann Lotze, edited with an introduction, by F. C. Conybeare; "Schopenhauer's Minor Writings," translated by T. Bailey Saunders, complete in 5 vols., new edition—(1) The Wisdom of Life; (2) Councils and Maxims; (3) Religion: A Dialogue, &c.; (4) The Art of Literature; (5) Studies in Pessimism; "Religious Systems of the World: Pre-Christian, Christian and Philosophic," a series of essays by specialists, a second edition, entirely revised, and considerably enlarged, containing more than twenty additional articles; "A History of Tithes," by the Rev. Henry William Clarke; "The Religion of the Cross," by the Rev. H. B. Chapman, third edition; "The Broad Churchman," by the Rev. G. E. C. Casey; "The Contemporary Pulpit," vol. vi.; "The Contemporary Pulpit Library," a new volume of sermons by the late Canon Liddon.

Scientific.—"The Colours of Animals," by Prof. Beddard, of the Zoological Society's Gardens, with coloured plates and woodcuts; "Text Book of Embryology: Man and Mammals," by Dr. Oscar Hertwig, Professor of Comparative Anatomy in the University of Berlin, translated and edited from the third German edition (with the assistance of the author) by Dr. E. L. Mark, Professor of Anatomy in Harvard University, with 389 illustrations and 2 coloured plates; "Text-Book of Embryology: Invertebrates," by Drs. Korschelt and Heider, of Berlin, translated and edited by Dr. E. L. Mark, with several hundred illustrations; "Text-Book of Animal Palæontology," by Dr. Thomas Roberts, of the Woodwardian Museum, Cambridge, designed as a supplement to Claus and Sedgwick's "Text-Book of Zoology," illustrated; "Text-Book of Geology," adapted from the work of Prof. Emanuel Kayser, of Marburg, by Philip Lake, with illustrations; "Text-Book of Zoology," by Dr. C. Claus, of Vienna, and Adam Sedgwick, vol. ii.: "Mollusca to Man," third edition; "The Geographical Distribution of Disease in England and Wales," by Dr. Alfred Haviland, with several coloured maps.

New volumes of "Introductory Science Text-Books":—"Physiography," by H. M. Hutchinson; "Zoology," by B. Lindsay; "Amphioxus," by Dr. B. Hatschek, of Vienna, and James Tuckey, of Durham; "Geology," by Edward Aveling; "Physiological Psychology," by Dr. Th. Ziehen, of Jena, adapted by Dr. Otto Beyer, with twenty-one figures.

New volumes of the "Young Collector Series":—"The Telescope," by J. W. Williams; "British Birds," by the Rev. H. C. Macpherson; "Postage Stamps," by W. T. Ogilvie; "Book-Collecting," by J. H. Slater; "Flowering Plants," by James Britten; "Grasses," by W. Hutchinson; "Fishes," by the Rev. H. C. Macpherson; "Mammalia," by the Rev. H. C. Macpherson; "Copper Coins of Europe," by Frank C. Higgins.

General Literature.—"Argentina and the Argentines," by Thomas A. Turner, with numerous plates and cuts; "The Princess Tarakanova," A Dark Chapter of Russian History, translated from the Russian of Danilevski by Ida de Mouchanoff, with plates; "The Uncollected Writings of Thomas de Quincey," with a preface and annotations by James Hogg, new and cheaper edition in 2 volumes; "The Browning Cyclopaedia," by Dr. Edward Berdoe; "German Love," Fragments from the Papers of an Alien, by Prof. F. Max Müller, new edition; "Ancient English Legends and Fictions of National Origin," a Prose "Percy," being a Companion to Percy's "Reliques," edited, with introduction and notes, by William Carew Hazlitt; "The Flight to Varennes, and other Historical Essays," by Oscar Browning; "The Dilettante Library."—"Dante and his Ideal," by Herbert Baynes; "Browning's Message to his Time," by Dr. Edward Berdoe, with a portrait and facsimile letters; "The Doctor and other Poems," by T. E. Brown, 2 vols.; "Goethe," by Oscar Browning; "Dante," by Oscar Browning—both enlarged from the articles in the "Encyclopaedia Britannica"; "Browning's Criticism of Life," by W. F. Revell; "Henrik Ibsen," by the Rev. Philip H. Wicksteed. The Antiquarian Library—"Symbolism in Christian Art," by F. E. Hulme, with numerous illustrations; "Heraldry," by F. E. Hulme; "Monumental Brasses," by the Rev. Herbert W. Macklin, second edition.

Fiction.—"Jim Peterkin's Daughter," an Antipodean novel, by W. B. Churchward, in 3 vols.; "A King's Daughter," by George Cardella, in 3 vols.; "Dr. and Mrs. Gold," an Episode in the Life of a Cause, by Edith A. Barnett; "Better Dead," by J. M. Barrie; "The Wages of Sin," by Lucas Malet, new edition in 1 vol.; "Helen's Vow," by the Earl of Desart, new edition in 1 vol.; "Jerome," by Annabel Gray, new edition in 1 vol.

"Library Edition of Standard Authors"; new volumes.—"The Buccaneers of America," by Captain James Burney, reprinted from the edition of 1816, with maps, &c.; "Lord Chesterfield's Letters to his Godson," edited by John Bradshaw, in 2 vols.; "Louise de Keroualle," or Society in the Courts of Charles II. and Louis XIV., from state papers in the French Foreign Office, by H. Forneron, third edition, with engraved portraits, letter, &c.; "Curiosities of Ale and Beer," by John Bickerdyke, with numerous reproductions of quaint cuts; also new editions of Motley's "Dutch Republic," Prescott's "Ferdinand and Isabella," and "Mexico," Saint Simon's Memoirs, 3 vols., Percy's "Reliques" 3 vols. "The Best Books," a classified bibliography (50,000 works), by William Swan Sonnenschein, re-issue of the second edition, from the stereotype plates.

Political and Social Science; new volumes of the "Social Science Series."—"The London Programme," by Sidney Webb; "The Student's Marx," an abridged edition of Marx's "Capital"; "The Destitute Alien in Great Britain," by Arnold White, the Earl of Dunraven, M. Crackanthorpe, W. A. M'Arthur, and others; "The Life of Robert Owen," by Lloyd Jones, edited by William Cairns Jones; "Collectivism," by A. Nacquet; "Distributing Co-Operative Societies," by Dr. Luigi Pizzamiglio; "The Modern State," by Paul Leroy Beaulieu; "The Impossibility of Social Democracy," by Dr. Schäffle, edited by Bernard Bosanquet; "The Revolutionary Spirit," by Felix Rocquain, abridged by J. D. Hunting, with preface by Prof. Huxley; "Poverty: Its Genesis and Exodus," by J. G. Godard; "Arbitration and Neutrality," by Prof. Arnoldson.

Educational.—"How Gertrude Teaches her Children," by J. H. Pestalozzi, edited by Edward Cooke; "Latin Dialogues for School Recitation," by Constance M. Ashford; "The Child and Child-Nature," by the Baroness Marenholtz-Bülow, sixth edition; "Public Schools Year Book," edited by three public school men (Eton, Harrow, and Winchester), third year of issue; "Elements of Plane Geometry," prepared by the Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching, part ii., new edition; new volumes of the "Parallel Grammar Series"—"Spanish Grammar: Accidence and Syntax," by H. B. Clarke; "Spanish Reader and Writer," by H. B. Clarke; "Greek Grammar: Accidence," by Prof. Sonnenschein; "Third Latin Reader and Writer," by C. M. Dix; "Second French Reader and Writer," by Prof. P. E. Barbier.

Illustrated Gift-Books.—"Neal Russell," by M. Bramston; "Nicco, a Little Lad," by C. A. Jones; "A Scottish Hero," the Life of Dr. Chalmers, by Frances E. Cooke; Mrs. Sherwood's Juvenile Library, comprising—"The Heron's Plume"; "Duty is Safety"; "Martin Crook"; "Jack the Sailor Boy"; "The Fall of Pride"; "Grandmamma Parker"; "The Rose and the Nightingale"; "Frank Beauchamp"; "The White Pigeon"; "The Lost Pigeon"; "Think before you act"; "The Traveller"; a new edition with entirely new illustrations, adapted to the present generation of young readers.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

General Literature.—"The Speeches and Public Addresses of Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.," with Notes and Introductions, edited by A. W. Hutton and H. J. Cohen; "Ballads," by Rudyard Kipling; "A Summer Night, and other Poems," by Graham R. Tomson, with frontispiece by A. Tomson; "John Ruskin: his Life and Work," by W. G. Collingwood, who has been for some years Mr. Ruskin's private secretary—this will contain a large amount of new matter, and of letters which have never been published, and will be in fact, as near as is possible at present, a full and authoritative biography of Mr. Ruskin. The book will contain numerous portraits, and also some sketches by Mr. Arthur Severn—"The Tragedy of the Caesars": the Emperors of the Julian and Claudian Lines, with numerous illustrations from busts, gems, cameos, &c., by the Rev. S. Baring Gould; "The History of Florence from the time of the Medicis to the Fall of the Republic," by F. T. Perrens, translated by Hannah Lynch; "The Colleges of Oxford": their History and their Traditions, by Members of the University, edited by the Rev. A. Clark; "Swift's Journal to Stella," edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Charles Whibley, in 2 vols.; "Byron's Letters," edited with Introduction and Notes by W. E. Henley; "Oxford and Oxford Life": with Chapters on the Examinations, by Members of the University, edited by J. Wells, Fellow and Tutor of Wadham College, in two parts: I. Oxford Life, II. The Examinations; "The Imitation of Buddha": being Quotations from Buddhist Literature for each Day in the Year, by E. M. Bowden, with Preface by Sir Edwin Arnold; "Brand," a drama by Henrik Ibsen, translated by William Wilson; "Nature in Books": Studies in Literary Biography, by P. Anderson Graham.

Fiction.—"My Danish Sweetheart," by W. Clark Russell, in 3 vols.; "Hovenden, V.C.," by Miss F. Mabel Robinson, in 3 vols.; "A Pinch of Experience," by L. B. Walford, with illustrations by Gordon Browne; "A Reverend Gentleman," by J. Maclaren Cobban.

Books for Boys and Girls.—"Hepsy Gipsy," by L. T. Meade, illustrated by Everard Hopkins; "The Honourable Miss": a Tale of a Country Town, by L. T. Meade, with illustrations by Everard Hopkins; "My Land of Beulah," by Mrs. Leith Adams, with a frontispiece by Gordon Browne; "The Secret of Madame de Monluc," by the author of "The Atelier du Lys," illustrated by W. Parkinson.

New volumes of "English Leaders of Religion," edited by A. M. M. Stedman—"Charles Simeon," by H. C. G. Moule; "Bishop Wilberforce," by G. W. Daniel; "John Keble," by W. Lock; "F. D. Maurice," by Colonel F. Maurice; "Thomas Chalmers," by Mrs. Oliphant; "Cardinal Manning," by A. W. Hutton.

New volumes of "Social Questions of To-day," edited by H. de B. Gibbins—"Mutual Thrift," by the Rev. J. F. Wilkinson; "Problems of Poverty": an Inquiry into the Industrial Conditions of the Poor, by J. A. Hobson; "Poverty and Pauperism," by the Rev. L. R. Phelps; "English Socialism of To-day," by Hubert Bland; "The Commerce of Nations," by Prof. C. F. Bastable; "English Land and English Men," by the Rev. C. W. Stubbs; "Modern Labour and Old Economics," by H. de B. Gibbins; "Christian Socialism in England," by the Rev. J. Carter; "Land Nationalisation," by Harold Cox; "The Education of the People," by the Rev. J. R. Diggles.

New volumes of the "University Extension Series," edited by J. E. Symes—"The French Revolution," by J. E. Symes; "English Social Reformers," by H. de B. Gibbins; "Napoleon," by E. L. S. Horsburgh; "English Political History," by T. J. Lawrence; "Shakspeare," by F. H. Trench; "The English Language," by G. C. Moore-Smith; "An Introduction to Philosophy," by J. Solomon; "English Painters," by D. S. Maccoll; "English Architecture," by Ernest Radford; "The Evolution of Plant Life": Lower Forms, by G. Masee, with illustrations; "The Chemistry of Life and Health," by C. W. Kimmins,

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co.'s
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"For Light and Liberty," by Mr. Silas K. Hocking, with illustrations by Harold Copping; "Edward Lear's Nonsense Birthday Book," arranged so as to form a daily record; "Stephen Ellicott's Daughter," by Mrs. Needell, new edition in 1 vol.; a coloured gift book, entitled "Francies Free": a Collection of Quaint Illustrations, by E. L. Shute; the fourth edition of Armatage's "Horse Doctor," much enlarged and improved; "Barker's Facts and Figures" for 1892; and Scribner's Magazine for 1891, in 2 vols.

Children's Books.—"The Little Merry Makers," by A. J. Daryll, illustrated with coloured and tinted plates by Constance Haslewood; "A Bird's Nest," with coloured illustrations from designs by Henry Stannard; popular editions of Mrs. F. H. Burnett's "Sara Crewe and Editha's Burglar," and "Little Saint Elizabeth," uniform with the recent issue of "Little Lord Fauntleroy"; "The Children's Object Book," on the Kindergarten principle, with numerous coloured illustrations; "Little Red Riding Hood," by C. A. Jones, with original illustrations; "The Life of our Lord," in simple language for little children, fully illustrated; "Famous Horses and Dogs," and "Noted Horses and Dogs," will be added to the "Little Playmate" Series; and several new volumes to the "Aunt Louisa's Toy Books"; their new toy books cut out in shapes include "The Big A B C," with finely printed illustrations; "Little Folks at Play," in the shape of a ball, from designs by Harold Copping; "Jappie Chappie"; "Humpty Dumpty"; "By the Sea"; "In the Country"; and "Little Boy Blue"; "The Captain General," by W. J. Gordon, with illustrations and map; new illustrated editions of Captain Maryatt's "Masterman Ready," "Poor Jack," and "The Settlers in Canada"; "A Tour Round My Garden," by Alphonse Karr; "How he Made His Fortune," by J. A. W. de Witt; and "Peter Penniless," by G. Christopher Davies; also a new volume entitled "The Girl's Home Companion," containing hundreds of useful articles fully illustrated.

MESSRS. J. S. VIRTUE & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Life and Work of Briton Riviere, R.A.," by Walter Armstrong (the Art Annual for 1891, or Christmas number of the Art Journal), with three full-page etchings and engravings, and numerous illustrations of his work in the text; "The Southern Coast of England," a series of 40 line engravings after J. W. M. Turner, printed on India paper, limited to 500 numbered copies; "Successful Business Men": a short account of the founders of well-known business houses, by Dr. A. H. Japp, with 8 illustrations; "Heroes of our Day": an account of recent winners of the Victoria Cross, by Walter Richards, with 8 illustrations by Harry Payne; "A New Dame Trot," by C. A. Jones, new edition, with 8 new illustrations by Miss A. B. Woodward; "Art and Song," a series of steel engravings from masterpieces of modern English art, accompanied by a selection of the choicest poems in the English language, edited by Robert Bell, new edition, with 30 engravings, printed on India paper; "The Riviera," by the Rev. Dr. Hugh Macmillan, new and revised edition, with 70 new illustrations; "The Year's Art, 1892": a concise epitome of all matters relating to the arts of painting, sculpture, and architecture which have occurred during the year 1891, together with information respecting the events of the year 1892, with portraits of the members of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours;

"Showell's Housekeepers' Account Book for 1892"; "Pastry and Confectionery," by Frederick Davies; "Cakes and Biscuits," by Frederick Davies.

MESSRS. H. GREVEL & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Human Figure": its Beauties and Defects, by Ernst Brücke, emeritus professor of physiology at Vienna, and formerly teacher of anatomy in the Academy of Fine Arts at Berlin, authorised translation, revised by the author, with 29 illustrations by Hermann Paar, edited, with a preface, by W. Anderson, professor of anatomy to the Royal Academy; "Manual of Musical History," with 150 illustrations of portraits, musical instruments, facsimiles of rare and curious musical works, by James E. Matthew; "Archaeological Atlas to Homer": Illustrations of the Iliad and the Odyssey, by Dr. R. Engelmann and Prof. W. C. F. Anderson, with 36 plates and descriptive text; "Olympus": Tales of the Gods of Greece and Rome, by Talfourd Ely, with 47 woodcuts and 6 full-page photographic plates; "Manual of Bibliography": being an Introduction to the Knowledge of the Book, Library Management, and the Art of Cataloguing, with a Latin-English and English-Latin topographical index of the early printing centres, with 37 illustrations, by Walter T. Rogers, new edition, enlarged.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, & FERRIER'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Who shall Serve?" by Annie S. Swan; "After Touch of Wedded Hands," a story by a new writer, Hannah B. Mackenzie; "That Good Part, and Other Sermons," by the Rev. Robert Rutherford; "Comrades True," by Ellinor Davenport Adams; "Richard Tregellas," a Memoir of his Adventures in the West Indies in the Year of Grace 1781, by David Lawson Johnstone; "Molly," a story by A. C. Hertford; "Milestone and Other Stories," by Jessie M. E. Saxby; and a new edition of Edward Garrett's "Magic Flower-pot and Other Stories."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

CARTHAUS, E. Aus dem Reich v. Insulinde. Samatra u. de malaiische Archipel. Leipzig: Friedrich. 5 M.
FLAMINI, Franc. Le Linea toscana del Rinascimento anteriore ai tempi del Magnifico. Turin: Loescher. 20 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

BIBLIOTHECA patrum latinorum britannica. Bearb. v. H. Schenkl. 1. Bd. 1. Abth. Die bodleian. Bibliothek in Oxford. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M. 80 Pf.
LORR, M. Die Klagelieder d. Jeremias, erklärt. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 3 M.
LOTZ, W. Geschichte u. Offenbarung im Alten Testament. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 6 M. 80 Pf.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

DIDIER, L. Lettres et négociations de Claude de Mondouct, résident de France aux Pays-Bas (1571-1574). T. 1. Paris: Leroux. 6 fr.
PRIBRAM, A. F. Die Heirat Kaiser Leopold I. m. Margaretha Theresia v. Spanien. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 80 Pf.
ROUGÉ, le Vicomte Jacques de. Géographie ancienne de la basse Egypte. Paris: Rothschild. 20 fr.
SCHUSTER, H. M. Das Urheberrecht der Tonkunst in Oesterreich, Deutschland u. andern europäischen Staaten. München: Beck. 11 M.
TOMASCHKE, W. Zur historischen Topographie v. Kleinasiens im Mittelalter. I. Die Küstengebiete u. die Wege der Kreuzfahrer. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.
COGNIAUX, A. Monographie Phanerogamarum. Les Molastomatocées. Paris: Masson. 38 fr.
LOEWY, Th. Der Idealismus Berkeley's, in den Grundlagen untersucht. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M. 80 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

BINET, Hyacinthe. Le style de la lyrique courtoise en France aux 12^e et 13^e siècles. Paris: Bouillon. 3 fr. 50 c.
MEYER, P. D. Aristoteles Politik u. die 'Αθηναίων πολιτεία. Bonn: Cohen. 1 M. 20 Pf.
MUELLER, R. Untersuchung üb. den Verfasser der alt-französischen Dichtung Wilhelm v. England. Bonn: Röhrscheidt. 2 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

“NEW LIGHT ON THE EXECUTION OF CHARLES I. FROM CONTEMPORARY SOURCES.”

Oxford: Sept. 8, 1891.

Under this title Mr. G. W. Thorpe, F.S.A., has printed a paper in which he calls attention to an account of the execution of Charles I., hitherto unused by historians. The pamphlet in which this account is contained is a small quarto of 16 pages, printed throughout in red ink, entitled The Bloody Court; or, the Fatal Tribunal, said to be “printed for G. Horton,” and “published by a Rural Pen for general satisfaction.” It is not dated; but Mr. Thorpe concludes, from internal evidence, that it must have been written some two months only after the King’s execution. The author, who professes to have been an eye-witness, he believes to have been Admiral Sir William Penn, whose identity he considers “half-revealed” by the pseudonym adopted by the writer. According to Mr. Thorpe, the account in the pamphlet contains “hitherto overlooked facts of the highest value,” and “new and touching details” of the King’s trial and execution. Blind, he adds, must have been the eyes and deaf the ears of the scholars who turned over this valuable tract and failed to perceive its importance.

On the other hand, if it can be shown that this undated red pamphlet was not published till after the Restoration, and is a compilation from two other pamphlets, its value as a contemporary record disappears. The first page of the red pamphlet runs thus:

“The Crown of England was the ancientest Christian Crown in the World, and that which had those two famous Pillars, Religion and Law, the purest and best in the world to under prop it which made it so renowned: But our late Usurping Tyrant and his King-killing Basilisks holding a Confederacy with the Popish Faction, endeavoured a supplanting of the Magistracy and Ministry, the Laws of the Land, and the Religion of the Church of England had not the Honest Royalist, and Sober-minded Presbyterian proved a strong Defence and Fortress against that bloodsucking and Jesuitical Faction who lay so occultly at the Helm of Government, and pretended (so cunningly) to act all for the Protestant Religion: yet under the vizard of Hypocrisie and Rebellion they pretend a Reformation, but through a Sea of innocent Blood as we shall plainly describe in the following Historical discourse Witness their setting up a High Court of Injustice, and a pretended Council of State to be two High Courts: The one for the ordering the great affairs of the Kingdome: the other to judge and determine matters Criminal. Here old England became visibly in its Government a New Spain: And it is worthy of observation to note, That Cornet Joyce, having with a party of Soldiers by Order from Cromwel, seized on the Kings person at Newport in the Isle of Wight, by breaking open the door in the night when the King was in bed, and taking him thence, and bringing him over the water to Hurst Castle. Colonel Harrison was by Cromwel sent with a strong party of horse to guard the King from thence to Windsor. And immediately thereupon their bloody Court was erected; and the Tryal of Our gracious Sovereign proclaimed; which terrible Echo resounded with so much horror and detestation, in the ears of all Loyal hearts that they abhorred the very thoughts of so monstrous and barbarous an Act. And notwithstanding all Remoras being removed,” &c.

The whole of the remainder of the Bloody Court, from these four words which begin its second page to the last sentence in it—thirteen pages in all—is taken almost verbatim from another tract. The title of that tract runs as follows:

“To λειψος των μαρτυρων. Or a Brief Narration of the Mysteries of State carried on by the Spanish Faction in England, etc. Together with a Vindication of the presbyterian party, etc. Printed by Samuel Brown, English Bookseller at the Hague, 1651.” (The British Museum copy is dated by Thomason July 10, 1651.)

The first sentence of the dedicatory epistle prefixed to the Brief Narration forms the first sentence of the Bloody Court. The second italicised passage comes from p. 2 of that epistle. The passage about the two courts, and the passage about Cornet Joyce, come from page 76 of the Brief Narration. Pages 78 to 93 of the Brief Narration form pages 4 to 16 of the Bloody Court. In the transcript of the first page of the latter pamphlet given above, the passages printed in italics are those derived from the Brief Narration, while those in ordinary type represent the additions made by the author of the Bloody Court. An examination of these additions helps to fix the date at which the red pamphlet was put together. The author of the Brief Narration spoke of a faction which “lies” at the helm of the State, and “pretends” to act all for the Protestant religion. The author of the Bloody Court changed these words to “lay” and “pretended,” because when he wrote that faction had been overthrown. It had been defeated by the union of the “honest royalist and sober-minded presbyter,” the two parties whose co-operation effected the Restoration. That the Bloody Court was written later than 1658 the reference to Cromwell as “our late usurping tyrant” plainly shows. An additional indication of the date is supplied by the pseudonym assumed by the author, who describes himself as a “rural pen.” Mr. Thorpe thinks it probable that the author was Admiral Sir William Penn, who half revealed his identity through the choice of this phrase. In reality, however, the pseudonym is that of a very popular author, Robert Wild, who published in April, 1660, a poem called “Iter Boreale. Attempting something upon the Successful and Matchless March of the Lord General George Monck, from Scotland to London, the last winter etc. By a Rural Pen. London, printed on St. George’s Day being the 23d of April, 1660.”

No poem was ever more popular. “He is the very Withers of the city,” writes Dryden of Wild in 1668:

“They have bought more editions of his works than would serve to lay under all their pies at the Lord Mayors Christmas. When his famous poem first came out in the year 1660, I have seen them read it in the midst of Change time. Nay, so vehement were they at it, that they lost their bargain by the candles ends.” (Dryden, “Of Dramatic Poesy.”)

The author or the publisher of the Bloody Court wished to avail himself of this immense popularity, and adopted Wild’s title in order to sell his catchpenny tract.

A closer examination of the title-page of the Bloody Court renders it still more certain that it was published after the Restoration. The title-page is a very remarkable and characteristic piece of composition:

THE BLOODY COURT;

or,

THE FATAL TRIBUNALL:

Being

A brief History, and true Narrative, of the strange designs, wicked plots, and bloody Conspiracies, carried on by the most sordid’st, vile and usurping Tyrants, in these late years of Oppressions, Tyranny, Martyrdom, and Persecutions:

Discovering

I. The poysonous Asps, King-killing Basilisks, weeping Hypocrites, and devouring Caterpillars, who in their Damnable Treasons have far surpassed the Powder-Conspiracy secretly contriving, but openly acting the Murder of our late Gracious King Charles, the ruine of al. he Royal Issue, the overthrow of all our Laws, the blowing up of all Parliaments, the subverting of the whole State of Government, and the setting up of a confused Babel, watered with the blood of the KING and his People.

- II. An Exact Description of those hard-hearted Belshazzars, infamous Impostors, Luciferian Brats, wicked Schismatics, cruel Hypocrites, desperate Usurpers, Damnable Blood-suckers, both of King and Nobles, who with Iron Hands, and Adamantine Hearts, would also have pulled our present Lord and Sovereign out of the Arms and Embraces of His Loyal and Liege Subjects.
- III. The Bloody Tragedy of all Tragedies, against King, Lords, and Commons; the several Scenes, presenting their most horrid Villanice, and the most barbarous and Tyrannical Massacre that was ever heard of since the World began, consulted amongst the grandees of the Independent Sword-men, against the chief Royalists, and Presbyterians, both Nobles, Gentry, and Citizens; with the manner how it was prevented; and the exposing of those Buff-grandees, and insulting proud Officers, to their Needles, Hammers, Lasts, Slings, Carts and Flails; and all true Subjects to enjoy their Rights.

Printed for G. Horton; And published by a Rural Pen, for general satisfaction.

This title-page is made up of phrases strung together from another pamphlet, called “Cromwell’s bloody slaughter-house or the Damnable Designes laid and practised by him and his Negros in contriving the murther of his sacred Majesty King Charles I. Discovered. By a Person of Honour—London printed for James Davis, and are to be sold at the Grey-hound in St. Paul’s Churchyard, 1660.”

A few selected passages suffice to prove this. “But know, O you nether milstones, you poysonous Aspes, you King-killing Basilisks” (Cromwell’s Bloody Slaughter House, p. 93).

“O ye hardhearted Belshazzars . . . if you were angels from heaven as you are Luciferian brats from Hell” (p. 42).

“Sanguinary Schismatics, cruel Hypocrites, and desperate Usurpers” (p. 37).

“To seize again upon his Majesties person without any pretended authority, and with your Iron hands and adamantine hearts to ravish and pull him out of the arms and embraces of his subjects” (p. 23).

“The tragedy of tragedies” (p. 31).

“Forcing their Buffe grandees and proud officers to return to their Needles, their Hammers, their Lasts, their Slings, their Carts, and their Flails” (p. 32).

It would not be difficult to increase greatly the number of similar parallels, but these suffice to prove that the title-page of the Bloody Court is derived from the text of Cromwell’s Bloody Slaughter House. The author of the latter pamphlet was Dr. John Gauden, who reprinted it in 1661, with his name attached to it, under the new title of “Στρατοστρηλειευτιον.” A just Invective against those of the Army and their abettors who murdered King Charles I. on the 30 Jan., 1648.”

Taking these facts together, the date, the purpose, and the value of the red pamphlet become perfectly clear. It was published in the summer or the early autumn of 1660. As its object was to excite popular feeling against the regicides, it was pretty certainly published before their trials in October, 1660. The title-page is clearly Gauden’s own work, and it is probable that the account of the King’s execution given in the body of the pamphlet was also by him. The earlier pamphlet from which it was derived, the Brief Narration, published in 1651, does not, as a whole, seem to have been written by him; but he may very well have contributed to it the particular portion which he thought worthy of republication in 1660. In any case, the red pamphlet is not a contemporary authority, but a later compilation; and the account of the King's execution was not written till more than two years after his death. If, as I believe, both title-page and pamphlet were written by Gauden, no statement contained in it can be received without independent confirmation.

C. H. FIRTH.

THE NEWLY DISCOVERED POEMS OF HERODAS.
London: Sept. 7, 1891.

Mr. Kenyon, in the interesting introduction just issued with the recently discovered poems of Herodas, observes, with regard to their date:

"A father, in attempting to educate his very refractory son, is said γραμματίζειν Μάρωνα αὐτῶ, and this one would certainly be naturally disposed to regard as a reference to Virgil. The context seems to imply that the name was a familiar one, and one which would naturally occur in a boy's education, conditions which do not seem to be fulfilled by the Maron mentioned in Homer (Od. ix. 197) or Euripides (Cyclops, 141, 412, &c.)"

It is necessary, however, to adduce a portion of the context, and this I quote simply as printed:*

τριθημεροι Μαρωνα γραμματίζουσιν του πατρος αυτου τον Μαρωνα εφοισησεν ουτος Σιμων ο χρηστος ωστ ερωγ ισα ουουν ερωτην ητις ουκ ουουσ Βοσκιω ευτον διδασκα (p. 21).

I would venture to suggest that the Maron here intended is Maron the satyr, and son of Silenus, mentioned by Nonnus (xiv. 97 sqq. et al.). The change of Maron into Simon, "the flat-nosed," or "pug-nosed," may thus be easily accounted for from a well-known characteristic of both the Satyrs and Silenus. A statue or other representation of Maron may have made the peculiarity in question conspicuous. The lesson which the father tries in vain to give his son would appear to be concerned only with the name "Maron."

Another matter which may be worth mentioning is the analogy which, in certain respects, presents itself between the first poem of Herodas as now given, and Horace's ode (iii. 7) "Quid fies, Asterie, quem tibi candidi," &c. The long absence of the lover, the competitive distinctions gained by his rival, and other particulars, may suggest the possibility, at least, that Horace had this poem of Herodas in view when writing the ode in question. That the ode was composed under special Greek influence has been long suspected.

THOMAS TYLER.

THE EGYPTIAN "APE."

London, W.C.: Sept. 12, 1891.

I read in this morning's ACADEMY (p. 221) that the evidence of Egyptian inscriptions shows "that the Hebrew name for 'ape' was borrowed from Egypt, and also that the animal in question was a tailless baboon, and not a monkey proper."

I enclose herewith a picture of the animal in question as represented in the tomb of Tebahen, a high official at the court of King Mykerinos, for whom the third Pyramid was built, more than 2500 years before Christ. Here the animal's name is written Kaf, above his picture, just as KHIIEN is written over the same kind of animal in the mosaic at Palestrina, a sketch of which may be seen in Dr. Smith's Bible Dictionary.

But how could this animal be called a tailless baboon? He is rightly identified by Hartmann with the African cercopithecus.

P. W. P. RENOUF.

[We believe that the mistake was ours, and not that of the author of the paper referred to.—ED. ACADEMY.]

* It should be observed that the MS. employs ι instead of α.

SCIENCE.

Lessons in Elementary Biology. By T. Jeffery Parker, Professor of Biology in the University of Otago. (Macmillans.)

PROF. JEFFERY PARKER'S new handbook appears to mark the commencement of a reaction against the excessive use of the "type-system" in the teaching of biology; and on this account, if on no other, it is to be heartily welcomed. That system has largely owed its popularity to Huxley and Martin's Elementary Biology, a work the value of which cannot be over-rated in its influence on practical biological teaching. But we doubt whether its authors ever contemplated that its general adoption would result in practically limiting instruction in the elementary biological laboratory to the types which they had themselves chosen. I think there will hardly be two opinions among practical teachers that the general result of this limitation has been disastrous. The number of "types" which the student has to "get up" for his practical examination in botany and zoology is at present so small that generalisations are well-nigh impossible; and what he gains in minute knowledge of a few organisms he loses in breadth and in insight into general laws—a loss almost fatal to the chance of his acquiring a profound knowledge of his subject. It is true that the University of London, which has unfortunately framed its examinations on this system, has attempted to remedy some of its defects by changing the "types" from time to time; but this does not strike at the root of the evil.

In his modest preface, Prof. Parker states that his aim has been to provide a book which may supply in the study the place occupied in the laboratory by "Huxley and Martin;" but it may well be used for both purposes. Instead of limiting himself to half-a-dozen plants and half-a-dozen animals, he gives the student a more or less full account of the structure and life-history of a much larger number, from the simplest to the most highly organised, interspersed with chapters on general subjects, such as "Biogenesis and Abiogenesis," "Species and Their Origin: the Principles of Classification," "The Distinctive Characters of Animals and Plants," &c. The plan is a good one, and is admirably carried out.

Where there is so much that is excellent, it may seem almost invidious to refer to portions in which, as it seems to me, the same high standard is not attained. The tendency to direct the almost exclusive attention of students to the phenomena presented by the lower forms of both animal and vegetable life has been carried to excess by some teachers belonging to the new physiological school; and by none more than by the author of this book. Surely, in a work on elementary biology, to devote only nineteen pages to the anatomy and physiology of Vertebrata, and only twelve to that of flowering plants, is altogether inadequate. I cannot also but think that, as far at least as regards Vascular Cryptogams and Phanerogams, Prof. Parker has not bestowed the same attention on this as on other portions of the work. The treatment is not only far too condensed, but there are not a few statements the accuracy of which he would find it difficult to defend.

It remains to say a few words about the illustrations. Many of these are new, from drawings by the author; and they are, on the whole, the best with which I am acquainted in any work of the kind. Taken altogether, Prof. Jeffery Parker's Lessons in Elementary Biology is a work which can be safely recommended, and is one which neither teacher nor student can afford to be without.

ALFRED W. BENNETT.

THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS.

THE following is a brief statement of the principal results of the recent Oriental Congress:—

Summaries of research up to date were submitted in various departments, among which the most noteworthy are those of Prof. Vasconcellos-Abreu, for Sanskrit; Prof. Montet, for Hebrew; Prof. René Basset, for Arabic; Dr. Ziemer, for Comparative Philology; Prof. Cordier, for Sinology; Prof. Amélineau, for Egyptology; Capt. Guiraudon, for African Languages since 1883; Mr. J. J. Meyer, for Malayan; and Col. Huart, for Turkish.

The following explorations were brought under notice:—Those of M. Claine in the interior of Sumatra; the finds and conclusions of Mr. Flinders Petrie at Madam; the discovery of the first Previdian prehistoric pictures and remains at Bellary, by Mr. F. Fawcett; the contested report regarding a dwarf race in the North of Africa, by Mr. Haliburton; the Oriental features of numerous monuments and tombs in Majorca and Minorca, by M. Cartailhac; the Cyclopean remains in Polynesia, by Mr. H. Sterndale; and the Lybian inscriptions of Capt. Malix.

Among the 160 papers that were contributed, the most noteworthy, perhaps, are: "The Creation by the Voice and the Hermapolitan Ennead," by Prof. Maspero; "The Identity of the Pelasgians and the Hittites proved by Ceramic Remains," by Father C. A. de Cara; "The Order, Historians, and Registers of the Holy Sepulchre," by the Abbé Albouy; "Indian Theogony," by Prof. G. Oppert, of Madras, showing non-Aryan sources; "The History and Practice of Hindu Medical Science," by Pandit Janardhan, illustrated by several collections of native drugs made by himself and others, and accompanied by two unique Sanskrit MSS.; "The Ancient Tshampa" and "French Colonial Education," by M. E. Aymonier; Expositions of Indian and Japanese Music; the Linguistic Basis of the Shawl and other Eastern Manufactures, by Profs. Leitner and Schlegel; a series of papers on Central Asia, Afghanistan, and Dardistan, by Drs. Bellew and Leitner, Mr. R. Michell, Colonel Tanner, and a number of Central Asian chiefs and Indian or Kashmir explorers. Oriental folklore has also, probably for the first time, been included in the programme, forming a connecting link with the forthcoming Folk-Lore Congress.

Among other new departures may be mentioned—the inclusion of comparative law and legal administration in Oriental countries; the condition of indigenous oriental education; the importance of ethnography in philological studies, illustrated by papers from Prof. G. Schlegel, Mr. C. Johnston, M. G. Reynaud, Dr. Leitner, M. Pret, and the Rev. Dr. C. Edkins. Prof. Abel's Indo-Egyptian affinities have received confirmation from Pasteur Fesquet's contribution on "The Phonetic Relations of the Hebrew and Indo-European Languages," Mr. R. Michell's treatise on "The Russian Verb," and from others, including Mr. Stuart Glennie.

Mr. Vincent A. Smith submitted a "progress report" on Numismatics, which brings this subject up to date; and Mr. W. Simpson gave an account of the progress of Oriental archaeology since 1874, when the Oriental Congress paid its first visit to London. The Graeco-Buddhistic and other art collections at the Working Museum have led to valuable communications on Oriental art and ethnography; and Prof. J. Oppert settled the date of an inscribed Assyrian brick in the Blau collection as being 668 B.C. The commercial importance of Oriental linguistics has been emphasised, and the co-operation of the London Chamber of Commerce has been secured towards the founding of an Oriental commercial school in the City of London. Prizes in various Oriental subjects have been offered; and a society for the cultivation of Japanese, and another for Semitic languages, are in course of formation in London.

The relations of Europeans with Orientals, especially those between Orientalists and native scholars, including their respective methods of research, have been considered by Sir Richard Meade, Generals Dennehy and Showers, and others; and proposals for the encouragement of Oriental studies have been made for the Universities, the Christian ministry, the Scotch Commission on Examinations in Arts, the Oriental University Institute Examinations, and for various countries which, whether in Europe or even in the East itself, neglect the cultivation of ancient learning for its own sake, or in its relation to modern requirements. Drs. Wright, Adams, and Witton-Davies took an active part in this matter, and the last-named advocated the holding of an annual Oriental Congress in England.

In Oriental history, Dr. Schlichter's "Indian Ocean in Antiquity," the Rev. Prof. Skarsted's "Phoenician Colonisation of Scandinavia," Dr. A. C. Lincke's "Continuance of the Names Assyria and Niniveh," Dr. W. Hein's "Omar II," Dr. Schlichter's "History of African Explorations," Mr. Hordern's "Episode in Burmese History" may be referred to.

Among special questions of research, "The Assyrian Pronoun," by the veteran scholar, Mr. Richard Cull; "Cussari (11)," by Dr. Friedländer; "Pirke Aboth," by the Rev. Dr. C. Taylor; "The Hymns of St. Ephraim in Syriac," by Monsignor Lamy; "Syriac Diacritical Points," by the Abbé Graffin; "Yahveh," by Dr. Strauss; "Vital Statistics among the Ancient Jews," by Dr. M. Adler; the Book "Kohleth," by Prof. Myrberg; the "Himyarite Inscription No. 32 in the British Museum," by Prof. H. Derenbourg—follow the lines of previous Oriental Congresses. Prof. Jules Oppert's paper on "The Chronology of Genesis," also attracted much attention.

As usual, the Congress was inundated by proposals regarding the transliteration of Oriental languages. Foremost among them was one by Sir Monier Williams, who was not a member of the Congress. They have all been referred to a committee, but it is to be distinctly understood that they are not in any way to displace the native characters.

Among the governments that have taken a special interest in the Congress are those of Spain, Italy, France, Russia, and Greece. The Colonial Office sent a representative, who spoke on "Fiji and Rotuman." The Lieutenant-Governor of Adelaide, the Hon. S. J. Way, represented its University; and the Deputy Vice-Chancellor gave the Congress an official reception at Cambridge. Altogether nine governments and thirty-eight universities and learned bodies were represented.

Two invitations reached the Congress for next year, one from the Spanish and the other from the French Government. The former was accepted; and the Statutory Tenth International Congress of Orientalists will accordingly be held at Seville and Granada in September or the beginning of October 1892, following the festivities in connexion with the fifth centenary of the departure of Columbus from Huelva and the assembly of the Congress of Americanists and Geographers at Madrid. The Oriental University Institute has assigned two prizes, one of Rs.5000, the other of Rs.5000 to the Spanish organising committee, to be awarded for translations from Sanskrit and Arabic respectively.

SCIENCE NOTES.

PROF. KARL PEARSON, of University College, London, has now sent to press two books, which represent the results of much of his private work during the past half-dozen years. One is the second part of Todhunter's History of the Theory of Elasticity and the Strength of Materials, to be published by the Cambridge University Press. This will form a bulky volume of more than a thousand pages, dealing with recent researches in this field down to Sir William Thomson, to whose work the last chapter is devoted. A complete history is given for the years 1850 to 1860, involving an analysis of several hundreds of memoirs; and the researches of Saint-Venant, Rankine, Joule, Wertheim, Wiedemann, Kirchoff, &c., are very fully dealt with up to date. The other book covers the same ground as the introductory course of lectures which Prof. Pearson recently delivered as reader in geometry at Gresham College. Its contents will practically be identical with those of a volume announced as long ago as 1886 for the International Scientific Series, under the title of The Common Sense of the Physical Sciences; but it will now appear in the Contemporary Science Series, published by Mr. Walter Scott. Its main object is to question the fundamental notions of modern physics, showing that there has been an unnecessary and unwarrantable intrusion of metaphysics into the sphere of science. To some extent, therefore, it will constitute a reply to the presidential address of Prof. Oliver Lodge at the recent meeting of the British Association.

FINE ART.

THE ITALIAN PICTURES AT MUNICH AND DRESDEN.

"KUNSTKRITISCHE STUDIEN ÜBER ITALIENISCHE MALEREI."—Die Galerien zu München und Dresden. Von Ivan Lermolieff. (Leipzig: Brockhaus.)

In considering this volume—the latest and ripest product of Giovanni Morelli's lifelong studies and of his enthusiastic devotion to the great art of Italy in her prime—we are first penetrated with the keenest regret at the thought that the most commanding, the most sympathetic, personality in the world of art criticism and art history has vanished; and vanished, too, just at the wrong moment. For Lermolieff, with a commendable modesty which it would be hard to parallel, whether among predecessors or contemporaries, commenced his career as a writer only when, at nearly sixty years of age, he had already attained to complete maturity of experience and judgment. Now, in the fulness of years, but without having said all, or nearly all, that he had to say, he disappears, having exercised during the decade between 1880 and 1890 a penetrating and transforming influence, which it would be vain even for his most uncompromising opponents to deny; having abashed and silenced many a self-assertive paradox-monger, many a trumpeter of his own fame, but leaving necessarily much unaccomplished that now time and the labours of those following in his footsteps can alone achieve.

It is a bitter disappointment, moreover, to learn, from Morelli's literary executor and fellow-worker, Dr. Gustavo Frizzoni, that the final volume of this altogether revised and transformed edition of the work which first made him famous—that which would have dealt nominally with the gallery of Berlin, and derivatively with such of the Raphael and so-called Raphael drawings in public and private collections as Lermolieff had not yet pronounced upon—will not, as had at first been hoped, see the light. Reverence for the memory of his friend and master prevents Dr. Frizzoni from placing before the public in an incomplete and confused shape Morelli's voluminous notes for this the last part of his task, which must thus definitively remain unfinished.

In his modest preface the deceased writer states that "apart from some information with regard to the almost unknown Bergamasque painter, Giovanni Cariani, and a detailed examination of the interesting pen-and-ink drawings of the Venetian Domenico Campagnola . . . the friendly reader must not expect to find much novelty in the present volume."

He goes on to add that he has therein entered upon a more exhaustive discussion of that large class of Northern, and chiefly Flemish, paintings which, both in public and private galleries, have long passed as the work of Italian masters. But this is a singular, almost a misleading, understatement of the true value and contents of the revised book. For it contains, in addition to the new material specially referred to by the author, an important section dealing in masterly fashion with the drawings of Verrocchio, and with the vexed question of the paintings attributed to Leonardo da Vinci at Dresden and Munich; much that is new with regard to the earliest works of Correggio; solid additions to the remarks on Marco Basaiti, Antonello da Messina, and Giorgione; and some curious and instructive notes with regard to that interesting second-rate painter, the little-known Bartolommeo Veneto, or "de Venecia," as he on one occasion signs himself on a female portrait in the Melzi collection at Milan. Morelli now supplements his observations on Mantegna by a nearly exhaustive list of his paintings on panel and canvas, both in Italy and elsewhere, adding, however, little or nothing to the well-known series, save the very finely conceived and exceptionally interesting "Infant Christ as Salvator Mundi," now in the collection of Dr. Jean-Paul Richter, at Florence. He passes over in silence the "Adoration of the Shepherds" in the Boughton Knight collection—a panel having much analogy with the famous triptych in the Tribuna of the Uffizi, and also with the unfinished engraving by the master, showing the Madonna with her august head haloed by a glory of cherubim.

Neither is any mention made of the large "St. Sebastian" in the church of Notre Dame at Aigueperse in Auvergne, a work not known to the writer of these remarks, but the authenticity of which is unhesitatingly vouched for by M. Paul Mantz and M. Louis Gonse, among other French critics of eminence. This painting would appear to be nearly related to, though not identical in design with, the more than life-size "St. Sebastian" in the Scarpa collection at La Motta near Treviso, which was in Mantegna's studio at his death. Morelli further ascribes, as appears to us quite justifiably, the two "Seasons," purchased for the National Gallery from the Hamilton Palace collection (No. 1125), not to the master himself, but to an able imitator; and he takes away from him, too, the well-known drawing with the design for a monument to Virgil, now in the His de la Salle gallery of the Louvre, giving it to Francesco Bonsignori. To the latter painter, if indeed it be he who executed the large tempera in the Brera gallery representing San Bernardino of Siena, we should like to attribute the large "Madonna and Child" given to Mantegna in the collection of the Earl of Wemyss, and exhibited some years since at Burlington House. To the section dealing with Jacopo de Barbari, which was one of the most noticeable passages in the first edition, is now added a note indicating five drawings attributed by the author to this ultimately Germanised Venetian, including the exquisite black-chalk study of a Venetian youth, now, with another similar drawing, in the Habich collection at Cassel. A very precious discovery, or rather identification, is that of a drawing by Antonello da Messina in the great Malcolm collection—the only one, it is believed, which can at present be attributed to the famous Siculo-Venetian master. This is the masterly portrait of a man with rough-hewn features, which, as Morelli points out, has evidently served as a preliminary study for the "Condottiere" in the Salon Carré of the Louvre. It is No. 342 in the catalogue of the Malcolm collection, and has been reproduced by Messrs. Braun, and also in the present work. It is, of course, by a mere oversight that in the short paragraph on Cima de Conegliano the author states that the Louvre possesses no work by him; seeing that in the large side gallery there, in which are placed by themselves the works belonging to the early Italian schools, appears an important if not precisely a very attractive "Virgin and Child," with a fine background showing the Castle of Conegliano in a hilly landscape, the authenticity of which is surely altogether beyond question.

Morelli is nowhere more at home than in analysing, as he does in his own sympathetic and convincing style, the artistic personality of his fellow-townsmen, the Bergamasque painter Giovanni Busi called Cariani, a master who is represented in our own National Gallery only by a lamentably inferior and misleading "Virgin and Child, with Saints," though recently there has also been tentatively ascribed to him, the well-known "St. Peter, Martyr," from the Holwell-Carr collection—a work which has far more affinity with the school of the Brescian Romanino. One of the Morellian audacities against which even some of his friends and disciples were inclined to rebel was the attribution of the powerful Giorgionesque portrait in the Munich gallery, there called "Palma Vecchio by Himself," to Cariani, for whom it appeared too masterly a performance. But now, by a further analysis of this work, and, above all, by its comparison and juxtaposition in reproduction with a recognised canvas by Busi—that mysterious fantasy in the Belvedere of Vienna, showing a youth crowned with vine leaves attacked from behind by an armed man—the gifted critic has gone very far towards proving his case. It would appear that the fine "Madonna with Saints," now in the Frizzoni-Salis collection at Bergamo, was purchased for our National Gallery as a Palma Vecchio by the late Sir Charles Eastlake, but that on the signature of Cariani being discovered on a cartellino which had been painted over, it was exchanged for the large altarpiece by Cosimo Tura (No. 772) now in the gallery. The present writer would like to add to the list of works painted by Cariani in his Giorgionesque phase the injured but still brilliant "Holy Family with St. Catherine and St. Sebastian," in the great gallery of the Louvre (No. 38), where it always has been and still is ascribed to Giorgione himself. It is only fair, however, to add that Morelli himself, while denying that Barbarelli had any share in the work declined to acknowledge the correctness of this last attribution.

It is to the researches of our author and of his faithful and able lieutenant, Dr. Frizzoni, that we owe the clearing up of the mystery which surrounded the early career and artistic training of Correggio, during the period which preceded the production of that great "Madonna and Child enthroned, with St. Francis and St. Anthony of Padua" (1514), which is at once the earliest in date and the best of the Lombard master's often-cited works in the Dresden Gallery. To the productions of Allegri's youth enumerated in the first edition, Morelli now adds the following:—

(1) The beautiful little "Faun" in the Munich Gallery, which he in his first edition took away from Correggio and gave to his favourite, Lorenzo Lotto, but now in repentance restores to its rightful owner; (2) the small "Christ taking leave of the Virgin," in the collection of Mr. Benson, which, in depth of pathos and simple dramatic force, far exceeds his later and more important sacred compositions, and, indeed, stands out in strange contrast to such works—marvels of technical skill, but of an almost repulsive mannerism—as the "Deposition" and the "Martyrdom of St. Placidus and Sta. Flavia" in the Parma Gallery; (3) the "Nativity," which passed from an English collection into that of Signor Benigno Crespi of Milan, and which Lermolieff holds to be the brightest jewel among all the productions of Allegri's youth; (4) an injured "Madonna and Child," belonging to Prince Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen; and the more important altarpiece in the collection of Lord Ashburton, with Martha and Mary Magdalen between St. Peter and St. Leonard.

Comparatively little is added to the great Giorgione question beyond what was brought forward in the quite recent treatise on the Borghese and Panfilii Doria galleries. Still the present volume contains useful though imperfect reproductions of the "Maltese Knight" in the Uffizi, of the "Female Portrait" newly identified by Morelli in the Borghese gallery, and of the beautiful "Portrait of a Venetian Youth," which has, since the publication of this edition, passed from the collection of Dr. Jean-Paul Richter in Florence into the Berlin gallery, instead of into our own, by which it appears that it might at one time have been acquired. Here also is the reproduction of a sepia drawing, "The Martyrdom of a Saint," from Chatsworth, which the author counts among the few authentic drawings of Barbarelli.

Never before has the difficulty of discriminating between the drawings of Titian—which are of altogether inexplicable rarity—and those much more numerous ones of his skilful imitator Domenico Campagnola, been so grasped and solved as on the present occasion. Contrasting the delicate and highly-wrought studies of Campagnola with such broad and masterly drawings of Titian as the "Jealous Nobleman assassinating his Wife"—a study for the fresco in the Scuola del Santo of Padua—and the "St. Jerome" in the British Museum, Morelli establishes, in a few short and decisive paragraphs, the radical differences lurking underneath the family likeness between the designs of the two contemporary Venetians, and fixes landmarks which will serve to abolish confusion in the future. Among a long series of drawings which he takes from Titian in order to restore them to their rightful author, we may single out the "Rustic Concert," in the Malcolm collection, which has been variously attributed to Giorgione and to Titian, and which contains a very evident reminiscence of the famous "Concert champêtre" by the former in the Salon Carré of the Louvre. We are tempted to wish that this admirably clear exposition had included the drawings by and ascribed to Giorgione himself, and the few Giorgionesque engravings on copper of his follower and copyist, Giulio Campagnola.

The most important section of the whole work is perhaps that dealing with the vexed question of the Verrocchio drawings, and with the two works respectively in the Dresden and Munich galleries, attributed to Leonardo da Vinci himself by an imposing array of German, as well as by some French, critics, but by Lermolieff fearlessly declared to be the work of one of that, to him, hateful tribe, the Flemish and German imitators of the Italian art of the Renaissance. Few unbiassed students, after due consideration of Lermolieff's arguments, and, above all, after a careful examination of the undoubted products of Verrocchio's pencil here reproduced, will refuse to agree with him that the so-called Sketch-Book attributed to the great Florentine—the separated leaves of which are now in the Louvre, the British Museum, the collections of Berlin and Lille, and that of the Duc d'Aumale—belongs to another and an infinitely inferior artist. The question is, however, a too purely technical one to be adequately discussed within the limits of the present remarks.

It is, however, in dealing with the "Madonna and Child" in the Dresden Gallery—once given to Leonardo and now to Lorenzo di Credi—and with the similar but larger work recently unearthed by the learned director of the Munich Gallery, and at his instigation added to that collection, that Morelli shows his fullest powers. His generous indignation knows no bounds at the slight put upon the most universal genius of the Italian Renaissance, the great central sun of Milanese art, by the Berlin and Munich Gallery directors; and closely grappling with them in argument, he, in this contest, as, indeed, in many preceding encounters, fairly blows them out of the water. It is partly proceeding by a close examination of the pièces de conviction, partly aided by the flashes of his own brilliant intuition, that Lermolieff has established the connexion between the Dresden and the Munich Madonnas. Both, as he points out, must in all probability have been produced by the same painstaking Flemish pasticheur, on whom, by the way, he, in his wrath, is far too hard; for the well-abused Fiammingo, in the execution of much of the detail, shows a quite remarkable delicacy and finish. From the first, the recently brought forward Munich example had excited suspicion, from the fact that it combined with figures savouring of Verrocchio the master, or of the quite early Florentine time of Leonardo the pupil, an Alpine landscape of the type which is to be found only in the later or Milanese style, and in the second Florentine manner of the greater painter. For all this, not only the chief authorities of Berlin and Munich, but some French writers of note, including M. de Geymüller (in the Gazette des Beaux Arts) have declared themselves in favour of the audacious attribution to Leonardo himself. There can be little doubt, however, that in time the truer appreciation of Giovanni Morelli will receive the sanction of the vast majority of unprejudiced students of Italian art, and that the "Madonnas" of Dresden and Munich will go to swell the list made up of that class of works to which Lermolieff was the first seriously to call attention—i.e. the numerous and often, to the casual observer, deceptive imitations and adaptations of Italian art by sixteenth-century Netherlanders and Germans. Morelli appropriately closes this important section of his volume with an enumeration of some of the most striking among these northern imitations of southern masters. This catalogue might, however, easily be doubled, were it worth while to do so, now that the pioneer, whose loss, both as friend and teacher, his numerous and devoted followers must continue deeply and sincerely to regret, has led the way in this by-road, as in so many of the chief high roads of his national art.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FALKLAND PALACE.

London: Sept. 9, 1891.

When this ancient royal residence became the property of the Marquis of Bute some years ago, it was generally hoped that it had fallen into good hands. The building, apart from its great historic interest, was one of the few picturesque fragments of architecture left in Scotland worthy to rank with anything of the kind in England or abroad.

Lord Bute is widely known as an antiquary; hence the expectation on the part of some interested in such matters, that the building would be well cared for. Whether his lordship has proved himself an archaeologist in the best sense, or a true lover of architecture, according to the admirable definition of one of the speakers at the Archaeological Congress in Edinburgh (the Bishop of Carlisle, I think), would appear to be doubtful. All who knew Falkland Palace before the year 1889 must have observed the marvellous colouring on the roof of the wing built by King James V. The massive old slates, as the centuries rolled over them, had become clothed or encrusted with some such growth as one sees on the rocks by the seashore, a rich golden tint that vied with anything to be seen in nature on a sunny day in autumn. These slates have lately disappeared, and a neat modern roof now rises above the weather-worn walls and battered pinnacles of the great hall. It is probable that the weight of the old slates bore heavily on the structure below; but if so, some internal support might have been devised to meet the emergency. As it is, the building has been stripped of one of its greatest beauties.

Another alteration, or "restoration," is the insertion of several dormer windows on both sides of the said new roof. They are built of a cold pinkish stone, brought, I believe, from a great distance, and (whatever appearance they may present in a century or two) their colour is utterly out of harmony with the rich dark tone of the surrounding masonry. Though they are said to be an exact copy from some old design or picture, it is difficult for the ordinary spectator to look upon them as anything but an unwelcome and meaningless addition.

Passing on to the older part of the Palace—the two round towers with their conical roofs, flanking the gateway—which probably existed in the Duke of Albany's time, old acquaintances will here rub their eyes again, as the sky-line has been entirely altered by the new proprietor. The sturdy turrets, instead of finishing with the familiar broad and low points, the most characteristic features of the old piles, are now furnished with high peaked roofs in the approved Scottish baronial style—all quite correct, no doubt, according to the rules of the architectural handbook.

The truth is, to be consistent, this principle should be carried a great deal further. Why not demolish the "modern" structure of James V., which, albeit most charming as an artistic contrast to the older building, is manifestly a departure from the original designs? We should then have a fine new castle as nearly as possible similar to that of the fourteenth century, with battlements, moat, and drawbridge, and perhaps a fair reproduction of the dungeon in which the Duke of Rothesay was starved to death. Though of course shunned by artists and such-like, the structure would then have a certain educational value.

I am painfully conscious that no amount of writing or talking can effect anything in this particular case; but there is no reason why the owners of buildings of national interest should not be made to realise that their actions are jealously watched and, if need be, criticised. Had any such transformations been attempted, for instance, at Holyrood Palace, or even Roslin Chapel, there would probably have been a public outcry at once; but these buildings have the advantage as to situation over Falkland, hidden as it is in a comparatively obscure corner of Fife.

It is many months since I last saw Falkland Palace, and there may be other surprises in store for the traveller to that secluded spot; but I for one have not yet recovered from the disagreeable effects of my last visit. Possibly reports of subsequent (and future) operations may be forthcoming from time to time by disinterested correspondents. It seems a strange coincidence that these venerable remains of the "favourite hunting-seat" of the early Scottish kings should have been destined to afford a "happy hunting-ground" in these latter days for a distinguished antiquary, possessing not only theories, but the power, so seldom accorded, of putting any theory into execution.

ROBERT LITTLE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHÆOLOGY.

MR. WALTER CRANE'S Christmas book for this winter, to be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co., is entitled Queen Summer; or the Tourney of the Lily and the Rose. It will consist of forty pages of designs printed in colour, together with letterpress by Mr. Crane himself.

THE committee of the Birmingham Museum and Art Gallery have recently acquired for their permanent collections several pictures by well-known artists, including "The Adoration of the Magi," by Burne Jones; "A Roman Lady," by G. F. Watts; "The Last of England," by Ford Madox Brown; "Beata Beatrix," by D. G. Rossetti; "The Doubtful Coin," by J. F. Lewis; "The Widow's Mite," by Sir J. E. Millais; "The Falls of Schaffhausen," by Turner; and water-colour drawings by Aumonier, Albert Goodwin, Mrs. Allingham, and others. These works will be exhibited for the first time at the end of the present month. In addition to these, Mr. Whitworth Wallis has been fortunate enough to obtain the loan of some of the most famous examples of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood and their followers. Among the most important of these loans may be mentioned "The Vale of Rest," "Mariana in the Moated Grange," "The Blind Girl," "The Proscribed Royalist," "The Baptism of Guthrum," and "Greenwich Pensioners," by Sir J. E. Millais; "Strayed Sheep," "The Scape Goat," "Isabella and her Basil Pot," and "The Shadow of Death," by Holman Hunt; "The Damozel of the Holy Grail," "Sir Tristram and la Belle Iscalt," and "Sir Galahad," by Rossetti; "Flamma Vestalis," "Flora," and "The Wheel of Fortune," by Burne Jones; "Cairo" and "The Dancers," by J. F. Lewis; "Death Crowning Innocence," by G. F. Watts; "Chatterton," by Henry Wallis; "April Love," "St. Agnes Eve," and "The Music Lesson," by Arthur Hughes. Some twenty works by Mr. Ford Madox Brown have also been got together, including "Romeo and Juliet," "Cordelia's Portion," "Sardanapalus," "Romans leaving England," "Haidee and Don Juan," "Stages of Cruelty," "Cromwell and Milton," "The Entombment," "Weights and Measures," and others. The collection will be opened in time for the Musical Festival at Birmingham in the beginning of October.

SIR WILLIAM BRADDON, agent-general for Tasmania, has issued an invitation to English artists to send their works to the exhibition which will be opened at Launceston, Tasmania, on November 25.

M. CHARLES MEISSONIER, son of the late painter, has announced his intention of presenting his father's studio and all that it contains to the State, in order to form a Meissonier museum in the place where the last of his works were executed.

THE STAGE.
STAGE NOTES.

MR. PINERO'S new play, which bears the title of "The Times," is now being rehearsed at Terry's Theatre. For the first time, the printed book of the play will be sold at the theatre on the night of its production. It forms the first number of the series of Mr. Pinero's plays, which Mr. Heinemann is going to issue monthly in uniform style. The first performance of "The Times" will take place about the middle of next month, and the date of the production when fixed will therefore be also the date of publication of the book. The second volume of the series, containing "The Profligate," will be published on the corresponding date in November, and so on.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS
TO
THE ACADEMY.
(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.
Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.
NEW YEARLY VOLUME.

Just ready, royal 8vo, about 900 pages, with 500 Illustrations, cloth, 8s.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE, 1891.

containing "The Witch of Prague," "A Fantastic Tale," by F. Marion Crawford, and stories by Archibald Forbes, Mrs. Clifford, D. Christie Murray, Henry Herman, and others—Sketches of Eton, Harrow, Winchester among our Public Schools, and of Ham House, Fawsley Park, of Westminster and Teckesbury Abbeys, and many other places of interest. Among the numerous miscellaneous articles may be mentioned "The New Trade Unions," with many portraits—An article by the Bishop of Bedford on "Working Men's Clubs"—On the Russo-Jewish Emigrant, by the Rev. S. Singer—Together with Poems by A. C. Swinburne, Lewis Morris, and Alfred Austin.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CHEAPER EDITION OF MR. MARION CRAWFORD'S NOVELS.
Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A CIGARETTE MAKER'S ROMANCE. By F. Marion CRAWFORD, Author of "Khaled," "The Witch of Prague," &c., &c.

NEW VOLUMES OF MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.
Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

MRS. LORIMER. | A FAMILY AFFAIR.
By LUCAS MALET. | By HUGH CONWAY.

NEW VOLUMES OF MACMILLAN'S CLASSICAL SERIES.
Just ready, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

PLAUTUS.—CAPTIVI. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, A. R. S. HALLIDIE, M.A., late Junior Student of Christ Church, Oxford.

Just ready, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THUCYDIDES.—BOOK II. Edited, with Introduction, Critical Notes, and Commentary, by E. C. MARCHANT, M.A., Assistant Master at St. Paul's School.

* * * This edition will contain a new collation of the British Museum MS. M. The introduction to the text will be arranged on the lines of Cobet's school edition of "Lysias."

NEW VOLUME OF MACMILLAN'S HISTORY PRIMERS.
Just ready, 18mo, cloth, 1s.

ANALYSIS of ENGLISH HISTORY. By T. F. Tout, M.A., Professor of Modern History, Owens College, Manchester.

BY J. B. LOCK, M.A.
Just ready, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

MECHANICS for BEGINNERS. Part I. Mechanics of Solids. Part II. Mechanics of Fluids. By the Rev. J. B. LOCK, M.A., Author of "Arithmetic for Schools," &c.
* * * An introductory book which, it is hoped, may be found useful both in schools and by students preparing for the elementary stage of the Science and Art and other public examinations.

MACMILLAN & Co., LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.
BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIECES. Also, TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.
CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.—SOLE ADDRESS—11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.
MISS MAXWELL'S AFFECTIONS.

By RICHARD PRYCE.
Author of "The Quiet Mrs. Fleming," &c.
2 vols., crown 8vo.

DUMARESQ'S DAUGHTER.
By GRANT ALLEN.
Author of "The Tents of Shem."
3 vols., crown 8vo. (Oct. 1.)

LIFE OF JAMES BOSWELL.
With an Account of his Sayings, Doings, and Writings.
By PERCY FITZGERALD, M.A.
With 4 Portraits. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

LIFE OF JANE WELSH CARLYLE.
By MRS. ALEXANDER IRELAND.
With Portrait and Facsimile Letter. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

* Mrs. Ireland's volume is the best balanced and most authoritative study of Mrs. Carlyle's life that has yet been published. One cannot but be grateful to her. She writes bravely, carefully, and sympathetically. Academy.

NEW BOOK OF HUMOROUS TRAVEL.
TWO GIRLS on a BARGE. By V. Cecil COTES. With 44 Illustrations by F. H. Townsend. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
"A breezy and rollicking narrative."—Times.
"Smartly written."—Globe.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.
ARMOREL of LYONESSE: a Romance of To-day. By WALTER BESANT. With 12 Illustrations by Fred. Barnard.
"Mr. Besant has seldom, if ever, written a better or more interesting story. When we compare it with 'average' fiction, we feel almost inclined to fall down and worship the volume."—Speaker.

THE WONDERFUL ADVENTURES of PHRA the PHOENICIAN. By EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD. With 12 Illustrations by H. M. Paget.
"An admirable piece of work."—Academy.

THE FOUNTAIN of YOUTH: a Novel of Adventure. By ERASMUS DAWSON, M.B. Edited by PAUL DEVON. With 2 Illustrations by Hume Nisbet.
"The Fountain of Youth' is one of the ablest and most entertaining stories of adventure which has been published for a year or two past. The magic of the possible-impossible enhances its fascination."—Academy.

FREELAND: a Social Anticipation.
By Dr. THEODOR HERTZKA. Translated by ARTHUR RANSOM. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Dr. Theodor Hertzka is an author who deserves to be widely known. A journalist and economist by special profession, he now appears before the European public as the author of one of those ideal reconstructions, or rather evolutions of society, which form so characteristic a feature in contemporary literary effort. Dr. Hertzka is not, like most of those who have essayed this kind of imaginative literature, a mere spinner of ingenious fancies. As an economist and thinker of wide acquirements and great natural power, he enjoys a Continental reputation. He has written with the inspiring faith that is in him, and he sets them forth in his preface to 'Freeland,' with a fulness of detail to which it is impossible for us to do justice in a brief note." Echo.

LESSONS in ART. By Hume Nisbet.
With 22 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.
"A readable little volume. The author has endeavoured to write out some of the strictly necessary rules and laws of drawing and painting for the use of students, so that they may be able to work at home, and spare their masters a number of questions if they are at art schools. The book deals with drawing and painting in water and oil-colour, and concludes with 'Hints on General Art.' Art students will, no doubt, find the little work helpful, and the general reader may dip into it with pleasure."—Poll-Mag. Gaz.

DAGONET DIETIES. By George R. SIMS. Crown 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

"The satirical humour, the playful extravagance, and the skilful knack of versifying which he brings to bear upon topics of the hour—political, social, judicial, and military—will afford abundant entertainment."—D. by News.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, Piccadilly, W.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand.

LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

ILLA HUN, KAHUN, and GUROB (1889-90). By W. M. FLINDERS-PETRIE 4to, 59 pp., double columns, 32 Full-Page Plates, containing upwards of 500 representations of Inscriptions, Objects of Pottery and Jewellery, Scarabs, &c. 16s. net.

THE WOMEN of TURKEY, and their FOLK-LORE. By LUCY M. J. GARNETT. With concluding Chapters on the Origins of Patriarchy by J. S. STUART-GLENNIE. Vol. II. Jewish and Moslem Women. Demy 8vo, xvi.-616 pp., cloth, 16s.

PRESS NOTICES.

Saturday Review.—"Full of interest and rich in stories."
Glasgow Herald.—"Instructive and entertaining."
Daily News.—"A most interesting volume."
Liverpool Daily Post.—"Miss Garnett is entitled to speak with authority, and an attentive study of her book, especially the portion of it which relates to the 'unspeakable Turk,' will no doubt dispel many prejudices."
Sunday Sun.—"Miss Garnett had quite exceptional opportunities of forming a judgment of harem life founded upon personal observation and conversation with Turkish ladies."
Manchester Examiner.—"Of great ethnographical value."
Evening Mail.—"The account of life in the harem is well worth reading, and will serve to dispel many erroneous ideas as to the misery which the dwellers in these mysterious abodes are supposed to endure."
Vol. I. of THE WOMEN of TURKEY: The Christian Women. 1890. 10s. 6d.

PRE-TRIDENTINE DOCTRINE.

A Review of the Commentary on the Scriptures of Cardinal Cajetan. By R. C. JENKINS, Hon. Canon of Canterbury. Demy 8vo, cloth, 5s.

PRESS NOTICES.

Record.—"A striking picture of the change for the worse effected in the doctrine of the Roman Church by the Council of Trent."
Church Review.—"A book which those of our clergy who have to face the Roman controversy with educated people ought to read and consider."
Church Reformer.—"Most useful for all students of Reformation history."
Univers.—"A shallow, trumpety book, with a catchpenny title."

A. W. MOORE.—THE FOLK-

LORE of the ISLE of MAN: being an Account of its Myths, Legends, Superstitions, Customs, and Proverbs. 12mo. xvi.-192 pages, 1s. 6d.

MR. WHITLEY STOKES has placed the few remaining Copies of CORMAC'S GLOSSARY, Edited by O'DONOVAN and WH. STOKES, Large Paper, cloth, in D. NUTT'S hands for Sale at 30s. net. Price to be raised as soon as half of the Copies are sold.

To be ready immediately.

CELTIC FAIRY TALES. Edited

by JOSEPH JACOBS, and Illustrated by J. D. BATTEN. A beautifully printed and bound volume. Comprising the best Irish, Scotch, Welsh, and Cornish Tales, with 8 Full-Page Illustrations and numerous Vignettes, Tail-pieces, Initials, &c. 6s. One hundred and twenty-five copies will be printed on Japanese paper. The majority of them are already definitely subscribed for.

Companion Volume to Mr. Jacobs' "English Fairy Tales," published in 1890 at 6s., of which 4,000 copies sold in a few months, and which has been universally acknowledged to be the best collection of English Fairy Tales ever published.

To be ready early in October.

LYRA HEROICA: an Anthology

selected from the best English Verse of the 16th, 17th, 18th, and 19th Centuries. By WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY, Author of "A Book of Verse," "Views and Reviews," &c.

The speciality of this collection will be that all the poems chosen are commemorative of heroic action or illustrative of heroic sentiment. It will thus be an excellent gift or prize book for boys.
"Lyra Heroica" will be printed by CONSTABLE, and will form a handsome volume, crown 8vo, of upwards of 400 pp., 6s.

Copies will be printed on Japanese and on Dutch hand paper. Price on application to the publisher.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

CHARLIE IS MY DARLING. By ANNE BEALE. Author of "Fay Arlington," "The Pennant Family," "Squire Lisle's Bequest," &c. 2 vols.

MAHME NOUSIE. By G. Manville FENN, Author of "The Master of the Ceremonies," &c. 2 vols.

"It is powerfully attractive; the reader's interest is aroused in the opening chapter, and never flags."—Manchester Examiner.

CASPAR BROOKE'S DAUGHTER.

By ADELIN SERGEANT, Author of "Little Miss Colwyn," "A Life Sentence," &c. 3 vols.

"Like all Miss Sergeant's novels, her latest is healthy in style and tone, while at the same time not devoid of incidents of a mildly sensational description."—Scotsman.

A SCOTCH EARL. By the Countess of MUNSTER, Author of "Dorinda." 3 vols.

"A Scotch Earl," by the Countess of Munster, is a better story than 'Dorinda' its predecessor. There is more finish about it, a firmer touch, and the personages are more lifelike. It is an old-fashioned novel in the sense that it deals with such themes as love and grief in a serious spirit, and that the author is one who believes that 'love is enough.' Lord Invergordon (the Scotch Earl) is evidently drawn from life, and will be readily recognised by many of Lady Munster's readers."—World.

A MOORLAND IDYL. By Algernon

GISSING, Author of "A Village Hampden," &c. 3 vols.

"For sustained interest and dramatic skill, Mr. Algernon Gissing's novel, 'A Moorland Idyl,' may be well recommended."—Daily Telegraph.

HAYTHORNE'S DAUGHTER. By

PAUL WARREN. 3 vols.

"The story is cleverly worked out, and the interest grows on the reader as events thicken and grow more exciting towards the close."—Guardian.

PEGGY'S PERVERSITY. By Mrs.

CONNAY, Author of "A Lady Horse-breaker," "A Line of Her Own," &c. 3 vols.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, each 3s. 6d.

THE AWAKENING of MARY FEN-

WICK. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS.

By MABEL HART.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER.

By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman."

MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE.

By M. E. LE CLERC.

A SELECTION FROM

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, PRICE 5s.

BY F. W. ROBINSON.

GRANDMOTHER'S MONEY | NO CHURCH.

BY JOHN CORDY JEAFFRESON.

THE REAL LORD BYRON. | A BOOK ABOUT DOCTORS

BY ELIOT WARBURTON.

CRESCENT and the CROSS. | DARIEN.

BY AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

BARBARA'S HISTORY. | LORD BRACKENBURY.

BY JULIA KAVANAGH.

NATHALIE. | ADELE.

BY VARIOUS AUTHORS.

THROUGH the LONG NIGHT. By Mrs. E. Lynn Linton.

MARGARET and HER BRIDESMAIDS.

THE VALLEY of a HUNDRED FIRS.

LOST and SAVED. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

ST. OLAVE'S. By the Author of "Janita's Cross."

MY LITTLE LADY. By E. Frances Poynter.

LES MISERABLES. By Victor Hugo.

ANNALS of an EVENTFUL LIFE. By Dr. Dasent.

LIFE of MARIE ANTOINETTE. By C. D. Yonge.

SIR BERNARD BURKE'S FAMILY ROMANCE.

FREER'S LIFE of JEANNE D'ALBRET.

BURKE'S ROMANCE of the FORUM.

HEPWORTH DIXON'S NEW AMERICA.

LEIGH HUNT'S OLD COURT SUBURB.

CARDINAL WISEMAN'S LAST FOUR POPES.

THE ENGLISHWOMAN in ITALY. By Mrs. Gretton.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holl, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free at any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

ON the MODIFICATION of ORGANISMS

By DAVID SYME.

"Wonderfully does the interest of this book gain on you, till, as it draws to a close, you almost dread the denouement, half guessing what is to come, yet doubting whether you have not hoped too much. And this is true of the whole, but of a severely scientific treatise on the theme indicated in Mr. Syme's title; though, if one may paraphrase a well-known definition of Eloquence, the science is penetrated by ethical feeling. Fiduciam in verum: a moral dislike of the theory of natural selection has inspired the criticism of Darwin here presented."—Anti-Jacobin.

"A vigorous criticism, not so much of Darwinism in general, as of some portions of Darwin's writings and reasoning. Mr. Syme is strong in dialect, and powerfully sustains his thesis that Darwin has in some respects overstated his case and misinterpreted the phenomena to which he appeals."—Times.

"No earnest student of modern biological speculation can afford to neglect the strictures of this acute critic, who, in a field where he is, perhaps, something more of an amateur than in others in which he has distinguished himself, displays the same grasp of the subject with which most of us are familiar in his 'Outlines of an Industrial Science,' and his even more remarkable volume on 'Representative Government in England.'"—Daily Chronicle.

"In these days, when Darwinism holds the field, and any opposition to his view is set down as a 'biological revolt,' it is refreshing to read so firm and clear and strong a criticism of Darwin and his writings as we find in this little book."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"None of the burning questions on this subject are left untouched by the author, David Syme, and all that is touched is handled with knowledge and temper. The satisfaction which Mr. Syme's former works have evoked will certainly not be diminished by the present treatise."—Manchester Examiner and Times.

Price 3s.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, & TRUBNER, London.
GEORGE ROBERTSON, Melbourne.

JAPANESE POTTERY,

WITH NOTES

Describing the Emblems, the Poetical Associations, and other thoughts and subjects employed in the Decoration of the Wares, an Account of the Festivals, and of some of the Customs of Japan.

By JAMES L. BOWES.

Imperial 8vo, cloth, 600 pp., with Plates, £2 12s. 6d.

The "Extra Illustrated Edition," half-morocco, gilt top, £6 6s. (Only a few copies left)

Japan Mail.—"It is a noble book... a book of the most valuable and genuine character. It is evident that Mr. Bowes has brought together a really representative collection, and that he has made every specimen it contains the object of careful research and intelligent scrutiny."—Contemporary Review.—"Few are entitled to speak with absolute authority, but of these Mr. Bowes stands foremost. Virtually a complete history of the art. To the true connoisseur it needs little recommendation."

The Academy.—"Produced with singular care and completeness... A worthy sequel to the author's previous labours in the cause of Japanese art."

The Times.—"Worthy of its subject and its author."

The Art Journal.—"Remarkably free from mistakes."

The Saturday Review.—"Let us repeat our admiration of Mr. Bowes' beautiful and enticing volume."

The Architect.—"A guide for the collector, and the best of its kind."

The Builder.—"Not only one of the most beautiful, but one of the most useful and rational books upon Japanese art which has been published in England."

Notes and Queries.—"To collectors his books are as authoritative as is to the lover of Eizevris the priceless book of Mr. Williams."

St. James's Gazette.—"The volume is one in which the connoisseur will delight."

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited
LIVERPOOL: EDWARD HOWELL

Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.

THE OWEN'S COLLEGE CALENDAR

FOR THE SESSION 1891-2.

MACMILLAN & Co., London. J. E. COFFIN, Manchester.

MESSRS. BELL'S EDUCATIONAL WORKS

FOR THE EXAMINATIONS, 1891-1892.

ENGLISH.

- NOTES on SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS. With Historical and Critical Introduction, Summary, Notes Etymological and Explanatory, Appendices on Prosody, Grammatical Peculiarities, &c. By T. DUFF BARNETT, B.A. Lond. Each 1s.
- NOTES on CORIOLANUS—HAMLET—HENRY V.—JULIUS CÆSAR—MIDSUMMER NIGHTS DREAM—MACBETH—TEMPEST—MERCHANT of VENICE—RICHARD II.—KING JOHN—KING LEAR.
- MILTON'S PARADISE LOST. Book I. and Book II. With Notes, a Glossary of Difficult Words, and Life of Milton. By C. P. MASON, B.A., F.C.P. Fifth Edition. Each 1s.
- THE ELEMENTS of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE. By ERNEST ADAMS, Ph.D. Twenty-fourth Edition. Thoroughly Revised by J. F. DAVIS, D.Lit., M.A. 4s. 6d.
- THE RUDIMENTS of ENGLISH GRAMMAR and ANALYSIS. By ERNEST ADAMS, Ph.D. Seventeenth Thousand. 1s.
- EARLY ENGLISH LITERATURE (to WYCLIF). By BERNAARD TEN BRINK. Translated by HORACE M. KENNEDY. 3s. 6d.

LATIN—Annotated Editions.

- CÆSAR.—DE BELLO GALLICO. Book I. Edited by G. LONG, M.A. With Vocabulary. 1s. 6d.
- CÆSAR.—DE BELLO GALLICO. Books I. to III. By GEORGE LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- CÆSAR.—DE BELLO GALLICO. Books IV. and V. By GEORGE LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- CÆSAR.—DE BELLO GALLICO. Books VI. and VII. By GEORGE LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- CICERO.—DE SENECTUTE. By GEORGE LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- CICERO.—DE AMICITIA. By GEORGE LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- CORNELIUS NEPOS. By J. F. MACMICHAEL, M.A. 2s.
- HORACE.—ODES, CARMEN SECULARE, and EPODES. By A. J. MACLEANE, M.A. 2s.
- HORACE.—ODES. Book I. With Notes by A. J. MACLEANE, M.A., and Vocabulary. 1s. 6d.
- HORACE.—SATIRES, EPISTLES, and ART of POETRY. By A. J. MACLEANE, M.A. 2s.
- JUVENAL.—SIXTEEN SATIRES (Expurgated). By HERMAN PRIOR, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- LIVY.—Books I., II., III., IV., V. By J. PRENDDEVILLE. Each 1s. 6d.
- LIVY.—Books XXI. and XXII. By Rev. L. D. DOWDALL, M.A., B.D. Each 3s. 6d.
- MARTIAL (Select Epigrams). By PALEY and STONE. 4s. 6d.
- OVID.—METAMORPHOSES. Book XIII. By C. H. KEENE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- OVID.—FASTI. By Dr. PALEY. 3s. 6d.; or in 3 vols., each price 1s. 6d.
- PLAUTUS.—TRINUMMUS, AULULARIA, and MENÆCHMEL. By Dr. WAGNER. Each 4s. 6d.
- PLAUTUS.—MOSTELLARIA. By Prof. SONNENSCHNEIN. 5s.
- SALLUST.—CATILINA and JUGURTHA. By G. LONG and J. G. FRASER. 3s. 6d.; or in Two Parts, each 2s.
- TACITUS.—GERMANIA and AGRICOLA. By the Rev. P. FROST, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- TERENCE. Edited by W. WAGNER, Ph.D. 7s. 6d.
- TERENCE.—ADELPHI, ANDRIA, PHORMIO, and HAUTONTIMORUMENOS. By W. WAGNER, Ph.D. 1s. 6d.
- VIRGIL.—BUCOLICS, GEORGICS, and ÆNEID. Books I.—IV. Abridged from Professor CONINGTON'S Edition. By the Rev. J. G. SHEPPARD, D.C.L. 4s. 6d.
- VIRGIL.—ÆNEID. Books V.—XII. Abridged from Professor CONINGTON'S Edition by H. NETTLESHIP and W. WAGNER, Ph.D. 4s. 6d.
- VIRGIL. Book I. Professor CONINGTON'S Edition, Abridged, with Notes and Vocabulary. 1s. 6d.
- VIRGIL. 12 vols. Professor CONINGTON'S Edition, Abridged—Bucolics; Georgics, I. and II.; Georgics, III. and IV.; Æneid, I. and II.; Æneid, III. and IV.; Æneid, V. and VI. (cs.); Æneid, VII., VIII., IX., X., XI., XII. Each 1s. 6d.

GREEK—Annotated Editions.

- ÆSCHYLUS.—AGAMEMNON, CHOEPHORE, EUMENIDES, PERSÆ, PROMETHEUS VINCTUS, SEITEM CONTRA THEBAS. By F. A. PALEY, LL.D. Each 1s. 6d.
- EURIPIDES.—ION (2s.). ALCESTIS, ANDROMACHE, BACCHÆ, HECUBA, HERCULES FURENS, HIPPOLYTUS, IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS, MEDEA, PHOENISSÆ, TROADES, SUPPLICES, ORESTES. By F. A. PALEY, LL.D. Each 1s. 6d.
- HOMER.—ILIAD. Books I.—XII. Edited by F. A. PALEY, M.A., LL.D. 4s.; or in Two Parts, Books I.—VI., 2s. 6d.; Books VII.—XII., 2s. 6d.
- PLATO.—APOLOGY of SOCRATES and CRITO. By W. WAGNER, Ph.D. 2s. 6d.
- PLATO.—PHAEDO. By W. WAGNER, Ph.D. 5s. 6d.
- PLATO.—PROTAGORAS. By W. WAYTE, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- PLATO.—REPUBLIC. Books I. and II. By G. H. WELLS, M.A. 5s. 6d.
- SOPHOCLES.—ANTIGONE, ELECTRA, OEDIPUS COLONEUS, OEDIPUS TYRANNUS, AJAX. By F. A. PALEY, LL.D. Each 1s. 6d.
- SOPHOCLES.—PHILOCTETES, TRACHINIAE. By F. A. PALEY, LL.D. Each 2s. 6d.
- THUCYDIDES. Book I. Edited by R. SHILLETO, M.A. 6s. 6d.
- XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. Book I. By J. F. MACMICHAEL, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. Books II. and III., and Books IV. and V. By J. F. MACMICHAEL, M.A. Each 1s. 6d.
- XENOPHON.—CYROPEDEIA. Books I. and II. By G. M. GORHAM, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- XENOPHON.—HELLENICA. Book I. and Book II. By the Rev. L. D. DOWDALL, M.A., B.D. Each 2s.

 Messrs. BELL'S NEW EDUCATIONAL CATALOGUE post-free on application.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.
CAMBRIDGE: DEIGHTON, BELL, & CO.

FRENCH and GERMAN.

- SCHILLER.—WALLENSTEIN. By Dr. A. BUCHHEIM. 5s. Or the LAGER and PICCOLOMINI together, 2s. 6d. WALLENSTEIN'S TOB. Price 2s. 6d.
- SCHILLER.—MAID of ORLEANS. By Dr. WILHELM WAGNER. 1s. 6d.
- SCHILLER.—MARIA STUART. By V. KASTNER, B.-ès-L. 1s. 6d.
- GERMAN BALLADS from UHLAND, GOETHE, and SCHILLER. By C. L. BIELEFELD. 1s. 6d.
- LAMARTINE.—Le TAILLEUR de PIERRES de SAINTPOINT. By JAMES BOELLE, B.-ès-L. 1s. 6d.
- VOLTAIRE.—CHARLES XII. By L. DIREY. 1s. 6d.
- FENELON.—AVENTURES de TELEMAQUE. By C. J. DELILLE. 2s. 6d.
- PICCIOLA, by X. B. SAINTINE. By Dr. DUBUC. 1s. 6d.
- SELECT FABLES of LA FONTAINE. By F. E. GASC. 1s. 6d.

GOMBERT'S FRENCH DRAMA.

Revised by F. E. A. GASC. Each 6d.

- MOLIERE.—Le Misanthrope, L'Avare, Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, Le Tartufe, Le Médecin Imaginaire, Les Femmes Savantes, Les Fourberies de Scapin, Les Précieuses Ridicules, L'École des Femmes, L'École des Maris, Le Médecin malgré Lui.
- RACINE.—La Thébaïde, Andromaque, Les Plaideurs, Iphigénie, Britannicus, Phèdre, Esther, Athalie.
- CORNEILLE.—Le Cid, Horace, Cinna, Polyucte.
- VOLTAIRE.—Zaire.

CONCISE DICTIONARY of the FRENCH and ENGLISH LANGUAGES.

Fourth Edition, Thoroughly Revised, with New Supplements (42 pp.). By F. E. A. GASC. 10s. 6d.

- POCKET DICTIONARY of the FRENCH and ENGLISH LANGUAGES. By F. E. A. GASC. Forty-fifth Thousand, with Additions and Corrections. 2s. 6d.

- MATERIALS for FRENCH PROSE COMPOSITION. By F. E. A. GASC. Nineteenth Thousand, 3s. Key, 6s.

- GERMAN PROSE COMPOSITION. By Dr. C. A. BUCHHEIM, Professor of German Language and Literature in King's College, and Examiner in German to the London University. Fourteenth Edition, Revised, 2s. 6d. KEY to 1st and 2nd Parts, 3s.; to 3rd and 4th Parts, 4s.

MATHEMATICS.

- ARITHMETIC. With EXAMINATION PAPERS and nearly 8,000 EXAMPLES. By C. FENDELLERY, M.A., Senior Mathematical Master of St. Paul's School. Fifth Edition, with or without Answers, crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. In 2 Parts, 2s. 6d. each. The EXAMPLES in a separate volume, 3s.

In use at Winchester, Wellington, Marlborough, Charterhouse, St. Paul's, Merchant Taylors', Christ's Hospital, Sherborne, Shrewsbury, &c.

- EXAMINATION PAPERS in ARITHMETIC. By the same Author. 2s. 6d. KEY, for Tutors and Private Students only, 3s.

- ARITHMETIC. By the Rev. C. ELSEE, Mathematical Master at Rugby. Fourteenth Edition. 2s. 6d.

- ALGEBRA. By the Rev. C. ELSEE, M.A. Seventh Edition. Price 4s.

- EUCLID. Books I.-VI., and part of Book XI. By HORACE DEIGHTON, M.A., Headmaster of Harrison College, Barbours. New Translation from the Greek Text, with numerous Riders and Chapters on Radical Axis, Poles, Polars, Transversals, Centres of Similitude, Harmonic Propagation, Plain Loci, &c. Second Edition, Revised, with Symbols and Abbreviations, crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.; or in Parts: Book I., 1s.; Books I. and II., 1s. 6d.; Books I. to III., 2s. 6d.; Books III. and IV., 1s. 6d.

- ANALYTICAL GEOMETRY for SCHOOLS. By Rev. T. G. VIVYAN, M.A. Fifth Edition. 4s. 6d.

- TRIGONOMETRY, INTRODUCTION to PLANE. By the Rev. T. G. VIVYAN, M.A. Third Edition. 3s. 6d.

- TRIGONOMETRY, EXAMINATION PAPERS in. By G. H. WARD, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. KEY, 5s.

- TRIGONOMETRY, The ELEMENTS of. By J. M. DYER, M.A., and Rev. R. H. WHITCOMBE, M.A. (Assistant Masters at Eton College). [Immediately.]

- CONICS, The ELEMENTARY GEOMETRY of. By C. TAYLOR, D.D., Master of St. John's College, Cambridge. Seventh Edition. 4s. 6d.

- CONIC SECTIONS TREATED GEOMETRICALLY. By W. H. BESANT, Sc.D. Eighth Edition. 4s. 6d. Solutions to Examples, 4s. Enumerations and Figures, separately, 1s. 6d.

- GEOMETRICAL OPTICS, An ELEMENTARY TREATISE on. By W. STEADMAN ALDIS, M.A. Third Edition, 4s.

- ASTRONOMY, INTRODUCTION to PLANE. By R. T. MAIN, M.A. Fifth Edition, 4s.

- SOLID GEOMETRY, An ELEMENTARY TREATISE on. By W. STEADMAN ALDIS, M.A. Fourth Edition. 6s.

- HYDROSTATICS, ELEMENTARY. By W. H. BESANT, Sc.D., F.R.S. Fourth Edition. 4s. Solutions to the Examples, 4s.

- HYDROMECHANICS, A TREATISE on. By W. H. BESANT, M.A., Sc.D. Fifth Edition. Part I. HYDROSTATICS. 2s.

- ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS. For the Use of Colleges and Schools. By WILLIAM GARNETT, M.A., D.C.L. Fifth Edition, Revised. 6s.

- DYNAMICS, A TREATISE on. By W. H. BESANT, Sc.D., F.R.S. 7s. 6d.

- HEAT. An Elementary Treatise. By W. GARNETT, M.A., D.C.L. Fifth Edition, Revised. 4s. 6d.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1012.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

PALESTINE ILLUSTRATED. A Collection of Photographic Views taken in Palestine by F. and E. THEVOZ, and reproduced in Phototype. With Explanatory Text based on the most recent researches by PH. BRIDEL. In Two Series of Ten Parts each. Each Part contains Ten Views with Explanatory Text. Part I. Oblong 4to, paper covers, 3s.

THE OUSE. By the Rev. A. J. Foster, M.A. With Map and several Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

CAPITAL, LABOUR, and TRADE, and the OUTLOOK. Plain Papers by MARGARET BENSON. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

MORGAN, LIFE and TIMES of BISHOP WILLIAM. The Translator of the Bible into the Welsh Language. By the Rev. WILLIAM HUGHES. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE ROMANCE OF SCIENCE.

THE MAKING of FLOWERS. By the Rev. Professor GEORGE HENSTLOW, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COLOUR. By Captain Abney, F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COAL. By Professor R. Meldola. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Professor Marshall Ward. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S., Royal Astronomer of Ireland. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY of a TINDER-BOX. By Charles Meymott TIDY, M.B.M.S., F.C.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIRTH and GROWTH of WORLDS. A Lecture by Professor GREEN, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

SOAP BUBBLES, and the FORCES which MOULD THEM. Being a Course of Three Lectures delivered at the London Institution in December, 1889, and January, 1890, before a Juvenile Audience. By C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SPINNING TOPS. The Operatives' Lecture of the British Association Meeting at Leeds, September, 1890. By Professor J. PERRY, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EARLY BRITAIN.

NORMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. W. Hunt. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ROMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. Prebendary Scarth, Rector of Wrington, Somerset. Fcap. 8vo, with Maps, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON BRITAIN. By Grant Allen, Esq., B.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"If any reader wishes to obtain, in a small compass, a general view of our Anglo-Saxon language, literature, and laws, he cannot do better than study this careful and conscientious epitome of those subjects."—Spectator.

CELTIC BRITAIN. By Professor Rhys. Fcap. 8vo, with Two Maps, cloth boards, 3s.

"Much instruction will be found in a small compass."—Daily Chronicle.

POST-NORMAN BRITAIN. Foreign Influences upon the History of England from the Accession of Henry III. to the Revolution of 1688. By HENRY G. HEWLETT. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

EARLY CHRONICLERS OF EUROPE.

[The object of this Series is to bring readers face to face with the Sources of Early European History, and thus enable them to obtain a more intelligent grasp of the subject than can be had from second-hand compilations.]

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, each 4s.

ITALY. By Ugo Balzani.

"Its literary merits are very considerable."—Scotsman.

ENGLAND. By James Gairdner, Author of "The Life and Reign of Richard III."

"The book is well and thoroughly done, and makes a very valuable addition to the stock of historic manuals."—Athenaeum.

FRANCE. By the late Gustave Masson, M.A., Univ. Gallic, Assistant Master and Librarian of Harrow School, &c.

"Full of exceedingly interesting and valuable matter."—Guardian.

* Others in preparation.

THE DAWN OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE.

[A Set of Works designed to present the Chief Races of Europe as they emerge out of pre-historic darkness into the light furnished by their earliest recorded words. The Literature dealt with covers a period stretching from its beginning until the Middle Ages.]

FRENCH LITERATURE. By the late Gustave Masson, B.A., Assistant Master and Librarian of Harrow School. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON LITERATURE. By the Rev. Prof. Earle. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SLAVONIC LITERATURE. By W. R. Morfill, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"His book will supply an admirable introduction to a systematic study of Slavonic literature."—Scotsman.

* Others in preparation.

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS.

[A Series of Manuals which furnish in a brief and popular form an Accurate Account of the Great Non-Christian Religious Systems of the World.]

CHRISTIANITY and BUDDHISM: a Comparison and a Contrast. Being the Donnellan Lectures for the year 1889-90. By the Rev. T. STERLING BERRY, D.D. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

* Seven other Volumes have already appeared in this Series.

CHIEF ANCIENT PHILOSOPHIES.

[This Series of Books will deal with the Chief Systems of Ancient Thought, not merely as dry matters of History, but as having a bearing on Modern Speculation.]

ARISTOTELIANISM. Part I. THE ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. By the Rev. I. GREGORY SMITH, M.A., Hon. LL.D. Part II. THE LOGICAL TREATISES, the METAPHYSICS, the PSYCHOLOGY, the POLITICS. By the Rev. W. GRUNDY, M.A. The Two Parts in 1 vol. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards 2s. 6d.

EPICUREANISM. By Wm. Wallace, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Merton College, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, sixteen cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

STOICISM. By the Rev. W. W. Capes, Fellow of Hertford College. Fcap. 8vo, sixteen cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

NATURAL HISTORY RAMBLES.

IN SEARCH of MINERALS. By the late D. T. Ansted, M.A., F.R.S. Fcap. 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

LAKES and RIVERS. By C. O. Groom Napier, F.G.S. Fcap. 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

LANE and FIELD. By the late Rev. J. G. Wood, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

MOUNTAIN and MOOR. By J. E. Taylor, Esq., F.L.S., F.G.S. Fcap. 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

PONDS and DITCHES. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D. Fcap. 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE SEASHORE. By Professor P. Martin Duncan, M.B. (London), F.R.S. Fcap. 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE WOODLANDS. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D. Fcap. 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

UNDERGROUND. By J. E. Taylor, Esq., F.L.S., F.G.S. Fcap. 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

BOTANICAL WALL DIAGRAMS.

PRINTED IN COLOURS. Size 31½ in. by 24 in.

Edges Lined with Canvas, with Binders for Hanging up, price One Shilling each Canvas, Varnished, One and Sixpence each; or Roller, Two Shillings each.

These Prints are particularly suited for Class Teaching. An accurate life-size representation of one single plant is given, as a rule, in each, accompanied by greatly enlarged reproductions of the various characteristic parts of each subject—viz., Leaf, Blossom, Parts of the Blossom, Husk and Seed.

The Plants selected are for the most part indigenous, a few exceptions being made in the case of specimens important on account of typical characteristics or of their value in commerce. Cheapness, accuracy, and artistic excellence are the chief merits claimed for this series.

THE FOLLOWING HAVE ALREADY BEEN PUBLISHED:—

OAK.	VIRGINIA TOBACCO.	HOPS.
POTATO.	WILD CAMOMILE.	MARSH MARIGOLD.
SCARLET RUNNER.	COMMON ELDER.	MARTAGON LILY and SNOWDROP
SCOTCH FIE.	DEADLY NIGHT SHADE.	MEZEREON.

Over Thirty others are in course of preparation.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 135, NORTH STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

YOUNG'S HISTORY OF DULWICH COLLEGE, by Archdeacon CHERHAM	255
LELAND'S TRANSLATION OF HINNE, by R. M'LINTOCK	256
BOOTH'S LABOUR AND LIFE OF THE PEOPLE, by Prof. EDGEWORTH	257
WILSON'S IS SCRIPTURE LANDS, by Prof. CHEYNE	257
SIR W. BUTLER'S LIFE OF SIR CHARLES NAPIER, by J. O'LEARY	258
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	259
SOME BOOKS ON HEBREW LITERATURE	260
SOME BOOKS ON EDUCATION	261
NOTES AND NEWS	262
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	262
ORIGINAL VERSE: "WILHELM MÜLLER," by Mrs. FHELIGRATH KROEKER	262
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	263
MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & Co.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	263
MESSRS. CASSELL & Co.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	263
MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	264
MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	264
MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & Son'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	264
S.P.C.K.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	264
MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	265
MESSRS. WHITTAKER & Co.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	265
MESSRS. W. & R. CHAMBERS'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	265
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	265
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Notes on Uranin das, I., by E. B. Nicholson, A. P., and F. W. Hall; Senjeri and Sam'alla Land , by the Rev. H. G. TOMKINS; Anandibini , by Miss Manning	265
PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS	267
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Celt-Iberians , by Prof. Rhys, and the Rev. Wentworth Webster	268
SCIENCE NOTES	269
MR. OHNEFALSCH-RICHTER'S EXCAVATIONS IN CYPRUS	269
CRUIKSHANK'S ETCHINGS TO GRIMM'S TALES	269
OBITUARY: SIR JOHN STEELL	270
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	270
MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC NOTES FROM PARIS, by C. N.	270
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	271
MUSIC NOTES	271

RUGBY.—TO LET (near School), from Sept. 29th, HOUSE, containing 2 Reception and 6 Bedrooms, with bath room and every convenience. Good walled-in garden.—For terms apply J. Young, Oxford Street, Rugby.

TO ARTISTS and others.—TO be LET, excellent STUDIO and snug BACHELOR'S QUARTERS combined, in central position, and midway between City and West-end. Studio has uninterrupted north-east and top lights. Cooking and attendance by resident housekeepers. Electric light, hall porter, &c.—Apply to HOTSCHKEBER, 65 and 66, Chancery Lane; or to the MANAGER, 65, Chancery Lane.

COPYRIGHT WANTED to Publish Musical Work on a Poem from "HEART VISIONS and REALITIES." 1880. Ward & Lock (who cannot inform). Grateful for earliest help to discover author or proprietor.—COMPOSER, 5, Bruce Street, Dufemuline, Fife.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

GLADWELL BROTHERS' FINE ART GALLERY, 20 and 21, Gracechurch Street, E.C.—A dissolution of partnership being in progress, the remaining STOCK, accumulated during the past half century, is now being SOLD for cash, without regard to publication prices.

GLADWELLS' important SALE of FINE ART STOCK is now in progress, and will be continued for a short time only, as the partnership heretofore subsisting will be dissolved on Dec. 31 next. A large portion of the Stock will be sold for cash at less than half price.—GLADWELL BROTHERS, 20 and 21 Gracechurch Street.

CATALOGUE. FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 57, SOHO SQUARE.

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) are invited to forward them for consideration. MSS. read within 14 days of receipt, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. Rejected MSS. promptly returned.

DIGBY, LONG, & CO., Publishers, 18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

FRENCH CONVERSATIONAL LESSONS.—A LADY, who has been engaged for eight years in conducting large public English Classes for the Ville de Paris, and also for the Association Polytechnique in that city, is now desirous of finding PUPILS who wish to continue their fluency of speech in the French language.—Address F. T. M., care of Mrs. Evans, 62, Blomfield Road, Maida Hill, W.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL of MUSIC, 114, Cambridge Street, Warwick Square, S.W.—Miss O'REILLY, late student Royal College of Music, and Miss FERRIS, A.R.C.M., prepare students in PIANO and THEORY for the Royal College of Music. Fee per term £4 4s. Term begins OCTOBER 1st. Prospectuses on application.

THIS DAY.
Field-Marshal von Moltke's
HISTORY OF THE FRANCO-GERMAN WAR.

THE FRANCO-GERMAN WAR of 1870-71. By FIELD-MARSHAL COUNT HELMUTH VON MOLTKE. Translated by CLARA BELL and HENRY W. FISCHER. With a Map. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 24s.

THE TIMES says:—
"It may be confidently predicted that as a German classic it will take the foremost rank in the prose literature of the nineteenth century....It is the most masterly précis of a campaign with which we are acquainted in military literature."
JAMES R. OSGOOD, McILVAINE, & CO., 45, Albemarle Street, London, W.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.
The DEPARTMENTS of ARTS, SCIENCE, and ENGINEERING and the NORMAL DEPARTMENTS for INTERMEDIATE and ELEMENTARY TEACHERS will OPEN on MONDAY, OCTOBER 5th, 1891. The Lectures and Classes are open to Men and Women. For Prospectuses and information concerning scholarships, &c. apply to IVOR JAMES, Registrar.
University College, Cardiff,
August 11th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.
LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.
Professor W. F. R. WELDON, M.A., F.R.S., will deliver, during the ensuing Session, a COURSE of LECTURES on "THE DECAPOD CRUSTACEA," intended specially for Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology. The Lectures will be given twice weekly, commencing SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17th, at 10 a.m. The GENERAL COURSE of LECTURES on ZOOLOGY, suitable for Students preparing for the various Examinations of the University of London, commences MONDAY, OCTOBER 5th, at 4 p.m.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON (LADIES' DEPARTMENT).
13, Kensington Square (close to High Street Kensington Station).
In this department Lectures are given to Ladies in the various subjects of University Education by Professors and Lecturers on the Staff of King's College. The Lectures are adapted for Ladies above the age of 16.
For a Prospectus or further information apply to the Vice-Principal, Miss C. G. SCHMIDT, at the above address. In return for four stamps, a complete Syllabus of Lectures may be obtained.
The College RE-OPENS on MONDAY, OCTOBER 12th.

READY.
ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.
The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.
Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., &c.
Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.
The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.
Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERTS.—The Thirty-sixth Annual Series of these world-renowned Concerts will commence on SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10th, at 3. Conductor, Mr. AUGUST MESSER.—Full prospectus post free on application to the Manager, Crystal Palace.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

THEATRES.
ADELPHI THEATRE.
Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE TRUMPET CALL. Mr Leonard Boyne, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, L. Rignold, C. Dalton, Douglas, East, Russell, Leigh, Keith, Drew, J. and W. Northcote, &c.; Miss E. Robins, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Leigh, and Miss Clara Jecks.

COMEDY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE. Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrey, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, P. S. Champion, W. Wyes, and Geo. Giddens; Misses Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne. At 8.15, ROSABEL.

LYCEUM THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Augustin Daly's Company, in THE LAST WORD. Miss Ada Rehan, Mr. Drew, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Wheatleigh, Miss Irving, Miss Cheatham.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs. Murray Carson, G. W. Cockburn, Eardley Turner, T. W. Peryval, J. A. Welch, De Solla, Victor, Alker, Dwyer, Ludlow, &c.; Mesdames Leslie Bell, Bertie Willis, L. Seccombe, L. Wilmot, L. Wyatt, M. Herriek, and Miss Grace Hawthorne. At 7.30, TWO IN THE BUSH.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT-BASING.
THIS EVENING, at 7.45, ARRAH-NA-POGUE. Miss Julia Warden, Mrs. John Carter, and Ella Torriss; Messrs. Henry Neville, Wilfred E. Shime, Bassett Roe, Chas. Ashford, Henry Bedford, John Carter, T. Verner, T. Kingston, and Arthur Daer.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR. And at 10, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Misses E. Chester, B. Lamb, D. Drummond, S. Grey, and Miss Norreys; Messrs. B. Thomas, E. Dawson, C. Coutts, C. P. Little, W. L. Branscombe, Lucy, and W. Grossmith

STRAND THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDWIN.
THIS EVENING, at 8.45, THE LATE LAMENTED. Messrs. Willie Edouin, H. Standing, H. Eversfield, G. P. Hawtrey, F. Cape, S. Barradough, and A. May; Mesdames Cicely Richards, E. Moore, E. Phelps, and V. Bennett. At 8, BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

To H.B.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.
BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

THE COLLEGES OF OXFORD: their History and their Traditions. Twenty-two Chapters by members of the Colleges. Edited by ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Fellow of Lincoln. 8vo, 18s.

LYRA HEROICA: a Book of Verse for Boys. Selected and Arranged by W. E. HENLEY. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Nearly ready.]

THE LIFE OF ADMIRAL LORD COLLINGWOOD. By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor.'" With Illustrations by P. Brangwyn. 8vo, 15s. "Collingwood has at last found an excellent ex aequo in Mr. Clark Russell, than whom no living writer is better fitted to tell the brave deeds of Nelson's friend and fellow-worker. Those who believe that there is no better reading than the lives of those who have fought and died for their country, will be glad that there has at length appeared a really adequate biography of such a true Englishman as Lord Collingwood."—Anti-Jacobin.

THE PATH TOWARDS KNOWLEDGE: Discourses on Some Difficulties of the Day. By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Professor of Economics at King's College. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. Among the subjects treated are Marriage and Population, Socialism, Positivism, Education, Civil Obedience, &c.

SONGS OF THE WEST: Traditional Ballads and Songs of the West of England, with their Traditional Melodies. Collected by S. BARING-GOULD, M.A., and H. F. SHEPPARD, M.A. In 4 Parts. Parts I, II, III, 2s.; Part IV., ready, 5s. In 1 vol., roan, 15s.

"A rich and varied collection of humour, pathos, grace, and poetic fancy."—Saturday Review.

MY DANISH SWEETHEART. By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. 3 vols. [Nearly ready.]

HOVENDEN, V.C. By F. Mabel Robinson, Author of "The Plan of Campaign," &c. 3 vols. [Shortly.]

URITH: a Story of Dartmoor. By S. Baring-Gould, Author of "Mehalah." New Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Baring-Gould is at his best in 'Urith.'"—Times. "Mr. Baring-Gould has been able to create a strong interest and to maintain it at a high pitch. There is, perhaps, no more careful or vigorous delineator of rough archaic types; and 'Urith' contains some of its author's best work in this respect. Its strength and effectiveness are undeniable."—Athenaeum.

THE RED GRANGE. By Mrs. Molesworth, Author of "The Cuckoo Clock," &c. With Illustrations by Gordon Browne. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ELSA: a Novel. By E. McQueen Gray. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Careful and accurate study of German, Italian, French, and English character. A bright and cleverly told story. We strongly recommend this eminently readable fiction."—Daily Telegraph.

JACK'S FATHER. By W. E. Norris, Author of "Matriarchy," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"It may be doubted whether any of his novels are so perfect in the sense of being absolutely flawless as are two or three of these stories."—Academy.

DISARMED. By M. Betham Edwards, Author of "Kitty," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Mystic, fantastic, altogether original, and very clever."—Daily News.

HEPSY GIPSY. By L. T. Meade, Author of "A Girl of the People," &c. Illustrated by Everard Hopkins. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

BETWEEN the LINES. By Walter H. POLLOCK and A. G. ROSS. Post 8vo, 1s.

DERRICK VAUGHAN, NOVELIST. By EDNA LYALL, Author of "Donovan." New and Cheaper Edition. Paper cover, 1s. Thirty-sixth Thousand.

ARMINELL: a Social Romance. By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of "Mehalah," &c. Third and Cheaper Edition. Paper boards, 2s.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES.—Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

VICTORIAN POETS. By A. Sharp. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

PROBLEMS OF POVERTY: an Enquiry into the Industrial Conditions of the Poor. By J. A. HOBSON, M.A. "Written in a clear and attractive style, and forms an admirable introduction to the investigation of a very great subject."—Full Mail Gazette.

A HISTORY OF ENGLISH POLITICAL ECONOMY. By L. L. PRICE, M.A., Fellow of Oriel College, Oxon. "There are few books from which the student will derive more instruction with less trouble."—Journal of Education.

SOCIAL QUESTIONS OF TO-DAY.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

MUTUAL THRIFT: an enquiry into the Working of Friendly Societies. By J. F. WILKINSON, M.A.

TRADE UNIONISM—NEW and OLD. By G. HOWELL, M.P. "A complete and intelligent history of the rise and modern development of labour organisations. The volume should be read by workers and employers."—Liverpool Post.

The CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT TO-DAY By G. J. HOLYOAKE. "An excellent shorter history of co-operation."—Athenaeum.

ENGLISH LEADERS OF RELIGION.

Crown 8vo cloth extra, with Portrait, 2s. 6d.

A Limited Edition on hand-made paper, demy 8vo, half-velum, 10s. 6d.
BISHOP WILBERFORCE. By G. W. DANIELL, M.A. [Nearly ready.]

CARDINAL NEWMAN. By R. H. Hutton. "Few who read this book will fail to be struck by the wonderful insight it displays into the nature of the Cardinal's genius and the spirit of his life."—WILFRID WARD, in the Tablet.

JOHN WESLEY. By Canon Overton.

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS

DR. PETERSON'S NEW EDITION OF QUINTILIAN'S "INSTITUTIO ORATORIA."—BOOK X. Just published, 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

M. FABI QUINTILIANI INSTITUTIONIS ORATORIAE. LIBER DECIMUS. A Revised Text, with Introductory Essays, Critical and Explanatory Notes, and a facsimile of the Harleian MS. By W. PETERSON, M.A., LL.D., Principal of University College, Dundee; St. Andrew's University.

RULERS OF INDIA.

INDIAN HISTORY FOR ENGLISH READERS, IN A HALF-CROWN SERIES OF POPULAR BIOGRAPHIES.

Edited by Sir WILLIAM WILSON HUNTER, K.C.S.I., &c.

New Volume, with 2 Portraits and a Map.

CLYDE and STRATHNAIRN; and the Suppression of the Great Revolt. By Major-General Sir OWEN TUDOR BURNE, K.C.S.I., sometime Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in India.

"The book is well written, well proportioned, and eminently worthy of the series to which it belongs."—Times.

"Sir Owen Burne is better qualified than any living person, to narrate, from a military standpoint, the story of the suppression of the Indian Mutiny, which forms the main topic of this biographical account of the two able generals, Clyde and Strathairn."—Daily Graphic.

Royal 8vo, with 49 Illustrations, half-morocco, price 18s.

FOSSIL BOTANY: being an Introduction to Palaeophytology from the Standpoint of the Botanist. By H. GRAF v. SOLMS-LAUBACH, Professor in the University of Göttingen. Authorised English Translation. By H. E. F. GARNSEY, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Revised by ISAAC BAYLEY BALFOUR, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.

Demy 8vo, half-bound, price 14s.

IL PRINCIPE. By Niccolò Machiavelli. Edited by L. ARTHUR BURD. With an Introduction by LORD ACTON.

"The present edition of 'The Prince' is mainly intended for the use of those who are not already familiar with Machiavelli's Life and Writings. Though it deals nominally with 'The Prince' alone, it is hoped that it may prove useful as a foundation for more extended study, and as a general introduction to Machiavelli's works. The aim of the Editor has been to summarise the results at which Machiavellian studies have now arrived, and to indicate the most important sources from which further information may be obtained."

From the EDITOR'S PREFACE.

"Very scholarly, and well-nigh exhaustive."—Times.
"The best English edition of a great classic."—Manchester Guardian.

PROFESSOR SONNENSCHNEIN'S EDITION OF "THE RUDENS OF PLAUTUS."

8vo, cloth, price 8s. 6d.

T. MACCI PLAUTI RUDENS. Edited with Critical and Explanatory Notes, by EDWARD A. SONNENSCHNEIN, M.A., Professor of Greek and Latin in the Mason College, Birmingham.

"An excellent edition of that delightful play the Rudens which cannot fail to raise still higher Professor Sonnenschnein's high reputation among English Latinists. The mature work of a scholar like Professor Sonnenschnein cannot be passed over with a few words of conventional praise. It is so certain to become a standard authority that suggestions for its improvement, even if comparatively trivial, furnish the only legitimate way in which it can be commended. But the purpose of this notice will be mistaken, if it has not made it evident that a really valuable contribution to scholarship, and one sure to raise the reputation of its distinguished editor, alike for judgment and for learning."

Professor A. S. WILKINS (in Academy).

A LIMITED EDITION OF 200 Numbered Copies, 764 pages, large 4to, strongly bound, to be issued to Subscribers at FIVE GUINEAS per Copy, net, payable in advance.

A COLLOTYPE REPRODUCTION OF the ANCIENT MANUSCRIPT OF the YASNA. With its Pahlavi Translation, A.D. 1323, generally quoted as [J 2], in the possession of the Bodleian Library.

This priceless Manuscript was written by Mihiripan Kai-Khuro in A.Y. 692 (A.D. 1323), and constitutes one of the fundamental documents of Zend religion and philology. It has been for centuries hereditary property in a family of a High Priest of the Parsis, who has now presented it to the University of Oxford. The Colotype Facsimile will reproduce the MS. with absolute fidelity. Subscribers' names must be accompanied with a remittance, and instructions for the despatch of their copies.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues post free.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,

CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S PUBLICATIONS.

In One Handsome Volume, royal 8vo, price 30s.

THE INDUSTRIES OF JAPAN.

Together with an Account of its Agriculture, Forestry, Mining, Arts, Trade, and Commerce.

By PROFESSOR J. J. REIN,

University of Bonn.

Illustrated by Woodcuts, Lithographs, and Native Fabrics.

Athenaeum.—"By far the best book that has been written on modern Japan."

MR. J. M. BARRIE'S WORKS.

I. SIXTH EDITION.

Buckram, gilt top, crown 8vo, price 6s.

AULD LIGHT IDYLLS.

Truth.—"It is sometime since I read anything so racy, humorous, and altogether delightful."

II.

SEVENTH EDITION.

Buckram, gilt top, crown 8vo, price 6s.

A WINDOW IN THRUMS.

Mrs. OLIPHANT in Blackwood's Magazine says:—"No book could be more deeply instinct with the poetry of real feeling, in which no fiction is, though it requires something which can only be called genius to reveal it to the world."

III.

SECOND EDITION.

Buckram, gilt top, crown 8vo, price 6s.

MY LADY NICOTINE.

Speaker.—"A very delightful book.....Mr. Barrie is a charming and brilliant essayist."

IV.

THIRD EDITION.

Buckram, gilt top, crown 8vo, price 6s.

WHEN A MAN'S SINGLE: A Tale of Literary Life.

Saturday Review.—"Mr. Barrie is a man with a style. From one end to the other the story is bright, cheerful, amusing—barring the idyllic prologue, which is pathetic as well as humorous."

WORKS BY

SIR J. W. DAWSON, F.R.S.

I.

Crown 8vo, price 9s., with Map and Illustrations.

MODERN SCIENCE IN BIBLE LANDS.

Spectator.—"It forms, as a whole, a guide to geological questions, and the knowledge of primitive man which no student of Bible lands or modern science should be without."

II.

Ninth Edition, with Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.

THE STORY OF THE EARTH AND MAN.

Spectator.—"A very able and interesting sketch of geological science."

III.

Fifth Edition, crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

THE ORIGIN OF THE WORLD, according to Revelation and Science.

IV.

Third Edition, with Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.

FOSSIL MEN and their MODERN REPRESENTATIVES.

Athenaeum.—"It will be especially acceptable to those who refuse to accept the high estimate of man's antiquity which modern science has brought forth, for they will find here their case stated with much ability, and illustrated by a wealth of material drawn from sources not sufficiently known in this country."

LONDON:

HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

Now ready, price 1s.
THE MAGAZINE OF ART

For OCTOBER, containing:—
"THE WHITE COW." By JULIES DUPRE. Etched by C. DE BILLY.
DAVID MURRAY, A.R.A. By WALTER ARMSTRONG. With a Portrait of DAVID MURRAY, A.R.A., and 5 Illustrations of his Works.
SCULPTURE OF THE YEAR. By CLAUDE PHILLIPS. With 7 Illustrations.
CHARLES CHAPLIN. By MARION HEPPWORTH DIXON. With a Portrait of CHARLES CHAPLIN, and 5 Illustrations of his Works.
ILLUSTRATED JOURNALISM: THE COMIC PAPER. By J. F. SULLIVAN. With 5 Illustrations by the Author.
LINSSEED-OIL IN PAINTING. By H. C. STANDAER.
KNOLE. By F. G. STEPHENS. With 8 Illustrations.
THE CHRONICLE OF ART: ART IN SEPTEMBER.
CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

Now ready, price 7d.
CASSELL'S MAGAZINE

For OCTOBER, containing:—
AMONG THE SCILLIES. Illustrated by C. T. Davidson.
UNCLE JOHN'S PRIZE CHRYSANTHEMUMS. With an Illustration by W. Haltherell, R.I.
WHEN GEORGE THE SECOND WAS KING. By G. HOLDEN PIKE. Illustrated by Hal Ludlow.
"MR. SMITH" in his NEW HOME. By EVELYN EVERETT GREEN. With Illustrations by S. T. DADD.
ENDED THE SUMMER'S DAY. Words by ESTHER KENTISH. Music by R. ECKERT BRISON.
THE BRIGHTENING OF THREE DREARY BACK ROOMS. Illustrated.
A CHAT about FAIRIES. By H. ORMONDE.
WHAT TO WEAR in OCTOBER: Chat-Chat on Dress. From OUR LONDON AND PARIS CORRESPONDENTS. With Illustrations.
THE GATHERER: an Illustrated Record of Invention, Discovery, Literature, and Science.
SHORT STORY COMPETITION: Award of Prizes.
SERIAL STORIES.
THAT LITTLE WOMAN. By IDA J. LEMON. Illustrated by E. F. BREWELL, R.W.S.
A QUAKER GIRL. By GEORGE B. BURGIN. With Illustrations by W. RAINEY, R.I.
COMPLETE STORIES.
A FORLORN HOPE. A Story in One Chapter. Illustrated by W. H. MARGETSON.
MY SISTERS' SECRET. A Complete Story.
SMUGGLER JOCK: a North-Country Story. By C. N. BARRHAM. Illustrated.
CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

FOR CONTENTS OF—
TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE,
See BENTLEY & SON'S Advertisement, page 234.

GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.
See Messrs. CHATTO & WINDUS'S Advertisement, page 271.

Other Magazines see next week's ACADEMY.

JAPANESE POTTERY,
WITH NOTES

Describing the Emblems, the Poetical Associations, and other thoughts and subjects employed in the Decoration of the Wares, an Account of the Festivals, and of some of the Customs of Japan.

By JAMES L. BOWES.
Imperial 8vo, cloth, 600 pp., with Plates, £2 12s. 6d.
The "Extra Illustrated Edition," half-morocco, gilt top, £6 6s.
(Only a few copies left.)

Japan Mail.—"It is a noble book... a book of the most valuable and genuine character. It is evident that Mr. Bowes has brought together a really representative collection, and that he has made every specimen it contains the object of careful research and intelligent scrutiny."
China Telegraph.—"Few are entitled to speak with absolute authority, but of these Mr. Bowes stands foremost. Virtually a complete history of the art. To the true connoisseur it needs little recommendation."
The Academy.—"Produced with singular care and completeness... A worthy sequel to the author's previous labours in the cause of Japanese art."
The Times.—"Worthy of its subject and its author."
The Art Journal.—"Remarkably free from mistakes."
The Saturday Review.—"Let us repeat our admiration of Mr. Bowes' beautiful and enticing volume."
The Architect.—"A guide for the collector, and the best of its kind."
The Builder.—"Not only one of the most beautiful, but one of the most useful and rational books upon Japanese art which has been published in England."
Notes and Queries.—"To collectors his books are as authoritative as to the lover of Eizevirs the priceless book of Mr. Willems."
St James's Gazette.—"The volume is one in which the connoisseur will delight."

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited
Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND,
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.
MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR OCTOBER.
SOME NEGLECTED POSSIBILITIES OF RURAL LIFE. G. E. TODD.
ESTHER VANHOMRIGH. (Continued.) Mrs. Woods.
GRAND LAMA OF TIBET. GRAHAM SANDBERG.
UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE. STEWART DAWSON.
TWO BROTHERS and their FRIENDS. M. A. BELLOC.
SCENES IN RUSSIA. Part I. ANDREW HOPE.
FEES, WORK, and WAGES in GIRLS' HIGH SCHOOLS. A. W. POLLARD.
"FIRSTLINGS" E. S.
BEGUN in JEST. (Continued.) Mrs. NEWMAN.
A FALLEN QUEEN. LAURA DAISTREY.
GLIMPSES OF BYRON. Rev. H. HAYMAN.
NOTES OF THE MONTH.—MICHAEL FARADAY.—MONS. GREVY.
LIBRARY LIST.
London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

Now ready, price Sixpence.
LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE,
Number CVIII.—OCTOBER.

CONTENTS:—
THE MISCHIEF OF MONICA. By L. B. WALFORD. Chaps. XXXIV.—XXXVI. (Concluded.)
THE SPANISH STORY OF THE ARMADA.—II. By J. A. FROUDE.
SEVILLE. By W. E. H. LECKY.
THE ERYNY FRAME. By E. NESBIT.
RIVAL MECHANICS.—NATURE and MAN: a Students' Symposium. By Dr. B. W. RICHARDSON.
HARPFORD WOOD. By S. CORNISH WATKINS.
THE THREE FATES. By F. MARION CRAWFORD, Author of "Mr. Isaacs," "Dr. Claudius," &c. Chaps. XV.—XVI.
AT THE SIGN OF THE SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.
London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

Price One Shilling.
THE MONTHLY PACKET.

Edited by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE and CHRISTABEL COLERIDGE.
Part X. New Series.—OCTOBER, 1891.
CONTENTS.
NIGHT. By ELIZABETH WORDSWORTH.
THAT STICK. Chaps. XXXIV. to XXXVI. By C. M. YONGE.
S. T. COLERIDGE ON MYSTICISM. A Dialogue from his MSS.
THE STORY OF THE "SMITHE-THEM-HIP-AND-THIGH." By EVA KASCHUBEL HUGGESS.
DANTE and BEATRICE. By ROSE E. SELVE.
IN HOC VINCES.
TOTO.
MEMOIR OF MADAME JENNY LIND-GOLDSCHMIDT. By M. BRAMSTON.
CAMEOS FROM ENGLISH HISTORY. Cameo CCXC.—The Pragmatic Sanction.
HYLAS.
TWILIGHT. Chap. IV. By HELEN SHIPTON.
FINGER POSTS IN FAERY LAND.—IV. By CHRISTABEL R. COLERIDGE.
THE CHINA CUPBOARD.
London: A. D. INNES & Co. (late WALTER SMITH & INNES), 31 and 32, Bedford Street, Strand.

F. V. WHITE & CO'S
RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

I.
By B. M. Croker.
INTERFERENCE.
By the Author of "Pretty Miss Neville," "Two Masters," &c.
3 vols. [At all Libraries.]

II.
By Mrs. Edward Kennard.
THAT PRETTY LITTLE HORSEBREAKER.
By the Author of "The Girl in the Brown Habit," "A Homburg Beauty," &c. 3 vols. [At all Libraries.]

III.
By Mrs. Alexander.
A WOMAN'S HEART.
By the Author of "The Wooing o't," "By Woman's Wit," "Blind Fate," &c. 3 vols. [At all Libraries.]

"Mrs. Alexander has been extremely successful in depicting both Lady de Walden and Mr. Ferrars. The character of the former is an admixture of gentleness, purity, charity, and all womanly graces; that of the latter, strength, nobility, sagacity, and sound judgment. They both stand out as living persons in whom one has a deep interest. (Old General Granard, Claire's father, also figures prominently and well. To lovers of a pathetic tale, abounding in incidents, and developed with a fine perception of dramatic effect, Mrs. Alexander's latest novel is to be commended. It is an excellent story, well told."—Scotsman.)

"This belongs to a class of novels for which there is generally a great demand at the circulating libraries. It is a society story, and gives evidence of considerable analytical power."—Manchester Examiner.

"Mrs. Alexander is beyond question a delightful storyteller, she has the art of investing all she writes with interest, and of giving life and a distinct personality to the people she paints.... 'A Woman's Heart' is an excellent novel, very much above the average, both in literary merit and human interest."—Lipp.

"The book is well written."—Guardian.

"In 'A Woman's Heart' Mrs. Alexander expends much clever brightness."—Morning Post.

"This novel comes as a relief after much of the fiction through which one is called upon to wade. There is a conscious strength about the writing which can afford to be quiet and go steadily by reason of the strong and sufficient story which it bears. There is nothing suggestive of effort, hysterics, or padding about this book from beginning to end. The man Stephen Ferrars is a splendid bit of work; Mrs. Alexander has done nothing better.... Lill, the artist, is simply delicious.... she simply wins her way into our hearts, as Mrs. Stepney, her staid, brave-hearted 'chum' does into our confidence and esteem. Other good studies of widely different orders are the child, Geru'd, and Mrs. Holden."—Victorial World.

"Mrs. Alexander has sought to make her story not only interesting, but somewhat original.... there is an excellent plot."—Public Opinion.

IV.
By Hume Nisbet.
THE SAVAGE QUEEN: a
Romance of the Natives of Van Dieman's Land. By the Author of "Ball Up," "The Black Drop," &c. Cloth, 2s. 6d.
[At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

V.
By Mrs. Alexander.
WELL WON.
In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.
[At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

NEW VOLUME ARROWSMITH'S 3s. 6d. SERIES.
By GRANT ALLEN,
Author of "WHAT'S BRED IN THE BONE," "KALEE'S SHRINE," &c.

RECALLED TO LIFE.

In same Series will be published October 22nd.
A FRENCHMAN IN AMERICA.
By MAX O'RELL.
With 130 Illustrations by E. W. KEMBLE.

ARROWSMITH'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL. 1s.
THE SHIELD OF LOVE.
By B. L. FARJEON. Will be published on Oct. 26th.
Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.
London: Simkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent, & Co., Limited.

PITMAN'S SHORTHAND

IS WRITTEN BY
93 per Cent. Reporters

(Vide Printers' Register),
AND
98 per Cent. Clerks

(Vide Western Morning News).

Write for POKET ALPHABET (free), or send 6d. for the "PHONOGRAPHIC TEACHER," to your nearest Bookseller, or to the Publishers,

ISAAC PITMAN & SONS,
AMEN CORNER, E.C.; BATH, AND NEW YORK.

Now ready, at all Libraries and Booksellers.

SOUTH AFRICA: FROM ARAB DOMINATION TO BRITISH RULE.

Edited by R. W. MURRAY, F.R.G.S., of Cape Town.

With 5 Maps, and Views of Cape Town in 1668 and 1891.

Demy 8vo, cloth elegant, price 12s. 6d.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

THE NEW NOVEL IN READING AT THE LIBRARIES.

SECOND EDITION, THIS DAY.

THE SCAPEGOAT: a Romance.

By HALL CAINE, Author of "The Bondman."

In Two Volumes.

"The best thing its Author has yet done, the sweetest, the tenderest, the most spiritual, the most truly imaginative, and, in points at least, the most dramatic." (First Press Opinion.)

BY THE SAME AUTHOR. 3s. 6d. each.

THE BONDMAN: a New Saga. | THE LITTLE MANX NATION.

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

READY IN A FEW DAYS.

THE SECOND VOLUME OF WILLIAM MORRIS'S AND MAGNUSSON'S SAGA LIBRARY.

COMPRISING:—

The Story of the Ere-Dwellers (Eyrbyggja Saga); with the Story of the Heath Slayings (Heidarviga Saga).

1 vol., fcap. 8vo, 54 and 412 pp., including Notes, Genealogies, and Three Indexes, Roxburgh, price 5s.

Gentlemen are requested to obtain this New Volume from their Bookseller. No discount can be allowed from the price.

BERNARD QUARITCH, 15, PICCADILLY, LONDON.

* The Translation of Snorro Sturleson's Heimskringla, or Chronicle of the Kings of Norway is in preparation. Price in 4 vols., 20s.

CANON DRIVER'S NEW BOOK.

Just published, in post 8vo, price 12s.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE LITERATURE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

By S. R. DRIVER, D.D.,

Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford.

EDINBURGH: T. & T. CLARK, 38, GEORGE STREET.

NOTICE.

49 and 50, Old Bailey.

Messrs. BLACKIE & SON, Limited, give notice that separate volumes of the HENRY IRVING SHAKESPEARE will not be supplied after the 15th October next, and that after that date the price of the complete work in 8 volumes, cloth, will be £4 4s. net; and in Roxburgh, £5, net.

Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.

THE OWEN'S COLLEGE CALENDAR
FOR THE SESSION 1891-2.
MACMILLAN & Co., London. J. E. CORNISH, Manchester.

Fourth Edition, Revised, and Illustrated, price 4s.
THE FROG: an Introduction to Anatomy,
Histology, and Embryology. By A. MENES MARSHALL, M.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Zoology in the Owens College, Victoria University.
London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co. Manchester: J. E. CORNISH.

WHITTAKER'S LIBRARY OF POPULAR SCIENCE.

Ready, illustrated, square crown 8vo, 4s.

PICTORIAL ASTRONOMY. By

G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Author of "A Handbook of Descriptive and Practical Astronomy." 284 pages, 134 Illustrations. "An elegantly printed and profusely illustrated work, which is worthy of the author's reputation."—Athenæum. "The varied and interesting information it contains is presented in a popular and attractive manner, and should ensure it a large circle of appreciative readers."

Morning Post. "One of the most interesting treatises we have had in our hands for a long time."—Daily Chronicle. "Just such a work as the general reader needs."

Scotsman.

Immediately, square crown 8vo.

LIGHT. By Sir H. Trueman Wood,

M.A., Secretary of the Society of Arts. With 86 Illustrations.

Containing Chapters on (1) The Nature of Light. (2) Reflection. (3) Refraction. (4) Colour and the Spectrum. (5) Inference and Diffraction. (6) Spectrum Analysis, the Rainbow. (7) Lenses. (8) Optical Instruments. (9) Double Refraction and Polarization. (10) Chemical Effects of Light. (Fluorescence and Phosphorescence, Index, &c.

The PLANT WORLD. Its Past,

Present, and Future. By G. MASSEE. With 56 Illustrations. [Immediately.]

WHITTAKER'S LIBRARY

OF ARTS, SCIENCES, MANUFACTURES, AND INDUSTRIES.

By W. PERREN MAYCOCK, M.Inst.E.E.

The FIRST BOOK of ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. With 84 Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d. [Immediately.]

By J. TRAILL TAYLOR,
Editor of the British Journal of Photography.

The OPTICS of PHOTOGRAPHY and PHOTOGRAPHIC LENSES, with numerous illustrations. [Immediately.]

By J. POOLE (Wh. Sc. 1875),
Chief Electrician to the Lancashire and Cheshire Telephonic Exchange Company, Manchester.

The PRACTICAL TELEPHONE

HANDBOOK and GUIDE to TELEPHONIC EX-CHANGE. 300 pages, 227 Illustrations, 3s. 6d. [Immediately.]

Second Edition, Revised.

WOOD CARVING. By Charles G.

LELAND. With 86 Illustrations, many of them Full Page. 170 pages, fcap. 4to, 5s.

"A very useful book."—Mr. W. H. HOWARD, Secretary to the Institute of British Wood Carvers, and Instructor at King's College, London.

"A splendid help for amateurs and those beginning the trade. Without exception it is the best book I have read at present."—Mr. T. J. PERRIN, Society of Arts Medalist, Instructor in Wood Carving at the People's Palace.

"I consider it the best manual I have seen."—Miss HOBSON, Instructor in Wood Carving at Manchester Technical School.

By GEORGE FINDLAY, Assoc. Inst. C.E.

General Manager of the London and North-Western Railway.

The WORKING and MANAGE-

MENT of an ENGLISH RAILWAY. Fourth Edition, thoroughly Revised and Enlarged, with numerous Illustrations, crown 8vo, 5s. [Immediately.]

"This is a delightful book."—Engineer. "Mr. Findlay's book displays so much knowledge and ability that it well deserves to rank as a standard work on the subject."—Nature.

"A very interesting work throughout." Railway Engineer. "Mr. Findlay's book will take a high position in the library of practical science."—Athenæum.

WHITTAKER'S SPECIALISTS' SERIES.

The ALKALI MAKERS' HAND-

BOOK. Tables and Analytical Methods for Manufacturers of Sulphuric Acid, Nitric Acid, Soda, Potash, and Ammonia. By Prof. Dr. LUNGE and Dr. HÜTNER.
New Edition, Enlarged, and in great part Rewritten.
crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.; strongly bound in half-leather, 12s. [Immediately.]

LONDON: WHITTAKER & Co., White Hart-street,
Paternoster-square.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR OCTOBER, 1891.

- I. MR. CHAINE'S SONS. By W. E. NORRIS. Chaps. XXXVII.-XL.
 II. WILLIAM COBBETT.
 III. THE CULT OF CANT.
 IV. JANNEY, A HUMBLE ADMINISTRATOR. By the Author of "Ideola," &c.
 V. CHECK and CHECK.
 VI. SOME PARTICULARS CONCERNING the Rev. WILLIAM COLE.
 VII. "THE RUN of the SEASON." By FINCH MASON.
 VIII. GOATFELL.
 IX. AN IDYLL of ONE. By W. M. HARDINGE, Author of "Clifford Grey," &c.
 X. "THE COMPLEAT ANGLER. By W. R. PURCHAS.
 XI. PHYSIOLOGY of the CONCIERGE.
 XII. LOVE or MONEY. By KATHARINE LEE. Chaps. XXXV.-XXXVIII.

SOME NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER A CHARM."
BEACON FIRES. By E. Werner,
 Author of "Success," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"An interesting and well-written story and one which, when read, leaves the pleasantest impression on the memory. We have no hesitation in saying it is the best E. Werner has written."—Observer.

"Werner has established her claim to rank with those very few writers whose works are, or should be, matters of interest to all readers of cultivation throughout Europe."—Graphic.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GODFREY HELSTONE."
PATIENCE HOLT. By
 GEORGIANA M. CRAIK, Author of "Diana," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"This author can always be depended upon to write a pleasant domestic story marked by pretty sentiment and excellent taste and not without a certain quiet humour."—St. James's Gazette.

NOW READY.
VIOLET MOSES. By
 LEONARD MERRICK. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The difficulty of novel-writing is to hit on anything original, but Mr. Merrick, so far as our pretty extensive experience goes, is fairly entitled to the honours of a discoverer. He has struck into a new social stratum, and he seems to be at home in it. It is doubtful to the very last whether passion or virtue will triumph, and the scene where the long and earnest pleading by Mr. Morris of his evil cause is broken only by the clamour of the eager gamblers is powerful and pathetic."—Times.

NOW READY.
RULING the PLANETS.
 By MINA E. BURTON. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Ingeniously constructed and worked out."—Athenaeum.
 "If this is a first novel it shows very considerable promise. The story of an atrocious swindle. Each step plunges the conspirators deeper in deceit; they are trading gingerly through a labyrinth of circumstantial lies; and the delightful thing is the moral tone they preserve throughout. Just as vice has been rewarded, and the conspiracy has apparently been crowned with complete success, it is cleverly baffled by an unforeseen circumstance. Indeed, the novel is so adroitly worked up that it is extremely readable."—Times.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "HER OWN COUNSEL."
EVELYN'S CAREER. By the Author of "Dr. Edith Romney." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"It is pleasant to notice a novel written with so much thought, feeling, and discernment of character."—Guardian.
 "Some of the minor characters are excellent and apparently sketched from life, with some exaggeration of humorous eccentricities. There is a cobbler, in particular, a Radical, a socialist, and a sceptic, who is as proud of having made himself as any millionaire, and who stands aggressively on his dignity with his social superiors in a distinctly humorous manner."—Times.

A NEW EDITION.
ALDYTH. By Jessie Fothergill,
 Author of "The First Violin." In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is curious that this, which is quite the most interesting of the late Miss Fothergill's novels, should also be quite the least known. Its re-publication is very welcome, and there can be no doubt that, if it were as well known, it would be more widely appreciated than any of Miss Fothergill's books."—Observer.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
 Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S PUBLICATIONS.

SIXPENNY COPYRIGHT EDITION

OF DAVID COPPERFIELD,

BY CHARLES DICKENS.

With Eighteen Illustrations
 BY FRED BARNARD.
 Medium 8vo,
 SIXPENNY.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

THE CROWN EDITION.

NOW COMPLETE IN 17 VOLUMES.

The Volumes contain all the Original Illustrations. The Letterpress is printed from Type especially cast for this Edition. Large crown 8vo.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS EACH.

THE PICKWICK PAPERS. With 43 Illustrations by SEYMOUR and PHIZ.

NICHOLAS NICKLEBY. With 40 Illustrations by PHIZ.

DOMBEY AND SON. With 40 Illustrations by PHIZ.

DAVID COPPERFIELD. With 40 Illustrations by PHIZ.

SKETCHES by "BOZ." With 40 Illustrations by GEO. CRUIKSHANK.

MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT. With 40 Illustrations by PHIZ.

THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP. With 75 Illustrations by GEORGE CATTERMOLE and H. K. BROWNE.

BARNABY RUDGE: A Tale of the Riots of 'EIGHTY. With 78 Illustrations by GEORGE CATTERMOLE and H. K. BROWNE.

OLIVER TWIST and TALE OF TWO CITIES.
 In one Vol.

BLEAK HOUSE. With 40 Illustrations by PHIZ.

LITTLE DORRIT. With 40 Illustrations by PHIZ.

OUR MUTUAL FRIEND. With 40 Illustrations by MARCUS STONE.

AMERICAN NOTES: PICTURES FROM ITALY; and A CHILD'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND. With 16 Illustrations by MARCUS STONE.

CHRISTMAS BOOKS and HARD TIMES. With Illustrations by LANDSEER, MACLISE, LEECH, STANFIELD, DOYLE WALKER, &c.

CHRISTMAS STORIES and Other Stories, INCLUDING HUMPHREY'S CLOCK. With Illustrations by DALZIEL, CHARLES GREEN, MAHONEY, PHIZ, CATTERMOLE, &c.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS and UNCOMMERCIAL TRAVELLER. With 16 Illustrations by MARCUS STONE.

EDWIN DROOD and REPRINTED PIECES. With 16 Illustrations by LUKE FILDES and F. WALKER.

GEORGE MEREDITH'S WORKS.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

ONE OF OUR CONQUERORS

Will be ready in October.

DIANA OF THE CROSSWAYS.

EVAN HARRINGTON.

THE ORDEAL OF RICHARD FEVEREL.

THE ADVENTURES OF HARRY RICHMOND.

SANDRA BELLONI.

VITTORIA.

RHODA FLEMING.

BEAUCHAMP'S CAREER.

THE EGOIST.

THE SHAVING OF SHAGPAT; and FARINA.

The Six Shilling Edition is still to be had.

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY.

THE English Catalogue of Books

January, 1881, to December, 1889.

VOL. IV.

An Alphabetical List of Works published in the United Kingdom, and of the Principal Works in America, with Dates of Publication, Indication of Size, Price, Edition, and Publisher's Name.

Royal 8vo Volume, 710 pp., half-morocco, cloth sides,
 Price £2 12s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

DONALD ROSS of HEIMRA.

By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c. Second Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"An admirable story."—Athenaeum.
 "One of the very best of Mr. Black's works, and his best is very good indeed."—Illustrated London News.

A MAN'S CONSCIENCE. By

EVERY MACALPINE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"The studies of character are cleverly consistent throughout, and Mr. MacAlpine, with his genial analysis of the feelings, can be pathetic as well as humorous. The story is powerfully worked out, and we are left in doubt till the last as to the denouement."—Times.

"An extremely interesting and well-written story."
 "A decidedly pleasant novel."—Graphic. [Scotsman.]

A HIDDEN FOE: a Story of Love and Mystery. By G. A. HENTY, Author of "The Curse of Carne's Hold," "The Plague Ship," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"It may be read once with pleasure and interest; and even among fairly good novels there is hardly one in twenty of which more than this can truthfully be said."—Spectator.

THE GENTLEMAN DIGGER:

a study of Society at Johannesburg. By ANNA, COMTESSE de BREMONT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"This is a very sensational, graphic, and too true account of life in the Golden City, and must in these days, when so much interest centres on South Africa, be full of attraction for many readers. It is really a remarkable work."—Life.

MR. GEORGE RUSSELL'S BIOGRAPHY

ON THE

RT. HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.

Being the New Volume of

"THE QUEEN'S PRIME MINISTERS."

Crown 8vo, with new Photogravure Portrait, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Written in the manly and independent spirit which we should expect in one of his lineage. An honest book."—World.

"A volume we may specially commend as the most attractive and authoritative history of the man with whom it deals that has yet been given to the world."—Speaker.

"Mr. Russell's book is enriched by the recollections of some of Mr. Gladstone's most eminent contemporaries, and by records which they have placed at his disposal."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Russell has done his work with sound judgment and in excellent taste. A worthy offering at the shrine of patriotism and genius."—Daily News.

THE RURAL ECONOMY and AGRICULTURE of AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND. As seen by ROBERT WALLACE, F.L.S., F.R.S. With 8 Maps, 50 Full-Page Plates, and 20 Text Illustrations. Deny 8vo, cloth, One Guinea, net.

"Professor Wallace gives, as the result of personal observation, a very complete and very instructive account of the agricultural methods and appliances in use throughout the principal Australasian colonies."—Times.

FOUR WELSH COUNTIES: a

Holiday Book about Brecknock, Carnarvon, Merioneth, and Pembroke. By E. A. KILNER. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"The pleasures of holidaying in Wales will be enhanced to those who consult beforehand, or better still, take along with them as a companion, Miss Kilner's 'Four Welsh Counties.'"—Scotsman.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
 St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
 Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1891.

No. 1012, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The History of Dulwich College, down to the passing of the Act of Parliament dissolving the Original Corporation; with a Life of the Founder, Edward Alleyn, and an accurate Transcript of his Diary, 1617-1622; with Notices of the Lives and Writings of some of the Masters and Fellows, and Notes on Local Peculiarities and Associations; by William Young, one of the Governors of the College. With numerous illustrations. In 2 vols. (Printed for the Author by Morrison & Gibb, Edinburgh; sold by T. Bumpus, London.)

VARIOUS circumstances have of late years contributed to give to Dulwich College a more than local fame. Its history has been eventful, and it has now at last found an historian whose work leaves little to be desired. He must be unusually eager for minute investigation who desires to learn more of Alleyn's foundation than he may learn from Mr. Young's two handsome quartos, which are, in regard to form, paper, and print, such as to delight the eye of a lover of books. Here we have a history of the hamlet and of the foundation which has made it famous; an excellent Life of the founder, with an exact and literal transcript of his diary; an account of the theatre in which Alleyn was actor and manager; notices of several men of distinction who were members of the foundation; of the books, manuscripts, and pictures, belonging to the foundation; and of the famous picture-gallery which was given into the charge of the college in the early part of the present century. It is seldom that the muniment-room of a college presents such ample materials for its history, and still more seldom that a man is found able and willing to make a thorough investigation of them, and to give the public the benefit of his research, as Mr. Young has done. The book is not only full of matter, the original documents being largely quoted, but is very interesting to anyone who cares to see laid open to view the inner and outer life of a society which has now existed, amid many vicissitudes, some two hundred and seventy years. It abounds with illustrations of the manners and customs, and of the social life generally, of our forefathers during the existence of the college.

The name Dulwich, the "dale-dwelling," has been written in a great variety of ways. In a charter of 967 A.D. it appears as "Dilwihs"; and Mr. Young gives more than thirty different forms in which the name is found between that date and the beginning of the seventeenth century, when it assumed its present form of Dulwiche or Dulwich. The manor of "Dilewich" was granted by Henry I. in 1127 to the Cluniac Priory of Bermondsey, with which house it remained until it was surrendered to Henry VIII. on January 1, 1537. It was granted by the king in 1544 to Thomas Calton, citizen and goldsmith, of London, whose grandson, Sir Francis Calton, we find in possession of it in the year 1605, when Edward Alleyn appears on the scene.

Edward Alleyn was born in 1566—two years after Shakspeare—in the parish of St. Botolph without Bishopsgate. As early as 1586 his name occurs in a list of the Earl of Worcester's players, and in 1592 his fame was so high that Thomas Nash wrote of him—"Not Roscius nor Esope, those tragedians admired before Christ was born, could ever perform more in action than famous Ned Allen"; and Ben Jonson's testimony is to the same effect. In 1600 he built, in partnership with Philip Henslowe, whose step-daughter he had married, the Fortune Theatre in Golden Lane, Cripplegate. Meantime, he had acquired an interest in Paris Garden in Southwark, an arena in which various combats, both of beasts and men, were exhibited; and in 1604 he became the King's Master of the Bears—an office of considerable emolument, which he retained until his death. His last recorded appearance in public was on March 15, 1607, when, as a Genius, he delivered, "with excellent action and a well-tuned audible voice," an address to James I. on his reception in the city. It is worth notice that, although he was contemporary with Shakspeare and, like him, a theatrical manager, no mention of the name of the great dramatist occurs in Alleyn's diary or papers, except the record of the fact that he gave fivepence for a copy of Shakspeare's Sonnets. When Shakspeare's name occurs in the papers at Dulwich it is in the curious interpolations which were made by some forger, probably between 1830 and 1840. (See Mr. G. F. Warner's account of these in Young ii. 333).

But Alleyn at any rate resembled Shakspeare in that he found the management of a theatre, in days when the drama was a passion with all classes, a way to fortune. In 1605 he purchased from Sir Francis Calton the manor of Dulwich, and in the course of a few years acquired the freehold of almost the whole manor, at a total cost of nearly £10,000. He himself, not later than 1613, came to live in the manor-house or "Hall Place" on his newly-acquired estate. He was childless, though long married, and he evidently considered seriously the disposition of his large property. What he determined upon was to found, in the midst of the manor of which he was lord, a "college," in the old sense of the word—i.e., a body corporate for various beneficent purposes. This college was to consist of a master, warden (both of whom were to be of the founder's surname), four fellows, six poor brothers, six poor sisters, and twelve poor scholars, and was to be endowed not only with the Dulwich estate, but with property in Lambeth and Bishopsgate, and with the Fortune Theatre. The master was the general head and governor; the warden—who was to succeed to the mastership whenever a vacancy occurred—was the bursar and kept the accounts; the fellows were to perform the services in the chapel and to teach in the school. Alleyn was very anxious about both these matters. A devout man and loving a somewhat stately ceremonial, he wished the service in the college chapel to be said daily, and in such manner and form as was usual in the King's Chapel or Westminster Abbey. The school was to consist of not more than eighty boys, including the twelve scholars, who were to be instructed in such books as "are usually taught in the free grammar scholes of Westminster and Paule's"; that is, they were to have the best education then known. The inhabitants of Dulwich were to have their "men children" freely taught, and "forreyners" were to be admitted at a fee determined by the master and warden. The scholars, as well as the poor brothers and sisters, were to be taken from four parishes in which Alleyn was specially interested—St. Botolph's without Bishopsgate, in which he was born; St. Luke's without Cripplegate, in which he built his theatre; St. Saviour's, Southwark, in which he kept his bears; St. Giles', Camberwell, in which the college is situate. It may be noted, as the contrary has often been supposed, that Alleyn nowhere expresses any desire to benefit actors by his foundation. In fact, he seems rather to have wished to ignore a profession which had probably caused him to be refused the honour of knighthood.

The building of the college was begun in 1613, and the chapel was consecrated by Archbishop Abbott on September 1, 1616, the founder's fiftieth birthday. In consequence, however, of the opposition of Lord Chancellor Bacon, who disapproved of institutions of this kind (see his letter about Charterhouse, in Spedding's Life, iv. 247), the king's letters patent giving license for the foundation were not issued until June 21, 1619. Alleyn executed his deed of foundation on September 13 in the same year, when he gave a grand banquet—full particulars of which are preserved in the diary—at which the Lord Chancellor himself was present. "Inigo Jones, the King's surveyor," was also one of those who dined, but whether he had any hand in the building of the college does not appear. The statutes for the government of the members were not formally given until November 20, 1626, only five days before Alleyn's death. Up to that time he seems to have governed the college pretty much at his own discretion; and, as he discovered defects in his original scheme, he introduced some particulars in the statutes which were soon found to be beyond the powers conveyed by the letters patent. These consequently came to nothing.

Although they bear marks of great care, never, probably, was there a body of statutes which gave rise to more litigation. Disputed elections, appeals to the Archbishop of Canterbury as visitor, actions at law, are of the most common occurrence in the history of the college. Nor did the foundation, as time went on, answer to Alleyn's wishes. The chapel services were not kept up as the statutes enjoined; the two fellows to whom the care of the school was entrusted, instead of having a school which might rank with Westminster and St. Paul's, taught only the twelve scholars, and that in a perfunctory manner. It is not surprising that a rich foundation which existed to so little purpose attracted the attention of the public; and in 1854 the Charity Commissioners began an inquiry into its affairs, the result of which was that they promoted a bill in parliament for its reform, which received the royal assent on August 25, 1857. By this Act the existing corporation was dissolved, its members receiving pensions, and an entirely new scheme for the management of the college was established, under which very handsome new buildings were erected and the school attained to great prosperity. It was then seen that the Dulwich College Act had scarcely contemplated an upper school of some six hundred boys, and difficulties arose in its working. Under the provisions of the Endowed Schools Act, the Charity Commissioners in 1882 propounded a new scheme, under which the educational portion of the foundation received a still further extension, and provision was made for schools in the more distant parishes which Alleyn designed to benefit. Probably at the present time Alleyn's foundation produces as much substantial benefit as any estate ever left for charitable purposes. Its history has been a curious and eventful one, and those who follow it in Mr. Young's pages will find it full of interesting matter.

Of some members of the college full notices are given, which are not the least entertaining portion of the work. These are Mr. James Hume, a Scotchman, fellow from 1706-1730, who was evidently a man of great vigour and ability, and who took the lead in all matters of college business; Ozias Linley, a brother-in-law of Mrs. Richard Brinsley Sheridan, an excellent musician, and one of the quaintest of men; and John Allen, another Scotchman, who for many years was constantly to be seen at the famous parties at Holland House, a man of letters of considerable power and reputation, well known to all the wits of his day.

It should be mentioned that Mr. Young acknowledges his special obligations to Prof. R. K. Douglas, Mr. G. F. Warner, and Mr. F. B. Bickley, all of the British Museum, for the assistance and advice which he has received from them throughout.

S. CHEETHAM.

The Works of Heinrich Heine. Translated from the German by Charles Godfrey Leland ("Hans Breitmann"). Vol. I., "Florentine Nights," &c. (Heinemann.)

Of the four opuscula contained in this first instalment of Heine's works the most interesting to English readers will probably be the somewhat disjointed papers on "Shakspeare's Maidens and Women," written in 1838 to accompany a republication in Germany of a set of engravings by Kenny Meadows and others. The engravings were forty-five in number; but Heine, in addition to a longish preface and some concluding remarks, wrote notes for twenty-three of the pictures only, the favoured ones being those belonging to the "tragedies," under which category the "histories" and the "Merchant of Venice" were included. Some of the notes treat their nominal subjects very cursorily; but the names serve as pegs whereon to hang discourses on Shakspeare, England and the English, continental politics, and things in general. The author's admiration for Shakspeare and his detestation of everything and everybody else English are alike unbounded. To a reader whose patriotism is not too inflammable, or who is able to set one thing off against another, Heine is infinitely entertaining. Liberty, as whose soldier he professed to do battle all his life, when found among the English, is a possession of doubtful value; England's victories, from Cressy to Waterloo, are a disgrace to humanity; English beauty is short-nosed and wanting in the hinder regions of the skull, and English cookery is barbaric in its simplicity. On the other hand, the glory of Shakspeare, after having been, for nearly a whole century, consigned to oblivion by the Puritan revolution and its after effects, has become, as it were, a spiritual sun for that country which has to dispense with sight of the veritable orb of day for nearly twelve months of the year, that island of damnation, that Botany Bay without a southern climate, smoke-rolling, machine-rumbling, church-going, bad-liquor-swilling England! And so on, and so on—a never-ending stream of epigrams and paradoxes, at times inconsistent one with the other, and frequently interspersed with passages of fine criticism and true poetry. A particularly striking example of the combination of insight with grace is offered by the passage (Leland, p. 423) on Victor Hugo, whom Heine emphatically declares to be the greatest poet of France.

Next in interest, and, mere fragment as it is, possibly of greater intrinsic importance, is the "Rabbi of Bacharach," which was to have been—perhaps was—an historical romance on Sir Walter Scott's lines, dealing with the "Jewish question" as it presented itself to, and was treated by, the fifteenth century. Although not published till 1840, it was written in or about 1824, and, as is shown in his correspondence, cost its author considerable time and trouble in the acquisition of historical and antiquarian knowledge. In the two chapters and a piece of which the fragment as it has reached us consists—and whether any more was ever written is doubtful—we are introduced to the three chief characters of the story and are made spectators of two remarkable and impressive scenes—the Passover-Eve celebration in the Rabbi's house, and the following morning's service in the synagogue as viewed from the women's gallery. In addition to these we are shown the jealously fortified, but withal ill-guarded, Judengasse or Ghetto of Frankfurt, and have several more or less grotesque or humorously-conceived secondary characters set before us. Rabbi Abraham and his cousin-wife, Beautiful Sara, are fine and dignified figures—the nearest approach, I think, that Heine ever made to drawing a gentleman and lady (using those words in their best significance); and in Don Isaac Abarbanel, the young Spaniard who, renegade as he is from the faith of his fathers, cannot forget or resist the flesh-pots of Israel, we have a brilliant and unsparing piece of self-portraiture. Of the course of the story we have only two insufficient indications: on the heads of the Beautiful Sara and her husband there rests a father's curse—"Seven years shall ye beg your bread!"—and when Beautiful Sara remarks of a handsome deaf and dumb boy, a protégé of her husband, that he greatly resembles her little brother who died, the Rabbi makes answer that all angels are much alike. The promise, however, of the whole fragment is so high that it is a subject for sincere regret that accident or other circumstances have caused it to remain what it is.

The remaining two pieces—"Florentine Nights" (1836), and "Memoirs of Herr von Schnabelewopski" (1831)—are of less interest, although the first-named contains, in the form of a series of phantasmagoric scenes, a description of effects produced by hearing Paganini, which strongly recalls De Quincy's "dream-fugue" ("English Mail Coach," section iii.). The story of the "Second Night" is curious, but the ultra-French cynicism of its conclusion is to me thoroughly repulsive. Much of Schnabelewopski" also is very disagreeable. Its most striking figure is that of a young Jew who is killed in a duel, of which the immediate cause was an insult offered to his religion.

The mention of De Quincy a few lines back was not accidental. Both he and Heine were pre-eminently literary craftsmen; word and phrase are used by both as a painter uses pigments, are chosen and combined with as much care in prose as in verse, and always with an eye to the public; with both, in spite of the exquisite charm which pervades their work, the sincerity of what they say is often doubtful. Then, again, both loved to present their thoughts "in the similitude of a dream." But there is no need to push the parallel too far.

To turn from Heine in German to Heine in English. A critic unacquainted with the original, but otherwise competent, would probably be better able than I am to define the whole effect of this volume as an English book. It is to be feared, however, that the judgment of such a reader would not be very favourable. To me the translation is a grievous disappointment, for I expected from Mr. Leland something much less like 'prentice work. Had no translator's name been given, I should have taken the work to be the first serious attempt at prose writing of some Heine-struck youth, and as such pronounced it fairly promising; for there are pages—many pages—in which the original seems to be reproduced with as much fidelity and as much grace as can reasonably be expected in a translation from a writer so difficult as Heine. But I should have considered it my duty to warn the young man that in his next performance of the sort both a better knowledge of German and more care in the writing of English would be expected of him. For in the present work there are readings of the original which, were any Latin or Greek classic in question, would be pronounced "utterly indefensible," and English sentences which come perilously near to being mere nonsense. Here are a few specimens of the original, and Mr. Leland's version in parallel columns :

"Diesem muthwilligen Geschäfte galt wohl jenes Lächeln, das—"

"Konturen die an Da Vinci erinnern, jenes edle Oval mit den naiven Wangengrübchen, und dem sentimental spitz-zulaufenden Kinn—"

"Kurz, es war ein Gesicht wie es nur auf irgend einem alt-italianischen Portraite gefunden wird, das etwa eine von jenen grossen Damen vorstellt, worin die italienischen Künstler des sechzehnten Jahrhunderts verliebt waren wenn sie ihre Meisterwerke schufen."

"In dem Dichtergeiste spiegelt sich nicht die Natur, sondern ein Bild derselben, das dem getreuesten Spiegelbilde ähnlich, ist dem Geiste des Dichters eingeboren; er bringt gleichsam die Welt mit zur Welt."

"Dieses Wahrnehmen eines Stücks der Erscheinungswelt geschieht durch die Sinne, und ist gleichsam das äussere Ereigniss, wovon die innern Offenbarungen bedingt sind, denen wir die Kunstwerke des Dichters verdanken."

"Dieses Gesicht trägt keine düster fanatische Mönchsmiene, sondern die schlaffen aufgeklärten Züge eines Krämers der sich ängstigt im Handel und Wandel von dem israelitischen Geschäftsgeist überflügelt zu werden. Aber ist es die Schuld der Juden, dass sich dieser Geschäftsgeist bei ihnen so bedrohlich entwickelt hat?"

To find such passages as these in the work of a man already famous, and whose memory reaches back to several years before the accession of Queen Victoria, is decidedly discouraging.

Mr. Leland has made some faint efforts to expurgate his text, has omitted half a page in one place, and here and there an odd sentence or two—strained out a few gnats. But there are more camels than one left behind. In fact, Heine is inexpurgable, and squeamish people had best have nothing to do with him.

I am sorry, very sorry, to have to write as I have done in the latter part of this review; but the only alternative was to say nothing about the book under notice.

R. M. LINTOCK.

Labour and Life of the People. Vol. II.—"London" (continued). Edited by Charles Booth. (Williams & Norgate.)

RESUMING the statistics of poverty, Mr. Booth takes a bird's-eye view of the streets of London. The results of his survey are expressed by maps, in which the various colours correspond to different degrees of poverty or comfort. These degrees are defined in terms of the symbols which Mr. Booth's first volume has rendered familiar, ranging from A, the lowest class—occasional labourers, loafers, and semi-criminals—to H, the upper middle class. The definition is made more distinct by a description of sample sheets of each colour. Here, for instance, is a bit of a black street :

"Of the ground floor at No. 6 Skelton-street, and also of the first and second floors, there is nothing particular to note; families came and went, usually costers, almost always Irish Roman Catholics, living in dirt, fond of drink, alike shiftless, shifty, and shifting. At the top on the third floor there lived for five years Mr. and Mrs. Casson and their four children, all in one small attic. The father earned little, but most of this he spent in drink; the mother was very clean and industrious and careful, but the children were at times without food."

At No. 20 Skelton-street,

"In one of the parlours lived Burton, a man sixty years of age, very quiet and steady, who dragged on with his work (scavenger to the Board of Works), a martyr to asthma. The woman with whom he lived drank. They had not a chair to sit on, and the room was most offensive, swarming with vermin."

Drink occurs with appalling frequency as an attendant of the darker shade of poverty. Twenty per cent. of the inhabitants of the sample streets of this colour are credited with habits of intemperance. Such is the complexion of the lives of some twenty-seven thousand human beings in this city. The number, immense absolutely, is happily small relatively to the more favoured classes, of which purple, "mixed with poverty," and pink, "working class comfort," are the largest. Here are some specimens of pink :

"No. 35 is occupied by a lighterman, who would be comfortable but for drink. All the children are grown up. Two are in service, and the other married. As lodgers they have a young couple with a baby. The man works at Billingsgate, and earns 14s. a week. The wife is ill through want."

The amount of comfort indicated by this type is to be multiplied over a population of more than a million. What Bentham called a lot of happiness and unhappiness has never been so accurately measured.

Penetrating further into the "wilderness of statistics," Mr. Booth and his able coadjutors describe Central and South London—the latter more deeply tinged with poverty than had been expected. The second and third parts of this volume do for Central and South London what the first volume did for East London. There is wanting, however, the unity of interest which the extensive description of industries imparted to the first volume. We have now only an account of West-end tailoring: men's work by Mr. James Macdonald, and women's work by Miss Clara Collet. The following is a curious incident of the latter species of work :—

"Waistcoat-making might be almost entirely in the hands of women were it not for the reluctance of the tailoresses to incur what they call "responsibility." Very few can make the whole garment, and they are nearly always content to leave the "fitting" to men. The garment, however, is sometimes made throughout by women. Cussocks . . . women can make them throughout, because they need not fit."

Other aspects of the labour and life of the people are portrayed, partly by general description, and partly by as it were photographing samples. Thus, the influence on character of life in blocks of model dwellings is discussed by Miss Octavia Hill; while a lady resident gives "a short sketch of an average day in T. Buildings." The picture of Covent-garden market, which forms another chapter, is particularly lively. One reads with astonishment that all the shops in the market are held on weekly tenancies, "in order to avoid the formation of any monopoly or rings by a combination of the tenants." The following is the account which a shop's foreman gives of his day :

"In winter he gets to work at 5 a.m., and in summer at 3.30 a.m.; he buys and sells in the flower market till 9 a.m., when he goes to his shop in the centre avenue; he works there till eight in the evening" [on duty the whole time, though of course not at high pressure].

Among other chapters rich in information and reflection we may mention Mr. Llewellyn Smith's study on the influx of population. After handling powerfully masses of statistics, he traces minutely the careers of individual emigrants. The general conclusion is that the influx from the country is a movement downwards: the newly arrived countrymen in general recruiting occupations which require strength and steadiness, while town-tried people with deteriorated physique and powers of application form the "sediment deposited at the bottom of the scale." But we do injustice to the particularity of Mr. Llewellyn Smith's results by attempting to summarise them. We are sensible, indeed, how impossible it is by a mere inventory to express the value of the materials which the editor of the work before us has amassed. The compilation of a private citizen, it rivals the parliamentary inquiries which have been the special glory of English publicists. When next some German student of mediaeval chronicles sneers at our insular economics as barren of concrete facts, we may reply by pointing not only to the records, our commissions and societies, but also to the monumental work of Mr. Charles Booth.

F. Y. EDGEWORTH.

In Scripture Lands: New Views of Sacred Places. By Edward L. Wilson. With 150 Illustrations from Original Photographs by the Author. (Religious Tract Society.)

A LEISURELY perusal of this latest book of Palestine travel will be amply rewarded. Even after Picturesque Palestine and Lortet's excellent La Syrie d'aujourd'hui there was room for this characteristically American work, so brimful of life and enthusiasm, and so artistically and yet truthfully illustrated. The author begins his pilgrimage in the "holy land" of Egypt, which has supplied fifteen by no means commonplace illustrations. Emil Brugsch Bey gives a graphic account of the "find" of the royal mummies, and the author's photographic skill does the rest. Then, with an admirable dragoman, who confines his services to "educated men," Mr. Wilson follows the Israelites into the wilderness of Sinai. The views of St. Catherine's convent may be specially mentioned. The author is charmed with the Gulf of Akabah, and by word-painting attempts, not altogether in vain, to supply the deficiencies of the camera. From Akabah he started for Petra, traversing the Wady Arabah, and then turning first eastward and then northward, so as to approach Petra by the famous gorge of the Sik, near the mouth of which is the most perfect of the monuments, Khasna Fara'ûn ("Pharaoh's treasure-house"). More fortunate than Mr. Gray Hill, he was hindered by no tribal hostilities, and actually reached the Khasna before the Bedouins were aware. Once in, he could not be turned out; such was the will of Allah! Blackmailed he was to the utmost, but at any rate he got four days for tasting, not for exhausting, these extraordinary monuments. The illustrations of Petra are among the best in the volume, and the descriptions are worthy of them. Much mischief has been done by the torrents since Laborde's time; but with the certain prospect of further destruction, Mr. Wilson's sketches have really an historical value. Among them I must not omit to notice the interesting large-sized view of an ancient altar (p. 105). From Petra our dashing traveller bethought himself of rediscovering Kadesh-Barnea, the identification of which is due to that eminent explorer, Dr. H. C. Trumbull. The probably true Kadesh they failed to find; but they lighted upon a good second-best, which was designated "Sheikh Wilson's Kadesh."

Chapter vi., headed "Three Jewish Kings," is somewhat provoking. Our author has not imbibed the free but devout spirit of Dean Stanley; and the "data and textual references" put together here and elsewhere in the book are based on a literalistic view of the Hebrew narratives, which will offend many cultivated readers. It is sad that an otherwise well-prepared traveller should have neglected one of the most necessary parts of his equipment. Mr. Wilson would probably reply that travel confirms a simple, non-critical view of the familiar stories, and that if you could put a rationalist on camel-back, he would throw his criticism to the winds. But these seem to be pure assumptions. It has not yet been shown that the ancient Oriental races were in all points like their modern representatives, nor has even that commonest of non-critical travellers' theses been established that the Abraham of the narratives of Genesis was of a noble type of Bedouin. Mr. Wilson takes much pains to illustrate the life of David, the outlaw, upon a somewhat similar principle; and one willingly admits that he has more sound reason for doing so. But I fear he may deposit the germ of the dreaded rationalism in some youthful minds; for how can a Bedouin sheikh have written the Psalms, all of which (including Psalms c. and civ.) Mr. Wilson apparently ascribes to David? The next chapter brings us to Hebron, Bethlehem, Bethany, Mar Saba, the Dead Sea, and Jericho. It is difficult to be original here. Hebron is but slightly treated; M. Lortet is much fuller, and deserves credit for remarking that "as a good number of learned exegetes believe," the patriarchal narratives may only have a legendary (I would rather say, a symbolical) value, in which case the recent "find" in Egypt will hardly be paralleled by a still more remarkable one at Machpelah. I may, however, add M. Lortet's perfectly safe remark:

"Quoiqu'il en soit de cette vieille légende" [i.e., not Abraham's abode at Hebron, but the discovery of the bones of the three patriarchs by the monk Arnulf in 1119], "il n'en est pas moins certain qu'au milieu des roches calcaires de l'est, derrière la mosquée, on voit beaucoup d'hypogées creusées dans la montagne. En cet endroit se trouvait certainement la nécropole des anciens habitans du temps d'Eplron" (La Syrie d'aujourd'hui, p. 325).

And with regard to Mr. Wilson's remark on the insolence of the population of Hebron, which shows itself even in the children, I would refer, in arrest of judgment, to M. Lortet, who accounts (p. 325) for this not so much by Moslem fanaticism, as by a perfectly honourable spirit of local independence. Bethlehem and Bethany, of course, please our author better; the manners of their inhabitants form a pleasing contrast to those of the people of Hebron. Little is said of the interesting scenery and striking ruins of Perea; Gerasa, like Baalbec, found no favour with the photographer. In the Jerusalem chapter there is an interesting view of the court in front of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Our author is apparently adverse to the claims of the traditional site of the Crucifixion and Sepulture; nor can anyone be surprised. But was it desirable to occupy precious space (all chap. ix.) with Dr. C. S. Robinson's elaborate article (first printed, if we remember right, in the same American magazine from which much of the present volume is republished) in favour of a site still rejected by many of the most critical students of Jerusalem topography? Could not Mr. Wilson have limited himself to giving the three striking views of (1) the grotto of Jeremiah, (2) the new Golgotha, and (3) (small size) Jerusalem as seen from outside the Damascus gate, and referring the student to the best English and German discussions of the subject? For nothing is gained either in Old Testament criticism or in Biblical archaeology by the substitution of one dogmatism for another.

Chapter x. gives only small views. We must still go to Sir Richard Temple for an adequate conception of Nebi Samwil, with its magnificent view (compare the striking scene described in 1 Macc. iii. 46-60). At lovely Jenin (of which no view is given) the author meets with some dervishes (caught by his camera, on p. 225) going from Mecca to Jerusalem, and ventures on another of his bold comparisons. "Were not those who agreed with Jesus Christ just such characters?" Such sentences spoil an excellent book for students. Several pretty views, and still more charming descriptions, are given of Nazareth; and the Sea of Galilee is treated with much taste, though one longs for colour. More might have been made of the great post-Biblical history of the Horns of Hattin; one feels how thoroughly wrong is the Sunday-school principle which pervades so much of this book. For the Lebanon district one must of course consult Picturesque Palestine; but Mr. Wilson gives a striking little view of the wonderful Leontes bridge, and also of the "street called Straight in Damascus," a great part of which is by no means straight, and which, in spite of the common opinion, has not borne the name "Straight" continuously (see Prof. George Hoffmann). I take leave of this beautiful book with regret, and only wish that some of its very excusable defects could be removed in a new and perhaps abridged edition.

T. K. CLEYNE.

"ENGLISH MEN OF ACTION."—Sir Charles Napier. By Colonel Sir William F. Butler. (Macmillans.)

ISCARCELY know why I have dawdled over this book of Sir William Butler; for I certainly ought to have had little difficulty with it, and, in point of fact, had none save such personal ones as it would in no way interest your readers to talk about.

It is the Life of a great (or almost great) Irishman, and certainly a great soldier, written by a very distinguished one, and written in such a fashion as I have absolutely almost no fault to find with. Sir William Butler, as is well known to all readers of his previous books, is master of a very vigorous and facile pen, saying what he has to say always clearly and often eloquently, and, what was of prime importance in a subject like his present one, being apparently no way afraid of running counter to current prejudices, whether of the classes or the masses.

But to turn from our author to his subject. The Napiers, whether in Scotland or in Ireland, seem to have been ever a strange and remarkable race; but the strongest (I do not include the man of logarithms in my estimate, as I am quite unable to gauge his strength) and one of the strangest of the name was the subject of the present sketch. Sir William Butler, after a pleasant and, indeed, altogether necessary preliminary chapter on the family of Napier (he was, by the way, first cousin of Lord Edward Fitzgerald) and the early surroundings of the young Napiers at Celbridge, near Dublin, hurries us over the earlier stages of his hero's military career, and brings him quickly, as colonel of the Fiftieth, on the famous and fatal field of Corunna, which was near proving as fatal to Napier as to his illustrious commander. He was only, however, taken prisoner, but in a manner the details of which are most graphically given in the book before us, and very badly wounded. Through the whole Peninsular War, of course, the Napiers saw much service, of which we may give just one incident before hastening on to the more important part of Sir Charles's career. On the morning of March 14 he is close to the front. Suddenly an ambulance litter borne by soldiers is seen ahead. "Who is it?" he asks. "Captain Napier, Fifty-Second Regiment, arm broken." Another litter follows. "Who is that?" "Captain Napier, Forty-Third, severely wounded." They halt under the shade of a tree. Charles says a word to each, and then mounts his tired horse and presses on to the front.

It was one among the many minor mischances of Napier's life that he was not present at Waterloo. Before the battle, and after the first fall of Napoleon, Napier was placed on half-pay, and entered the Military College at Farnham. He had, as his biographer says, little to learn about war; but it is characteristic of the man that he, with his mature years and his high rank in the service, was not ashamed to go to school again. If he knew war, he was ignorant (and no doubt remained ignorant) of many other things; and, in any case, could not rest idle. A sort of enforced idleness he had to endure, however, for some years; but in 1819 he was at last gazetted as Inspecting Field Officer of the Ionian Isles. This was an office with little to do, but Napier soon found work in various diplomatic missions and travels in Greece. In 1822 he was appointed Military President in Cephalonia—an island (I quote from Sir W. Butler) where it was hoped that the "impetuosity and violence of Colonel Napier's character and politics" might find room for action without danger to the State. And room for action he did find with a vengeance.

"Do not," he writes to his mother, "expect long letters from one who has scarcely time to eat or take exercise. My predecessor is going home half dead from the labour, but to me it is health, spirit, everything. I live for some use now."

But I am forgetting that my business is to review Colonel Butler's book, and not to write a sketch of Napier's career. All that he did in the Ionian Isles, including his negotiations with the Greeks for the command of their insurrectionary forces, will be found fully and forcibly recorded by our author. A Greek lady, he tells us, said to him in the very year he was writing, "They still speak of Napier in Cephalonia as of a god."

The sixth chapter of the book shows how Napier remained unemployed for nearly a decade, leaving the Ionian Isles in 1830, and only receiving the command of the troops in the North of England in 1839. What he did, and still more what he said, in that office is very interestingly told, often in his own words, in the next chapter. But I must spare what further space I can give to this book to what is told of his Indian career, and especially his Sind campaign; for in this he for the first, and, indeed, for the last, time got the opportunity of showing the mighty man of war he was.

Into the intricacies of Indian politics, and the question as to how much or how little right Napier had in his quarrels with what may be called the Indian Machine, I do not intend to go. Sir William Butler, as is natural, seems a thick and thin supporter of his hero in all (or nearly all) his quarrels; and I am not in the least competent to guide your readers through this jungle of Indian politics, knowing, indeed, next to nothing of the routes.

Neither can I do more than merely glance at the great achievements of Napier in India. What he did, and how he did it, is admirably told in the book. I have spoken more than once of Sir William Butler's style, but have given no adequate specimen of it. The opening sentence of the chapter on the battle of Miani, though having but an indirect bearing on the battle or the men who fought it, will at least show how our author can write—

"The desert—the world before it was born or after its death, the earth without water, no cloud above, no tree below—space, silence, solitude, all realised in one word. There is nothing like it in creation."

At Miani Napier had little more than two thousand men, of whom but four hundred were Europeans, to oppose to the Sindian hosts. "I have one British regiment," he had written only the previous night, "the Twenty-second, magnificent* Tipperary": or, to quote his brother Sir William—

"On the left of the artillery marched the Twenty-second regiment. This battalion, about four hundred in number, was composed almost entirely of Irishmen, strong of body, high-blooded, fierce, impetuous soldiers, who saw nothing but victory before them, and counted not their enemies."

For what these Tipperary men, and other men, did at Miani, I can only refer to the book under notice, where the most exacting reader will find all that he could expect. So, too, of the storming of the hill fortresses, the action of Dubba, the rapid and successful close of the war, and the subsequent just and vigorous administration of the conquered province.

He remained in Sind until September, 1847, harassed and worried nearly all the time by the Great Company and its servants. I have said I did not mean to enter into these disputes. Those who wish to know all about them may read the story in his brother's books and those of his opponents. A few words, however, of a general nature there may be no harm in extracting from the book under notice.

"He had dared to speak the honest truth that was in him about the greed and rapacity of London directors, and the waste, the extravagance, and the luxury of these English servants in the East; he had committed that sin which power never pardons, the championing of the poor and the oppressed against the rich and ruling ones of the earth. Now he had to pay the penalty, and from a thousand sources it was demanded at his hands."

But I must hasten over the rest of this life, so profoundly interesting from its subject and the manner in which it is handled. Again, after the almost drawn battles of the Sikh war in the winter of 1848, Napier was summoned to India, where he landed in May, 1849, but only, with his usual luck, to find the war over. Here, in his new capacity of Commander-in-chief, with no battles to fight save administrative and moral ones, he lingered on for some year and a half longer, constantly battling with Leadenhall Street, but at length succumbing in disgust. Here, and in this connexion, I should like to quote another passage from the book before me:

* This finely laudatory adjective of Napier's has been degraded to very vulgar uses in Ireland of late.

"The soldier and the shopkeeper must ever remain at opposite poles of thought. At their best, one goes out to fight for his country, and, if necessary, to die for it; the other remains at home to live, and to live well by it. At their worst, one acquires by force from the enemy, the other absorbs by fraud from his friend. But between the best and the worst there is a vast class of mental shop-keeping people who, although they do not keep any shops, are nevertheless always behind the counter, always asking themselves, 'Will it pay?' always dotting up a mental ledger, in which there is no double entry, but only a single one of self. Nothing will be more delusive than to imagine this great class has any fixed limits of caste, rank, or profession. It may have been so once; it is not so now, nor has it been so for many generations. It reaches very high up the ladder now. It has titles, estates, coats-of-arms, moors, mountains, and the rest of it. It can be very prominent in both Houses of Parliament. But there is one thing it can never be, and that thing is a true soldier."

Yes, or a true man. But I must bring this already too long review to an end. To quote our biographer again:

"He came home to die. Not all at once, indeed, did the end come. Such knarled old oaks do not wither of a sudden, no matter how rude may be the shock; but the iron had entered into his soul, and the months of life that still remained were to be chiefly passed in pain and suffering."

But come at last it did, on the morning of August 29, 1853. He was buried at Portsmouth, not Westminster, but his memory will not die.

After what I have said all along, I need add no more as to the literary execution of this book. I can scarcely conceive anything better done or in a better spirit.

JOHN O'LEARY.

NEW NOVELS.

Ruling the Planets. By Mina E. Burton. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

A Woman's Heart. By Mrs. Alexander. In 3 vols. (White.)

Beggars All. By L. Dougall. (Longmans.)

A Sydney-Side Saxon. By Rolf Boldrewood. (Macmillans.)

Mistress Beatrice Cope. By M. E. Le Clerc. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Thrice Past the Post. By Hawley Smart. (White.)

John Webb's End. By Francis Adams. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

A PORTENTOUS amount of ingenuity has been expended by the author of Ruling the Planets on her plot; and yet the result is not satisfactory, for the story becomes decidedly tedious before the close. It turns on an extraordinary case of mistaken identity. Stephen Maurice, son of a clergyman of the same name, and himself a bank clerk and organist in a church, is identified in a railway carriage by a respectable ironmonger, who has been three or four times Mayor of Saltbury, with Herbert, son and heir of Mowbray Fanshawe of Birchholmie. It happens that this Herbert is dead, and unfortunately has died a few hours before his father, so that an interesting question of succession to property is involved. It happens also that Dr. Sinclair, of Harley-street, who is an intimate friend of Herbert, and whose sister was engaged to be married to him, is in the railway carriage when Stephen is assumed to be the much-wanted heir. He persuades Stephen to personate for a short time the dead man for the good of the living. All sorts of complications arise; for Stephen, while he has to play the son of Mowbray Fanshawe and the lover of Geraldine Sinclair, has also to escape the pursuit of his own father. A game of cross purposes of this kind is interesting and even amusing up to a certain point, but about the middle of the second volume one gets decidedly wearied of it. Besides it ends in nothing, as Herbert Fanshawe turns out to have been married, and to have had a son. There are one or two well-drawn characters in Ruling the Planets—notably a would-be detective and Wylde, who has been servant to Herbert Fanshawe. Dr. Sinclair's cruelty to his sister in passing off a stranger for her dead lover is incredible, and is hardly atoned for by the match which is being arranged towards the end of the third volume between that stranger and Geraldine. It is only fair to a writer who has unquestionably bestowed great pains on her work to say that she writes well on the whole, though sometimes a little too effusively.

A Woman's Heart is a commonplace, wearisome story, with an unconventional but also unsatisfactory ending. Lord De Walden is the ordinary married weakling, who does not appreciate the high qualities of his rather painfully good wife Claire. He elopes with Eva Repton, an adventuress widow of the ordinary Circean type. Stephen Ferrars loves Claire passionately, and she returns his affection after a fashion. If only she would take the proper steps for securing a divorce, they could be virtuously happy together. But she has scruples of different sorts, and it is not till an exceptionally cruel blow has been inflicted upon her feelings that these are overcome. Before the necessary legal proceedings have been initiated, De Walden is deserted by the adventuress (who marries a wealthy Australian with a house in Park-lane), and meets with an accident which ruins him physically for life. Then Claire returns to him, and in the last chapter of the third volume is seen nursing this miserable wreck of a man, who even in his helplessness has no affection for her. One or two characters in A Woman's Heart—more particularly Mrs. Holden, Mrs. Repton's outspoken aunt, and a girl artist—are good sketches. But there is absolutely nothing else to recommend in a book the disagreeable character of which is hardly relieved by a single pleasant passage.

Certainly no more startlingly original story has been published within recent years than Beggars All: and yet the scene of it is laid, not in one of the Pacific States of America, but in one of the western counties of England. Esther Thompson, whose nickname is Star, finding it practically impossible to support her invalid mother and sister, marries, through the medium of a matrimonial advertisement, a newspaper reporter of the name of Hubert Kent. The marriage turns out well enough until Star discovers that her husband ekes out his income by burglary. She quarrels with him, although he himself regards his burglary as a practical exposition of Socialism. In the end he accepts a situation in America, and there Star intends to join him some day. A not less extraordinary character than Kent is Gilchrist, who, although he here figures as a serving man, has at one time been a clergyman. He has been ruined by a dissolute, drunken sister, and yet he takes the post of man-servant to that sister's deserted and undeserving husband that he may help both. In addition to Gilchrist, Kent, and Star, there also appear Marian Gower and a curious creature, named Tod, who is a sort of lunatic Toots. It is a Robinsonian world that the writer of Beggars All moves and acts in, and he—or perhaps she—has evidently many ideas on social and other questions to think out. But there is so much power of various kinds—especially of character-description—in this book, that its author may be welcomed as a most promising addition to the ranks of writers of fiction.

A Sydney-Side Saxon is one of "Rolf Boldrewood's" shorter and slighter sketches. It has no plot to speak of. A Kentish farm-labourer migrates to Australia, and there, by courage and steadiness, moves on from high to higher until he reaches fortune's crowning slope as Mr. Claythorpe of Bandra Willendoon Yugildale, a "well-in squatter," if ever there was one. Claythorpe is represented as narrating his own biography to a large Christmas assemblage at Bandra House. It is a delightfully simple story. Claythorpe's struggle was not marked by many ups and downs. He would have married Possie, the more brilliant of the two girls that he had occasion to hesitate between; but as she was killed in a steeple-chase, he marries Nellie, the staidier, and is probably happier than he would have been under other circumstances. The best character in the story is Jim Leighton, the son of Squire Leighton, a well-educated gentleman, yet a waif and apparently an irreclaimable drunkard. He is not, however, altogether irreclaimable, for he "steadies up" and marries Claythorpe's sister. A Sydney-Side Saxon is an excellent story—say for reading by a parson's daughter at a meeting of agricultural labourers—but it is nothing more.

Mistress Beatrice Cope is neither more nor less than a gracefully written romance of the familiar "Jacobite" sort. Beatrice has a lover and a brother, and of course gets into trouble with the one about the other, because, as that other is a Jacobite, she has to keep secret his visits to her. Raymond Forrest is a fine example of the tolerably well-known hot-headed young gentleman of the old school, and Charles Cope's escapes have as much of the hairbreadth character as is at all necessary. There is decided ingenuity in Beatrice's device for putting Colonel Willoughby off the scent by singing to him. But when this is said, all that is needful has been said of Mistress Beatrice Cope.

Thrice Past the Post is at once one of the poorest and one of the pleasantest of Mr. Hawley Smart's stories. He has made no attempt to give it an elaborate plot, much less to write it in an elaborate style. It is a very conventional love-story, with some racing and gambling thrown in. Harold Sedbergh, the son of a squire, who has more than his share of the family failing of bad temper, is in love with Bessie Radley, a country doctor's daughter, and Bessie is even more in love with him. Harold having quarrelled with his father, to whom have been reported stories of some real and more imaginary high play on the part of his son, takes to pessimism and sporting journalism. He is still a gentleman, and can still win races however; and as his father takes a fancy, and leaves his money, to Bessie Radley on condition of her marrying the man of her own choice, all ends conventionally. Thrice Past the Post may be found useful to while away a short railway journey with, but it is good for nothing else.

There is considerable ability in John Webb's End, repulsive as it is almost from the first page to the last. John Webb, an Australian and the morally undisciplined son of a father whom undeserved misfortune and his own violent temper have converted into a savage, seems on the point of being saved—from himself—by his love for Beatrice Humphreys, a superficially sweet country girl. But Beatrice dies, and John Webb discovers from her strange and sinister friend, Annie Hassall, that she had loved and been ruined by a handsome sensualist named Carter. He kills Carter after a duel with knives, which is described with French, if not Wiertzish realism, and then, as Thunderbolt, becomes known as the most daring bushranger of his time. Finally he shoots himself. As a study in the morbid, John Webb's End is beyond doubt one of the most powerful stories that have recently been published, although in parts badly written.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

SOME BOOKS ON HEBREW LITERATURE.

UNDER the title of Hebräisches Wörterbuch zum alten Testamente (Leipzig: Veit), Prof. Siegfried and Stade have brought out Part I. of a new Hebrew-German Dictionary which, for compactness and practical utility, not less than (so far as a first examination enables us to say) for scholarly accuracy, may rank among the best productions of lexicography. The arrangement is alphabetical; and so large a number of references are given, that the vocabulary of the Old Testament may be easily mastered by the linguistic student. Comparison of the cognate languages is avoided, but references are inserted to recent works of authority on this subject. Indeed, the constant use of this dictionary will show the student where to go for the best critical information on the Old Testament. Perhaps the more recent works of Prof. Robertson Smith might with advantage have been referred to oftener, but there is no disposition to neglect distinguished English scholars. Assyriological writers are sparingly mentioned, but this reserve is probably intentional, and will diminish in subsequent editions.

On such a word as ירושלם, for instance, we shall find a reference added to the Tell el-Amarna tablets. Whether enough attention has been given to synonyms may also be doubted. On the Psalms, Olshausen is the chief authority recommended. We are glad that this admirable critic is coming back into vogue. Stade and E. Meyer appear to be the principal authorities on history and archaeology. As the greater part of the work is already in type, the publication of Part II. will not be long delayed. Being much briefer than the Anglo-American work, of which the first part has appeared in America, it may be said to occupy an independent position.

Glossarium Græco-Hebræum; oder der griechische Wörterschatz der jüdischen Midraschwerke. Ein Beitrag zur Kultur- und Alterthumskunde. Von Dr. Julius Fürst, Rabbiner. (Strassburg: Karl J. Trübner.) "Words have their history": this truth is amply illustrated by this latest monument of Jewish learning. So much has been done of late both for the correction of the Midrash texts and for the philological explanation of the many strange words, especially foreign loan-words, which they contain, that Dr. Fürst was fully justified in compiling this special glossary of Græco-Hebrew terms. Many illustrations may be found here both of archaeology in general and of the history of the pronunciation of Greek in particular, and the introduction is well adapted for ordinary classical students. If slips should now and then be found—e.g., when κοσμοκράτωρ (found in Pesikta, 14a) is said not to occur in Greek literature as a title of kings—it will only be a proof that eminent scholars must pay their tribute to human frailty. Dr. Fürst's reputation will certainly not be lowered by this useful and learned work. The type is excellent; and the references both to the ancient Midrashim and to modern commentators are abundant.

Die Entstehung des Alttestamentlichen Kanons: Historisch-kritische Untersuchung. Von G. Wildboer. (Gotha.) This is a revised and enlarged edition of an excellent Dutch work on the Old Testament Canon, already noticed in the ACADEMY. Our reviewer expressed the wish that the work might be translated, and now it lies before us translated, but not into English. However, Dutch is so rarely an accomplishment of English Bible-students that we heartily thank the author for sending his book to us in "hochdeutsch." Works on this subject are wanting in the English student's library; now the German reader at least can refer to two good books, written from slightly different points of view, the present one and Buhl's, published in this same year. Would that Prof. Robertson Smith could give us a new and expanded edition of his excellent lectures, The Old Testament in the Jewish Church (1881)!

The Psalms: A New Translation, with Introductory Essay and Notes. By John de Witt. (New York.) The translation in this interesting work is a revision of that which appeared under the title The Praise-Songs of Israel in 1884 and 1886. As an experiment in the difficult art of rendering from one language into another belonging to a totally different linguistic family, it deserves careful attention.

Many changes have been made by the translator since the first edition. The rhythm in particular is a bold innovation, reminding us of the attempt of Prof. Gilbert (The Poetry of Job: Chicago, 1889), noticed in the ACADEMY, to reproduce the original rhythm of the Book of Job. The translation carries still further the endeavour to provide thoroughly idiomatic equivalents for the Hebrew, relinquishing the word for word and clause for clause system to which even the best translators have, for the most part, adhered. Among the most peculiar renderings we notice, at Psalm xlv. 8—

"Thy robes are all myrrh,
And the wood of the fragrant agalloch,
And from ivory palaces harps give thee joy."

The agalloch is "a very large tree growing in India and Cochin China, and of great value for its perfume." "The name is not of Semitic, but of Indian origin." Reference is made to Dr. Royle's botanical statements under "Ahalim" in Kitto's Cyclopaedia. "Fragrant" is a paraphrase, q'ci'oth meaning literally, it is said, "cuttings" (i.e., blocks or chips). This is strange doctrine; but in the criticism both of dates and of text, and also in exegesis, the author is thoroughly orthodox.

The Threefold Cord: being Sketches of Three Treatises of the Talmud—Sanhedrin, Baba Metsia, and Baba Bathra. By B. Spiers. (Wertheimer, Lea & Co.) This is a useful, popular introduction, specially designed for Jewish readers.

SOME BOOKS ON EDUCATION.

Teaching in Three Continents. By W. C. Grasby. (Cassells.) This book certainly deserves more than passing notice. The writer is an expert, who visited a vast number of schools and the like in the chief countries of Europe, America, and Australia; recording his impressions with, in most cases, chapter and verse for the school and locality where they were formed. The institutions which he saw were neither all exceptional nor all typical; and it is quite clear that he has been at pains to keep his mind free from prejudice, and that he has been betrayed only very rarely into what sounds to the ordinary English reader as national cant. Methodically and intelligently arranged, with a reasonably good index, the little book of less than three hundred and fifty pages contains probably more sound information and reasonable comment on educational matters than any English book since Dr. Fitch's Lectures; and it deals with current matters in a manner much more immediately practical than does Dr. Fitch's excellent series. It is sad to think that so many people, earnestly and most dutifully engaged in the work of education, learn so little as they go on: the schoolroom and its presiding officials are among the most conservative things in creation. A few books like Mr. Grasby's, in the hands of our administrators and teachers, would work infinitely greater good than the most careful administration of our often ignorant and unyielding systems. We should, in the first place, learn how much good is neglected, and how much harm is compassed, by the outrageous exaggeration of educational politics and professional narrowness and selfishness in this country; and, in the next, we might possibly see failure predestinated in the very so-called "reforms" which alternating officialism and sciolism and commercialism are thrusting on us. Every page of Mr. Grasby's book is important; the copy on which this notice is made is marked and scored in a hundred places. It is impossible here to do more than indicate in a very general way the ground he covers. He examines the public provision made for education, both "new" and "old," the way in which work is tested, the training of teachers, building and organisation of schools, and the like. He puts his fingers very accurately on the weak spots of our English "system," the fatal confidence in the mechanical results of examinations as tests, the ignorant professionalism of many of our best teachers, and the haphazard character of the provision made for secondary teaching and the training of teachers. These things are being impressed on us more and more by critics at home and abroad, and some are sanguine enough to hope that the right effect will be produced by the drops of falling water, if not vi, yet saepe cadendo. It is, perhaps, natural that the writer, who is an Australian, should not have seen everything he should have seen, nor learnt all that it would have helped him to learn. He, therefore, falls into some curious errors. For instance, he thinks that the Liverpool Teachers' Guild is the largest organisation of the sort in the country; but whereas the Liverpool Guild is an organisation of hundreds, the great Guild of the United Kingdom numbers thousands of members, and does work far more permanently important and valuable than even the genial organisation in Liverpool. Moreover, he should know that the English Home Reading Union is a very large body, of growing influence and helpfulness. But these are very small matters. In all his main facts Mr. Grasby is right, and in his judgments he is generally strictly just. No real teacher or organiser of teaching will do well to miss the opportunity Mr. Grasby's book gives of obtaining something like a bird's-eye view of the current problems in practical pedagogy.

The Teachers' Handbook of Slöyd. By Otto Salomon. (George Philip & Son.) There is a good deal of something like bad blood between the supporters of "Swedish" Slöyd on the one hand and "English" Slöyd on the other, which is certainly a pity. It is not yet out in print, perhaps, but investigators must be prepared to hear both sides. The truth lies in the usual place, though we incline rather to think that Mr. Salomon has not been quite fairly used by his critics, and that his friends have done him much damage by the use of brazen and other instruments. Slöyd is beyond measure important to real educators, because it is the true foundation, in modified forms, of technical education, for which all the world is crying, and about which all the world is tolerably ignorant. It will hardly be believed that in some English training colleges the workshop instruction is given by an ignorant artisan—ignorant in the pedagogic sense, which is the sense most important to teachers. Yet of course, neither riding nor Slöyd can be taught by books; in the one case you must mount your horse, and in the other you must actually handle your tools and material. To teachers and advanced scholars Mr. Salomon's book will prove extremely useful. It is certainly handy, clear, and not too technical.

Froebel's Letters on the Kindergarten. By E. Michaelis and H. K. Moore. (Sonnenschein.) For most people, without doubt, this carefully edited and inexpensive book will do more to vitalise Froebelianism than many more ambitious and systematic treatises. Froebel's earnest belief in the rightness and righteousness of his work, his simplicity and disinterestedness, may possibly kindle a like enthusiasm in readers. It is due to the translators to praise the absolute honesty of their version, which certainly does not spare the oddnesses of their apostle. At the same time it must be confessed that, if the immediate object which they had in view was to render Froebelianism attractive, they might have made a shorter cut by a discreet use of the knife.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. HALL CAINE'S new romance, "The Scapegoat," seems to have touched the feelings of English Jews, during its appearance in the Illustrated London News. Through Dr. Adler, the Chief Rabbi, they have addressed to him an invitation to visit Russia, together with a companion familiar with the country and the language, in order that he may study the Russo-Jewish question on the spot. We understand that the first edition of "The Scapegoat" in two-volume form was entirely exhausted on subscription. The publisher announces a second edition to be ready this day.

MR. GRANT ALLEN will leave England next week. He proposes to travel through the Tyrol and Northern Italy, before settling down in his winter home at Antibes. In addition to other literary work, he has lately been engaged in preparing for the press a translation of the "Attys" of Catullus which he made some years ago. He will prefix to it a preface, dealing generally with the mythology of the subject.

THE Life of Sir Walter Raleigh, upon which Mr. William Stebbing has been engaged for several years will be ready for publication by the Clarendon Press in the course of October.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN will publish on October 1 the first part of an illustrated edition of Green's Short History of the English People, handsomely printed in super royal octavo size. The illustrations, which have been partly selected by Mrs. Green and Mr. George Scharf, are engraved in wood by Mr. J. D. Cooper. They are taken from authentic sources, to exhibit pictorially the arts, industries, costumes, coins, domestic and ecclesiastical architecture of the various periods, and also include a series of portraits. In addition, there will be coloured maps, and chromo-lithograph reproductions from illuminated MSS., &c. It is expected that the whole will be completed in thirty monthly parts.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS' new Aldine edition of Gray's Poetical Works, edited by Dr. Bradshaw of Madras, will be published shortly. It is not a reprint of Mitford's Aldine Edition, but an entirely new work; and it will be the most complete edition of the poems, both English and Latin, several pieces that have appeared in various books on Gray being now first collected. The text followed is that of Gray's own edition, published by Dodsley in 1768; and for the posthumous poems the editor has corrected the text from the MS. copies in Gray's handwriting in the Stonehaven MSS. at Pembroke College, and discovered some important inaccuracies made by Mathias and followed by all subsequent editors. The notes contain explanations of various allusions (e.g., the reference to Maclean the highwayman), never before cleared up. To each poem is prefixed an introduction, giving its history, or the occasion of its being written; and the correct readings of places in the "Elegy," &c., where editions differ, are given and accounted for. There is a new Life of Gray by the editor, with several particulars now first given; and a complete bibliography of Gray's works, based on the Catalogues of the British Museum and the Bodleian Library.

FLORENCE MARRYAT'S new novel, entitled A Fatal Silence, will be published simultaneously in London and New York on October 20. Messrs. Griffith, Farran & Co. are the London publishers.

NEXT week will be issued a work entitled Poultry-keeping as an Industry for Farmers and Cottagers, upon which Mr. Edward Brown, editor of the Fanciers' Gazette, has been engaged for some time past. This book, which is fully illustrated, deals in a practical manner with the selection, breeding, rearing, housing, fattening, and dressing of fowls, ducks, geese, and turkeys, and the marketing of both eggs and chickens. It will contain letters of commendation from Mr. Gladstone, the Countess of Aberdeen, the Vice-President of the Council on Education (Sir William Hart-Dyke), and others.

THE October volume of the Whitefriars Library (Henry & Co.), will be In Cambridge Courts, by Mr. Rudolph C. Lehmann, a humorous description, in prose and verse, of undergraduate life on the Cam.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS are about to issue from their London office an Essay on Abraham Lincoln, by Mr. Carl Schurz. The volume reproduces, with one addition, the remarkable paper which appeared in the Atlantic Monthly for June.

As witnesses of the popularity of The Canterbury Tales fifty-four MSS. still exist, ranging in date from about 1420 to 1476. Of these, all except four are accessible to students either in public libraries or by the courtesy of private owners—Lord Ellesmere, Mr. Wynne of Peniarth, Lords Leonfield, Leicester, Tolle-mache, Delamere, the Dukes of Devonshire and Northumberland, and Sir Henry Ingilby. Lord Ashburnham will not let his four MSS. be used, and Lady Cardigan locks her one up too. Of other MSS. once known, that seen by William Thynne about 1530, and signed "examinatur Chaucer," is most desired. Then come six mentioned by Urry, belonging to the Duke of Chandos, the Hon. Col. H. Worsley, Mr. E. Cambey, Mr. Norton of Suthwic, Hants, the Bishop of Ely, and the Royal Society (No. 38), and Tyrwhitt's Askew I., though any or all of these may be among the fifty-four known MSS. The MS. Cotton. Otho A 18, was burnt in the Westminster fire. The MSS. of the Tales bequeathed by early Wills we can hardly hope to identify now.

THE fifty-ninth session of the Birkbeck Institution will open on Thursday next, October 1. About 200 classes meet weekly in commercial and technical subjects, mathematics, natural, applied, and mental science, languages, history, literature, art, music, law, &c. Special classes are arranged for University, Civil Service, and other examinations. On Wednesday evenings, lectures will be delivered in the large theatre of the Institution. Among those who are already engaged may be mentioned—Sir Robert S. Ball, Mr. George Du Maurier, Mr. Joseph Hatton, the Rev. Dr. Dallinger, Dr. J. A. Rentoul, the Rev. A. Boyd-Carpenter, Miss Amelia B. Edwards, Mr. Samuel Brandram, Mr. J. T. Carrodus, Mr. Herbert Ward, Mr. Charles Dickens, Dr. W. A. Barrett, and Mr. Charles Fry.

DON CÉSAR MORENO GARCIA has an interesting bibliographical article in the Revista Contemporánea of August 30 on "The Cid in Spanish Literature," noting the opinions of the best foreign as well as Spanish critics.

HERR V. STEMPEL and Prof. J. Vinson have just published (Chollet: Bordeaux) an impression in Basque of fifty numbered copies of the Pastorale, "Saint-Julien d'Antioche," from an inedited MS. in the Bibliothèque de Bordeaux. The price of the copies is 10 frs.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN are generally so careful to affix full bibliographical details to their reprints, that it seems worth while to call attention to the fact that their new edition of The Little Schoolmaster Mark still bears the date of 1884 on its title page. Similarly, Messrs. George Bell & Sons have issued this week a cheap edition of Mr. Martin A. Sharp Hume's translation of a Spanish Chronicle of Henry VIII., with the old date, 1889. The latter, we may add, is noticed as a new book in the Times of Thursday; it was reviewed, on the occasion of its first appearance, in the ACADEMY of March 16, 1889.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE October number of Mind, the last for which the original editor, Prof. Croom Robertson, is responsible, will contain a general index (pp. 40) to the sixteen volumes then to be completed. A second series of the review will be begun in January, under the editorship of Mr. G. F. Stout, of St. John's College, Cambridge, with the co-operation of Prof. Henry Sidgwick, Dr. J. Venn, Dr. J. Ward, and Prof. William Wallace.

THE Rev. Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll, not content with the three or four literary enterprises which he already conducts, announces a new monthly, to be called the Bookman. Among the novel features announced is a "Young Author's Page," in which criticisms will be given on all MSS. specially submitted to the editor.

THE October number of the English Illustrated Magazine, which begins a new volume, will contain the opening chapters of a new serial by Mr. W. Clark Russell, entitled "A Strange Elopement." Among the other contents will be the first two of three articles on "Rugby School," Judge Hughes writing on the early period down to the death of Dr. Arnold, and Mr. H. Lee Warner continuing the account to the present time; an illustrated article on "Boston: the Capital of the Fens"; another on "The Birds of London"; and an American short story by Mr. Frank Harris. For frontispiece there is to be given a portrait of Judge Hughes, engraved by Mr. O. Lacour, after a not very familiar picture by Mr. Lowes Dickinson.

THE Reliquary for October will contain an illustrated article on "Carved Medieval Chests," by Mr. C. C. Hodges; "Burial in Woolen," by Mr. England Howlett; "Inventories of Somerset Chantry"; the continuation of Mr. Fallow's notes on the smaller Irish cathedrals, with illustrations; "Roman Sepulchral Urns at Aldborough," by Alex. D. H. Leadman; "Notes on tracing and drawing tiles," by Mr. John Ward; "On a Boxwood Comb (c. 1550) inlaid with ivory," by the Rev. A. Trollope; "Some accounts relating to Howden," by Mr. W. Brown; and "So-called Pilgrim Marks," by Mr. H. Paget.

THE October number of the Law Quarterly Review will contain articles on "Natural Law and the Bering Sea Question," by Mr. T. B. Browning, of Toronto; "Terminology in Contract," by Sir W. R. Anson; "The County Court System," by Mr. Charles Cantherley; "Frankalmoin in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries," by Prof. F. W. Maitland; "The American and British Systems of Patent Law," by Mr. J. H. Bakewell; "Maintenance Clauses," by Mr. J. Savill Vaizey; "Wrongful Intimidation," by Mr. S. H. Leonard; and a Note on the Vagliano Case, by Mr. J. R. Adams.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

WILHELM MÜLLER: A MEMORY.*

[The monument to Wilhelm Müller at Dessau will be unveiled on September 30 by his son, Prof. F. Max Müller.]

WHAT song is that keeps ringing,
Keeps ringing in my head?
What melody is singing,
So sweetly to it wed?
Methinks it is the Miller,
The Miller and his Maid;
I hear the "Müllerlied"
Beneath yon alders' shade.

* Of course these verses refer to Wilhelm Müller as the poet of the "Müllerlied" and the "Winter Reise" only, no allusion being made to many other beautiful songs, or to his noble "Griechenlied."

I hear his song of passion,
Of jealousy and love;
And ever sings the water,
And sail the clouds above.

I hear a Brooklet rushing,
Clear rushing on its way,
And through its murmuring ripples
The Nixies' roundelay.

And now the "Winter Journey"
Begins in cadence drear,
No longer joyous wanderings
By millstream and by weir.

Through silent fields and lonely
The lover wends his way,
The clouds all black and sullen,
His soul as dark as they.

The Ravens wheel, hoarse croaking,
The Dead Leaves idly fall,
Anon the snow descending
Enshrouds with spotless pall.

The Brook that sang so sweetly
In days of summer glad
Is hushed and frozen over,
All silent now and sad.

Three Suns are fiercely glaring
White in the wintry sky;
The weird old Organ-grinder
Goes tottering feebly by.

And lo, yon Signpost sadly
Still pointeth on ahead,
Where, beneath flowers and garlands,
Sleep peacefully the Dead!

* * * * *

Then, as the Poet sang them,
Franz Schubert passed along,
And fixed the lovely Lieder
Immortally in song!

KATE FREILIGRATH KROEKER.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE second quarterly part of the Altpreussische Monatschrift for the current year (April—June, 1891) is rich in the subject of local antiquities. J. Sembrzycki contributes one paper on the old castles of the lower Vistula as their condition was revealed by a committee of inquiry in 1564-65, and gives in another some notices of recent Polish literature touching on matters of East and West Prussia. X. Froelich publishes extracts from the archives of Neuenburg which throw light on the laws and manners of Culmerland, such as the case of a thief saved from the gallows by a maid who volunteered to marry him. Melancthon's connexions with the province form the theme of a paper by L. Neubaur; while A. Treichel finds the "provenance" of the well-known glee Cramkambuli in some verses published at Danzig in 1781 in praise of a local tippel so-called. V. Diederichs, in an article on Herder's correspondence, gives a letter from Kant, who in 1768 tells his ex-pupil that he has lately learned to look otherwise at some things, and that he is engaged on a critical investigation of ethical methods and principles. We are glad to see that in the ensuing part, to appear at the end of this month, Dr. Reicke will resume his long-suspended publication of Kant's latest manuscript—the instalment giving mainly a first draft of passages in the Philosophy of Law.

THE September Livre Moderne, for what may be called a holiday number, is an interesting one. It is not M. Gausseron's fault that he has to make the bricks of his review of contemporary literature, not so much without straw as without clay. But there are more "autograph" letters of M. Zola for those who care for such things, and there are two articles proper of merit and substance. One is on the less-known portraits of Balzac, which are but few; but which include an after-death likeness by Giraud, reproduced here hors texte in aquatint. As often happens in such cases, the face looks surprisingly young. The number is worth buying for this. M. Dimjon has done a pleasant notice of the precepts to critics of Christian Adolphus Klotz, wherefrom it would appear that logs were rolled and victims were slated a century and a quarter ago very much as they are now.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

General Literature.—"Jesus Christ," by Father Didon; "De Imitatione Christi," in Latin and English; "The Worth of Human Destiny," by Thomas Fritz-Arthur; "Gardencraft," by John D. Sedding; "Early History of Balliol College," by Frances de Paravicini; "The Blazon of English, Scottish, and Irish Episcopacy," by the Rev. W. K. Riland Bedford; "The Duke of Clarence in India," by J. D. Rees; "Narratives of Tours in India made by Lord Connemara," by J. D. Rees; "Sanchi and its Remains," by General Frederick Charles Maisey; "The Architecture of the Churches of Denmark," by Major Alfred Heales; "The Making of Italy," by the O'Cleary; "History of the British Standing Army," by Colonel Clifford Walton; "Hegel's History of Philosophy," translated by R. B. Haldane; "Modern Factory System," by R. Whately Cooke Taylor; "The Kalender of Shepherdes," by Oskar Sommer; "The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia," by Oskar Sommer; "English Folk Rhymes," by G. F. Northall; "The Flight of the Shadow," by George Macdonald; "At Sundry Times and in Divers Places," by Mary Eleanor Benson; "Principles of Political Economy," by Arthur Latham Perry; "Birtright in Land," by Prof. William Ogilvie; "The Occult Sciences," by Arthur Edward Waite; "The Last Colonel of the Irish Brigade," by Mrs. Morgan John O'Connell; "Life of Sir Daniel Gooch," by Isambard Brunel; "Miscellanies; chiefly Academic," by Prof. F. W. Newman; "The Jewish Religion," by M. Friedlander; "Seeds and Sheaves," by Lady Lovat; "Vox Clamantis" by R. Sadler; "The Powers which propel and guide the Planets," by Sydney Laidlaw; "Notes on Preliminary Tactics," by Major Eden Baker; "A Practical French Grammar," part ii., Syntax, by Mortimer de Larmoyer.

Science.—"Colour Blindness and Colour Perception," by F. W. Edridge-Green; "British Edible Fungi," by M. C. Cooke; "Taxidermy and Zoological Collecting," by W. T. Hornaday; "Descriptive Catalogue of the Nests and Eggs of Birds found breeding in Australia and Tasmania," by A. J. North; "On Seedlings," by Sir John Lubbock; "The Ophthalmoscope," by Dr. E. A. Brown; "Marriage and Disease," by S. A. K. Strahan.

Poetry.—"Ballads and Lyrics," by Katherine Tynan; "Essays in Verse," by May Sinclair; "Sketches from Nature," by C. Scott; "Poems of Gustavo Adolfo Becquer," by Mason Carnes; "Loose Blades from the Ore Field," by Francis Osmaston; "A Dream of Other Days," by Lieut-Col. Fife-Cookson.

Philology.—"The 'Historia Monastica' of Thomas of Marga," edited by E. A. Wallis Budge; "The Book of Chinese Poetry," translated by Clement F. R. Allen; "Arabic Chrestomathy," edited by Hartwig Hirschfeld; "Comparative Grammar of the South African Bantu Languages," by J. Torrend; "Grammar of the Khasi Language," by the Rev. H. Roberts; "Simplified Grammar of the Gujarati Language," by the Rev. W. St. Clair Tisdall; "An Introduction to the Arabic of Morocco," by J. E. Budgett Meakin; and "Colonial English," by Karl Lentzner.

New Editions.—George Macdonald's Novels in monthly volumes: "In the Heart of the Storm," by Maxwell Gray; "There and Back," by George Macdonald; "Tales of the Gods and Heroes," by the Rev. Sir George W. Cox; "The History of Creation," from the German of Ernst Haeckel, revised edition, translated by Prof. E. Ray Lankester; "A Hindi Grammar," by the Rev. S. H. Kellogg; "A Manual of Hindu Pantheism," translated by Col. G. A. Jacob; "Moral Order and Progress," by S. Alexander; "The Catechism of Positive Religion," by Richard Congreve; "The Childhood of Religions," by Edward Clodd; "Jesus the Carpenter of Nazareth," by a Layman; "Alexander Heriot Mackonochie," by E. A. T., edited by E. F. Russell; "The Autobiography of Mark Rutherford," edited by Reuben Shapcott; "Shut your Mouth and Save your Life," by George Catlin; "Chemistry of the Carbon Compounds," by Prof. Victor von Richter; "The Young Seaman's Manual and Rigger's Guide," by Capt. G. Burney.

MESSRS. CASSELL & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Picturesque Mediterranean," with illustrations from original designs made on the spot, in 2 vols.; "Queen Summer"; or, The Tourney of the Lily and the Rose, penned and portrayed by Walter Crane, containing forty pages of designs, printed in colours; An edition de luxe of "A Vision of Saints," by Lewis Morris, uniform with the illustrated edition of "The Epic of Hades," with 20 full-page illustrations from the old masters and from contemporary portraits; "Waterloo Letters," a selection from original and hitherto unpublished letters bearing on the operations of the 16th, 17th, and 18th of June, 1815, by officers who served in the campaign, edited, with explanatory notes, by Major-General H. T. Siborne, late Colonel R.E., with numerous plans of the battlefield; "The Last Great Naval War," a historical retrospect (1930) by A. Nelson Seaforth, with maps and plans, second edition; "The Biography of a Locomotive Engine," by Henry Frith, with eight full-page illustrations by Paul Hardy; "The Blue Pavilions," by Q.; "The Little Minister," by J. M. Barrie, in 3 vols.; "Watts Phillips, Artist and Playwright," by Miss E. Watts Phillips, with 32 plates; "Robinson Crusoe," with upwards of 100 original illustrations expressly executed for this edition by Walter Paget; "The Magazine of Art" Volume for 1891, and a popular edition of "Rivers of Great Britain," vol. i., The Royal River: the Thames from source to sea, descriptive, historical, pictorial, with several hundred original illustrations. "The Story of Francis Cludde," by Stanley J. Weyman; "The Faith Doctor," by Edward Eggleston; "Dr. Dumány's Wife," by Maurus Jokai, translated from the Hungarian by F. Steinitz; "Father Stafford," by Anthony Hope; "Elizabeth Gilbert and her Work for the Blind," by Frances Martin; "A Sweet Girl Graduate," by L. T. Meade, illustrated with eight full-page plates; "The White House at Inch Gow," by Mrs. Pitt, with eight full-page plates by John H. Bacon; "Great-Grandma and Elsie," by Georgina M. Synge, illustrated by Gordon Browne; "Robin's Ride," by Miss E. Davenport Adams, illustrated by W. S. Stacey; "Pleasant Work for Busy Fingers"; or, Kindergarten at Home, by Maggie Browne; "Story Poems," for young and old, edited by Miss E. Davenport Adams; a cheap edition of Archdeacon Farrar's "Life of Christ"; a cheap edition of "The Dictionary of Religion," an encyclopaedia of Christian and other religious doctrines, denominations, sects, heresies, ecclesiastical terms, history, biography, &c., &c., by the Rev. William Benham; "Heroes of Britain in Peace and War," vol. i., with upwards of 150 original illustrations; "Bible-women and Nurses," yearly volume, illustrated; "Conquests of the Cross," a record of missionary work throughout the world, by Edwin Hodder, with numerous illustrations, complete in 3 vols.; second series of "The Cabinet Portrait Gallery," containing 36 photographs of men and women of the day, from photographs by Messrs. W. & D. Downey, with biographical sketches; "English Writers," by Prof. Henry Morley, vol. viii.: From Surrey to Spenser; "Verses Grave and Gay," by Miss Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler; "Vegetarian Cookery," a manual of cheap and wholesome diet, by A. G. Payne; "Physiology for Schools," by Dr. Alfred T. Schofield, illustrated with wood engravings, and containing two coloured plates; "A First Book of Mechanics for Young Beginners," with numerous easy examples and answers, by the Rev. J. G. Easton; "The Empire Reader," by G. R. Parkin, uniform with "The Citizen Reader"; "The Round World," by H. O. Arnold-Forster, being introductory lessons to the study of geography; "Cookery for Schools," by Lizzie Heritage; "Cassell's Storehouse of General Information," vol. i., illustrated with wood engravings, coloured plates, and maps; "Cassell's New Popular Educator," vols. v. and vi., with six coloured maps and plates in each volume; new edition, re-set in large type, of "Howard's Anglo-American Art of Reckoning," the standard teacher and referee of shorthand business arithmetic, by C. Frusher Howard; and "Cassell's Saturday Journal," yearly volume for 1891, new and enlarged series, illustrated throughout. "The Quiver" Volume for 1891, with coloured picture for frontispiece; "Cassell's Family Magazine" for 1891; "Work," yearly volume, an illustrated magazine of practice and theory for all workmen, professional and amateur; "Little Folks' Christmas Volume"; "Bo-Peep," yearly volume for 1891; and "The Metropolitan Year-Book for 1892."

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Social and Present-Day Problems," by Archdeacon Farrar; "George Fife Angas, Father and Founder of South Australia," by Edwin Hodder; "The Preacher and his Models," by the Rev. Dr. James Stalker; A new volume of stories," by J. M. Barrie; "The Story of the Life of Mackay of Uganda," told for boys, with illustrations; a popular edition, in one volume, of "John G. Paton, D.D., Missionary to the New Hebrides"; "The Sermon Year Book for 1891, and Selected Sermons," by the editor of the British Weekly Pulpit; "Erasmus and other Essays," by Prof. Marcus Dods; "J. A. Macfadyen, D.D. (of Manchester)," memoir and sermons, by the Rev. Dr. Alexander Mackennal; "Fellowship with Christ, and other Sermons," by Dr. R. W. Dale; "The Story of My Life," by M. F. Cusack, the Nun of Kenmare; "St. Bernard: His Life and Career," by the Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs; "The Apostle Paul: a Sketch of the Development of his Doctrine," by Prof. A. Sabatier; "The Redemption of Edward Strahan: a Social Story," by W. J. Dawson; "Theodore Christlieb, of Bonn: Memoir and Sermons," translated by Prebendary Kingsbury and Canon Garratt; "The Cessation of Prophecy, and other Sermons," by the late Rev. W. H. Simcox; "A Young Heart of Oak," memoirs of Harry Stuart Boldero, Lieut. R.N.; "Making the Most of Life," by the Rev. Dr. J. R. Miller; "Brighter England, and Incidents on the Way to It," by Thomas Whitaker; "The Kingdom of Christ and the Church of Ireland," by the Right Hon. Robert R. Warren, Chancellor of Cashel and Waterford; "The Unsearchable Riches of Christ, and other Sermons," by John F. Ewing, with biographical sketch by Prof. Henry Drummond; "Cromwell Anecdotes," by Dr. Macaulay; "The Way to Succeed; or, the Secret of Success in Life," by W. M. Thayer; "Rudolph of Rosenfeldt: a Story of the Times of William the Silent," with illustrations by G. H. Edwards; "David Fleming's Forgiveness," by the author of "Christie Redfern's Troubles," with illustrations by G. H. Edwards; "Delitzsch's Commentary on Isaiah," vol. ii., completing the work and forming the last volume of the "Foreign Biblical Library"; "Bible Studies for International Lessons, 1892," by the Rev. Dr. George F. Pentecost and the Rev. Dr. James Stacey; "Reminiscences and Memorials," by the Rev. W. J. Townsend; "A Revised Theology," by the Rev. Dr. George Jamieson; "The Sermon Bible," vol. viii., containing John iv. to Acts vi.; Dr. Parker's "People's Bible," vol. xv., containing Isaiah xxvii.-Jeremiah xix.; "The Expositor," edited by the Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, vol. iv.; and the following six volumes of the "Expositor's Bible"; "The Epistle to the Thessalonians," by the Rev. James Denny; "The Psalms," vol. i., by the Rev. Dr. Alexander Maclaren; "The Gospel of St. John," vol. ii., by Prof. Marcus Dods; "The Acts of the Apostles," vol. ii., by Prof. G. T. Stokes; "The Book of Job," by the Rev. Dr. R. A. Watson; and "The Epistle to the Ephesians," by Prof. G. G. Findlay.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Echoes from a Sanctuary," by the late Rev. Henry White, of the Chapel Royal, Savoy, with an Introduction by the Bishop of Ripon, and photogravure portrait; "The Life of Admiral of the Fleet, Sir Provo Wallis," with letters, photogravure portrait, illustrations and charts by the Rev. J. G. Brighton, M.D., author of "Life of Admiral Broke"; "Through Pain to Peace," in 3 vols., by Sarah Doudney; several new volumes of "The Poets and the Poetry of the Century," edited by Alfred H. Miles; "The Life of E. L. Blanchard and Reminiscences" with notes from the Diary of W. Blanchard, by Clement Scott and Cecil Howard, with photogravure portraits and illustrations, and a copious index, in 2 vols.; "Lord Carrington in Australia," an account of five years of vice-regal life and work in New South Wales, with portraits of Lord and Lady Carrington, and illustrations, edited by A. Patchett Martin; "The Princess Mazaroff," a romance of the day, in 2 vols., by Joseph Hatton; "The Australasian Dictionary of Biography" (including New Zealand and Fiji) comprising notices of eminent colonists from 1855 to date by Philip Mennell, assisted by colonists; "The Web of the Spider," a story of New Zealand adventure by H. B. Marriott Watson; "Cigarette Papers," by Joseph Hatton, with illustrations by Raven Hill and A. G. Finberg; "Hutchinson's Australasian Encyclopædia," including New Zealand, comprising an alphabetical description of all places in the Australasian colonies, an account of the events which have taken place from its discovery to the present date, its natural history, scenery, resources, laws, constitution, and statistics, and biographies of discoverers, explorers, officials, and colonists, from the earliest dates to 1855, by G. C. Levey; several new volumes of the "Famous Women of the French Court" series, with portraits; "Where Two Ways Meet," by Sarah Doudney, with illustrations by R. Barnes; "Dare Lorimer's Heritage," by Evelyn Everett Green, with illustrations; "The Little Marine" and the "Japanese Lily, or the Land of the Rising Sun," by Florence Marryat, with full-page illustrations; "The Family Difficulty," by Sarah Doudney, with illustrations; "The Cruise of the Crystal Boat"; "The Wild, the Weird, the Wonderful," by Dr. Gordon Stables, with illustrations; "Fifty-two Further Stories for Boys," by George Henty, G. Manville Fenn, R. E. Francillon, Ascott Hope, Henry Frith, Rosa Mulholland, &c., with illustrations; "Fifty Further Stories for Girls," by Sarah Doudney, G. Manville Fenn, Rosa Mulholland, Henry Frith, Lieut. Col. Macpherson, &c., with illustrations; two new volumes of the "Platform Reciter"; and a "Handy Guide to Brazil," by G. C. Levey, with map.

THE S. P. C. K.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Palestine Illustrated," a collection of photographic views taken in Palestine; "Christianity and Buddhism," by the Rev. T. Sterling Berry; "The Ouse," by the Rev. A. J. Foster; "Capital, Labour and Trade, and the Outlook," by Margaret Benson; "Life and Times of Bishop William Morgan," by the Rev. William Hughes; "Within the Veil," by the Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg Cotta Family"; "Church Work in North China"; "Captain Japp," by Dr. Gordon Stables; "To the West," by G. Manville Fenn; "Two Friends and a Fiddle," by Helen Shipton; "A Local Lion," by Austin Clare; "The Ice Prison," by F. Frankfort Moore; "Hatherley's Homespun," by Annette Lyster; "Jan," by Mrs. Newman; "The Lucky Ducks," by Mrs. Molesworth; "Aunt Lily's Motto," by Lady Dunboyne; "Polly," by Robina F. Hardy; "Sydney's Secret," by Evelyn Everett Green; "The Dean's Little Daughter," by the Author of "A Fellow of Trinity," &c.; "Saved from Himself," by Mrs. Henry Clarke; "Fifteen Pounds," by the Rev. S. Baring Gould.

MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SON'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Geographical and General.—"Delagoa Bay: its Natives and Natural History," by Rose Monteiro, with 20 illustrations after the author's sketches, and from the natural objects by A. B. and E. C. Woodward—a limited number will be issued with frontispiece of new African butterflies, hand coloured; "Livingstone and the Exploration of Central Africa," forming vol. vi. of "The World's Great Explorers and Explorations," by H. H. Johnston, H.M. Commissioner for Nyasaland and Consul-General for Portuguese East Africa, with 22 illustrations from photographs or drawings by the author, and 7 maps drawn by E. G. Ravenstein—also a limited edition, printed on hand-made paper, with additional illustrations and etched frontispiece; "Paraguay: its History, Commerce, and Resources," by E. Bourgade, with 13 illustrations and a large coloured map; "Home Life on an Ostrich Farm," by Annie Martin, new and cheap edition; "Makers of Modern Thought," by D. Nasmith; "The Seaman's Medical Guide," new edition, revised and enlarged, by Archibald Finlay; "A Girl in the Karpathians," by Mémie Muriel Dowie (Mrs. Norman), cheap edition, with portrait and new preface.

Educational.—"The Teacher's Hand-book of Slojd," as practised and taught at Naäs, by Otto Salomon, Director of the Naäs Seminarium, with over 130 illustrations; "Reading Made Easy," on a rational system, in which speaking, drawing, writing, and reading are taught in combination, by Anna Snell, new and enlarged edition, with illustrations, also an introduction to the same for the use of teachers; "New Readings and Recitations," selected and adapted by Charles E. Clegg; "Rapid Road to Spanish," part ii., by J. W. Ralfe, also Key to part i. and ii.; "Hughes' Class Book of Modern Geography," an entirely new and much enlarged edition, by J. Francon Williams; "Geography of the British Colonies and Foreign Possessions," by the Rev. J. P. Fauntleroy, new and revised edition; "The Practical Drawing Sheets," by H. C. Wilcocks.

Atlases.—"Systematic Atlas," for higher schools and general use, a series of physical and political maps of all the countries of the world, with diagrams and illustrations of astronomical and physical geography, specially drawn by E. G. Ravenstein; "The Handy Volume Atlas of Astronomy," a series of 72 plates, with notes and index, by Sir Robert Stawell Ball, Royal Astronomer of Ireland; "The Handy Volume Atlas of London," a series of 64 maps, with notes, compendium, directory, and complete index; "Atlas of Modern Geography," new and enlarged edition; "Patent Revolving Orrery," uniform with Philip's Revolving Planisphere, for finding the position of the various planets for every hour in the year, invented and patented by J. G. Parvin.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Life of Gustave Doré," by the late Blanchard Jerrold, with 138 illustrations from original drawings; "Events in the Taeping Rebellion," being reprints of MSS. copied by General Gordon, with introduction and notes by A. Egmont Hake; "The Great Buddhist Temple of Mahabodhi at Gaya," by Sir Alexander Cunningham, with illustrations by W. Griggs; "The Life and Teachings of Mohammed;" or, the Spirit of Islam, by Syed Ameer Ali; "The Campaigns in Virginia, 1861-62," by T. Miller Maguire, with 5 maps.

New Editions.—"The Region of Eternal Fire": an account of a journey to the petroleum region of the Caspian in 1885, by Charles Marvin, with portrait and illustrations; "Other Suns than Ours": a series of essays on suns—old, young, and dead, with other science gleanings, by Richard A. Proctor, with illustrations; "With the Harrises, Seventy Years Ago," by the late Rev. G. R. Gleig; "Memoirs of a Griffin"; or, a cadet's first year in India, by Captain Bellow, illustrated.

MESSRS. WHITTAKER & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

New Volumes of the Library of Popular Science.—"Light," by Sir H. Trueman Woods; "The Plant World, its Past, Present, and Future," by G. Masee; and later volumes on Geology, Mineralogy, and Chemistry, by A. J. Jukes Browne, Dr. Hatch, and T. Bolas.

New Volumes of the Specialists' Series.—"The Alkali Makers' Handbook," by Drs. Lunge and Hurter; "The Dynamo," by C. C. Hawkins and J. Wallis; "Lightning Conductors and Guards," by Prof. Oliver J. Lodge; "Electric Light Cables and the Distribution of Electricity," by Stuart A. Russell; "The Artificial Production of Cold," by H. G. Harris; and "The Drainage of Habitable Buildings," by W. Lee Beardmore.

New Volumes of the Library of Arts, Sciences, Manufactures, and Industries.—"The Practical Telephone Handbook," by J. Poole; "Electricity and Magnetism," by W. Perren Maycock; "The Optics of Photography and Photographic Lenses," by Traill Taylor; "The Art and Craft of Cabinet-making," by D. Denning; "Induction Coils," by G. E. Bonney; and "Photographic Processes and Appliances," by Traill Taylor.

A revised and enlarged edition (the fourth) of "The Working and Management of an English Railway," by Mr. Findlay; "The Working and Management of a Transatlantic Steamship," with a retrospect of the trade, by A. J. Maginnis; "Colliery Lighting by Electricity," by Sydney F. Walker; "Town Lighting by Electricity," by the same; and "A Guide to Electric Lighting," by S. R. Bottone.

New Volumes of the Minor Arts and Industries Series.—"Leather Work" and "Repoussé," by Charles G. Leland.

"Scenes from Modern German Plays," selected and edited by F. Storr; and "Scenes from French Plays," selected and edited by J. Boiello; "Recent Army Mathematical Papers," edited by Dr. Davis; "Dod's Peerage and Dod's Parliamentary Companion for 1892"; "The School Calendar" and "The Calendars of the University of Durham, the Newcastle Science College, the University College of Bristol, and the Manchester Technical School Syllabus, for 1892.

The works published by Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen will henceforth be issued to the trade by Messrs. Whittaker & Co., who have made arrangements for the sole trade agency.

MESSRS. W. & R. CHAMBERS'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Life and Works of Burns," edited by Dr. Robert Chambers, new and cheaper edition in 2 vols.; "The Children of Wilton Chase," by L. T. Meade, with six illustrations by Everard Hopkins; "The Rajah of Dah," by George Manville Fenn, with six illustrations by W. S. Stacey; "Rose and Lavender," by the Author of "Laddie," "Miss Toosey's Mission," &c., with four illustrations by Herbert A. Bone; "Joan and Jerry," by Mrs. O'Reilly, with four illustrations by Herbert A. Bone; "Basil Woolcombe, Midshipman," by Arthur Lee Knight, with frontispiece by W. S. Stacey; "The Young Ranchmen," or Perils of Pioneering in the Wild West, by Charles R. Kenyon, with four illustrations by W. S. Stacey; "Elizabeth," or Cloud and Sunshine, by Henley I. Arden, with frontispiece by Herbert A. Bone; "The Bewitched Lamp," by Mrs. Molesworth, with frontispiece by Robert Barnes; "Ernest's Golden Thread," by Edith C. Kenyon, with frontispiece by Herbert A. Bone; "Duty and Affection," or the Faithful Drummer-Boy, with frontispiece by W. S. Stacey.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

BAUMANN, O. Usambara u. seine Nachbargebiete. Berlin: Reimer. 12 M.
 KRYVENBERG, G. Theodor Körner. Ein Lebens-u. Charakterbild. Dresden: Ehlermann. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 LABANCA, B. Carionagno nell'arte cristiana. Studio storico-critico. Rome: Loescher. 4 fr.
 VINCENT, H. Les 22 Années du Père Tasse à Chamrousse en Dauphiné. Grenoble: Baratier. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

LIBRI Josuae et Judicum. Textum masoreticum accuratissime expressit, e fontibus masorae varis illustravit, notis criticis illustravit S. Baer. Leipzig: B. Tauchnitz. 1 M. 20 Pf.

HISTORY.

PHILIPSON, M. Histoire du règne de Marie Stuart. T. 1. L'Avènement de Marie. Paris: Bouillon. 6 fr.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

HILLEL, F. Die Nominalbildungen in der Mischnah. Frankfurt-a-M.: Kauffmann. 1 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON HERO(N)DAS.

I.

Oxford: Sept. 13, 1891.

I have just begun to read Hero(n)das in Dr. Rutherford's "first recension," with Mr. Kenyon's transcript of the original MS. Unless the contrary is stated the text printed in these notes is Dr. Rutherford's: him I designate by R., Mr. Kenyon by K., Liddell and Scott by L. and S.

(1) Μητριχη

- I. 1. Θρείσσα, ἀράσσει τὴν θύρην τίς οὐκ ὄψει
2. εἰ τίς παρ' ἡμέας ἐξ ἀγροικίης ἔκει;

The MS. has not ἡμέας but ἡμεων, which is perfectly right. Mētrichē thinks that the caller may be a servant or messenger from their own farm or country-house. Ἀγροικίη = (1) the country, (2) a country-house—see L. and S. As for παρ' ἡμέων, it may be construed either with ἔκει or with τίς—take the following from L. and S., "ὁ παρὰ τινος ἦκων his messenger, Xen. Cyr. 4. 5, 53; so, οἱ παρὰ τινος Thuc. 7. 10, etc.; but, οἱ παρὰ τινος any one's friends or dependents, Xen. An. 1, 1, 5, etc."

(2) The dialogue proceeds:

- Θρείσσα
 I. 3. τὴν μὲν θύρην ἔριδε· τίς σὺ; δειμαίνει
 4. ἄσσαν προσελθεῖν;
 Γούλις
 ἦν, ἰδοῦ, πάρεμι' ἄσσαν.
 Θρείσσα
 5. τίς δ' εἰς σὺ;

The first thing that strikes one is that Threissa uses μὲν without a correlative δέ. The δ' in 5 is not a correlative, for that arises out of Gullis's not answering the question in 3. Of course μὲν does sometimes occur without the δέ, but the absence of δέ makes one suspicious.

The next thing that strikes one is, "What does τὴν θύρην ἔριδε mean?" From L. and S. it ought to mean—(1) make the door lean on something, or (2) prop the door, or (3) push (or press) the door, or (4) fix the door in the ground, or (5) lean against the door. Does Threissa ask the person outside to lean against the door in order that each may hear what the other says? That is the best explanation I can think of, but is it natural? R. has no note!

I turn to K., and find that the MS. has not γοτ τὴν μὲν θύρην ἔριδε, but τ (or π) θύρην εἰσῶδε, the σ in the last word being doubtful. If the MS. does read ΕCΩΔΕ, that is simply εἰς ὠδε, "to here," "to the place where I am" (cf. εἰς ὅτε, εἰς οὗ, εἰς αὐθις, &c.). If the second letter is not a c it is pretty sure to be a θ and ΕCΩΔΕ = ἐτι ὠδε. I suggest also that the missing words before θύρην are πρὸς τὴν, and that we should read πρὸς τὴν θύρην, εἰς ὠδε οἱ πρὸς τὴν θύρην ἐθ', ὠδε

The servant, looking out of the door, or through a peep-hole in it, or a window above it, says to the caller "(come) up to the door (πρὸς τὴν θύρην), hither (εἰς ὠδε)," or "(come) nearer to the door (πρὸς τὴν θύρην ἐθ') here (ὠδε)."

The change of εἰ (MS.) to εἰς (R.) in 5 is an arguable matter, which for the present at least I pass no opinion on. But what about ἄσσαν and ἄσσαν in 4? Did Threissa and Gullis accentuate it differently?

(3) The dialogue proceeds:

- Γούλις
 I. 5. Γούλις, ἡ φιλαίνιδος μήτηρ
 6. ἀγγεῖλον ἐδὼν Μητριχῆ παροῦσαν με.
 Θρείσσα
 7. καλεῖ τίς;
 Μητριχη
 ἔστιν Γούλις, ἀμμία Γούλις.
 8. σπρέψον τι, δοῦλῃ τίς σέ μοι' ἐπεισ' ἔλθειν,
 9. Γούλις, πρὸς ἡμέας; τί σὺ θεός πρὸς ἀνθρώπους;

I would print 7 thus:

- Μητριχη
 7. καλεῖ τίς;
 Θρείσσα
 ἔστιν Γούλις.
 Μητριχη
 ἀμμία Γούλις;

(4) Presently Gullis speaks of her old age. Mētrichē tells her not to falsely accuse Time, for there are other people too whom age loves to grip by the throat. Gullis replies:

- I. 19. οἴλλαينه ταῦτα τῆς νεωτέρης ὑμῖν
20. πρόσστιν ἄλλ', οὐ τοῦτο μὴ σε θερμήνησ
21. ἀλλ' ὃ τέκνον, κόσον τιν' ἤδη χηραίνεις
22. χρόνον, μόνη πρύχουσα τὴν μίαν κοίτην;
23. ἐξ οὗ γὰρ εἰς Αἴγυπτον ἐστάλη Μάνδρις
24. δέκ' εἰσὶ μῆνες κοῦδὲ γράμμα σοι πέμπει,
25. ἀλλ' ἐκκλήσται.

On 19 and 20 R. has the notes "Young women can do better than banter." "Do not excite yourself." But I find on turning to K. that the MS. has no punctuation, and reads θερμην, and I submit that the following is better:

19. σίλλαινε ταῦτα τῆς νεωτέρης ὑμῖν
20. πρόσεστιν· ἀλλ' οὐ τοῦτο μή σε θερμήη.

"Ah, chaff! That's the privilege of you younger women. But that won't warm you"—the last words being a reference to the μία κόιτη or to Mandris's unfeeling silence, or to both.

(5) In I. 35, K. gives ραι, but R. restores ἐγώ δ' ἔν, οἶμαι, without note. If the ν is certain, it does not seem likely that so common a word as οἶμαι was miswritten οἶναι

(6) In I. 37-8, for the κατ οὖν λησεις of K., we have θάσσον λήσεις γηράσα. How did θACCON get corrupted into KATON? And why on earth not κἄτ' οὖν λήσεις γηράσα?

(7) I. 41. ἡὺς μήης ἐπ' ἀγκύρης
42. ἔδυστύχησ' ὀμοῦσα.

But K. says that at the beginning of 42 the MS. has a gap and αλης, and Mr. Hicks has restored ουκ ασφαλής, which K. adopts. Now, if the MS. does read ΑΛΗC, Mr. Hicks's emendation is certain: if it reads ΤΧΗC, why does R. not say so?

(8) I. 55. ἄδικτος ἔων Κυθηρης· ἦν, σφρηγίς.

But K. prints the MS. as αδικτ . . . κυθηριν σφρηγίς. I suggest ἄδικτος ἐς Κυθηρῖν σφρηγίς.

i.e., a virgin stone for the graver Love.

(9) I. 56. ἰδὼν σε καθ' ὄδον τὴν Μίσης

But the MS. has ἰδων σε καθ' ὄδω της μῆσης, and I submit that καθ' ὄδω (see L. and S.) is the correct reading, and that της has no need to be changed into τῆς.

(10) I. 59. ἀλλά μεν κατακλαίει
60. καί σ' ἀγκαλιζει

R. adds: "Has your name ever on his lips." ἀγκαλιζει = ἀνακαλιζει." Now, L. and S. give neither ἀγκαλιζω nor ἀνακαλιζω but they do give ἀγκαλιζομαι ("lift up in the arms"), ἐγκαλιζομαι ("take in one's arms"), and ὑγκαλιζω ("clasp in the arms"); and if I accepted R.'s reading, I should suggest it to mean "and clasps your fancied image."

But the MS. reads not καί σ' but καιτ, and I believe that the true reading is ἀλλά μεν κατακλαίει

κἄτ' ἀγκαλιζει

"but first he weeps over (before) me and then embraces me."

(11) I. 61. ἀλλ' ὃ τέκνον μοι Μητρίχη μίαν ταύτην
62. ἄμωρτήν δός· τῇ θεῶ κατάρτησον
63. σωωτήν

Gullis is trying to persuade Mētrichē to be faithless to her husband. The MS. has Μητρίχη, with the last letter cancelled. I do not quite know how R. would construe his reading, but I prefer Μητρίχη, and construe "allow Mētrichē this one fault," i.e., do not forbid yourself this one fault.

(12) In I. 66, Gullis continues in the MS.:

πεισθητι μεν φίλω σε

"Be persuaded of me—I love thee," i.e., and would not give thee bad advice. For πειθεσθαι with the gen. L. and S. refer to Herodotus, Euripides, and Thucydides: true, that is in the sense of "obey," but why should it not also take the so-called poetical genitive of agency in its original sense of "be persuaded"? Would anyone imagine that anyone else would alter the MS. to πεισθητι μοι φίλει σε? Yet this is what R. has done.

(13) I. 73. χαλῆν δ' αἰε δεῖν πῶλον ἐξεπαδεύθην

74. καὶ τῆς θήρης τὸν οὐδὸν ἐχθρὸν ἠγείσθαι.

I suppose this means "I was taught that a lame girl should always consider even the threshold of the door an enemy."

But the MS. reads not πῶλον ἐξεπαδεύθην, but χαλὸν ἐξεπαδεύσα, with χαλὸν seemingly corrected to χαλα. R., for the first time stating and defending one of his changes, says "The corruption of ἐξεπαδεύθην is of course due to the ἐπήκουσα at the end of the preceding line." I prefer to think that a letter has been lost at the end of ἐξεπαδεύσα and another at the beginning of it, and that we ought to read χαλῆν δ' αἰε δεῖν χαλὰ μ' ἐξεπαδεύσας

"And you taught me that a lame woman must always halt," i.e., literally, that lame paces are always necessary to a lame woman. I suggest that χαλῆν αἰε δεῖν χαλὰ is a proverb (perhaps given in condensed form) meaning that lame people must not act as if they were not lame; and I take the application of the proverb to be that women are born tied to the house, and must not go running about.

I have, however, no firm confidence in χαλὰ μ' ἐξεπαδεύσας; but if the last stroke of ΧΩΛΑΜ were lost in one of the fissures so frequent in papyrus, the next scribe might quite easily miscopy ΧΩΛΟΝ; and till we can be sure of a satisfactory sense let us change the MS. as little as possible. I am at a loss to know what sense R. finds in his reading; for he gives no construe, but says, "71. I do not know if this proverb and the following are found elsewhere." What is "the following"? Does he take 72 as a separate proverb, and does he construe χαλῆν δεῖν πῶλον "to tie up a lame filly"? If so, he can hardly have persuaded even himself of his emendation.

(14) In I. 75 ἀπαγγ[ε]λλε, which K. gives as the doubtful reading of the MS., does not need to be changed to R.'s σπαιτει με. Mētrichē tells Gullis not to bring her for the future stories which are unfit for virtuous young wives.

(15) I. 87. ἦδιον' ὄλων, Γυλλίς, οὐ πιπράσκει πς. K. gives the MS. reading for the last two words as πς, so read πέπωκέν τις.

(16) I have not read beyond the first poem, and much of that only hastily. But my eye has been caught by a note of R. on

III. 95. καὶ πέδας ἤξω
96. φέρουσ' ὄκως μιν CΥΜΠΟΔΩΔΕΠΗΔΕΥΤΝΤΑ
97. αἱ θεαὶ παραβλέπωσι τὰς ἐμίσησεν.

R. says "It is tempting to take συμποδῶ as a corruption of συμπεδῶ, and to regard the δὲ πηδῶντα as desperate; but there is nothing wrong with a formation σύμπος, and perhaps we should read συμποδ' ὡς πηδῶντα "thus all athrob with feet fast-bound."

Certainly the letters should be divided as suggested, but πηδῶντα does not mean "all athrob," it means "jumping." A person tightly fettered can hardly run or walk at all, but is quite able to jump, and many a sack-race is won by jumping.

But, as to changing πηδῶντα to πηδῶντα, or νικῶν in I. 51 to νικῶν, why should not πηδῶ and νικῶ be dialectal variants?

The methods by which the text of the "first recension" has been constructed are methods followed by many eminent Hellenists in the past and by some in the present. But if they are followed to the end of time they will not give us one single trustworthy Greek text.

EDWARD W. B. NICHOLSON.

Trinity College, Dublin: Sept. 14, 1891.

I send these slight suggestions on Herondas: IV. 15 (Rutherford):

ἐπει τάχ' ἂν βοῦν ἢ νενημένην χοῖρον πολλῇ φορίῃ, κοῦκ ἀλέκτορ', ἰήτρ'. ἂν νοῦσον ἐποιεῦμεθα τὰς ἀπέψησα.

Read ἰήτρ' and remove the stop. "I would have offered an ox or pig as a reward for cure."

V. 81:

νῦν μὲν σ' ἀφήσω καὶ ἔχε τὴν Χάριν ταύτην τὴν οὐδὲν ἔσσαν ἢ Βαυλλάδα στέρνω.

Read καὶ ἔχε τὴν χάριν ταύτην. "I will let you off for the present, and you may thank this girl's intercession for it."

VI. 24:

μὰ τούτους τοὺς γλυκεὺς φιλῆ Μητροῦ.

θεοὺς is not, I think, to be understood after γλυκέας. (Cf. the Cyclops in Theocritus (I am obliged to quote from memory):

οὐ τὸν ἐμὸν τὸν ἕνα γλυκὺν φ' ποθόρημι.

Here Coritto swears by "her precious eyes."

A. P.

Trinity College, Oxford: Sept. 5, 1891.

I. 9. Perhaps θ[αμίζε]ις.

I. 73. For μηδε εν φιλῆ, read μηδεν εὐφιλές.

II. 3. Perhaps the lust word may be τιμήν.

II. 10. [ἐκείν]ος.

II. 13. Perhaps ἡλίου δυντος ends the line.

III. 71. For μη μη ικετευω read μή μ' ικετεύω. The line might then run:

Δάμπρισκε μή μ' ικετεύω, πρὸς σε τῶν Μουσῶν.

III. 79. Putting a note of interrogation after κοσας μοι, the rest of the line might be read as δὸς δ' ἐτ', εἰ τίτει ζωὴν φέρειν, κ.τ.λ.

F. W. HALL.

SENJERLI AND SAM'ALLA-LAND.

Weston-super-Mare: Sept. 14, 1891.

In the last number of The Babylonian and Oriental Record, Mr. Boscawen gives some account of the discovery at Senjerli of inscriptions both Hittite and Assyrian. The German committee is at work in earnest, and the results are already highly important. My object, however, is to draw attention again to those interesting cross-lights which Egypt and Assyria throw on this North Syrian region.

An inscription of Pan-ammu, king of Sam'alla (i. Tiglath-Pileser III., B.C. 745-727), found at Senjerli, appears to identify the ruined city with the state of Sam'alla, well known in Assyrian annals. Now in the North Syrian list of Thothmes III. the name No. 314 is Sam'alua, which in 1885 I identified with Sam'alla, comparing the proper name of a prince in the Hittite confederation against Rameses II., Samalsa, which Lenormant had assimilated with the same local name (Les Orig. III., 275). Those who will now take the trouble to compare this Karnak List with the best maps (Rey and Blanckenhorn) will see how curiously the names from 306 to 315 appear to belong to the same north-west corner of Syria towards Cilicia.

(306) Aibre, I would compare with Abriē, the Assyrian way of writing the name of the Afrin river.

(307) Qarmatia must, I think, be the ancient place Karamata (as Ainsworth writes it), or Karamat (Barker), or Karamud (Sachau). To the west of the little place Karamata-Khān, Sachau saw at about half an hour's distance on a height the ruins of a great town of antiquity, which commanded the Bélan Pass descending to the Amq Plain, whose name next follows.

(308) Amiq-u (plural). Major Conder suggested that this was "the present Umk plain, near Antioch." The Assyrians called it Unqi, the great Amyces Campus, "the corn-store of all Syria." I trace the ancient form of the name in Ameuk-Keui, a place in the plain, and, I think, in Amgu-[li], the name of a small river and a mound to the east of the plain. Dr. Neubauer notes as a remarkable Arabic form in the Talmud קַמְיָא, applied doubtless to this very region. It appears to be very ancient (Geog. du Talmud, p. 53, note). There is also Amik-li in the valley of the Afrin, further north towards Cyrhus.

The next name (309) is Katsel, which seems to be the mountain mass Kizil Dagh, northwest of Antioch. As so frequently, this seems to be the survival of a very ancient name, taken as a modern Turkish one.

No. 310 is Aumaiia, which, I fancy, may be the celebrated place Imma in the same plain, on the way to Aleppo, whose name, as that of the whole inclusive district, next occurs (311), Khalebu.

Then comes (312) Piaur, literally Piaun-r. Lenormant proposed Pinara in Pieria; but, as the n sign is only used to strengthen the r, I think it may be taken as the name of the mountain region Pieria itself, north of the outlet of the Orontes, now called Jebel Mûsa.

Then follows (313) Aurema. Ainsworth says that the 'Umk plain is called "sometimes the Umk of Uerem" (Assyria, &c., p. 299). This would seem to be the identical name. There is Ûrüm-Keupri, south of Kyrrhus, in the Afrin valley also, and this is in the general direction towards Sam'alla land, which itself next occurs as (314) Sam'alu; and our group ends with (315) Akama, which occurs in the Mohar's travels (Brugsch, Geog. Insc. II. 44) as the mountain of Akama. At present Akma Dag is the name of a western block of the Amanus mountains, from five to six thousand feet high, as Barker says (Lares and Penates). The name perhaps extended to the whole Amanus range in those old times, but at any rate it would seem to be the same.

Next to this group of local names dependent on Aleppo the Karnak List takes us to the Euphratean region. But it is worth while to go back farther than our starting point to No. 292, which Prof. Maspero long ago proposed to identify with Dolikh' in Kommagene (Assyrian Kummukh). The Egyptian name 292 is Talekh or Dalekh; the place is now Duluk, north of 'Aintab, if it be Dolikh'.

Taking the whole of these Egyptian data together in regard to the new information from Senjerli, how striking is the testimony to the interest of such explorations and studies!

But may we not add a query on the present name, Senjer-[li]? The last syllable is just a Turkish suffix of locality. And may not Senjer [Senger] be compared with the name of Sangara the king of the Hittites of Karkemish, associated with Khanu of Sam'alla and others in the war against Shalmaneser? Perhaps the name of some Sangara remains among these old ruins.

HENRY GEORGE TOMKINS.

Mr. Tomkins's identifications of the names of places both in Palestine and in Northern Syria given by Thothmes III., at Karnak, will be published in the next volume of the Records of the Past. The names of the places in Palestine have been collated with the originals by Mr. Wilbour and myself, with the result that in some cases we have been able to make important corrections in the published list.

A. H. SAYCE.

ANANDIBAI.

London: Sept. 22, 1891.

Permit me to correct a statement made by the reviewer, in last week's ACADEMY, of Mrs. E. F. Chapman's Sketches of Some Distinguished Indian Women. In giving a wise "word of warning" with regard to the need of care on the part of Western reformers, lest, under the cover of medical aid or Zenana visits, they should interfere unfairly with religious or social customs, your reviewer instances Dr. Anandibai's experience as a case in point. He says that she "abandoned her husband, went to the United States, became a Christian, graduated as a physician, and died before she was thirty." Now, Anandibai did not change her religion, as Mrs. Chapman, relying on her biography by Mrs. Dall, shows in the following passage:

"Before leaving India she had told her own people, 'I will go to America as a Hindu, and come back and live among my people as a Hindu.' And this brave resolve she carried out unflinchingly. She wore her native dress, refused to eat anything but the vegetable food allowed by her religion, and endeavoured in every way that was possible, during the whole period of her residence in the States, to conform to the customs of her people."

Nor can it be said that she abandoned her husband. It was at first planned that they should both go to America, but this could not be managed on account of the expense. Anandibai therefore made the voyage alone, with her husband's consent; but he succeeded after a while in joining her, and, when she had graduated, they returned together to India. Her health had, however, given way, and she died when she was not quite twenty-two.

E. A. MANNING.

SCIENCE.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Synopsis of Old English Phonology: being a Systematic Account of the Old English Vowels and Consonants, and their Correspondence in the Cognate Languages. By A. L. Mayhew. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) Mr. Mayhew's confession that "there is nothing original in this book," is substantially true so far as the matter is concerned, because his object has been to include only such results as have been accepted by philologists of authority. The plan of the work, however, is novel, and is very well conceived. The book is divided into two parts. The first part treats of the relation between the Old English sounds and those of the cognate languages; the second part is concerned with the representations of Old English sounds in modern pronunciation and spelling. Mr. Mayhew confines himself to the tabulation of correspondences, and does not attempt to account for the varieties in the development of one and the same original sound, or to distinguish between the phenomena due to phonetic law and those produced by analogy; but the volume is an excellent repertory of the facts which it is the province of phonology to explain. In the nomenclature of languages, and in the notation of primitive Indogermanic sounds, the system of Brugmann is generally followed; the most noteworthy deviations being that the designation "Old Bulgarian" is substituted for "Old Church Slavonic," and that the palatals are denoted by k and g without any diacritic. The work has been carefully executed, and there are but few details with which we should be disposed to find fault. The Sanskrit hárđi- (after Kluge) given as one of the forms of the Indogermanic base kérđ-. This would have been better omitted; in the present state of knowledge the correspondence is, to say the least, doubtful, and in the absence of any comment, the student is likely to be perplexed by the irregularity in the initial consonant. In enumerating the various etymological values of Old English final -e, Mr. Mayhew forgets to mention that it represents a Germanic -i- in noun stems like wine (from wini-z*). The word bušere, bušere, "Baptist," is erroneously stated to owe its form to association with buš; it is almost certainly derived from the Old Irish corruption of baptizare—a point which is of some interest historically. We have observed some misprints: the italic d several times appears as a (a kind of mistake which is very difficult to detect in proof); on p. 184 the Gothic gatairan is printed gatafran, and the word is omitted in the index. The book is one which every student of English philology ought to possess.

MISS LAURA SOAMES'S Introduction to Phonetics (Sonnenschein) is lucidly and attractively written. It contains an elementary sketch, accurate in the essential points, of the formation of vowel and consonant sounds, together with an account of the pronunciation of English, French, and German. With regard to English, the writer takes as her standard the pronunciation of educated natives of South-Eastern England. The phonetic notation employed for English, without aiming at great minuteness of analysis, is good enough for most practical purposes, and has the merit of being easily understood, no diacritics being used except the circumflex. For French and German distinct symbols are adopted; but to students who already know something of those languages these will present no great difficulty. In French phonetics Miss Soames follows the guidance of M. Paul Passy, and in German that of Prof. Viator—both very good authorities. The author has courageously attempted to grapple with the very difficult question of the pronunciation of the foreign words which occur in English speech. To give the true foreign pronunciation to such words, when they are used in an English sentence, is difficult, and has an unpleasantly pedantic effect; on the other hand, to pronounce them strictly according to the English values of the letters would be to render them often unrecognisable, and would produce a very grotesque impression on the hearer. In practice most people adopt some sort of compromise between the two methods, though without being guided by any fixed principle. Miss Soames's advice is to use the correct sounds of the French nasals, of the German ch, and of one or two other letters, but in the remaining cases to represent the foreign sounds by the English sounds most nearly resembling them. In accordance with this principle, which seems to be the best available solution of the difficulty, she has drawn up tables indicating the pronunciation of the foreign words and phrases in most frequent use. At the end of the volume are some sixty pages of English reading-lessons in phonetic notation. On the whole, considered as a popular handbook on the subject, Miss Soames's "Introduction" may be cordially recommended.

THE latest issues of the English Dialect Society are three thin brochures; Ablaut in the Modern Dialects of the South of England, by Dr. K. D. Bülbring, translated by W. A. Badham; Rutland Words, by the Rev. Christopher Wordsworth; and A Supplement to the Sheffield Glossary, by S. O. Addy. Dr. Bülbring's useful Essay is founded mainly on the materials of Mr. Elworthy, supplemented from the works of Barnes, and from one or two other sources. The writer's conclusion is that the distinction between strong and weak verbs has in the South-Western dialects ceased to exist, all verbs being now weak, though the inflexional d or t is dropped before words beginning with a consonant, and the past tenses and past participles of some verbs have a vowel change, which in certain cases is a relic of the strong conjugation. Dr. Bülbring uses the objectionable, if convenient, term rückumlaut, which in an introductory note Prof. Skeat, by a curious inadvertence, renders "back-gradation" instead of "back-mutation." The Rutland Glossary contains little of interest, except the remark that "the final e is pronounced as a sort of possessive termination in Prince-feathers, Rosë-tree, and sometimes Quincë-tree." Many of the expressions given (e.g. "test case," used in its ordinary sense by guardians of the poor) have no claim whatever to insertion in a Dialect Glossary. Mr. Addy's Supplement to his Sheffield Glossary, on the other hand, is really valuable, though disfigured by some unsound etymological speculations. Nearly all the words it contains are worth recording, and some are of great interest. Hock-tide is explained as "an annual rejoicing, or expression of scorn or contempt, after the death of a person who has been disliked." It seems that, within the memory of aged persons now or recently living, it was customary at Sheffield to hold "sports" on the anniversary of the death of any person who was extremely unpopular, the games being played as near as possible to the house where he had lived. The disappearance of this piece of barbarism will not be regretted by the most thorough-going admirer of old customs, but the fact that it so recently existed certainly deserves to be noted. Ferth, energy, activity, seems to be, as Mr. Addy suggests, the old English ferth, life (forth-put, to which reference is made, is unconnected). Milgorium fat "the fat in which a pig's intestines have been enclosed," is O.E. miægern, OHG. milligarni. Another curious word is dannikin, the name of a feast or wake held in some villages near Sheffield on Holy Thursday and several succeeding days. Mr. Addy's ingenious notion that the word is an attributive use of Dana-cyn (sic), "Danish kin," will not be accepted by more scientific etymologists. Probably further research might disclose the existence of a verb from which the substantive is derived; the Swedish danka, "to lounge, pass time," might conceivably be allied. Graft, "work," is no doubt rightly referred by Mr. Addy to ON. gríft, "digging." In the preface, after acknowledging aid from various friends, Mr. Addy says: "I need hardly be added that every word not actually heard by me, but first suggested by a friend or contributor, has been verified before its admission into these pages." Such conscientiousness ought to be a matter of course; but we fear it is not very common among writers of dialect glossaries, and it is satisfactory to have Mr. Addy's assurance that he is alive to the necessity of testing his material.

THE English edition of Prof. Cappeller's Sanskrit Dictionary (Luzac) is something more than a mere translation of the German edition. It includes the vocabulary of several additional texts; many compounds have been inserted which are not given in the Petersburg lexicons; and some improvements have been made in the arrangement. The errors enumerated by the reviewer in the ACADEMY have for the most part been corrected, though a few still remain. As might be expected in a book printed abroad, there are some literal misprints in the English words, but we have not observed anything seriously misleading. In the Sanskrit type some of the vowel signs have slipped out—e.g., the u in some words on p. 126. The book is certainly the cheapest, and, for a beginner, in some respects the best, of existing Sanskrit-English dictionaries.

WE have received the first two numbers (pp. 194) of the new journal Indogermanische Forschungen (Strassburg: Trübner), edited by Karl Brugmann and Wilhelm Streitberg. Although the general feeling in this country is that the number of German philological periodicals is already embarrassingly great, Herr Trübner's new venture will be cordially welcomed on account of the distinguished reputation of its editors. The numbers before us are full of interesting matter. H. Hirt contributes the first instalment of a highly original series of investigations "Vom schleifenden und gestossenen Ton in den Indogermanischen Sprachen," which are sure to call forth an animated controversy. R. Schmidt discusses various points of Celtic grammar. Prof. Streitberg has a noteworthy article on the accented sonant nasal, in which he attempts to reconcile the conflicting views on this subject. Prof. Brugmann contributes a number of etymological suggestions, the most interesting being, perhaps, that relating to garvisus, which is explained as formed from a prehistoric garideo* on the analogy of visus from video. Another suggestion, that ξίφος (from ξίφος*=ghs-cuwo*) is cognate with its Germanic synonym gasti-z* (English guest), is not new, but the author adduces some considerations tending to show that the conjecture is better supported by analogy than has hitherto been supposed. The longest article, "Ueber Sprachrichtigkeit" (60 pp.) is partly a translation, partly an adaptation, by A. Johansson, of Noreen's masterly essay published in Swedish a few years ago. The writer's contention is that, as the purpose of language is the expression of thought, the "correctness" of a word, a grammatical form, or a construction is to be measured by the degree in which it fulfils this end, and not by its conformity to usage or historical precedent. This is in essence a sound doctrine; but it may be objected that the virtue so justly insisted upon is not "correctness," but something higher, to which "correctness" ought to give place. The translator has replaced the Swedish illustrations by German ones, which are felicitously chosen. The other articles of importance are one on Ips and its supposed cognates, by E. Maass, and a first instalment of "Arica," by Chr. Bartholomae. The prospectus does not say at what intervals the journal is to appear; but it is stated that five Hefte are to form a volume, and that with the second or third and fifth Heft will be given a number of the Anzeiger für Indogermanische Sprach- und Altertumskunde, edited by Prof. Streitberg.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CELT-IBERIANS.

Oxford: Sept. 1, 1891.

The enclosed letter to me from a man who has often favoured the ACADEMY with interesting contributions is too valuable for me to keep, so I hasten to offer it to you for publication. At the same time I promise to bear in mind Mr. Webster's friendly warning not to attempt to identify Picts and Basques too closely together. He would not object, however, to my supposing them as nearly related to one another, as Latins, Teutons, and Celts are held to be related within their own Aryan family. That is all I wished to imply. I believe Picts and Iberians to have belonged to one and the same family, which I have ventured to call Ibero-Pictish. How nearly related Picts and Iberians may prove to be is a matter for future research. I hope ere long to write on that question.

JOHN RHYS.

Sare, Basses Pyrénées.

MAY I venture to send you a few remarks made not by way of controversy, but of commentary on the extract from your Rhind lectures which appeared in the ACADEMY of August 1?

I quite agree with you in a pre-Aryan occupation of Western Europe, and that the Iberi, and probably the Basques, formed part of that population. But it appears to me that too much stress is laid on the homogeneity both of the race and civilisation of pre-Aryan Europe. These, it seems to me, may have been comparatively as different as those of the Aryan races of Europe were until lately. The physical peculiarities and civilisation of the pre-Aryan races in earlier Europe may have been as distinct as the physical peculiarities of the Latin, Teutonic, Celtic, and Slavonic races in Aryan Europe are to-day. As examples of probable, or possible, differences in civilisation

I would mention the Etruscan civilisation (which I take to have been of a type analogous to that of the Accadian, or the Egyptian); that of the Iberian Turdetani as described by Strabo; and the inferior civilisation of the Ligurians, if indeed these last were pre-Aryans. If the types of the then contemporaneous civilisation were so different, may not the physical peculiarities of the different tribes and families, groups and branches, of this pre-Aryan race have been also as different? In the extreme North the Esquimaux and Lapps may be taken as survivals of these pre-Aryan races; but are we warranted in concluding that the whole of the Continent, or of the Western half of it, was occupied only by such tribes, and that there were no distinct groups or branches, families or tribes, of the pre-Aryan races differing from each other as there are in Aryan Europe of to-day?

I venture to lay before you some of the evidence, founded chiefly on toponymy, which suggests that Basque or Iberian tribes did not extend greatly beyond the parallel of the Adour; and that the groups or families to the north, though they may have been allied (as Latins, Teutons, Celts, are still of the same Aryan stock) yet belonged to different branches.

If we compare the map of Baetica (Andalusia) whether of ancient or modern times with that of Southern France, we cannot fail to be struck with the number of topographical names which resemble or are identical with one another; and this notwithstanding the strong influence of Arabic on the toponymy of Moorish Spain.

I cite a few instances in classical times, outside the present Basque country—

Hispania.	Gallia Meridionalis.
Iliberis	Iliberis (Elne)
Iluro	Iluro (Oloron)
Andurensis	Aturenses
Elmberis	Elmberis (Auch)
Calagurris (on the Ebro)	Calagurris (on the Garonne)
Tolosa (in Baetica or Gaipuzcoa)	Tolosa (on the Garonne)
Aturris	Adour
Names of Deities or men in Inscriptions.
Andere (Mâtres Tolosane) and compounds	Andere, Basque for woman
Nescato	Nescatcha, Basque for maiden
Iluni	Ilhun, Ilun, Illuna, "darkness, obscurity, dark." The moon which Strabo asserts the Cantabri worshipped is Il-arghia , the death-light.

Is it possible to show a like number of names (and these are a few only out of many other probable ones) in an equal space of country, having such a close relation to Basque or Iberian toponymy as these names show?

Some writers, indeed, and these the most recent (J. F. Bladé, Les Vascons, avant leur établissement en Novempopulanie: Agen, 1891) assert that the French Basques took possession of their present country and of Aquitaine (Gascony) only in the sixth century; but these names appear in writers and in inscriptions dating long before that period.

The evidence appears to me conclusive that a people speaking the same language as that spoken in Baetica inhabited Southern Gaul in early times; but I do not see that there is similar evidence for its existence further to the north.

Strabo asserts that the civilisation of the Turdetani in Baetica was a comparatively high one. Diodorus makes a like remark of the Vaccæi. Many of the Iberian tribes used writing, struck coins, the effigies on which show a certain amount of artistic skill and taste. They have left us some inscriptions, and numerous numismatic legends; though, as Strabo remarks, the alphabetic characters are not all identical in the various tribes. Strabo also witnesses to the existence of an ancient literature, now wholly lost. All the classical writers speak of their skill in mining, and proofs of this have been remarked in old mines, both in Baetica and in Southern France. Numbers of these silver so-called Celtiberian coins, with legends, have been found at Barcus, near Oloron. The civilisation of the Iberian tribes in Hannibal's time was certainly superior to that of the Celtic tribes to the north, and a like fact may be deduced from Caesar's account of Aquitania. The civilisation of the Iberian tribes compared with that of the trans-Pyrenean region seems to have been like that of the Etruscans compared with that of the trans-Alpine peoples in the days of the Roman Republic.

The megalithic monuments of Spain suggest a similar conclusion. They are not equally distributed over the whole country, but are abundant in Western Andalusia, Portugal, Galicia, along the North coast, and in South-Western France. The type recalls rather the megalithic monuments of Northern Africa than those of Brittany and of the British Isles. Other megalithic monuments are the so-called boars, or bulls, or toros of Guisando, found chiefly in ancient Vettonia. D. F. M. Tubino, in his Los Aborígenes Ibéricos, considers the Basques and Iberians as identical with the fair mountaineers of North Africa, the race which is depicted as inhabiting Lybia on the Egyptian monuments. Among these people numerous megalithic remains are found.

If I can trust my memory, I read in 1847 or 1848 an ethnological work by Col. Hamilton Smith, in which he considered these North African people to be Celts, and regarded the Celtic invasion of Europe as twofold: one line advancing through Central Europe, and north of the Mediterranean; the other on the south of that sea along North Africa, leaving remnants on the way, and entering Spain by the Straits of Gibraltar. This I think less probable than Tubino's theory. I believe that I see traces of two Celtic invasions in Spain: an earlier one, in which the Celts coalesced with the Iberians of the centre and east; and a later invasion, which has left the more purely Celtic names Penne, Peña, Deva, Tamaris, &c., along the North coast. A serious study of the Celts in Spain and Southern France is one of our great desiderata. The presence of the Goths as a ruling and aristocratic caste has led to the almost total neglect of the far greater ethnological factor of the Celts in Spain.

I can mention a curious instance of the persistence of type in Spain. Some years since a large landed proprietor in the south-west of La Mancha mentioned to me two villages (not contiguous) on his estates, inhabited by a fair population, differing widely in manners and character from their darker neighbours. He asked me if they were Goths. I replied that I saw no evidence of the Goths ever having been in that district, and that there were fair people in Spain who certainly were not Goths. Turning to Spruner's Classical Atlas, I find in this district Oretum Germanorum. Hübner in his excellent La Arqueología de España (Barcelona, 1888) writes thus, p. 156: "No se sabe por qué los Oretanos, cuyas ciudades principales fueron Castulo y Oretum, se llamaban Germani, según Plinio (Nat. Hist., ii., § 25), y su ciudad Oretum Germanorum, según Ptolemeo (iii., § 6. 39): pues es indudable que en ellas nunca hubo una guarnición de auxiliares alemanes. El nombre parece indicar más bien el origen céltico de aquella gente."

So that my contention that they were not Goths is correct; but I see no more evidence for their being Celts, the Pyrenean and North Spanish Celts being darker even than the Basques. What people these were is quite undetermined, and could be resolved, if at all, only by close observation and investigation on the spot.

There is a careful essay on the Geografía, Topografía, y Ethnografía de la Costa Atlántica de España en el Siglo XII., antes de Jesucristo, por Don Salvador Sempere y Miquel (Revista de Ciencias Históricas, I., tomo v., 1887, Barcelona), in which he contends that the Ligures inhabited the North Atlantic coast of Spain; and that from a mixture with them would come the smaller darker Basques, and the people of similar type in Central France, and in Liguria. I do not consider this at all proved; but perhaps it should not be wholly lost sight of, nor even the lost Atlantic theory, and the possible relationship of the Guanches of the Canaries with the Basques.

What is needed for Spanish archaeology is (1) the extensive use of the spade on her old deserted cities and sites. The MM. Siret's great work shows what results may be expected; (2) a serious attempt at the decipherment and interpretation of the so-called Celtiberian coins and inscriptions. A preliminary qualification would, of course, be a full and authentic collation and publication of the inscriptions of all kinds, with full information on the locality, circumstances of discovery, and of everything else which may help to establish the date of them.

The anthropological and craniological evidence does not seem to me to be sufficient to warrant the conclusions that have been drawn from it. WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & Co. announce for immediate publication, under the general title of "Modern Science," the first four volumes of a new series, edited by Sir John Lubbock: The Causes of the Ice Age, by Sir Robert Ball; The Horse, by Prof. Flower; The Oak, by Prof. Marshall Ward; and The Laws and Properties of Matter, by Mr. R. T. Glazebrook.

Egyptian Science, by N. E. Johnson, will very shortly be published by Messrs. Griffith, Farran & Co. The aim of the work is to give in a popular form an account of science as cultivated by the ancient dwellers on the Nile, founded upon the researches of modern Egyptologists, and treated in the light of a general introduction to the history of science.

An Account of British Flies (Diptera) is the title of a new work by the Hon. C. E. Leigh and F. V. Theobald, to be issued in quarterly parts by Mr. Elliot Stock. It will be copiously illustrated by the author.

MESSRS. MASTERS & Co. will shortly publish the Marquis of Bute's paper contributed to the Anthropological Section of the British Association, on "The Ancient Language of the Natives of Teneriffe."

Two more sections of the Map of the Distribution of the German Race in Europe, by the late Prof. Nabert, have appeared. They include the South-western part of the German Empire, a portion of Austria-Hungary, Switzerland, Northern Italy, Slovenia, Croatia, and a portion of Bosnia. A striking feature is that not only are two-thirds of the Swiss Confederation seen to be of German blood, but that even in Northern Italy there exists, here and there, a remnant of the Teutonic stock, such as the well-known "Seven Communes." In Hungary the German population clusters around the capital, Buda-Pest, and along the course of the Danube. The impossibility of arranging states in those Eastern regions on the strict basis of nationality appears clearly from the interlacing and over-lapping of the most various races, both in Hungary and in parts of Austria proper. These maps, which are to be followed by four more, bear evidence of the most careful and conscientious research. They are published by Karl Fleming at Glogau, on a large scale, and with colours so well marked that the facts can be taken in at a glance. To the student of ethnography they are invaluable.

FINE ART.

MR. OHNEFALSCH-RICHTER'S EXCAVATIONS IN CYPRUS.

At the Anthropological Society of Berlin, as well as at the Archaeological Society, Mr. Ohnefalsch-Richter recently gave an account of his excavations in Cyprus, which he has pursued during more than ten years, and especially of his discoveries and finds at Tamassos. He drew remarkable parallels between the customs of the ancient and present population of the island. A large number of photographs, drawings, paintings in water-colours, and original objects were exhibited, to illustrate the art and civilisation of the Cyprus of antiquity.

The Berlin Philologische Wochenschrift says:—"Mr. Ohnefalsch-Richter, well known to our readers, particularly by the transmission of important Cyprian inscriptions which have been commented by Deecke and Meister, has earned well-deserved fame as an explorer in Cyprian archaeology. Through his indefatigable energy, there is now before us an extraordinarily rich material reaching from the oldest times down to a late Hellenic epoch. The Berlin Museum has acquired through him a large number of objects in bronze, clay, iron, and gold, which represent entire strata of civilisation. We expect important scientific results from a detailed comparison between Cyprian and Trojan antiquities, and we shall continue to follow his labours with attention."

In these lectures, as well as in articles published in the Berlin Nation, Mr. Ohnefalsch-Richter has expressed the conviction that there was in the island a pre-Hellenic and pre-Phoenician population of herdsmen belonging to the Phrygian, that is, Thracian, stock; and that probably the inventors of the most primitive copper swords were of the same race, the Thracians being repeatedly mentioned in the Homeric poems as metal-workers and armourers. The Thracians Mr. Ohnefalsch-Richter assumes to be of Teutonic kinship. In recent numbers of the Ausland he has published a series of noteworthy articles on "Cyprus, the Bible, and Homer." They are chapters from a forthcoming work on "Eastern Religion in Antiquity," which is to appear in German and English. After a series of further lectures, the author intends resuming his excavations in April of next year.

CRUIKSHANK'S ETCHINGS TO GRIMM'S TALES.

A CORRESPONDENT sends us the following letter, which will interest collectors of Cruikshank:

"263, Hampstead Road, N.W.: Feb. 9, 1877.

"SIR,—In reply to your inquiry respecting the illustrations to Grimm's Popular Tales, I beg to say that these tales were originally illustrated with designs and etchings by my own hand, in 1823 with 12 etchings and the second volume afterwards with 12 etchings.

"The original plates were lost for some years: but a bookseller in 1868, Mr. Camden Hotten, of Piccadilly, since deceased, got some one to copy all these etchings of mine referred to, and he published them with my name to each etching, which, of course, was a gross imposition on the public. I strongly protested against this, and requested that my name should be removed from the etchings, and that it should be stated that these etchings were copied from the designs and etchings by George Cruikshank; and as you state that, in the edition of Grimm's Goblins that you have now my name does not appear on them, I presume it has been removed from the said etchings by Messrs. Chatto and Windus (Mr. Camden Hotten's successors), and thus they state in the title page with "24 illustrations after George Cruikshank."

"The original etchings to Grimm's Tales have since been found, and are now in the possession of a friend of mine, so that probably they will be republished some day or other."

"Yours truly,
"GEORGE CRUIKSHANK."

OBITUARY.

SIR JOHN STEELL.

WE regret to record the death of Sir John Steell, R.S.A., Her Majesty's Sculptor for Scotland, which occurred in Edinburgh on September 16.

He was born in Aberdeen in 1804; but when he was about a year old, his father, a carver and gilder, removed to Edinburgh. Here the son received the best artistic education then obtainable in his native country; and he afterwards studied at Rome, returning in 1833, when he established himself in Edinburgh. The first work that brought him into notice was his group of "Alexander and Bucephalus"—only a few years ago cast in bronze and erected in St. Andrew's Square—which won the admiration of Chantrey, and gained a prize of £50 from the Board of Manufactures. He was next commissioned to execute the colossal statue of the Queen which surmounts the front of the Royal Institution, a work followed by the seated marble statue of Sir Walter Scott, which has a place beneath Kemp's tall Gothic spire in Princes Street, a statue that was frequently reproduced in various sizes and materials. Among his other productions which adorn the northern capital are the equestrian figure of the Duke of Wellington, and the statues of Professor Wilson, Allan Ramsay, and the Rev. Dr. Chalmers. In 1876, on the completion of the Memorial to the Prince Consort, in Charlotte Square, of which he executed the most important figures, he was knighted by the Queen at Holyrood. Many of his portrait busts are distinguished by great refinement, and by dignity of style; among the more striking of them may be mentioned the marble busts of De Quincey and David Scott, R.S.A., while his bronze bust of the Rev. Dr. Guthrie is singularly spirited and effective.

Sir John's "Sir Walter Scott" is stated to have been the first marble statue commissioned in Scotland from a native artist; and he was the first who introduced artistic bronze casting into Scotland, for he erected a foundry, in which not only his own works but also those of his brother sculptors were reproduced in metal.

He was one of the artists who, in 1829—not 1830, as so frequently stated—joined the Scottish Academy (which had not then obtained its charter) from the Royal Institution; and he acted as a representative of the former body on the Board of Manufactures, of which he was a member for over forty years. To a singularly genial and kindly nature, Sir John added the charm of the most courtly urbanity of manners; and his venerable face, with its aquiline features, fresh rosy complexion, and hair and beard of flowing whiteness, was one of the most impressive of those habitually visible in the streets of Edinburgh.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE new volume of the Magazine of Art, which begins with the November number, will be signalled by the introduction of a new feature—plates in several colours, reproduced by chromo-typogravure.

MR. J. H. PARKINSON—whom we assume to be a colonial artist—has been appointed to the directorship of the National Gallery of Victoria. The salary is £600 a-year, together with a house and studio.

THE collection of the late Signor Morelli, which he left to the public gallery at Bergamo, will shortly be exhibited there in two rooms, which are being prepared for the purpose. Among the Italian painters represented in this fine collection are Pisanello, Pesellino, Botticelli, Giovanni Bellini, Borgognone, Beltraffio, Basaiti, Cariani, Montagna, Cavazzola, Moretto, and Moroni; and there are also some good specimens of the Dutch school. Some thirty of the choicest of these pictures have been photographed by Sign. C. Marcozzi, Piazza Durini, Milan.

THE Brera at Milan has recently been enriched by fine examples of Paris Bordone and Gaudenzio Ferrari. To these have just been added a Madonna by Sodoma, belonging to his Lionardesque period and of the finest quality; and a magnificent portrait, by Titian, of Count Antonio of Porcia.

THE Duc d'Aumale has commissioned MM. Emile Picot and Germain Bapst to make a catalogue of those wonderful treasures of Chantilly which he has recently presented to the French nation.

PROJECTS for art exhibitions, international and other, are numerous. There is to be a "world's fair" at Chicago, a Russian exhibition at Paris (perhaps), an "Exposition Historique-Européenne" at Madrid to commemorate the fourth centenary of the discovery of America; and, more curious as a sign of the times than all, an "Idealist" Exhibition at Paris, under the auspices of the Order of La Rose Croix du Temple. It is at once to be a protest against the profane realism of the age, and a grand manifestation of the mystic ideal of Latinity before it is swamped in that tide of Slavo-Mongolian barbarism with which Europe is threatened. The names of many eminent artists are published who are said to have given their adhesion to this strange scheme; but one of the foremost, M. Puvis de Chavannes, has complained of the unauthorised use of his name.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC NOTES.

Paris: Sept. 21, 1891.

WAGNER'S "Lohengrin" has, at last, been given at the Grand Opera; but under such critical circumstances that, had it not been for the severe police measures taken on the occasion, the performance would, in all probability, have come to grief in the same way as did M. Lamoureux's attempt to produce "Lohengrin" at the Eden Theatre five years ago. The newspapers have related how once more a few hundred brawling ragamuffins and so-called "patriots" tried to terrorise Paris and prevent the performance. On the occasion of the "Première" the row was in the streets outside; on the night of the second performance the row was in the theatre itself, but the attempted interruption was soon quieted by the timely appearance of the police. The present writer may be allowed to mention that he was one of the victims of the odiferous vengeance of an anti-Wagnerite, who amused himself by throwing small globules of assafoetida on the occupants of the stalls. I have kept one of these miniature "stink-pots," which fell unbroken upon my lap, as a souvenir of that eventful evening.

With regard to the performance itself, it was almost above criticism; the orchestra, the singing, the acting, and the scenery were alike admirable. M. Van Dyck, in the part of Lohengrin, achieved a genuine triumph; Mme. Caron's Elsa is a most perfect piece of singing and acting, though at times her voice was not quite equal to the strain it had to bear. Mme. Fiérens's fine soprano voice was heard to greater perfection in the part of Ortrude than in her late creation of the priestess Varedha in M. Massenet's "Mage." Unfortunately, her partner in villany—Frederick de Telramund (M. Renaud)—was unable, from sudden hoarseness, to do full justice to his part. This is to be regretted, as M. Renaud possesses a magnificent baritone voice and is a good actor. The chorus showed a marked improvement on what we are accustomed to hear, for of late years the chorus singing has been one of the weak points of the performances at the Grand Opera.

Taken in their ensemble, the first two performances of "Lohengrin" have been splendid examples of artistic excellence; and all French music-lovers owe a deep debt of gratitude to M. Lamoureux for the talent and perseverance he has shown—first, in overcoming the many difficulties he experienced in the preliminary training of so susceptible a group of artists as the orchestra of the Académie Nationale de Musique; and, secondly, in obtaining so perfect an entente between the orchestra, the leading singers, and the members of the chorus. The result surpassed the most sanguine expectations.

"L'Herbager," by M. Paul Harel, was brought out at the Odéon on Saturday last. The new play is, after the fashion of the time, entitled a comedy, though in fact the tragic element predominates. I am sorry to add that it is sadly wanting in interest and dramatic action, though it had been announced with great tracas as a masterpiece. La Hanterie, the herbager, is a rich Norman cattle dealer, whose only son, Henri, has just been called to the bar; and he has decided in his own mind that not only shall his son become a celebrated lawyer, but shall marry a young lady of noble birth, be elected deputy, and, perhaps, in course of time, be called Monsieur le Ministre! But Henri loves his cousin Germaine, and limits his ambition to becoming a good farmer and the father of a numerous progeny in imitation of his uncle Beaufermant, who has followed the advice of our old friend the Vicar of Wakefield. La Hanterie hates his brother-in-law, Farmer Beaufermant, because the latter is given to modern innovations in farming, professes socialist theories, and has a large family; while he himself has remained faithful to old ways and the time-honoured precept of the Norman peasant—one son and one heir. These two living examples of egoism and altruism abuse each other frantically in long tirades. Beaufermant is given to outbursts of patriotic sentiment, which was expressed in commonplace language not always faultless in prosody. In the meantime, Henri, in despair at not being allowed to marry Germaine, rushes off to Paris, where he gets into all sorts of mischief. He is on the verge of ruin and dishonour when, to the great surprise of every one, spectators included, his choleric old father relents, pays his debts, and consents to his marriage with his cousin. Such is the common place ending of a play devoid of all dramatic interest, which proves once more the old truth that a man may write poetry full of noble and generous thoughts and yet show himself a bad playwright. M. Harel, the author of "L'Herbager," is an innkeeper in an out-of-the-way corner of Normandy, whose rustic poems have excited great interest in literary circles.

The enterprising manager of the Théâtre de l'Art, who gave us last year M. Rabbe's translation of Shelley's "Cenci," purposes producing in the course of this winter a translation of Marlowe's "Doctor Faust."

C. N.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Cantor Lectures on Musical Instruments, their Construction and Capabilities. By A. J. Hipkins. (W. Trousce.) These lectures were delivered before the Society of Arts in the beginning of this year. The first treats of the violin family, giving many interesting details respecting modern stringed instruments and their "elder cousins" the viols. The difference between these two branches was practically shown by performances on viols of a "consort of four parts" by Matthew Locke, and on violins, viola, and 'cello of two movements from a Haydn Quartet. The second lecture is devoted to wind instruments, and the third to the organ, pianoforte, and its predecessors. On the subject of keyed instruments Mr. Hipkins is one of the highest authorities. He recalls a curious fact with regard to Beethoven's so-called "Moonlight" Sonata; it was published in 1802 "for harpsichord or pianoforte." Clavecin was, we believe, the actual word used in the original edition. The illustrations to this lecture were exceptionally interesting. Bach's "Fantasia Chromatica" was performed by Mr. Hipkins upon a clavichord, the instrument for which it was composed; and he also played Bach's "Goldberg" variations on a harpsichord with double key-board—most probably for the first time in London.

The Themes of Tannhäuser. Translated from the German of Arthur Smolian by William Ashton Ellis. (Chappell). This is the translation of part of a series of essays which appeared in the Bayreuther Taschenbuch early this year as a Guide to the then approaching performance of Wagner's opera at Bayreuth. But though the special occasion for which it was written is a thing of the past, the Guide has lost neither use nor interest. Mr. Ellis in his preface justly remarks that it must not be looked upon as a "key to a close-shut door." "Tannhäuser" can be enjoyed, and to a great extent understood, without the aid of analysis; but the careful study of the work reveals many a detail likely to escape notice, especially, as he suggests, "with the ordinary method of operatic presentation." Mr. Ellis reminds us that we do not despise aids "when listening, or preparing to listen, to a Symphony of Beethoven." "Why, then," he adds, "should we condemn them when brought before these teeming masterpieces of Richard Wagner, which almost overwhelm us with their wealth of thought!" We wish Mr. Ellis had not said "when listening." He and other trained musicians may possibly be able to glance at, and derive benefit from, an analysis of a work while in the act of listening, but for the majority it surely proves a hindrance rather than a help; in studying the letter they often lose the spirit. If the Popular Concert programme books were issued a week ahead, and if the habités of these concerts bought them, and by reading, prepared themselves to listen, the analyses would prove of still greater service. Herr Smolian is an earnest student of Wagner, and has thoroughly studied his subject. The translation by Mr. Ellis is exceedingly good. At the close there is a table of themes, which will be found handy for reference.

Richard Wagner. By Franz Muncker. Translated by D. Landman, with Illustrations by Heinrich Nisle. (Williams & Norgate). This is a sketch of the life and works of the Bayreuth reformer. The author has sought specially to examine the "being and growth" of Wagner's art, and to connect his literary works and dramas with his life, and with the intellectual development of Germany. The book is one of great interest. Herr Muncker is an intense but intelligent admirer. He points out that the idea of the union of the arts was not peculiar to Wagner, but common to influential poets and philosophers of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries; the development of that idea was Wagner's grand achievement. He also brings out prominently the influence exerted over Wagner by various composers, poets, and philosophers. That he was so influenced in no way detracts from his genius; it only strengthened his mind and helped him to develop his own originality. Another point is clearly set forth. Wagner's ideal was the music-drama: but we are reminded that he disputed neither the right of existence nor the merits of the separate arts. Some over-ardent admirers can see nothing outside of music-drama, and speak of Mozart and Beethoven as if they had merely paved the way for Wagner. They certainly helped his artistic development, but they still shine with a glory of their own. The essays contributed by Wagner to the Bayreuther Blätter during the last years of his life are discussed in temperate language. On certain social and religious subjects the master proclaimed his views somewhat too dogmatically; and our author justly remarks that the essays, in spite of much that was valuable, could not meet with general approbation. In the brief description of the London concerts in 1877, the name of Dr. Hans Richter ought to have been coupled with that of Wagner, for to this conductor the artistic success of the festival was principally due. Of the English translation of the book we cannot speak favourably. Besides many positive errors, the sentences are too literally translated; the form is therefore clumsy, and the meaning often difficult to detect. Wagner's Symphony in C is spoken of as in C sharp; and, again, words usually written with initial capital letters have only small ones. There is an uncomfortable mistake on p. 59. Referring to Wagner's visit to London in 1855, it is said that he was "in constant battle with an ill-natured and short-sighted critic"; the author, we presume, meant "criticism." The volume contains portraits of Wagner, facsimiles of the original sketches of the scenery to the "Nibelungen" and "Parsifal," and two pages from the original score of the "Walküre."

MUSIC NOTE.

THE thirty-sixth annual series of Crystal Palace concerts will commence on Saturday, October 10. There will be twenty concerts, ten before, and ten after Christmas. The following novelties are announced:—Overture to A. Leschiva's "Don Juan d'Austria," Hans Sitt; Concert Overture "Tam o'Shanter," Learmont Drysdale; "Women and Roses," a choral setting of Browning's poem, with orchestral accompaniment, C. A. Lidgley; Max Bruch's new Violin Concerto; Dramatic Cantata "Queen Hynde of Caledon," Hamish MacCunn; and Symphony (No. 3), Sgambati. There will be a special Mozart programme on December 5, to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the master's death. Herr David Popper, the famous violoncellist, will appear at the first concert. Mr. August Manns will, as usual, be the conductor.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 24s.

LIFE OF JAMES BOSWELL.

With an Account of his Sayings, Doings, and Writings.

By PERCY FITZGERALD, M.A.

With 4 Portraits.

"Mr. Percy Fitzgerald's 'Life of James Boswell' is interesting; it is well informed, and it is manifestly the fruit of much patient and laborious industry."—Times.

"Mr. Fitzgerald has written two very entertaining volumes. In these volumes, in which there is not a single dull chapter, we have a very lifelike picture of 'Bozzy.' Mr. Fitzgerald's biography of this extraordinary man will no doubt find its way into every well-appointed library."—Manchester Examiner.

Small demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

LIFE OF JANE WELSH CARLYLE.

By MRS. ALEXANDER IRELAND.

With Portrait and Facsimile Letter.

"On the whole, Mrs. Ireland's biography is what it ought to be, and leaves no room for competitors."—Spectator.

2 vols., at all Libraries.

MISS MAXWELL'S AFFECTIONS.

By RICHARD PRYCE.

Author of "The Ugly Story of Miss Wetherby."

On October 8, 3 vols., at all Libraries.

DUMARESQ'S DAUGHTER.

By GRANT ALLEN.

Author of "The Tents of Shem," &c.

On October 15, 3 vols., at all Libraries.

THE SIN OF OLGA ZASSOULICH

By FRANK BARRETT.

Author of "Fettered for Life," &c.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.

One Shilling Monthly. Contents for October:—NAMELESS. By J. Lawson—THE CUSTOMS OF AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES. By C. N. Barham—THE TRUE HISTORY OF FOULON and BERTHIER. By Perronet Thompson—THE GRINDSTONE THEORY of the MILKY WAY. By J. Ellard Gore, F.R.A.S.—WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, A NATURALIST. By Arthur Gaye—JEROME CARDAN. By W. G. Waters—THE ENGLISH SPARROW. 1. A Sketch. By John Watson, F.L.S. 2. For the Prosecution. By Charles Whitehead, F.L.S., F.G.S. 3. For the Defence. By Rev. Theodore Wood. 4. In America. By G. W. Murdoch—THE BALLAD of the HULK. By H. Schütz Wilson—PAGES on PLAYS. By Justin Huntly McCarthy, M.P.—SIR WALTER SCOTT as SEEN in his JOURNAL. By Sylvanus Urban.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

FREELAND: A Social Anticipation.

By Dr. THEODOR HERTZKA. Translated by ARTHUR RANSOM.

"Dr. Hertzka has a command of narrative which may attract readers who are not commonly drawn to the study of economics. As a social criticism, 'Freeland' contains much that is suggestive, and in many respects it is a striking and interesting piece of work. The adventures of the pioneering expedition and of the early days of the colony are told with vigour and charm."—Anti-Jacobin.

"Dr. Hertzka is known as an eminent economist, and his romance 'Freeland,' claims for him a position not eminent merely, but pre-eminent. The book discusses in an interesting manner the principal social and economic questions that now occupy the minds of reformers."—Scotsman.

"'Freeland' may be recommended to all who are interested in social questions, and especially to those who indulge in visions of a Utopia. There is a Defoe-like literalness in the narrative."—Globe.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

LESSONS in ART. By Hume NISBET. With 22 Illustrations.

"Quite one of the best books of the kind which we have recently encountered is Mr. Nisbet's 'Lessons in Art,' a little volume filled with sound and practical advice, and charmingly illustrated. This little book possesses distinct merit, and that of a kind which is never to be common in popular manuals."—Spectator.

"A book which merits prompt and hearty recognition. Mr. Nisbet is himself an accomplished artist, and the book is the outcome of long years spent in the attempt to teach others the principles and laws of painting and drawing. Mr. Nisbet possesses such an enviable faculty of clear and attractive exposition, that this little book is sure to make its own welcome."—Leeds Mercury.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

TWO GIRLS on a BARGE. By V. CECIL COTES. With 44 Illustrations by F. H. Townshead.

"Very happily inspired were these 'two girls,' who, instead of going 'round the world' by themselves like 'Orthodox and I,' chose to make a holiday in a barge."—Queen.

"The incidents of the voyage are amusingly described, and the experiences of the 'two girls' and their attendant cavaliers are told naturally, and with a richness as well as refinement. The illustrations scattered through the text reflect with some cleverness the humour of each passing dilemma or droll exploit."—Leeds Mercury.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, Piccadilly, W.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING WORKS.

PART I., NOW READY.—Super royal 8vo. Each Part 1s. net.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF GREEN'S SHORT HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE.

This well-known book, of which over 160,000 copies have been sold since its first publication in 1874, has taken its place as one of the standard works in the language, and the Publishers have long felt that a well-illustrated edition would meet with a general approval. They have accordingly, with the assistance of Mrs. GREEN, arranged for a series of pictures drawn from authentic sources illustrating THE ARTS, INDUSTRIES, COSTUMES, COINS, DOMESTIC AND ECCLIASTICAL ARCHITECTURE of the various periods dealt with by the historian, which will be carefully arranged under the direction of Mr. J. D. COOPER. An elaborate series of PORTRAITS OF EMINENT PERSONS is also a feature of the scheme, and the Publishers have to thank Mr. GEORGE SCHAEFF, C.B., Director of the National Portrait Gallery, for the valuable assistance he has given them in these departments. There will also be a number of COLOURED MAPS made by Mr. EDWARD STANFORD, and COLOURED REPRODUCTIONS FROM MANUSCRIPTS, ILLUMINATED MISSALS, &c., executed in the highest style of Chromo-Lithography. The "ILLUSTRATED SHORT HISTORY" is handsomely printed in Super Royal 8vo, and will be published in about Thirty Monthly Parts.

THE NEW YEARLY VOLUME.

Just ready, royal 8vo, about 900 pages, with 500 Illustrations, cloth, 8s.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE, 1891.

Containing "The Witch of Prague," a fantastic tale by F. MARION CRAWFORD, and stories by ARCHIBALD FORBES, Mrs. CLIFFORD, D. CHRISTIE MURRAY, HENRY HEBMAN, and others. Sketches of Elton, Hereford, Worcester, Walsley, among our Public Schools, and of How House and Faversham Park, of Westminster and Tewkesbury Abbeys, and many other places of interest. Among the numerous miscellaneous articles may be mentioned "The New York Yachts," with many portraits; an article by the BISHOP OF BEDFORD on "Working Men's Clubs"; on the "Russo-Jewish Immigrant" by the Rev. B. SINGER. Poems by A. C. SWINBURNE, LEWIS MORRIS, and ALFRED ARSTEN.

NEW VOLUMES OF "TWELVE ENGLISH STATESMEN."

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

PITT. By the Earl of Rosebery. [In October.]

CHATHAM. By John Morley.

QUEEN ELIZABETH. By Prof. Beesly.

MAJOR F. R. WINGATE, R.A.

MAHDIISM and the EGYPTIAN SUDAN. Being an Account of the Rise and Progress of Mahdism, and of subsequent Events in the Sudan to the Present Time. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A., B.S.A., Assistant Adjutant-General for Intelligence, Egyptian Army. With 16 Maps and numerous Plans. 8vo, 30s. net. [Next Week.]

Compiled from official sources, and likely to be regarded as the final account of the campaign which ended in the death of General Gordon. The fullest possible details are given as to the fall of Khartoum.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

THE COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS OF JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. With Portrait and Introduction by THOMAS HUGHES. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. Uniform with the one-volume editions of the Poems of Tennyson, Wordsworth, Shelley, and Matthew Arnold.

SIR JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN.

HORÆ SABBATICÆ. Essays Reprinted from the Saturday Review. By Sir JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN, Bart. Globe 8vo.

PROFESSOR S. H. BUTCHER.

SOME ASPECTS of the GREEK GENIUS. By S. H. Butcher, M.A., Professor of Greek, Edinburgh. Crown 8vo.

DR. CARL SCHUCHHARDT.

DR. SCHLIEHMANN'S EXCAVATIONS at TROY, TIRYNS, MYCENE, OICHOMENOS, TILACA, presented in the light of recent knowledge. By Dr. CARL SCHUCHHARDT. Authorised Translation by Miss EUGENIE SELLERS. With Appendix on latest Researches by Drs. SCHLIEHMANN and DORFFELD, and Introduction by WALTER LEAF, Litt. D. Illustrated with 2 Portraits, Maps, Plans, and 200 Woodcuts. 8vo, 18s. net. [Next Week.]

PICTURES from SHELLY. Being a Series of Twenty-four Plates, drawn by E. C. Bell, engraved by J. D. Cooper. Folio, 21s. net. [Immediately.]

MRS. GASKELL and HUGH THOMSON.

CRANFORD. By Mrs. Gaskell, with 100 Illustrations by Hugh Thomson. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Immediately.]

Also a Large-Paper Edition, limited to 300 copies, 30s. net.

MRS. MOLESWORTH.

NURSE HEATHERDALE'S STORY. By Mrs. Molesworth. With Illustrations by Leslie Brooke. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. [Shortly.]

Mrs. Molesworth's Christmas Story.

REV. J. C. ATKINSON, D.C.L.

THE LAST of the GIANT KILLERS: a Fairy Tale. By Rev. J. C. ATKINSON, D.C.L., Canon of York and Vicar of Danby in Cleveland, Author of "Forty Years in a Moorland Parish." Globe 8vo.

J. HENRY SHORTHOUSE.

BLANCHE, LADY FALAISE. By J. H. Shorthouse, Author of "John Inglesant." Crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.]

MRS. OLIPHANT.

JERUSALEM. By Mrs. Oliphant. With 50 Illustrations (uniform with "The Makers of Florence," &c.). Medium 8vo, 21s. [Shortly.]

Also a limited Edition, on Large Paper, 50s. net.

THE MAKERS of FLORENCE. By Mrs. Oliphant. Edition de Luxe, with 20 additional Plates reproduced from Line Engravings after Pictures by Florentine Artists. Medium 8vo, 21s. net. [Shortly.]

CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

THAT STICK. By Charlotte M. Yonge. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s. [Shortly.]

ARCHIBALD FORBES.

BATTLES, BIVOUACS, and BARRACKS. By Archibald Forbes. Crown 8vo.

A NEW WRITER.

TIM: a Story of School Life. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Immediately.]

NEW VOLUMES OF MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Cecilia de Noel. By Lanoë Falconer, Author of "Mademoiselle Luc." [Immediately.]

The Two Penniless Princesses. By C. M. YONGE.

Muckle Jock, and other Stories of Past and Present Life in the North. By the late MALCOLM MELISSAN.

A Cigarette-Maker's Romance. By F. MARION CRAWFORD. [Ready.]

Living or Dead. By Hugh Conway.

Ps and Qs, and Lucy's Wonderful GLOBE. By C. M. YONGE.

A Family Affair. By Hugh Conway. [Ready.]

Mrs. Lorimer. By Lucas Malet. [Ready.]

A Colonial Reformer. By Rolf Boldrewood. [Next Week.]

Hester. By Mrs. Oliphant.

J. L. KIPLING.

BEAST and MAN in INDIA. By J. L. Kipling. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. Medium 8vo.

THE LATE DEAN CHURCH.

VILLAGE SERMONS. By the late R. W. Church, D.C.L., Dean of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

LINCOLN'S INN SERMONS. By the late Frederick Denison MAURICE, M.A., formerly Chaplain at Lincoln's Inn. In Six Volumes. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each. Monthly from October. [Vol. I. ready.]

THE BISHOP OF DERRY AND RAPHOE.

THE LEADING IDEAS of the GOSPELS. By the Right Rev. WILLIAM ALEXANDER, D.D., Bishop of Derry and Raphoe. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo.

PROF. KIRKPATRICK.

THE DIVINE LIBRARY of the OLD TESTAMENT. Lectures delivered at St. Asaph by A. F. KIRKPATRICK, B.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, Cambridge. Crown 8vo.

REV. HUGH MACMILLAN.

THE GATE BEAUTIFUL and other BIBLE READINGS for the YOUNG. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

REV. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A.

SHORT SERMONS. By the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, M.A. Crown 8vo.

REV. A. J. CHURCH.

BIBLE STORIES. (Second Series.) By the Rev. A. J. Church. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

NEW VOLUMES OF THE "ENGLISH MEN OF ACTION."

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

MONTROSE. By Mowbray Morris. With Portrait. [Shortly.]

RODNEY. By D. and G. Hannay. Edited by W. Aldis Wright, M.A. With Portrait. [Ready.]

THE CAMBRIDGE SHAKESPEARE. Vol. IV. Containing King John, Richard II., Henry IV. (Parts I. and II.), Henry V. 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Ready.]

THE GLOBE SHAKESPEARE. India-Paper Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

J. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A.

THE STUDY of ENGLISH LITERATURE: a Plea for its Recognition and Organisation at the Universities. By J. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A. Crown 8vo.

EDITED BY CANON AINGER.

TENNYSON for the YOUNG. With Notes and Preface by A. AINGER, M.A., Reader at the Temple, and Canon of Bristol. Globe 8vo.

AMEDEE GUILLEMIN.

ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. A Popular Treatise. By AMEDEE GUILLEMIN. Translated and Edited, with Additions and Notes, by Professor SILVANUS P. THOMPSON, Author of "Elementary Lessons in Electricity," &c. With numerous Illustrations. Super-royal 8vo.

Uniform with the English Editions of M. Guillemin's "The Forces of Nature," and "The Application of Physical Forces."

NEW VOLUME OF THE UNIFORM EDITION OF DR. A. R. WALLACE'S WORKS.

ISLAND LIFE; or, the Phenomena and Causes of Insular Faunas and Floras. Including a Revision and Attempted Solution of the Problem of Geological Climates. By Dr. A. R. WALLACE. With Illustrations and Maps. New and Cheaper Edition. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.]

PROFESSOR MICHAEL FOSTER, M.D., F.R.S.

A TEXT-BOOK of PHYSIOLOGY. Illustrated. Sixth Edition, Revised. Part IV, comprising the remainder of Book III, "THE SENSES and SOME SPECIAL MUSCULAR MECHANISMS," and Book IV, "THE TISSUES and MECHANISMS of REPRODUCTION," by MICHAEL FOSTER, M.D., F.R.S., Professor of Physiology in the University of Cambridge.

The present Part IV, completes the Work, with the exception of the Appendix, which differs so widely in character from the rest of the book that it seemed desirable to issue it as a separate work; it will be published very shortly.

PROFESSOR ARNOLD LANG and ERNST HAECKEL.

TEXT-BOOK of COMPARATIVE ANATOMY. By Dr. Arnold LANG, Professor of Zoology in the University of Zurich, formerly Ritter Professor of Physiology in the University of Jena. Issued as the Ninth Edition of EDWARD OSCAR SCHLIMMIDT'S "Handbook of Comparative Anatomy." Translated into English by HENRY M. HENRIARD, M.A., Cantab., F.Z.S., and MATHILDA BERNARD. With a Preface by Professor ERNST HAECKEL. 2 vols., illustrated, medium 8vo. [Vol. I. in October.]

The English translation of this work, which has become a standard textbook in Germany, is being made under the author's supervision, and Professor Haeckel has written a special preface.

NEW VOLUMES OF MACMILLAN'S "CLASSICAL SERIES."

PLAUTUS.—CAPTIVI. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by A. R. S. HALLIDAY, M.A., late Junior Student of Christ Church, Oxford. 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

THUCYDIDES.—BOOK II. Edited, with Introduction, Critical Notes, and Commentary, by E. C. MARCHANT, M.A., Assistant Master at St. Paul's School. 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

This edition contains a new collation of the British Museum MS. M. The introduction to the text is arranged on the lines of Cabel's school edition of "Lysias."

NEW VOLUME OF MACMILLAN'S "HISTORY PRIMERS."

ANALYSIS of ENGLISH HISTORY. By T. F. Tout, M.A., Professor of Modern History, Owens College, Manchester. 18mo, 1s. [Ready.]

J. B. LOCK, M.A.

MECHANICS for BEGINNERS. By the Rev. J. B. Lock, M.A., Author of "Arithmetic for Schools," &c. Fcap. 8vo.

Part I. MECHANICS of SOLIDS. 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

Part II. MECHANICS of FLUIDS. [Shortly.]

An introductory book which, it is hoped, may be found useful both in schools and by students preparing for the elementary stage of the Science and Art and other public examinations.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1013.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S LIST OF AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

EXPLORATION AND TRAVEL.

MY PERSONAL EXPERIENCES in EQUATORIAL AFRICA, as Medical Officer of the Emin Pasha Relief Expedition. By THOS. HEAZLE PARKE, Hon. D.C.L. (Durh.), Hon. Fellow Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, &c., Surgeon Army Medical Staff. With Map, Portrait, and numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, One Guinea. [October.]

SEVEN YEARS in the SOUDAN: being a Record of Explorations, Adventures, and Campaigns against the Arab Slave-Hunters. By ROMOLO GESSI PASHA. Collected and Edited by his Son, FELIX GESSI. With Portraits and numerous Illustrations from Sketches on the spot. Demy 8vo, cloth, 18s. [Shortly.]

AT the ANTIPODES: Travels in Australia, New Zealand, Fiji Islands, the New Hebrides, New Caledonia, and South America, 1858-80. By G. VERSCHUUR. Translated by MARY DANIELS. Numerous Illustrations and Map. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [October.]

A WINTER CRUISE in SUMMER SEAS; or, "How I Found Health." By CHARLES C. ATCHISON. Profusely Illustrated by Walter W. Buckley. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 18s. [November.]

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS: a Historical, Geographical, Ethnographical, Social, and Commercial Sketch of the Philippine Archipelago and its Political Dependencies. By JOHN FOREMAN, F.R.G.S. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 200 pages, with Map and Frontispiece, cloth extra, One Guinea. [Now ready.]

COOMASSIE and MAGDALA: the Story of Two British Campaigns in Africa. By HENRY M. STANLEY. Entirely New and Abridged Edition, with all the Original Illustrations. Crown 8vo, with Map, cloth, 3s. 6d. [October.]

A TRANSATLANTIC HOLIDAY; or, Notes of a Visit to the Eastern States of America. By T. FITZ-PATRICK, M.D., Author of "An Autumn Cruise in the 'Egaut.'" With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. [October.]

SPORT and WORK on the NEPAUL FRONTIER, with which is incorporated "TEXT LIFE in TIGER LAND" Being Twelve Years' Sporting Reminiscences of a Pioneer Planter in an Indian Frontier District. By the Hon. JAMES ENGLISH (Maori), Minister for Public Instruction, Sydney, Author of "Our New Zealand Cousins," &c. With 22 Illustrations in Chromo-lithography. One royal 8vo vol., 700 pages, cloth extra, One Guinea. [Ready.]

THE GREAT LONE LAND: a Record of Travel and Adventure in North and West America. By Colonel Sir W. F. BUTLER, K.C.B. With Illustrations and Route Map. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [October.]

THE CRUISE of the "FALCON": a Voyage to South America in a Thirty-Ten Yacht. By E. F. KNIGHT, Barrister-at-Law. With numerous Illustrations and Map. New Edition (Sixth). Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [October.]

FINE-ART BOOKS AND CHOICE EDITIONS.

THE WORKS of OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. New Riverside Edition. With 4 Portraits. PROSE WORKS in Ten Volumes, each with an Index. POEMS in Four Volumes. Crown 8vo, cloth, 44s. Also a Limited Large-Paper Edition, bound in boards, £14 14s. net. * Dr. Holmes has annotated the Poems, and has written New Prefaces for several of the Prose Volumes.

THE FLOWERS of JAPAN and the ART of FLORAL ARRANGEMENT. By JOSIAH CONDER, F.R.I.B.A., Professor of Architecture, and Architect to the Imperial Japanese Government. With Illustrations in Colours by Japanese Artists; texts beautifully printed in Japan. Imperial 4to, illustrated paper covers, Two Guineas net. [October.]

THE GRAMMAR of the LOTUS: a New History of Classic Ornament as a Development of Sun Worship. With Observations on the "Bronze Culture" of Pre-historic Europe as derived from Egypt, based on the Study of Patterns. By W. H. GOODYEAR, M.A. 1 vol., royal 4to boards, 300 pages, and upwards of 1,000 Illustrations in 67 pages of plates, and 200 Text cuts. 25 3s. net.

OUR VILLAGE. By Mary Russell Mitford. With Portrait and numerous Illustrations engraved by J. D. Cooper and others. New edition. Small 4to, cloth, gilt edges, 5s.

PREACHERS OF THE AGE.

IMPORTANT NEW SERIES.

Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY beg to state that they have made arrangements for the publication of a group of volumes, by distinguished living representative men in the Church of England and in the chief branches of British Nonconformity, which will be published under the general title of "PREACHERS OF THE AGE." The volumes will be uniform in size, appearance, and price, and each will contain some twelve or fourteen Sermons or Addresses specially chosen or written for the Series. They will be ISSUED IN CROWN 8vo, CLOTH EXTRA, AT 3s. 6d. EACH, AND WILL CONTAIN FINE PHOTOGRAVURE PORTRAITS REPRODUCED, IN MOST INSTANCES, FROM UNPUBLISHED PHOTOGRAPHS. It is also proposed to add to each volume a Bibliography of the Books already published by the author. (A Prospectus, containing a List and particulars of the early volumes, will be sent on application.)

* * FULL LIST OF AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS sent post free on application.

HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, AND CRITICISM.

WILLIAM HOGARTH: a Memoir, with Bibliography and Catalogue of Prints and Paintings by AUSTIN DOBSON. With numerous Illustrations and Photogravure Reproductions. [October.]

Mr. Austin Dobson's new book upon Hogarth will be in one demy 8vo volume of 400 pages. The earlier chapters will be devoted to the facts of Hogarth's life and an estimate of his genius, whilst the concluding chapters will contain a complete and detailed account, with critical notes, of the great artist's prints and paintings.

JOSEPH SEVERN, The LIFE and FRIENDSHIPS of. By WILLIAM SHARP. With Photogravure Portrait, numerous Facsimiles of Letters, and other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, over 400 pp., cloth. [In preparation.]

CHARLES KEENE: the Life and Letters of the "Punch" Artist. By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD. With Portrait and 15 Full-page and 44 smaller Illustrations. [In preparation.]

EDMOND SCHERER'S ESSAYS on ENGLISH LITERA-TURE. Translated, with a Critical Introduction, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY, M.A.; and a fine Photogravure Portrait of M. Scherer from a Photograph by Chalon of Paris. Crown 8vo, buckram, 41s. 6s. [October.]

THE LIFE of CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS: an Exami- nation of the Historical and Geographical Conditions under which the Western Continent was discovered to Europe; with an Inquiry into the Personal History of Cristoval Colon. By JUSTIN WINSOR, Author of "A Narrative and Critical History of America," &c. With Maps and numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. [Shortly.]

THE LIFE of ROBERT COATES, better known as "Bones" and "Diamond" Coates. By JOHN R. and HUNTER H. ROBINSON. With 2 Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [Ready.]

THE TOMBS of the KINGS of ENGLAND. By J. Charles WALL. Dedicated by permission to H.M. the QUEEN. With 57 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 41s. [Ready.]

OUR ENGLISH HOMER. By Thomas W. White, M.A. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s. [In the press.]

THE QUEEN'S PRIME MINISTERS—New Volumes.

Edited by STUART J. REID.

THE MARQUIS of SALISBURY, K.G. By H. D. Traill, D.C.L. With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

VISCOUNT PALMERSTON, K.G. By the Marquis of LORNE, K.T. With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

THE EARL of ABERDEEN. By Sir Arthur Gordon, G.C.M.G., &c. With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

MRS. DINES' JEWELS. By W. Clark Russell, Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" "Jack's Courtship," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. [December.]

GODIVA DURLEIGH. By Sarah Doudney, Author of "A Woman's Glory," "Where the Dew Falls in London," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d. [October.]

A DREAM of MILLIONS, and other Stories. By M. BETHAM EDWARDS, Author of "Half-Way," &c. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 1s. [Ready.]

THE VALLEY COUNCIL; or, Leaves from the Journal of THOMAS BATEMAN, of Canbelego Station, N.S.W. Edited by PERCY CLARKE, Author of "Three Diggers," &c. Crown 8vo, with Illustrations, cloth, 6s. [October.]

A DARK PLACE of the EARTH. By Alfred Clark, Forest Department, Ceylon. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [October.]

LORNA DOONE: a Romance of Exmoor. By R. D. BLACKMORE. With 16 Full-Page Illustrations by Wm. Small. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d. New and Popular Illustrated Edition.

A RED SISTER. By C. L. Pirakis, Author of "A Dateless Bargain," "At the Moment of Victory," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d. [November.]

PRAIRIE and BUSH. By George Dunderdale. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [October.]

A CREATURE of the NIGHT: an Italian Enigma. By FERDINAND HUME, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," &c. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s. [October.]

STORIES by RUDYARD KIPLING. Library Edition. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. each.

NEW WORKS BY FRANK R. STOCKTON.

THE SQUIRREL INN. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

RUDDER GRANGERS ABROAD. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Table listing various articles and their authors, including 'The Scapgoat' by J. E. Budgett, 'The Folk-Lore Congress' by P. A. Barnett, and 'The Introduction of Buddhism into China' by Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie.

CATALOGUE.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel Poetry, &c.) are invited to forward them for consideration MSS. read within 14 days of receipt, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. Rejected MSS. promptly returned.

DIGBY, LONG, & CO., Publishers, 18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANSTAENGL of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class BOOK ILLUSTRATION. Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holl, R.A., Oultes, R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; 'SPRING,' by Herbert Draper, &c., &c. ; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by "THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

THE HISTORY OF DULWICH COLLEGE.

By WILLIAM YOUNG, one of the Governors of the College.

In 2 vols., printed in royal 4to, on rough-edged Dutch Paper, with numerous Illustrations. PRICE TWO GUINEAS, NET.

The Edition is limited to 250 Copies, of which only 55 remain.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"Mr. Young has done his work well; his book is unusual alike in size and in arrangement; but it is unusual also in the variety of its interest and information, and in the clear and scholarly fashion in which it is presented."—Saturday Review.

"Those who have benefited—and they must be by this time a goodly number—by the foundation of Edward Alleyn may well and piously devote a fraction of their spare time to studying its very interesting history."—Times.

Applications for the few remaining copies to be addressed to COOMES'S REGENT LIBRARY, 141, REGENT STREET, LONDON.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE and ART, ROYAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, STEPHEN'S GREEN, DUBLIN.

SESSION 1891-92.

The Royal College of Science supplies courses of instruction in the Sciences applicable to the Industrial Arts, especially those which may be classed broadly under the heads CHEMICAL MANUFACTURES, ENGINEERING, and MINING.

A Diploma of Associate of the College is granted at the end of the Three Years' Course, the required conditions being complied with.

Four Royal Scholarships, of the value of £50 yearly each, with free admission to the Lectures and Laboratories, are attached to the College. Two are offered for competition each year to associate students not being Royal Exhibitors, on the completion of their first year's course.

The fees payable by Non-Associate Students are—£2 for each separate Course of Lectures, £1 for half-course of Experimental Physics, or £10 for all the Lecture Courses of a Faculty for the Session.

For ANALYTICAL CHEMISTRY—£2 for a special course of one month, £5 for three months, £9 for six months, £12 for the entire Session.

For PHYSICAL LABORATORY—£1 per month (one hour a day); £2 for a special course of one month, £3 per month for six hours a day; or £6 for the Session (one hour per day).

For ASSAYING—£5 for three months, £9 for six months, £12 for the entire Session.

For ZOOLOGICAL LABORATORY—£2 for a Special Course of one month; £3 for 1st Medical or 2nd Arts Course Royal University of Ireland; or £5 for a Special Course of three months.

For BOTANICAL LABORATORY—Same as Zoological Laboratory.

For GEOLOGICAL LABORATORY—£2 for a Special Course of one month.

For DRAWING SCHOOL—£3 for the Session, £2 for one Term. The Chemical and Physical Laboratories and the Drawing Schools are Open Daily for Practical Instruction.

- Mathematics, Mechanics, and Professor H. HENNESSY, F.R.S.
Mechanism
Descriptive Geometry, Drawing, Professor THOMAS F. PRIGOT, C.E., Engineering, and Surveying. J. M.R.I.A.
Chemistry, Theoretical and Prac- Professor W. N. HARTLEY, F.R.S. tical and Metallurgy. F.C.S., F.R.S.E.
Physics, Theoretical and Prac- Professor W. F. BARRETT, tical. F.R.S.E., M.R.I.A.
Geology Professor G. A. J. COLE, F.G.S.
Mining and Mineralogy Professor J. P. O'REILLY, C.E., M.R.I.A.
Botany Professor T. JOHNSON, D.Sc., F.L.S., Dean of Faculty for Session.
Zoology Professor A. C. HADDON, M.A., F.Z.S., M.R.I.A.

The Courses of Chemistry, Physics, Botany, and Zoology are recognised by the Royal University of Ireland, and certificates of attendance are granted to medical and other students attending the Courses, and the Chemical, Practical, Botanical, and Zoological Laboratories.

Programmes may be obtained on application at the College, or by letter addressed to the Secretary, Royal College of Science, Stephen's Green, Dublin.

The first term of the Session will commence on Monday, the 5th October, 1891.

Note.—Intending Associate Students will be required to pass an Entrance Examination in Elementary Mathematics and Elementary Practical Geometry, as indicated on page 5 of Programme, copies of which may be had on application from the Secretary.

Professor J. P. O'REILLY, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES (ABERYSTWYTH).

The Council of the College invite Applications for the CHAIR of PHYSICS, vacated by Professor D. E. Jones on his appointment as Director of Technical Instruction for Staffordshire. Commencing salary £200. Applications may be obtained of the Principal, at Aberystwyth. Applications, together with testimonials, should be forwarded to the Hon. Secretary, 27, Chancery Lane, London, W.C., on or before October 6th. The Professor will be required to commence work immediately.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

Professor W. F. R. WELDON, M.A., F.R.S., will deliver, during the ensuing Session, a COURSE of LECTURES on "THE DECADE OF CRUSTACEA," intended specially for Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology. The Lectures will be given twice weekly, commencing SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17th, at 10 a.m. The GENERAL COURSE of LECTURES on ZOOLOGY, suitable for Students preparing for the various Examinations of the University of London, commences MONDAY, OCTOBER 5th, at 4 p.m.

FRENCH CONVERSATIONAL LESSONS.—A LADY, who has been engaged for eight years in conducting large public English Classes for la Ville de Paris, and also for the Association Polytechnique in that city, is now desirous of finding PUPILS who wish to continue their fluency of speech in the French language.—Address F. T. M., care of Mrs. Evans, 62, Blomfield Road, Maida Hill, W.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS GRANTS THE DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Tiro, &c. For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON (LADIES' DEPARTMENT).

13, Kensington Square (close to High Street Kensington Station).

In this department Lectures are given to Ladies in the various subjects of University Education by Professors and Lecturers on the Staff of King's College. The Lectures are adapted for Ladies above the age of 16. For a Prospectus or further information apply to the Vice-Principal, Miss C. G. SCHMIDT, at the above address. In return for four stamps, a complete Syllabus of Lectures may be obtained. The College RE-OPENS on MONDAY, OCTOBER 12th.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERT SEASON

The Thirty-sixth Annual Series of SATURDAY CONCERTS Will commence on OCTOBER 10th, at Three o'clock.

Vocalist: MADAME PATEY (Her first appearance since her return from Australia). Violoncello: HERR DAVID POPPER (His first appearance at the Crystal Palace). THE FULL CRYSTAL PALACE ORCHESTRA. (Conductor—Mr. AUGUST MANNES.)

Special Tickets for Twenty Concerts, Two Guineas. Numbered Seats for Single Concert, 2s. 6d.; Unnumbered, 1s. The Solo Vocalists engaged for Concerts before Christmas include:—Miss Anna Williams and Miss Macintyre; Madame Giulia Valda, Madame Emily Spada, Miss Charlotte Walker, and Mrs. Hutchinson; Madame Patey, Miss Dora Barnard, and Miss Marian McKenzie; Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Henry Percy, Mr. Ivor McKay, Mr. Philip Newbury, Mr. Braxton Smith, and Mr. Barton McGuckin; Mr. William Ludwig and Mr. Norman Salmon. The Solo Instrumentalists include:—Violin: Mons. Emile Sauret (Dr. Joseph Joachim will appear at the first Concert after Christmas); Violoncello: Herr David Popper and Master Jean Gerardy; Pianoforte: Herr Bernhard Starckelagen, Middle Jambtha, Middle, Clotilde Kiebere, Miss Adeline de Lara, and Miss Fanny Davies. Organist and Accompanist: Mr. Alfred J. Eyre. Prospectus, post free, on application to the Manager, Crystal Palace, S.E.

SHAKESPEARE READING SOCIETY.

Founded 1875. President—Mr. HENRY IRVING. The SESSION 1891-92 commences in OCTOBER. Elocution Classes Weekly, under the direction of Mr. W. POEL. For particulars of Membership, &c., apply to the Hon. Sec., 13, Upper Berkeley Street, W.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE.—The Office has been REMOVED to BURLINGTON HOUSE, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W. G. GRIFFITH

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.—Herr MATTHAY will resume his GERMAN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE CLASSES and also his Private Lessons on FRIDAY, OCTOBER 2nd.

GLADWELL BROTHERS' FINE ART GALLERY, 20 and 21, Gracechurch Street, E.C.—A dissolution of partnership being in progress, the remaining STOCK, accumulated during the past half century, is now being SOLD for cash, without regard to publication prices.

GLADWELLS' important SALE of FINE ART STOCK is now in progress, and will be continued for a short time only, as the partnership heretofore subsisting will be dissolved on Dec. 31 next. A large portion of the Stock will be sold for cash at less than half price.—GLADWELL BROTHERS, 20 and 21 Gracechurch Street.

Fourth Edition, Revised, and Illustrated, price 4s.

THE FROG: an Introduction to Anatomy, Histology, and Embryology. By A. MILNES MARSHALL, M.P., D.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Zoology in the Owens College, Victoria University. London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co. Manchester: J. E. CORNISH.

TRISCHLER'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Ready this day, at all Booksellers' and Libraries.
FOLLY AND FRESH AIR. By EDEN PHILLIPOTT, Author of "The End of a Life." Crown 8vo, 298 pp.
 The DAILY TELEGRAPH says:—"The author has a droll, dry manner that reminds one not a little of the style of such American humorists as Frank Stockton and Charles Dudley Warner. The book is not merely funny—it abounds in acute observations of human nature, smartly expressed; passages of bold and original thought; and descriptions of natural scenery at once truthful and picturesque. Altogether the volume is a delightful one." Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

A MERCIFUL DIVORCE. By F. W. MAUDE.
 A vivid, piquant, and realistic story of aristocratic social life. This book promises to be one of the most eagerly read works during the coming season. 1 vol., cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SCUDAMORES."
JARDYNE'S WIFE. 3 vols. By C. J. WILLS.
 GLASGOW HERALD says:—"The work is exceedingly clever. The psychologies of the characters introduced are gems in their way. Altogether the novel is very enjoyable."
 THE PALL MALL GAZETTE says:—"The story is sufficiently ingenious and exciting to command a great deal of attention."

FRENCH FICTION OF TO-DAY. By Madame VAN DE VELDE. Beautifully Illustrated with Twelve Portraits.
 DAILY NEWS says:—"Madame Van de Velde has written two serious, yet light and amusing, volumes on French Fiction of Today. The authoress renders full justice to the exquisite sense of style in most French fiction."
 GLASGOW HERALD says:—"Readers will gather from the book more information regarding contemporary French novelists than from any other single book with which we are acquainted." In 2 vols., 2s.

AN AMERICAN WIDOW. By Albert KEVILL DAVIES.
 THE MORNING POST says:—"An American Widow" is very amusing, very brightly written, and original."
 THE SCOTSMAN says:—"Is cleverly written and ingeniously contrived. A very clever sensational melodrama."
 THE SUNDAY TIMES says:—"Few better novels than this have been published lately."
 Cheap and Revised Edition, Handsome Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

THE DEAN'S DAUGHTER. By Sydney GRUNDY and F. C. PHILLIPS. A New and Original Play in 1 vol., Paper Covers, 1s.
THE PIT TOWN CORONET. By C. J. WILLS.
 THE WORLD says:—"The Pit Town Coronet" is the best of a batch of novels now lying before us. Its author has won distinction in another field of literature by his admirable sketches of Persian life in the "Land of the Lion and Sun." The keen observation and subtle sense of humor that are exhibited throughout his novel, which possesses, moreover, a clever plot and several interesting characters."
 New and Revised Edition, Elegant Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

THE RAILWAY FOUNDLING. By Nomad.
 THE DAILY TELEGRAPH says:—"Amongst some excellent novels recently issued, a clever story by 'Nomad,' 'A Railway Foundling,' deserves recognition. Here is a story which from the outset is delightfully tantalizing. It is a story that must be read to be understood. There is vivacity and adventure in it, and good as the authoress's previous work, 'The Milroys,' was, it is not too much to say that this is better." Cheap Edition, Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

SCARLET FORTUNE. By Henry HERMAN.
 THE GLOBE says:—"Mr. Herman has written a tale of quite sensational interest." Picture Boards, 2s.
TRISCHLER & CO., New BRIDGE ST., BLACKFRIARS.

JAPANESE POTTERY,
 WITH NOTES
 Describing the Emblems, the Poetical Associations, and other thoughts and subjects employed in the Decoration of the Wares, an Account of the Festivals, and of some of the Customs of Japan.
 By JAMES L. BOWES.
 Imperial 8vo, cloth, 600 pp., with Plates, £2 12s. 6d.
 e "Extra Illustrated Edition," half-morocco, gilt top, £6 6s. (Only a few copies left.)
Japan Mail.—"It is a noble book... a book of the most valuable and genuine character. It is evident that Mr. Bowes has brought together a really representative collection, and that he has made every specimen it contains the object of careful research and intelligent scrutiny."
China Telegraph.—"Few are entitled to speak with absolute authority, but of these Mr. Bowes stands foremost. Virtually a complete history of the art. To the true connoisseur it needs little recommendation."
The Academy.—"Produced with singular care and completeness... A worthy sequel to the author's previous labours in the cause of Japanese art."
The Times.—"Worthy of its subject and its author."
The Art Journal.—"Remarkably free from mistakes."
The Saturday Review.—"Let us repeat our admiration of Mr. Bowes' beautiful and enticing volume."
The Architect.—"A guide for the collector, and the best of its kind."
The Builder.—"Not only one of the most beautiful, but one of the most useful and rational books upon Japanese art which has been published in England."
Notes and Queries.—"To collectors his books are as authoritative as is to the lover of Etruscan the priceless book of Mr. Willenus."
James's Gazette.—"The volume is one in which the connoisseur will delight."

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited
 Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL.
 Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.

THE OWEN'S COLLEGE CALENDAR
 FOR THE SESSION 1891-2.
 MACMILLAN & Co., London. J. E. CORNISH, Manchester.

BOOK SEASON, 1891.

THE CALIPHATE: its Rise, Decline, and Fall. By Sir WILLIAM MUIR, K.C.S.I., LL.D., D.C.L., Ph.D., Author of "The Life of Mahomet," "Mahomet and Islam," &c. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d., cloth.

UNITED STATES PICTURES: Drawn with Pen and Pencil. With a Map and 165 Engravings. By RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. Imperial 8vo, 8s., handsome cloth, gilt edges.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS, according to the Authorised Version. Metrically arranged, with Introductions, various Renderings, Explanatory Notes, and Index. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

THE DAYS of QUEEN MARY; or, Annals of her Reign. Containing Particulars of the Restoration of Romanism, and the Sufferings of the Martyrs during that period. Illustrated, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth gilt.

ITALIAN EXPLORERS in AFRICA By SOFIA BOMPIANA. With Portraits and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth boards.

HOW to KEEP HEALTHY. Familiar Talks on Hygiene. By A. T. SCHOFIELD, M.D. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth boards.

HEROISMS in HUMBLE LIFE; or, Stories from the Records of the Montyon Prize of the French Academy. By L. G. SEGUIN, Author of "Walks in Algiers." With Illustrations. Small 4to, 5s., cloth boards, gilt edges.

THE LOVE of CHRIST: His to Us, Ours to Him. By Rev. JOHN P. HOBSON, M.A. Small 8vo, 1s., cloth boards, red edges.

The RACES of the OLD TESTAMENT. By A. H. SAYCE, M.A., LL.D., Author of "Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments," "The Hittites," &c. "BY-PATHS OF BIBLE KNOWLEDGE," No. 16. 3s., cloth boards.

JOSEPH, the LIFE and TIMES of, in the LIGHT of EGYPTIAN LORE. By the Rev. H. G. TOMKINS. "BY-PATHS OF BIBLE KNOWLEDGE," No. 17. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

BRIEF COUNSELS CONCERNING BUSINESS. By AN OLD MAN OF BUSINESS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

HEROES of the TELEGRAPH. By JOHN MUNRO, Author of "Electricity and its Uses," &c. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE KING'S CUP-BEARER. By Mrs. O. F. WALTON, Author of "Christie's Old Organ," "Shadows," &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth boards.

* * A Series of very helpful and direct religious talks based upon Nehemiah's history. It will be found suitable for all classes of readers, and especially for young people.

The following popular Annuals are also just published:—
THE GIRL'S OWN ANNUAL, 8s. THE BOY'S OWN ANNUAL, 8s. THE CHILD'S COMPANION ANNUAL (with Story by Mrs. WALTON, Author of "Christie's Old Organ," &c.), 1s. 6d., in picture boards; 2s., cloth; 2s. 6d., gilt edges. OUR LITTLE DOT'S ANNUAL, in same styles as "Child's Companion Annual," 1s. 6d., 2s., and 2s. 6d. THE COTTAGER and ARTISAN; THE PEOPLE'S OWN ANNUAL, 1s. 6d., coloured cover.

ILLUSTRATED TALES.—Twenty-five Illustrated Story Books have just been published, ranging in price from 6d. to 6s. each, attractively bound and suitable for Presents or Prizes.

PUBLISHED BY THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY,
 36, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.
 AND SOLD BY ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s List.

DARKNESS and DAWN; or, Scenes in the Days of Nero. An Historic Tale. By the Venerable Archdeacon FARRAR, Author of "The Life of Christ." 2 vols., 8vo, 28s. [On October 10.]

ANNALS of MY EARLY LIFE, 1806-16. By CHARLES WORDSWORTH, D.C.L., Bishop of St. Andrews. 8vo, 15s.

DR. LIDDON'S TOUR in EGYPT and PALESTINE in 1886. Being Letters, Descriptive of the Tour, Written by his Sister, Mrs. KING. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE BLUE POETRY BOOK. Edited by ANDREW LANG. With 12 Plates and 88 Illustrations in the Text by H. J. Ford and Lancelot Speed. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A MANUAL of the SCIENCE of RELIGION. By Professor CHANTEPIE de la SAUSSAYE. Translated by Mrs. COLYER FER-GUSSON (nee MAX MULLER). Revised by the Author. Crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE RETREAT of the TEN THOUSAND: being the Story of Xenophon's "Anabasis." By Prof. C. WITT. Translated by FRANCES YOUNG-HUSBAND, Translator of the "Myths of Hellas." With Preface by H. G. DAKYNS, M.A., Translator of "The Works of Xenophon." With Maps, 12 Plates, and 17 Illustrations in the Text. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SOLUTIONS. By W. Ostwald, Professor of Chemistry in the University of Leipzig. Being the Fourth Book, with some Additions, of the Second Edition of Ostwald's "Lehrbuch der Allgemeinen Chemie." Translated by M. M. PATIFSON MUIR, Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

COMPANION ATLAS TO GARDINER'S "STUDENT'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND."

A SCHOOL ATLAS of ENGLISH HISTORY. Edited by SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, M.A., LL.D. With 66 Maps and 20 Plans of Battle, &c. Fcap. 4to, 5s.

WORKS BY WM. LEIGHTON JORDON, F.R.G.S.

THE OCEAN: a Treatise on Ocean Currents and Tides, and their Causes. Second Edition. 8vo, 21s.

STANDARD of VALUE. Sixth Edition. 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVELS.

THE MISCHIEF of MONICA By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 25s. 6d.

"Mrs. Walford's new novel deserves to be placed beside the best she has given us. As a novel of character and situation it has not often been excelled in truth and felicity. The personages are all real and alive, and every character is in itself fresh and interesting, and representative of a type.... The incidents and plot of the story are of deep and sometimes thrilling interest, and its excellence lies in the humorous picture of manners and character."—Scotsman.

BEGGARS ALL. By L. Dougall. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A clever and interesting book... The plot is original; the heroine is charming, and her history is told with a power and grace that makes the book a notable novel."—Standard.

MAIWA'S REVENGE; or, the War of the Little Hand. By H. RIDER HAGGARD. New and Cheaper Edition, with 8 Illustrations by C. H. M. Kerr. Crown 8vo, 1s., sewed; 1s. 6d., cloth.

"These exploits are quite as marvellous in their way as the supernatural exploits of 'She'; but Mr. Haggard—in a great measure, no doubt, from the plain unobtrusive language Allan Quartermain is made to use—has the gift of stamping these stupendous feats with the mark of reality."—World.

DORRIE: a Novel. By William TIREBUCK, Author of "Saint Margaret," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"An extremely touching and realistic picture of Liverpool life... Mr. Tirebuck writes vigorously, and his story is certainly one of profound human interest."—Academy.
 "Dorrie" is really a strong piece of work—a decidedly interesting story."—Spectator.

Now ready, price Sixpence.
LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE,
 OCTOBER.

THE MISCHIEF of MONICA. By L. B. WALFORD. Chaps. XXXIV.—XXXVI. (Concluded.)
 THE SPANISH STORY of the ARMADA.—II. By J. A. FROUDE SEVILLE. By W. E. H. LECKY.
 THE EBONY FRAME. By E. NESBIT.
 RIVAL MECHANICS.—NATURE and MAN: a Students' Symposium. By Dr. B. W. RICHARDSON.
 HARPFORD WOOD. By S. CORNISH WATKINS.
 THE THREE FATES. By F. MARION CRAWFORD. Chaps. XV.—XVI.
 AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

FOR OCTOBER, 1891, CONTAINS, AMONG OTHER ARTICLES OF INTEREST,

MR. CHAINE'S SONS. By W. E. NORRIS. Chaps. XXXVII.—XL.—WILLIAM CORBETT.—THE CULT OF CANT.—JANEY, A HUMBLE ADMINISTRATOR. By the Author of "Ideala," &c.—THE RUN OF THE SEASON. By FINCH MASON.—AN IDYLL OF ONE. By W. M. HARDINGE, Author of "Clifford Grey," &c.—"THE COMPLEAT ANGLER. By W. R. PURCHAS.—LOVE OR MONEY. By KATHARINE LEE. Chaps. XXXV.—XXXVIII., &c.

STANDARD WORKS FOR THE LIBRARY.

Prof. MOMMSEN'S HISTORY of ROME to the TIME of AUGUSTUS. Translated by Dr. DICKSON. The Popular Edition. 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2 6s. 6d.

* Also sold separately as follows:—Vols. I. and II., 21s.; Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., 15s.

THE ROMAN PROVINCES. Being the History of Rome from Cæsar to Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by the Rev. P. W. DICKSON. 2 vols., 8vo, with Maps, 36s.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY.
From the German of Professor MAX DUNCKER. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. 6 vols., demy 8vo. Each Volume may be had separately, 21s.

The HISTORY of ROMAN CLASSICAL LITERATURE. By R. W. BROWNE, M.A., Ph.D., late Prebendary of St. Paul's, and Professor of Classical Literature in King's College, London. A New Edition. In demy 8vo, 9s.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY. By the late WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK, Dean of Chichester. ST. AUGUSTIN to JUXON. 12 vols., demy 8vo, 49s. Each separately (with exception of III. (reprinting), IV., VI., and VII.), 15s. The New Series begins with Vol. VI. Vol. XII. is the Index.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 2 Portraits, 6s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL. From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

A MEMOIR of the Rev. JOHN RUSSELL, of Tordown, North Devon. By the Author of "Dartmoor Days," "Wolf-Hunting in Brittany," &c. In crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

RECOLLECTIONS of a LITERARY LIFE. By MARY RUSSELL MITFORD. Crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of a SEAMAN: Thomas, Tenth Earl of Dundonald. Popular Edition, with a Sequel relating Lord Dundonald's services in liberating the Spanish and Portuguese Colonies in South America, and in the War of the Greek Independence, and with an account of his later life and scientific inventions. Edited by the TWELFTH EARL OF DUNDONALD. With Portraits, Charts, and Nine Illustrations on Wood, crown 8vo., 6s.

THE LIFE of THEODORE EDWARD HOOK. By the Rev. RICHARD H. DALTON BARRHAM. A New Edition. Crown 8vo., 6s.

SEVEN YEARS at ETON, 1857-1864. Edited by JAMES BRINSLEY RICHARDS. Third Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo., 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,

Cassell & Company's Announcements.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT NOVELS.

In view of the passing of the American Copyright Act Messrs. Cassell & Company, Limited, have been making arrangements with some of the leading writers in England, on the Continent, and in America, for the production of a Series of ENTIRELY NEW AND ORIGINAL NOVELS.

A special feature of this series is that the works will be published at a UNIFORM PRICE of 7s. 6d. net, extra crown 8vo, bound in cloth, instead of in the usual three-volume novel form.

THE STORY OF FRANCIS CLUDDE.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN,
Author of "The House of the Wolf," &c., &c.

THE FAITH DOCTOR.

By EDWARD EGGLESTON.

* This work was the first Volume registered in America under the new Copyright Act.

DR. DUMANY'S WIFE.

By MAURUS JÓKAI,
Author of "Tinar's Two Worlds."

Translated from the Hungarian by F. STEINITZ.

* Other important Volumes in this Series will be shortly announced.

THE "SHORT STORY" LIBRARY.

The growing desire for Short Stories which is so striking a feature in the public taste of to-day has induced Messrs. Cassell & Company to issue a Series of Original Works by popular English and American Authors. The first books of this Series will be:—

FOURTEEN to ONE, &c. By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. Crown 8vo, 468 pages, 6s.

NOUGHTS and CROSSES. By Q, Author of "Dead Man's Rock," &c. 5s.

A SINGER'S WIFE. By FANNY N. D. MURFREE. Crown 8vo, 5s.

ELEVEN POSSIBLE CASES. A Series of Stories by FRANK R. STOCKTON, Q, and other writers. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

OTTO the KNIGHT, &c. By OCTAVE THANET. Crown 8vo, 325 pages, 5s.

THE POETS' AUDIENCE, and DELLAH. By CLARA SAVILE CLARKE. 5s.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Just ready, Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

THOMSON.—THE SEASONS, and THE CASTLE OF INDOLENCE. Edited, with Biographical Notice, Introductions, Notes, and a Glossary, by J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., Editor of "Selections from Burns."

Just ready, Extra fcap 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

LE MISANTHROPE: A Comedy by Molière. Acted for the first time in Paris, at the Theatre of the Palais Royal, on Friday, the Fourth of June, 1666. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by H. W. GEGG MARKHEIM, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

Just published, Imperial Quarto, price 12s. 6d.

A NEW PART of the CLARENDON PRESS "NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY."

Volume II., Part VI., CLO—CONSIGNER.

Edited by JAMES A. H. MURRAY, LL.D., &c.,
Sometime President of the Philological Society.

With the Assistance of Many Scholars and Men of Science.

Recently published, Imperial Quarto, price 12s. 6d.

Volume III., Part I., E—EVERY.

Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A., President of the Philological Society, with the co-operation of Dr. MURRAY.

Full particulars of this work on application.

Just ready, Extra fcap. 8vo, price 3s.

HOMER.—ODYSSEY. Books VI.—XII. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by W. W. MERRY, D.D., Fellow and Lecturer of Lincoln College, Oxford.

This Edition has been adapted, with very slight alterations, from the widely known edition of Books I.—XII., for the use of students preparing for examinations in which only these books or part of them are required.

ALSO BY THE SAME EDITOR.

Books I.—XII., 5s. Books XIII.—XXIV., 5s. Books I. and II., 1s. 6d. each.

DR. PETERSON'S NEW EDITION of QUINTILLIAN'S "INSTITUTIO ORATORIA."—BOOK X.

8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

M. FABI QUINTILIANI INSTITUTIONIS ORATORIAE. LIBER DECIMUS. A Revised Text, with Introductory Essays, Critical and Explanatory Notes, and a facsimile of the Harleian MS. By W. PETERSON, M.A., LL.D., Principal of University College, Dundee; St. Andrews University.

8vo, cloth, price 8s. 6d.

T. MACCI PLAUTI RUDENS. Edited with Critical and Explanatory Notes, by EDWARD A. SONNENSCHN, M.A., Professor of Greek and Latin in the Mason College, Birmingham.

"In a work so full of matured and carefully digested learning as this edition of the Rudens it is difficult to single out points of excellence. In its illustration of Plautus's language from Plautus himself, it is, so far as I have observed, without a parallel."

ROBINSON ELLIS, M.A., in the Classical Review, May, 1891.

"We have said enough of the first English edition of the Rudens to show that it is one not easily to be superseded, being a solid, and in some respects an extremely interesting, contribution to Plautine scholarship."

Saturday Review, March 14, 1891.

Demy 8vo, half-bound, price 14s.

IL PRINCIPE. By Niccolò Machiavelli. Edited by L. ARTHUR BURD. With an Introduction by LORD ACTON.

"Very scholarly, and well-nigh exhaustive."—Times.

"The best English edition of a great classic."

Manchester Guardian.

A LIMITED EDITION of 200 Numbered Copies, 764 pages, large 4to, strongly bound, to be issued to Subscribers at FIVE GUINEAS per Copy, net, payable in advance.

A COLLOTYPE REPRODUCTION of the ANCIENT MANUSCRIPT of the YASNA. With its Pahlavi Translation, A.D. 1323, generally quoted as [J 2], in the possession of the Bodleian Library.

Subscribers' names must be accompanied with a remittance, and instructions for the despatch of their copies.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues sent free.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1891.

No. 1013, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Scapegoat: a Romance. By Hall Caine. In 2 vols. (Heinemann.)

SOME painters, having stretched their canvas, cover it with a multitude of speaking faces, some gay, some sad, some wondrous beautiful; others devote their attention to landscape, the world in which their figures live; but in either case few of their creations overtop their fellows, or stand out in bold relief. There is yet a third class, which counts among its numbers some of the best Old Masters, whose whole soul goes out in one grand portrait. Whatever beauty there may be round it, whoever may stand beside it, nothing obstructs the view, and all the graces, all the shadows, which may form its background, are so portrayed, so grouped, as to further set off that "it," that self. But even this will be the likeness of no man on earth, for its features may have been gathered from many sources. The artist's individuality alone will have united them, and moulded them in one homogeneous impersonation. As you gaze at those starting lineaments, they grow upon you. Those muscles and those tendons, those swollen, darkened veins, which at the first repelled you, are seen to be but portions of a perfect whole. There may be something which displeases, in attitude, in expression, or in form, but as you learn to know it better you realise its force. Then you take it for what it is—a picture of a man, not an ideal of perfection: however ideal its composition, the picture of a breathing mortal. There may be blemishes of detail, faults of entourage or colour, but these are all lost sight of in the absorbing study of a soul. To this school of painters belongs Mr. Hall Caine, the novelist.

"It recalls the Biblical story of the Scapegoat," was a newspaper verdict on The Deemster, an earlier work from the same easel. Suggested or foretold, we have now before us an acknowledged picture of a human scape-goat. The feverish Manx-man has laid down his brush, for he has concluded the third of a series of the most profoundly conceived characters in modern fiction. In every case the model has been the same. It is impossible to do them justice separately. Daniel Mylrea, Jason the Bondman, and Israel ben Oliel stand together.

Israel, the son of a Tangier Jew and a London Jewess, brought up in England, returns to Morocco to fight life's battle. The world deals very hardly with him, and he pays back with interest. Thus, sympathy is scant between him and his fellows, growing less as years roll on, till Israel, rich and powerful now, lives with his sweet young daughter in solitude. As the right hand man of a brutal governor, he wreaks his vengeance on his foes, a hard, harsh, Shylock with a frozen soul. But that his soul is only frozen the sequel shows; and a lesson is taught as to the little we know of the real characters of those about us, of which but a limited phase comes under our ken. Weak yet powerful, loved though hated, scorned while he is feared, the history of Israel is indeed that of a scapegoat, driven from among his fellows, the bearer of his own sins and those of others.

Naomi, the only child of Israel, was born both deaf and blind, so consequently dumb. By the side of the noble penance of the father's after-life, with all its sufferings, shines out the sunbeam of the daughter's orphaned face, the ray which thawed that soul. The idyl of Naomi is beautiful, and her portrait is hardly second to that of Israel himself. The sorrow of the mother while she lived is truly touching:

"Sometimes she would kneel by its cradle, and gaze into the flower-cup of its eye, and the eye was blue and beautiful, and there was nothing to say that the little cup was broken and the little chamber dark. And sometimes she would look at the pretty shell of its ear, and the ear was round and full as a shell on the shore, and nothing told her that the voice of the sea was not heard in it, and that all within was silence."

So the child grew,

"and truly a flower she was of herself, whereto the wind alone could whisper, and only the sun could speak aloud." "One sound seemed ever to come from her little lips, and it was the sound of laughter." "If her eyes were darkness, there was light within her soul, and if her ears were silence, there was music in her heart."

In this seclusion, her descriptions of darkness as cold, of light as warmth and noise, and of the angels speaking with the wild waves' voice, are naive and full of truth. Then hearing comes, then sight, and at each stage her "soul's awakening" is limned with master touch. At last falls heavy trouble—to Israel the fire of the refiner, by Naomi unrealised. This brings the reader to a tragic end, whereof the present form of the concluding chapter might have been well dispensed with, save on account of the attendant introduction, which contains a fine description of a Moorish pageant. But this gilded frame fails to improve the picture.

"Less novel than romance, and less romance than poem," is the author's own opinion of his latest work, and I endorse it. At the same time, the minutiae which tell of native life—the "local atmosphere"—are astonishingly trustworthy. When Mr. Caine asked me to look through the proofs of The Scapegoat, I expected to find the stereotyped errors with regard to Moorish life and Moorish thought, and the stock misstatements with regard to their country, once more put into circulation; but I was most agreeably surprised. In the course of a few short weeks on the spot, the writer had so deeply drunk of his new surroundings that there was little fault to find. What improbabilities may still exist are perfectly excusable, for it is not Morocco he describes but man. Such, I venture to think, are the account of the joint procession of Jews and Muslims to plead for rain; the position of Katrina at the Basha's side in public; the mingling of the men and women in the Sháwan prison; the education of Ali as an Israelite; his nondescript schoolmaster; and the behaviour of the Sultan at the banquet, or subsequently in the character of a quack. These incidents, though detracting from the value of the book in the eyes of those who know the country, are vital to the dramatic situation, and by no means more improbable than many employed in novels of English scene. Lest they too should be considered features of Morocco life, it may be well to point out also one or two minor matters. Mohammed of Mequinez could not have been a Kádi at the time he appears, though he had held that post before. Europeans are not allowed to visit Sháwan, those few who have done so having ventured in disguise. I never heard of a Moor who disobeyed the Ko'rán by wearing jewelry, nor have I seen the wandering Arab use a tripod. A few equally trifling errors in spelling exist, such as Nsaá for Usáa, the Tetuan merchants' club; Metawar for Metámar, the residential quarter of that town; Nagar and Waghar, names of rivers, instead of Najar and Wargha; the word "crown" on i. 216, should surely be "coin"; there is a trifling variation in the spelling of Khaleefa; and in i. 77 the i in the Kaid's name is the printer's, while over-leaf Hashen should be Hashem and Arly Arby. "Rajbabicoom" is presumably Marhabábikum, the Arab's "Welcome to ye."

As for the English, it has a curious old-time flavour, as though the writer had practised in Bedford Gaol, or the Deanery of St. Patrick's. The frequent use of "that" for "which," "out of" for "from," &c., assists in imparting this. "Intercourse" is rendered "commerce"—quite as good a word—and the players often "chance upon" this thing or that, while as often they smell of their latest occupation. This nature-touch is found in all Mr. Caine's works, through each of which these features run. The convenience of "then a strange thing happened" is fully recognised. There is a certain charm in this unusual style—an earthy freshness, as it were, just dug up. At the same time the graceful rhythm of many passages, especially those describing the blind girl, are sweet indeed.

"I never see'd such a tale as that in a hillerstrated paper afore, sir," quoth a waiter in a West End café, as I sipped my tea, some weeks ago, and studied the London News. I agree with him. Forestier's illustrations in the serial form were so well done, so true to life, that the lack of a reproduction in smaller size is felt even in this "story for grown-ups."

J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.—Education and Heredity. By J. M. Guyau. Translated by W. J. Greenstreet. (Walter Scott.)

ONE may be excused for giving a more than common and cordial welcome to a pedagogic book, and that a translation, and a trans-of late years been written and published only too freely, the subject having been re-discovered as a science and the technologists having, after their kind, fastened on its details to the honest despair of those who think education a matter of common interest and strictly within the scope of every-day endeavour. Here is a book that takes us out of systems and "isms," and may be read with interest and profit by the youngest of educators no less than by the oldest. Considering the circumstances of its origin, its insight and maturity of observation are quite remarkable. The writer died when he was in his thirty-fourth year, and Education and Heredity is the last of a series of valuable treatises, the first of which was begun when he was not yet twenty. That this is the first effort to make him known to English readers may be regarded as sufficient reason for noticing at length his notable contribution to practical, strictly practical, pedagogics.

It is not at first sight quite easy to agree with Mr. Stout that the choice of title is altogether satisfactory, seeing that it by no means indicates the breadth of the view taken by the author, and might indeed be supposed to invite attention to another strictly technological contribution to the literature of education. The burden of much of what the author says is the preponderating influence of heredity on the development of the race, and as a consequence the necessary importance of education as commonly understood. But, in effect, it is the education of men as social creatures with which Guyau is concerned; for the purpose of his practical maxims, education is heredity. But reflection on possible alternatives of title leads to the perhaps natural conclusion that after all the author knew his business and mind better than his critics. He resolutely declines to look at the subject from the individualist point of view, as he finds that the main movements of society, forward or backward, depend exclusively on the operation of forces brought to bear on aggregates of units through hereditary channels, but on those units from within. He would therefore educate chiefly in the hope of fruition in the (may be) distant hereafter. It is not, however, to be supposed that he is without expectation of something by way of result immediately. Indeed, he is justified in the larger hope which makes his horizon so wide by individual cases of experience and experiment.

As for experiment, this is perhaps the right place for a word of warning, though not of dispraise. Every fourth form boy remembers the dolorous end of Mr. Nicholas Easy, father of the late Captain J. Easy, R.N. It should follow then (the London School Board rate being a shilling, and promising a rise), that every boy in the fourth standard will suspect in modern theories of the efficacy of hypnotic suggestion something of the too sanguine confidence in practical applications of physio-psychology that was the death of Mr. Easy. It is true that Guyau does not in fact propound more than an analogical connexion between the ditary instincts, but the practical effect of the first fifty pages of this book might conceivably be the premature manipulation of forces of unknown intensity to unknown and dangerous ends. To be sure it is analogy only.

"If this introduction of new sentiments is possible by entirely physiological means, it should be equally possibly by moral and psychological means."

But in the first place all analogical arguments are open to like objections; secondly, it is not easy to identify the psychological result as a "sentiment" in both cases; and thirdly, the physiological action of hypnotic suggestion is still matter of guess-work. Indeed, some people may think that hypnotic experiment is hardly more defensible than Bergmann's experiments in corpore vili with cancerous tissue.

This, however, by the way; the digression does not materially detract from the general value of the book, though it might have been omitted without great loss. The general significance of Guyau's work for the practical teacher—not for the official, not the member of parliament, not the "educationalist"—lies in its very plain demonstration that most of us of the rank and file, for all the practical permanent good we do in business hours, might just as profitably live and labour in Laputa. We are, no doubt, paid well enough—less than our deserts, of course, though well enough according to the thumb-measurement of such results as we are expected to show; but what is really our main business is supposed to be quite by the way; we are not paid for it, the demand for it is actually diminishing, and we may easily evade it. It is not religious nor even "moral" teaching, technically so-called; it is harmonious and rational education, something which includes, but is not, essentially, teaching; which implies, but is not comprised in, subjects and syllabuses, consisting rather in the training, capacity, and legal obligation to choose and vary the tools of pedagogy, and to cultivate children rather than teach "subjects." It is very true that most teachers can, and very many without doubt do, educate even under the wrong-headed conditions that are imposed on them; but the mature and general wisdom of rulers and "...ists" seems more and more inclined to reject the real lessons of experience in favour of new-fangled devices for teaching—"subjects" and "sciences." Our author justly lays it down that though the educator may and should be well aware that, if it were possible to know all things, it would be well to know them, yet unassimilated knowledge is simply useless lumber, and worse than useless; and that in determining the number of "subjects" of instruction, "we must consider not merely their nature, but the relation existing between them, and the capacity of the mind into which we wish to introduce them." Children (and others) will have fine times when it is properly understood that the facts which they find it most difficult to commit to memory are just those of least importance—dates, geographical names, historical details, and all.

it is acquired, and instead of forming it by the introduction of habits of reasoning, tends rather to deform it." Changing what ought to be changed, Guyau's strictures on the primary instruction given in French schools will apply to us.

"The literary, grammatical, and historical part of this syllabus exposes us to the danger of what the English call cramming. Has much been done when we have succeeded in filling their heads with facts, dates, words, and formulas? Children do not feel the want of words; it is ideas that are required; and it is ideas we must give them. Unfortunately erudition invades everything—even grammar—in the schools."

Those who have the best means of measuring the value of Guyau's observations by close and daily contact with the choicest products of the public elementary schools of this country will aver that vast and expensive departments of government are maintained, and a large army of hard-working teachers employed, to fill the heads of our children with "facts, dates, words, and formulas"—a futile and monstrous dissipation of energy. The remedy is not the teaching of "sciences"; here, again, we are in the region of facts and formulas; indeed, in a drier and dustier climate than ever.

Till these highly enlightened latter days the evil was the less, because there were fewer ascertained and tabulated facts to know, and because such as were known were not yet all ticketed and systematised. Such facts as people set most store by were what most concerned them as thinking, reasoning, judging, acting members of the community; they were ethics, logic, rhetoric, and so on; truly educative, permeated with opinion and individuality; not strata of details about objective nature. These details are to most people, including you and me, not more useful than the cabinets full of memoranda which an ingenious memory—doctor once offered, and may still be offering, as great discoveries to the learned world that mistrusted its memory and yearned for encyclopaedic erudition. Yet it is hard to make folk agree that a study is valuable in educating, at any rate the young, exactly in so far as it is not in that arid region of dry light so dear to Heraclitus, Lord Chancellor Bacon, and the dry-nurses of science studies in the university of — Laputa. To this end the austere contemplation of αὐτὸ ἀγαθὸν or of the mysterious principles and combinations of whist are as useful as the study of (say) physics, at all events as she is usually taught to the lay person; whist, indeed, is said to be a better preparation for old age than either the one or the other. If so many strata of facts must needs be laid up in the lay person's cabinet, then of all the so many sciences inserted in his system he can never know enough to make practical "use" of any. Surely, with all things alike, the right plan is to give every one a grounding in simple knowledge of main facts that are easily and readily applicable to daily life, and can form the basis of specialised endeavour, if need be, as Mr. T. Twining has been long and earnestly urging. But most of our reformers, law-makers, and ". . . ists" of every degree, forget that the final cause of education is not that we should all know everthing; they deal with us as if our world were not for most of us in great part ready made; as if it were not enough that the breed of specialists should be just maintained in order to build bridges, to photograph and poison microbes, to make our clothes and light our houses, and the like. The first child that was born found to his hands at all events (as Mr. Stevenson would say) his fingers ready made; why should we pretend not to see that for us of the common sort the world is mostly ready made? It is the specialist's main business, particularly in the physical sciences, to risk his own harmonious development for the likes of us. All the sciences are useful, beyond measure useful to mankind; but we bear ourselves as if we were each to start over again as that unhappy creature Primitive Man, who was his own lawyer, doctor, butcher, baker, candlestickmaker, and other things unmentionable. Every specialist, if he is really a specialist, is an abnormally and therefore improperly developed human being, as much a monstrosity as Sandow or Samson or Jaques or other professional Strong Men and Fasters. There is no reason, surely, why we should all be inoculated with the attenuated virus of specialism; specialism is hardly yet the mark of the Ordinary Person and his title to respect and respectability. As to this, consult Guyau:

"All precocious specialisation is dangerous . . . The only object of technical instruction, for instance, should be to awaken aptitudes, and never to respond to aptitudes supposed to exist."

From this it should follow that all special and technical training in early youth, beyond the merest suggestion, is futile and worse.

"To make a soldier, an engineer, or a musician, is not necessarily to turn out a man in the full possession of all his faculties. Moreover, we must take into account the failures, the rejections of candidates at entrance examinations, &c. Out of the thousands of candidates for the Ecole Polytechnique, for instance, only 300 are admitted; now if a good polytechnician is not necessarily an accomplished man, what will a polytechnician who has failed be?"

To quote the unanswerable Bunsby, the moral of this lies in its application.

Most people will agree that the healthy child is naturally inclined to activity for its own sake; Mr. Stout's hesitation seems needless. It is our duty, then, according to Guyau, to direct this activity to those ends which are most widely and intensely human, or, rather, social. This seems simple enough; and yet we shall all go away tomorrow and lay ourselves at the feet of the Science and Art Departments of South Kensington and Laputa, and you shall have little Harry Sandford and little Tommy Merton taught physiography, or physiology, or mechanics, or botany, or agriculture, or what not.

πολλῶν ἀνομάτων μορφή μία.

Now pedagogy may be defined, according to our author, as "the art of adapting new generations to those conditions of life which are the most intensive and fruitful for the individual and the species"; but where the intensity and fruit are manifest here it would be hard to say. Things being as they are, Guyau lays down three necessary ends which education should have in view. It must first develop harmoniously in the individual, and in proportion relatively to importance, the capacities proper to the human race; next develop those capacities which seem peculiar, but only so far as not to disturb the equilibrium of the organism; finally, to arrest and check disturbing tendencies and instincts; that is, "to aid heredity in proportion as it tends to create permanent superiority within the race, and to resist its influence when it tends to accumulate causes pernicious to the race itself."

Capacity thus imposes on us the necessity to be active for action's sake; therefore, as Guyau lays it down, duty is begotten by power.

"From this new point of view, moral obligation appears to be direct interaction, conscious or unconscious, of nervous systems on each other, and in general of life on life; it is reducible to a deep sense of solidarity. To feel ourselves morally obliged is, in fact, to feel ourselves obliged to others, bound to others, having solidarity with others."

And again,

"... to be moral is, in the first place, to feel the force of our will, and the multiplicity of the powers inherent in our being; in the second place, to realise the superiority of those possibilities having for their object what is universal over those with merely private objects."

Naturally enough, physical education is as important in our author's view as any other part; or rather, education implies physical development. So Mr. Leslie Stephen would have us all "eupeptic." And sure enough, though Mr. Lytton may doubt the virtuousness of the "mere" athlete as against the "mere" student, the race is certainly the better for the first and only doubtfully for the other. Most of us have heard of the good clergyman who was thankfully comforted by hearing the ship's crew swearing cheerfully during severe weather. So Guyau "... it is very fortunate that there are idle people; they save the race from too rapid degeneration." As for the German plan of scientific gymnastics, he repeats Mr. Spencer's condemnation of "factitious exercise."

The translator has in many places appended very valuable notes, modifying, illustrating, and explaining his author; but, at this point, he seems to have missed a good chance. Mr. Wilkie Collins is quoted in denunciation of games of strength. He sees (in Man and Wife) a connexion "between the recent unbridled development of physical cultivation in England and the recent spread of grossness and brutality among certain classes of the English population." This simply assumes (1) that there has been this development, and (2) that grossness and brutality are at least rare elsewhere among less athletic peoples. Quod erat demonstrandum.

It is worth while to note that Guyau favoured the day-school system, and it is a thing to remark how the great day schools have flourished and grown in England during the last twenty years.

The book is so good and comes with such singular opportuneness for the problems that concern us, whether we are teachers or not, that it should be certain of a hearty welcome. This notice has endeavoured to emphasise what seem to be the points which the author himself would have regarded as most urgent, though it is an unsatisfactory way of dealing with a book abounding in interest and wisdom.

As a statement of the case for scientific humanism, welcoming new subjects of study to their right places, it is invaluable; it is, indeed, probably the best statement yet made, though that was by no means the object in the mind of the writer. His obiter dicta are always notable, and the translator has done his work faithfully and gracefully.

P. A. BARNETT.

Words of a Believer and The Past and Future of the People. By F. Lamennais. Translated from the French by L. E. Martineau. With a Memoir of Lamennais. (Chapman & Hall.)

WRITING more than thirty years ago, not long after Lamennais' death, M. Renan declared: "Lamennais' works can no longer teach us anything. No one is now tempted to go to them for lessons in history, philosophy, or politics." Sainte-Beuve, on the other hand, writing at about the same time, said of him: "He is the soldier of the future, the fervent faithful soldier of democracy, recognising neither truce nor peace, having on his lips but the one cry of forward," and "the future will not deny him." Are we to take it as a sign of Sainte-Beuve's prophetic gift that Mr. Martineau, in this present year of grace, is emphasising Mazzini's statement that the Words of a Believer is calculated to bring "consolation and promise to many a sad and oppressed soul," and assuring us that The Past and Future of the People, "although written fifty years ago for French working men, is scarcely less appropriate, and no less worth the study of English working men to-day?"

But first a word as to Lamennais himself. The man was assuredly a great man, great in influence, great in single-mindedness and honesty of purpose, great in his literary gift. To him, more perhaps than to any other individual, is due the downfall of Gallicism and the triumph of Ultramontanism among the French clergy. He it was who first tried to teach the Roman Church the lesson which she has been so slow to learn, but which she will ultimately have to take to heart—the lesson, namely, that the game of absolutism is played out, and that, on pain of losing all her power, she must seek for alliances, in the future, with democracy. Among those who came within the sphere of his influence were such writers as Victor Hugo, Sainte-Beuve, and George Sand. Lacordaire and Montalembert were, at one stage, his immediate disciples. Maurice de Guérin was one of those who gathered round him at his Breton home of La Chenaie. This is no mean intellectual record; and the history of his opinions is of high interest. First an absolutist and Ultramontane, then a democrat and Ultramontane, then—under stress of Papal condemnation—a democrat pure and simple, a priest who had entirely renounced allegiance to his Church, and, to the very last, rejected her authority and ministrations—he stands forth among his contemporaries a striking figure. It is easy to talk, as the Roman Catholic apologists do, of spiritual pride as the ruling motive in his career. The successive changes in his opinions were honest, fearless, logical. They were at least not the outcome of any vulgar ambition. The priest had certainly nothing to gain who threw in his lot with the Republican party in the days of Louis Philippe. Even when that party triumphed, in 1848, and Lamennais found a place in the assembly of all the eccentricities that was to frame a constitution for France, he exercised no real influence. His day, for the time at least, had gone by.

The Paroles d'un Croyant here translated, and very adequately translated, was the outcome of Lamennais' first struggle with the Court of Rome. His paper, L'Avenir, had greatly fluttered the French clergy from the autumn of 1830 to the autumn of 1831. In consequence of their attacks he determined to suspend the publication, and to appeal in person to the Pope. Rome, as was but natural, temporised; and to Lamennais, with his keen, narrow intellect, his intense earnestness of purpose, his absolute incapacity to understand that there could be two sides to a question, Rome's caution seemed abominable. He practically forced the Pope's hand; and the result was the condemnatory Encyclical letter of the 15th August 1832. At first Lamennais submitted; but his heart was hot within him, and it was while nursing his wrongs—which he held to be those of the Church and of the world—that he wrote the Paroles d'un Croyant.

Sainte-Beuve, who in the spring of 1834 found a publisher for the book, and saw it through the press, confesses that his critical acumen played him false with regard to it, and that he did not at first realise what a powerful book it was. The printer, a M. Plassin, set him right, saying that the very compositors were in a state of ferment over the setting up, and the whole office in an uproar. Nor reading the book now, nearly sixty years afterwards, is this difficult to understand. No doubt the Paroles d'un Croyant is what the French call a pastiche, a work produced in direct imitation of earlier work. But it is a pastiche of genius. The same fire that burned in the Hebrew prophets as they denounced the Lord's enemies, burned also in Lamennais. In his ears too the cry of the down-trodden and oppressed rang with a terrible distinctness. If he imitated Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, falling naturally into Biblical language, it was because their spirit was upon him. That his sublime does not occasionally topple over into the ridiculous, I am far from affirming. No! kings do not "sit in a hall hung with black," and contemplate a "throne made of bones," and drink blood, and solemnly curse Jesus Christ. It is safe to affirm that they spend their time quite otherwise. But prophets are not bound to possess a keen sense of humour.

As to The Past and Future of the People, I am afraid that M. Renan would greet much of its erudition with a tolerant and superior smile; and the half century that has elapsed since Lamennais wrote it in the prison of Sainte-Pélagie has scarcely confirmed its prophecies. But it would be most unjust not to acknowledge the honesty of the book. Democrat as he is, the ex-priest never stoops to flatter the democracy, nor does he promise the good things to come save as the fruit of patient effort and self-denial.

"It is necessary for you to understand," he tells the "proletarians," "that the better condition to which you aspire, and to which God Himself commands you to aspire, will never be brought about by a sudden change, but, like everything in the universe, by a continuous development, by constant labour, by daily labour. . . . Be not weary, be not discouraged through too much impatience: nothing is done without the aid of time. And know, moreover, and never forget, that in this life of ours there is always something to contend with and to suffer, because the goal of our infinite desires is not here, because we have to fulfil here a great but toilsome function, and that we live not merely in order to live, but to accomplish a holy task."

Narrow, incomplete, violent, pernicious in its immediate results as much of Lamennais' teaching may have been, yet there is in such passages as this a ring of manliness and sound sense. Here he justifies Sainte-Beuve's prophecies.

The quality of the translation in this volume is distinctly above the average. But it was a pity to use as introduction a paper of Mazzini published in 1839. For, firstly, in 1839, Lamennais had by no means fulfilled his career, or reached the term of his mental development; and, secondly, apart from its incompleteness, the essay is quite uncritical. Something more than vague rhetoric is wanted to make the reader of to-day understand Lamennais and his position.

FRANK T. MARZIALS.

The Child and his Book: Some Account of the History and Progress of Children's Literature in England. By Mrs. E. M. Field. (Wells Gardner.)

THERE is no class of publications to which the term "fugitive literature" can be more fitly applied than to children's books. They mostly perish with the generation for which they were brought into being; and even the Hornbook—

"'Tis called a book, though but a single page"— though constructed out of materials which should defy destruction, has but just survived as an educational curiosity. Mrs. Field, however, is very far from being content to take the Hornbook as the starting-point for her treatise on children's literature. Going back to pre-Norman times, she reviews the services rendered to education by Aldhelm and Alfred, Bede and Alcuin, and devotes a long chapter to the books which were current in English schools before Caxton's printing-press was set up. The scope of her work is wide, and she has spared no pains in accumulating stores of information more or less pertinent to her subject.

But, while she goes back to the far past for her beginning, she draws the line in the other direction at the year 1826. This, she says, is not an entirely arbitrary limit, but marks the period when a new departure was taken and a genuine attempt made to satisfy the real wants of childish minds. Up to that time the imagination had been neglected. Painful instruction in the rudiments of language was all that at first could be attempted; and, later on, juvenile literature was chiefly supplied by religious or moral teachers who looked with horror or contempt upon the play of fancy and humour, and chiefly desired to inculcate their own doctrines or theories.

It is impossible to conceive what fate would have overtaken the author of Alice in Wonderland had he lived in Puritan times, and we doubt whether Mr. Anstey would have been wholly intelligible even to our grandfathers in their teens. What we mean by children's books—that is to say, books written, with not too obtrusive morals, to delight and stimulate the imaginative faculty of the young—belong especially to the age in which we live. Their immediate precursors were the little books—now eagerly sought by the collector of rarities—which Newbery of London and Saint of Newcastle published. In them we do find something to amuse as well as to edify, and their authors were not afraid or ashamed to be occasionally funny. Goody Two Shoes, whether written by Goldsmith or not, showed by the success which it achieved that it was the sort of book children wanted. And so it was quickly followed by others of similar character; for Newbery, their publisher, was fully alive to his own interests—indeed, the manner in which he advertises Dr. James's Fever Powder (of which he was the vendor) through the fate of Goody's father is worthy of Barnum himself.

All that Mrs. Field has to tell us about the children's literature of the third and fourth Georges—and she does not stint her matter—is extremely interesting, and her estimate of the various writers seems to us to be thoroughly fair. She does justice even to the exasperating priggishness of Sandford and Merton. Nor does she omit to notice the books which have found large favour with children, although they were not written expressly for them. Among these she rightly places Pilgrim's Progress (now almost gone out of fashion), Gulliver's Travels, Arabian Nights, and—facile princeps—Robinson Crusoe. We should add to them Don Quixote and perhaps Gil Blas; for in our younger days these were to be found in most boys' book-shelves. Few, indeed, cared for the religious teaching of Bunyan, and no one understood Swift's political satire or Defoe's design. It was enough that these books ministered to a youthful craving in an age when light reading was regarded by many parents as little less than a sin. Now a reaction has taken place which is not without danger. The dose of knowledge used to be swallowed for the sake of the sweet morsel of story mingled with it; the child of to-day rejects the mixture and clamours for a diet of stories only. But, as Mrs. Field says, the liberal provision that has been made for the pleasant development of young minds is still restricted. Those who can afford to spend money, can get the most charming examples of children's literature that have ever been published. The editor's table—especially at Christmas—groans beneath their weight. But writers and publishers take little account of the poor.

"We have taught them to read; but so long as their literature is the garbage of police reports and the lowest possible fiction, would it not be better that the poor should not know what Thomas Day called the 'mischievous combinations' of the alphabet? Looking back at the past and looking forward to the future, we cannot but feel that no light responsibility rests upon those whose work it is to feed the minds of children and the uneducated."

We are not inclined to enter upon a discussion of that question. It is an easier matter to say that Mrs. Field has had a most interesting subject to deal with, and has dealt with it in an admirable way. She has a light hand, but yet has not used it merely to skim the surface; she has gathered her facts from every quarter, but does not pretend to have exhausted them. Some few inaccuracies will be noticed by most readers, and Mrs. Field's arrangement of her matter is not faultless; but her book is a genuine contribution to knowledge, and deserves to meet with a favourable reception.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

A MONOGRAPH ON CORSICA.

Une Excursion en Corse. Par Prince Roland Bonaparte. (Paris: Imprimé pour l'Auteur.)

THE republic of letters must be ever grateful to him who, placed beyond the necessity of seeking remuneration for his labours, produces a work of utility or entertainment, "got up" in a style which would preclude the probability of its success as a commercial enterprise. Such a work is, as it were, a free gift to the literary world: such a work is now before me.

The tone of Prince Roland Bonaparte's book is as modest as its title, which by no means conveys the valuable and solid contents of the volume. The interesting narrative of his excursion to Ajaccio, La Force, Vivario, Bastia, Calvi, Sartène, Bonifacio, Porto-Vecchio, and other noteworthy points, is interspersed with historical, topographical, and statistical information which greatly adds to the value of his recital. Nor is this all. In the form of an appendix he gives us (1) an "Itinéraire et Horaire," in which the distances and hours of arrival and departure are marked and tabulated with an exactitude worthy of Murray or Baedeker; (2) a list of photographs, 221 in number, made in Corsica; (3) last, but not least, a list of books and maps of and relating to the island, extending over 133 pages—in fact, a most useful bibliography of Corsica. The volume contains, moreover, facsimiles of the baptismal registries of Lucien and Napoléon Bonaparte, and is embellished with five photo-engravings, exceptionally artistic in feeling and execution.

The Excursion of Prince Roland Bonaparte will in future be a necessary volume for visitors to Corsica; and the hope may be at once expressed that he will be induced to place his so far privately-printed book in the hands of the general public and add to it a map, now wanting, of the island, with the routes he so ably describes clearly indicated.

H. S. ASHBEE.

NEW NOVELS.

Beacon-Fires. By E. Werner. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Evelyn's Career. By the Author of "Dr. Edith Romney." In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Freeland: a Social Anticipation. By Dr. Theodor Hertzka. Translated by Arthur Ransom. (Chatto & Windus.)

Hambura. By H. S. Lockhart-Ross. (Digby & Long.)

The Milners. (Chapman & Hall.)

Raffians Folk. By Mary E. Gellie. (Innes.)

Well Won. By Mrs. Alexander. (White.)

THE reader who does not grow enthusiastic over Beacon-Fires must be very hard to please. The present writer has tried to read the book with all the judicial soberness of a critic; but he confesses that its absorbing interest took his critical sense captive at an early stage of the story, and did not relax its hold till the end. He would not have it supposed, however, that his judgment was overborne by the pleasure with which he followed the developments of incident and character. A critic, after all, is not bound to treat a book or an author as a policeman treats a "suspect." He must have his eyes open, no doubt, and if he finds his poet or novelist tripping in one place he may expect to see him go wrong in another; but it should not take him long to discover what the chances are in this respect. A few chapters will show him whether he may trust his man or must needs go on watching him. The instances in which this last duty is wholly unnecessary are so few that when they occur they are to be prized, and that is the secret of the present critic's enjoyment of Beacon-Fires. It is a book of exceptional power, and its interest lies as much in the characters as in the plot. Like other works of the same able writer, it is a story of German life, and to a large extent of military and diplomatic life. The central character is the discarded son of an officer of high rank, whose code of honour and conception of duty are severely exacting. The boy is persuaded by his divorced mother to break faith with his father, who thereupon renounces him. Some years elapse, during which Hartmut, who takes his mother's name, achieves fame as a poet, and has, or might have, half the world at his feet; but when he seeks to be reconciled to his father he is again thrust forth, and this time because he is believed to have been guilty of an odious offence against his country, of which he was innocent. The bitterness of this repulse is aggravated by the denial to him of all means of redemption. The war with France breaks out, but the successful poet and discarded son is not allowed to join the colours. There seems nothing for him but to take with his own hand the life he would fain have given in self-vindication on the battle-field; but at this critical point a course is opened for him by his good angel, and everything ends well. Hartmut is very powerfully drawn. Though in most of his qualities he is the true son of his mother—brilliant, passionate, impatient of restraint—he has latent in him much of his father's nobleness; and both sides of his character come out vividly in the last chapters. His "ride for life or death" is the crowning exhibition of both. This incident and a few others in the story recall (by no resemblance of fact, but by the same rapid, picturesque, and passionate movement) some of the more thrilling passages in Scott—such as everyone will remember in The Talisman and Ivanhoe. But while Hartmut is the central and chief character, there are several others as ably drawn; and one or two of them furnish an element of humour which makes the story artistically complete.

Very different from the stirring romance just noticed is Evelyn's Career, though this again is a book of which it is possible to speak with almost unqualified admiration. It is a novel with a purpose—and one is bound to admit that such novels are often things to be avoided—but its aim is sufficiently general, while it appeals to the reader's common sense rather than to his prejudices. Evelyn unites with great beauty of person and disposition (qualities essential to any successful heroine of romance) some charming eccentricities. She is an Agnostic as touching religious beliefs; but she has a profound faith in humanity, and a not too common sense of the duties incident to wealth. A large fortune, to which she succeeds unexpectedly, gives her an opportunity to put in practice the very beautiful theories she has formed. "Society" smiles upon her plans because they are novel, but chiefly perhaps because they are thrown into interesting relief by her rank and herself. Evelyn, however, is in earnest, and "Society" is not. She fails to realise her ideal; but the causes of failure are not in the ideal, but in the obtuse anti-pathetic real conditions to which she tries to adapt it. In the pursuit of her beautiful dream she makes the acquaintance of some curious people, and among them of a Radical cobbler, a type—sufficiently exaggerated to make the portrait effective—of social reformer who hates everybody above him, and conceives himself superior to everybody below him. But Radley turns out to be a fine fellow at heart. There are many other types in the book—high and low, ordinary and the reverse. The glimpses into the world of fashion are satirically true; those into the world of poverty and wretchedness are painfully so—and in contrast with both these worlds are the sweet perfections of Evelyn herself. She has her reward. The sequel to failure outside oneself is often a larger satisfaction within oneself, and that is Evelyn's experience. A love-story runs on beside the other story, and both eventually merge in one when the nearly fruitless labours are over. The book is delightfully written, with a grace and restraint of style that are as welcome as they are rare.

Some apology is perhaps due to the erudite author of Freeland for treating his book as a novel. He himself, however, in his learned introduction to it, describes the work as a political romance, and such it is. But the ordinary novel-reader may be warned that it is not the sort of romance for him. Nor is it of the kind of fiction that Mr. Edward Bellamy, and other projectors of a utopian future, are wont to produce. The new forms of things which they describe are purely arbitrary; whereas Dr. Hertzka's conception of a Freeland rests upon "the fundamental truths" that "capitalism stops the growth of wealth . . . and that interest, though not unjust, will nevertheless, in a condition of economic justice, become superfluous." To the ordinary mind these so-called fundamental truths will scarcely suggest any romantic developments; but Dr. Hertzka evolves from them an interesting colony of enthusiasts, whom he places in Central Africa, where they carry out a "work of social emancipation" on the lines of his book. One cannot help being a little incredulous about such fantastic schemes. Recollections of the Pantisocracy that was to have been reared—but which never came to anything—on the banks of the Susquehanna point the moral of their utter unreality. But Dr. Hertzka's book has at least one merit: its descriptions of Central Africa, and of the way to it, and the perils and pleasures of the way, combine all the charms of accurate narrative and graphic fiction.

The stock properties of fiction include so many "treasure islands" that another addition to the number seems at first sight superfluous. But the originality and freshness of Hamtura conciliate one towards this latest story of recovered treasure. Mr. Lockhart-Ross does not follow the lines of Mr. Stevenson. His island is no mere cluster of pirates' caves, but a dubious land in the Pacific, where a picturesque people still worship the sun. The machinery of the story is largely supernatural. An Englishman is wrecked on these strange Pacific shores, and the white-robed natives mistake him for a brother of the sun, and worship him accordingly. In their Temple of the Sun he accumulates a vast treasure of precious stones, in which the island was rich, besides a large amount of Spanish gold. One day he disappears, telling the islanders that he shall shortly return; but he is presumably lost at sea, for he neither goes back nor comes to England, though the story of his marvellous adventures reaches his family, with whom it becomes a tradition. Two generations afterwards a kinsman who resembles the lost brother of the sun sails out for the fair island in the Pacific, which he is so fortunate as to find. The natives believe him to be their old deity returned, and they look on with adoration while he removes the bullion and precious stones to his ship. The reader's credulity is a little taxed, but the story is so brightly written that its very impossibility becomes fascinating.

The Milners is a long story—a needlessly long one—of the adventures of an English family in South Africa. They set out for the Cape, and afterwards for the diggings, in the hope of finding diamonds, but with the still stronger hope of recovering a lost son who had disappeared under a false accusation of crime. The descriptions of life at the diggings are forcible from their evident truth. There is not the wild excitement that one often hears of as belonging to such a life, but there is instead the daily plodding at a weary task, with the hopes, failures, gains, and disappointments of it; and one sees the effect on the different members of the family of these various experiences. They learn some excellent practical lessons, which the author inculcates rather happily. Too much space is given to trivial things, but the story was worth telling, and is well told. One may doubt, however, whether a bright, high-spirited young man could annihilate himself for five years, and let his family bear the shame of a crime of which he was innocent.

Though there is nothing very striking in Raffans Folk, it may be read with pleasure. It is just a simple story of crofter life in the Highlands, where human nature expands or contracts in pastoral surroundings, and one lad takes to the farm, and another to the ministry, and the crofter's son makes up to the farmer's daughter. Mrs. Fraser is well worth knowing. So, too, is Elsie Ogilvie, whose confidential relations with her mother are pleasant to hear of in days when such things are too rare. Colin Fraser deserved all the good that came to him; but one is irritated at his giving up his suit after one rebuff. He showed better stuff in facing other difficulties.

Pathos and humour combine in Well Won to make the story very readable. Mrs. Alexander's women-characters are her best. She knows her own sex well; but the skill with which she makes one of her women bring her lord and master to reason shows that she knows also how the other sex should occasionally be treated.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

SOME BOOKS ON FOLK-LORE.

WHEN Miss Garnett published last year the first volume of her work on The Women of Turkey (David Nutt), which described the life and folk-lore of the Christian women of that country, she promised a corresponding volume on the Jewish and Moslem women. This promise has now been fulfilled, and the second part is in no respect inferior to the former. The author has spared no pains in bringing together, both from personal observation and from books which embody the special studies of others, notices of the curious medley of nationalities which is to be found in the Turkish Empire. The Jews in Turkey are composed of two elements—the older settlers of that race, and those who emigrated thither on the occasion of their expulsion from Spain in 1493. The latter settled mainly in Salonica, where they now form the majority of the population. Of both these classes Miss Garnett tells us that they are the most bigoted adherents of the Talmud to be found anywhere, and also that they observe many rites and usages peculiar to themselves. Such is the "search for leaven" before the commencement of the Feast of Unleavened Bread. Then the head of the family, taking in his hand a lamp, spoon, and goosequill,

"in dead silence visits every room in the house, gathering up as he goes the pieces which have been purposely placed in his way on tables, sideboards, window-ledges, &c.; then proceeding to the place where the leaven, which is a portion of the dough from the last baking, is usually kept, places it, together with the pieces of bread he has collected, and the lamp and spoon, in a linen cloth."

Again, on the first day of the Passover, it is incumbent on the first-born son of every family to fast, in commemoration of the deliverance of the first-born of the Israelites from the last of the plagues of Egypt. This duty is performed by proxy in the person of the father until his son has attained the age of eleven; and if the father be dead, it devolves upon the mother. Remarkable also is the "ceremony of atonement," which is observed on the Day of Atonement, when a cock is provided for each man or boy, and a hen for each woman or girl; and the head of the house, first for himself, and afterwards for each member of the family, swings the bird, which he holds by the legs, round over his head, saying, "This is my substitute; this is my commutation; this cock goeth to the death in order that I may be gathered, and enter into a long and happy life and into peace." At Salonica, instead of this practice, the ceremony is performed by the Jews of casting their sins into the sea. In connexion with this, we may notice the curious form of confession and penance which exists among the Yezidis or fire-worshipping Kurds:

"Ten men form themselves into a kind of brotherhood, and select one of their number by lot as a scapegoat. If any one of the number is guilty of a grave sin, he confesses it to his substitute, who must vicariously expiate it by prayer, fasting, and mortification. In return for this service he is supported by the rest, who perform for him all his worldly duties, pasture his sheep, and maintain his family."

The Moslem inhabitants of Turkey form a motley group of Kurds, Circassians, Albanians, Tatars, Gipsies, as well as Osmanlis. It will readily be believed that many curious customs are retained among them, especially those relating to birth, marriage, and death. In the Miridite tribe of Albanians we find the custom of exogamy, or taking wives from outside the tribe, still existing, and in the case of the chieftains this takes place by capture. A remnant of the system of capture survives among the Circassians, where the wife is purchased, but before the wedding the wooer must find an opportunity of running away with his bride, this being considered the only respectable method of obtaining possession of his purchase. Tatars, on the other hand, seem to make the bridegroom the subject of capture.

"The bridegroom mounts his horse, and, attended by his friends, sets out to meet the cavalcade. In his hand he holds an apple or orange, and, as soon as he has approached sufficiently near, he throws it at the bride with considerable force. Much importance appears to be attached to this act, silence being observed by all the company from the time the two parties come in sight of each other until the apple has been thrown, when all again becomes uproar and confusion. Immediately upon discharging the missile, the bridegroom wheels his horse round with astonishing rapidity, and rides off at full speed to his own tent, pursued with great ardour by all the horsemen of the bride's party, emulous to overtake him before he attains his goal, the winner being entitled to his horse, saddle, and clothes."

In the latter part of the volume the life of the Osmanli women is depicted in considerable detail, and both this and the other sections are illustrated by well selected popular tales. Mr. Stuart-Glennie, who has edited the work, adds some chapters of his own on "The Origins of Matriarchy."

Stories of Old New Spain. By Thomas A. Janvier. (Osgood.) This book has one fault—the monotone of sadness that creates too great a similarity in almost all its tales. Yet, perhaps, it could hardly be otherwise, for their theme is either of the declining years of the Spanish dominion in Mexico, or else of that sadder period—the nameless tragedies which result everywhere when a higher and harder civilisation is ruthlessly forced into contact with an older and a weaker one. The greater part of these stories are connected with the building of the railway from Texas to Mexico. They depict for us the speculating seoundrels, and the bolder ruffians, who ever move forward, like scum, on the advancing tide of civilisation; who then play havoc with the lives and property of the men, and work still heavier woe in the hearts of the women who are simple enough to trust them. The author does full justice to the energy and strength of character of his countrymen; but this does not make him blind to the merits, and to the more amiable and more gentlemanly qualities, of the native Mexicans. He seems especially to understand Mexican women, whether of purer Spanish or of mixed Spanish and Indian blood. All through Spanish America they are the same; there is a little more vivacity, a little more piquancy, a greater tinge of civilisation in the extreme South—but there is still the like kindly tact and simple trustfulness and gentleness of manner everywhere. It seems hard to believe that these soft creatures can do the things that are told of them; but our author knows that, whether in Mexico or in Montevideo, "the charm of this easy-going, languorous life has underlying it lava seas of passionate energy, whence at any moment may break forth storms of raging hatred, or the not less raging storms of love." It is of these storms, and of the misery caused by them, that the tales of this volume are chiefly composed. Of the legends of the older time, of which a few are here given, it is said, as we have found equally true in other lands:

"You will seek in vain for them among the gentle-folks; you must seek them among the humble dwellers, the cargadores, porters, the serenos, watchmen, the leñadores, wood-carriers; it is among these lowly folk that you hear the stories of old time," all memory of which has been lost among the upper classes. But it is not given to everyone to re-tell them in graceful literary style, and to move the reader with real sympathy, as is done in this volume.

"LEHRBÜCHER DER GERMANISCHEN PHILOLOGIE.—Vol. I., Germanische Mythologie, von Elard Hugo Meyer. (Berlin: Mayer & Müller.) This is the first volume of what promises to be an extremely useful series of cheap handbooks, which will form, when complete, a convenient encyclopaedia of studies connected with Teutonic philology. Future volumes will deal with the political, social, and linguistic development of the Teutonic races, and will comprise treatises on rhythms, folklore, constitutional history, grammar, social science, and the history of German linguistics. The present volume augurs well for those which are to succeed it. In 350 closely packed pages, sold for 5s., we have an almost exhaustive account of the results which have been obtained since the publication in 1835 of Grimm's Deutsche Mythologie, forming a sort of subject index to the literature of the science, including the valuable papers published in the Zeitschrift für deutsche Mythologie, the Zeitschrift für deutsches Alterthum, as well as to the independent publications of Grimm, Kuhn, Müllenhoff, Jahn, Mannhardt, Meyer, Bugge, Schwartz, Panzer, and many other students. Excellent as it is, the book is not without its faults. The labours of English writers are almost wholly ignored. The names of Mr. Andrew Lang, Mr. Keary, and Prof. Rhys are not to be found in the copious index. Mr. Kemble, Mr. Frazer, and Prof. Max Müller are mentioned, but that is about all. Indeed, when we find Herne the hunter called Horne (p. 236) and Twelfth-night spelt "twelfnights" (p. 197), the adequacy of the author's knowledge of the English tongue may perhaps be questioned. This want of familiarity with the English literature of the subject has resulted in serious omissions. In the light of recent research it can hardly be doubted that the great Gaulish Empire, founded by Ambigatos in the sixth century B.C., exercised no small influence on the culture of the ruder Teutonic tribes. Not only have we in German a number of political terms which can only be explained as loan-words obtained from the more civilised Celts, but many of the most perplexing problems in Teutonic mythology receive an easy solution if we accept the theory that the Teutons borrowed certain religious conceptions from their Celtic overlords. Thus Odin-Woden is rightly explained as a Teutonic Wind-god; but there are many features in his character which compel us to believe that he was also a Supreme Heaven-god, the All-Father, whose all-seeing eye is the sun, whose consort is Jödr, the earth, and whose son is Thor, the thunder. These are not attributes of the storm-wind, but can be explained if we suppose that some attributes of the Celtic Gwydion, whose son was Llew, a sun-god, were grafted on to the primitive Teutonic wind-god, possibly owing to some such resemblance of the names as led the Latins to graft the myths of Heracles, a Greek sun god, on to those of their own Hercules, the protector of enclosures. The additions to the Baldr Saga from Christian sources are recognised, but there are much older borrowings which should also have been noticed. Baldr, as a sun-god, is doubtless Teutonic; but his death by the mistletoe, the sacred tree of the Celtic nations, indicates that the myths of a Celtic tree-god, and possibly of a Celtic sun-god, Beli or Balor, have been incorporated with the Teutonic myths. So also with the connexion between the Teutonic Dietrich and the Celtic Toutiorix, or of Esus and the Anses. Mr. Meyer identifies the Teutonic Ziu-Tyr with Zeus-Dyaus-Jupiter, though here the connexion is merely linguistic and not mythological; but he ignores the extensive borrowing which has transferred Babylonian lunar myths and Babylonian heaven myths to Greek fetish stones and fetish trees, to Greek nature-goddesses, or to Roman harvest-gods. This is the great defect of the book, the want of any sufficient grasp of the great principle of the migration of myths, and their transference to homonymous deities.

Les Contes populaires de Poitou. By Léon Pineau. (Paris: Leroux.) These tales form Volume XVI. of the "Collection de Contes et Chansons populaires," issued by E. Leroux, and are wholly distinct from the series published by Maisonneuve, "Les Littératures populaires de toutes les Nations." The modest preface of the author almost disarms criticism. He has undertaken the task of a collector only, and has written down without note or comment what has been recited to him. It is not his fault if the result is not more attractive than it actually is. These tales of Poitou are very much worn down. The folklore collector now-a-days hardly expects to find anything new; only some story may be more complete in its details, or more vividly told, or may preserve some incident of older date, or give some better clue to the mode of transition than do the more current versions. This is all he can expect. But even this he will hardly find here. The peasant of Poitou has apparently little imagination. He localises everything in his own neighbourhood, and reduces the poetry of the tradition to the level of his daily life. He leaves nothing indefinite, and consequently the terror of the unknown is seldom aroused in these tales. Many of them gird at the priests and monks and reputed saints, and in this remind us that we are in the country of Rabelais; and, I fear I must add, in the fact that they are not seldom dirty, even if not licentious. Their uncleanness is that of a nasty-minded schoolboy, not the lasciviousness of a satyr. The language is French, with the variations of a sub-dialect which can hardly be called a patois. There is a curious homonym to our English too in tou, i.e., aussi; elle tou—elle aussi. It appears once on p. 225 as tou. It is well that this collection should have been made once; for, to judge from it, there is little in the district to tempt a future explorer.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE next volume in the series of "Twelve English Statesmen," to be published by Messrs. Macmillan this month, will be Lord Rosebery's Pitt. Apart from one or two Scotch addresses of an historical character, we believe that this is Lord Rosebery's first appearance as an author.

THE trustees of the Lightfoot Fund have decided to publish a collection of miscellaneous papers by the late bishop of Durham. There are, however, certain historical lectures known to have been delivered by him (including more than one series upon "Early Church History," delivered in St. Paul's Chapter-house), which cannot be found among his papers. Should anyone be able to supply reports or notes of these, or of any other of Dr. Lightfoot's lectures, he will confer a great favour upon the trustees by communicating with the present bishop of Durham, or with the Rev. J. R. Harmer, Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

MESSRS. CHARLES H. ASHDOWN and Frederic G. Kitton, who are both residents of St. Albans, have in preparation an historical and picturesque account of that ancient city. It will contain fifty illustrations, from sketches specially made by Mr. Kitton, ten of which will be full-page engravings. Mr. Ashdown contributes the letterpress, of which one chapter will deal with the Roman Verulamium, and another with the abbey church. The edition will be limited to 300 copies, each of which will be numbered and signed by both author and artist.

WE are to have another book about the late Miss Constance W. Naden, whose verse won warm praise of Mr. Gladstone, but whose metaphysical views have been the despair of critics. It will be entitled Farther Reliques: being Essays and Tracts for our Times, illustrated with a portrait and a facsimile of her last letter. It has been edited by Mr. George M. McCrie, who himself adds an introduction and notes. Like the other volumes, it will be published by Messrs. Bickers & Son.

PROF. CHILD has only taken a week's holiday this long vacation, but has been staying at home in Cambridge, U.S.A., working at Part VIII. of his grand comparative edition of our English and Scotch Ballads. His difficulty is what to reject, but he has made up his mind to refuse admission to the later and poorer ballads, so that he now sees his way to the end of his work.

PROF. CHILD is revising his well-known essay on Chaucer's grammar and metre, by Dr. Furnivall's print of the Harleian MS. 7334 of the Canterbury Tales, inasmuch as he first worked on the late Thomas Wright's edition of that MS., which occasionally altered the scribe's words and forms. The professor has also got six other American Chaucerians to undertake the six other texts of the Tales in Dr. Furnivall's "Six-Text" edition, and the essays on them are to be published in 1900, the quincenary of Chaucer's death.

PROF. SKEAT has of course based his edition of the Canterbury Tales on the Ellesmere MS. as Mr. Gilman did his, and as Dr. Furnivall, when he first printed the MS., said every editor must. Prof. Skeat has most conveniently put the whole text of the Tales into one volume, his fourth, and his edition of Chaucer's works will become the standard edition. It will be published by the Clarendon Press.

DR. RICHARD MORRIS has at last written his Preface and Notes to his edition of the Cursor Mundi for the Early English Text Society; and the two completing parts of the work, by Dr. Max Kaluza and Dr. Hupe, will be issued next month to members who pay their 1892 subscriptions in advance.

DR. STURZINGER is preparing for the Roxburgh Club an edition of the French text of Guillaume de Deguileville's Three Pilgrimages—of the Life of Man, the Soul, and Jesus Christ—from the MS. of Mr. Henry Hucks Gibbs; and Mr. G. N. Currie is preparing for the Early English Text Society editions of the prose Pilgrimage of the Life of Man, in two versions, and of the Soul, besides Lydgate's poetical version of the second recension of the Life of Man. Of the "Jesus" no Early English translation exists.

THE Agnostic Annual—to be published next week by Messrs. W. Stewart & Co—will contain an article by Prof. Huxley, entitled "Possibilities and Impossibilities," containing an elaborate analysis of some of the Biblical miracles; and also a paper on "Ecclesiasticism," by Mr. Momerie.

WE hear also that the "oration" on "The Corruption of the Church," which Mr. Momerie delivered at Princes Hall last July, is to be published immediately, together with a portrait and biography, by Messrs. Eglington.

MR. J. J. LALOR, of Dublin, will shortly issue "The Story of the Union, Told by its Plotters," written by Mr. W. F. Dennehy, which originally appeared in the Irish Catholic.

A PROOF of Annie S. Swan's popularity as a novelist is the fact that eleven thousand copies of her last story, The Ayres of Studleigh, have been sold during the three dullest months of the year. Her next work, Who shall Serve? a Story for the Times, to appear in November, will illustrate some phases of the labour question.

A CHEAP edition of The Class and Desk, by J. Comper Gray and C. S. Carey, is announced for early publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

THE Library Association of the United Kingdom recently decided to form a collection of library appliances, plans, and bibliographical works, for permanent exhibition in London, and towards that end are now soliciting contributions of everything connected with books and libraries. Already specimens have been presented or promised of library plans, stationery, bookholders, shelf-fittings, bindings, catalogues, indicators, photographs, and drawings of various sorts, &c.; and it is hoped that in a year's time there will be formed a museum of the highest practical value to all persons interested in libraries or books. All specimens or letters on the subject should be addressed to Mr. James D. Brown, Public Library, Clerkenwell, E.C., who has been authorised by the association to form the collection.

MR. FREDERIC HARRISON will deliver a series of public addresses on "The Great Modern Poets, Artists, and Musicians," at Newton Hall, Fetter-lane, on Sunday evenings during October, at 7 p.m.

THE monthly meetings of the eighth session of the Elizabethan Society will commence on Wednesday next, October 7, when Mr. Frank Payne will read a paper on "Elizabethan Domestic Tragedy." The programme includes also "Henry Vaughan," by Mr. Frederick Rogers; "Richard the Third," by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke; "Nicolas Breton," by Mr. A. H. Bullen; "John Wilson, the last of the Tribe of Ben," by Mr. Edmund Gosse; "Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey," by Mr. Sidney Lee; "Thomas Randolph: his Poetical and Dramatic Works," by Mr. James Ernest Baker; "Thomas Middleton," by Mr. W. H. Cowham; and a paper by Mr. John Addington Symonds.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

WE may notice together two new journalistic enterprises, both of a novel character. One is the announcement of an English-Arabic monthly, to be called the Eastern and Western Review, which proposes to make the East and the West better known to each other by means of a paper that shall be read by both. It will be printed in London, the Arabic type being supplied by Messrs. Gilbert & Rivington. No names are mentioned in the prospectus, but we understand that influential support has been promised from Constantinople and Cairo. The other, which is already in existence, is the publication of a newspaper in French for the use of English boys and girls. It is wholly French in type, shape, and general appearance; and is entirely made up of extracts from French papers, including a feuilleton, financial news, and characteristic advertisements. The Journal Français is edited by two assistant masters at Harrow, and is published (fortnightly during term-time) by Messrs. Percival & Co.

SECOND editions have been called for of the September and October numbers of the United Service Magazine, containing the two articles by Lord Wolseley on von Moltke. We notice that this magazine, which is perhaps not so well known as it deserves, is now in its sixty-third year.

MR. I. ZANGWILL, whose "Bachelors' Club," issued in June, is now in a fifth edition, will commence a pendant, entitled "The Old Maids' Club," in the next number of Ariel. It will be illustrated by Mr. F. H. Townsend.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

PROF. HENRY JONES, of the University College, North Wales, has been elected to the chair of logic and metaphysics at St. Andrews, vacant by the transfer of Prof. Seth to Edinburgh, in succession to Prof. Campbell Fraser.

PROF. F. MAX MÜLLER was present at the distribution of prizes at the Mason Science College, Birmingham, on Wednesday, and delivered an address, in the course of which he urged the claims of the institution to a larger grant from public funds. He also insisted on the duty of establishing professorships of logic and political economy.

THE winter session of the Working Men's College, Great Ormond-street—founded in 1854, by F. D. Maurice—was to be opened this evening (Saturday) with an address by the principal, Sir John Lubbock.

MR. J. W. MACKAIL has undertaken to deliver a course of ten lectures at Chelsea, in connexion with the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, upon "The Greek Drama." The object of the course will be to give an account of the rise and growth of the tragic drama at Athens, of its relation to the thought and life of the time, and of its meaning and value to us as a part of ancient civilisation. A knowledge of Greek is not required for those attending the lectures; but it is desirable that everyone should have previously read at least one or two typical plays in some good English translation. A class will be formed to read Aeschylus and Sophocles in English, and the "Oedipus Rex" in Greek. The opening lecture will be given in the Chelsea Town Hall, on Tuesday, October 13, at 5.15 p.m., when Dr. Butler, the Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, has promised to take the chair.

MR. THOMAS GALPIN, of the firm of Cassell & Co., has given £1000 to the Dorset County Council, the interest of which is to provide scholarships for natives of Dorset attending the summer meetings of university extension at Oxford and Cambridge.

Two prizes are offered to Oxford university extension students for the best original essays on "The Place of the University of Oxford in the Movement for the Revival of Learning in England, 1498-1520."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

"MARY AND MARFA."

*Scripture as it is taught.

JESUS loved Mary and Marfa,
And Mary and Marfa loved him;
Sometimes they sat together,
All in Jerusalem.

And Mary sat quite quiet,
'cep' now and then to pray;
But Marfa rattled the teafings
Till Jesus said, "Go 'way!"

Jesus didn' love Marfa
's well as Mary, of course;
Cos she was always workin',
'r else slammun' the windows and doors.

ELSA D'ESTERRE KEELING.

IN MEMORIAM.

EDWARD CRACROFT LEFROY.

THE obituary of the week records the death of the Rev. E. C. Lefroy, M.A., of Keble College, Oxford. A man of singular intellectual refinement and poetic promise, he was debarred only by confirmed ill-health from attaining high literary and ecclesiastical distinction. Four years of active clerical life put a strain upon his failing strength to which he unwillingly had to yield. His sermons during this period, "preached to middle-class congregations in a London suburb," presented a rare combination of knowledge of men, literary grace, and earnest Christian spirit. A volume of these was published in 1883 under the title of The Christian Ideal and Other Sermons (Skeffington). About this period Mr. Lefroy wrote reviews for the Globe, and subsequently for the Guardian. A happy balance of literary, theological, and scientific ability—for he had in earlier years contributed to science periodicals—qualified him, had his health permitted, to take a place among the leading critics of the day.

* The above, in which a story told me some years ago of a little national school child is turned into rhyme, without the addition of a thought, was written on hearing a sermon preached lately in the old city of St. Albans, in which our national schools were extolled to the skies, as providing "sound religious instruction." The little child who gave the singularly modernised version of a familiar Bible story, scored, I was assured, high—even the anachronism of the "tea-things" not being objected to!

In 1885 he issued his Echoes from Theocritus and Other Sonnets (Elliot Stock). About this book the ACADEMY wrote at the time :

"Rarely has the great pastoral poet been so freely transmuted without loss of his spell. It is Mr. Lefroy's distinction that his material never masters him, and of the difficulties of the form of art he has chosen, he hides away almost every trace. . . . A breezy healthfulness of thought and feeling plays around a poem like this. . . . Mr. Lefroy's sonnets ought to be better known. In substance they resemble those of Charles Tennyson Turner."

Since this review was written, several of Mr. Lefroy's sonnets have found their way into Selections from the best sonnet-writers. To the general reader his "other sonnets" will prove more attractive, comprising topics so various as "In the City," "Virgil," "The Four Evangelists," "Quem di diligunt," "A Cricket Bowler." The present writer remembers how Mr. Andrew Lang, in expressing his delight in the volume, congratulated Mr. Lefroy on being the first poet to enshrine the glories of cricket in a sonnet. In his skill in drawing a breathing picture in terse and delicate language, Mr. Lefroy had much in common with his kinsman, the Laureate, diverging from him, however, in his love of the sonnet metre.

In the same year as the Echoes, appeared his his last published book, Counsels for the Common Life (Skeffington)—a series of short "addresses to senior schoolboys," treated mainly from an ethical side. This book embodies much that was nearest to Mr. Lefroy's heart, and most distinctive of his character. His conviction (expressed in his private correspondence) was that our "method of handling male youth is deplorably clumsy." "They should be treated with the same gentleness and reverence as girls." "The Greeks knew better." Indeed, Hellenic ideals played a very interesting part in Mr. Lefroy's whole cast of mind. It will be the duty of his biographer to bring out this side of his character. Meanwhile, perhaps his finest quality was the Stoical—or, rather, in his case, the Christian—courage with which he invariably maintained a "breezy healthfulness of thought and feeling" wherever he saw the means of aiding the intellectual and moral growth of any who fell within the circle of his influence. A glimpse of the effort which this "healthfulness" cost him is given us in his pathetic sonnet, "On Reading a Poet's Life":

"The veil is lifted now. Behold your singer—
A sick, poor man, despised and barely sane,
Who strove awhile to shape with palsied finger
The hard-wrung produce of a sleepless brain,
Rich but in throes—till Death, the great balm-bringer,
Stooped down to kiss him through the deeps of pain."

WILFRED A. GILL.

THE INTERNATIONAL FOLK-LORE CONGRESS.

WITHOUT any flourish of announcements in the press, the second International Folk-lore Congress is already upon us. The first, it may be as well to state, was held in Paris in 1889, during the time of the Exhibition; but we believe that it was not attended by a single Englishman, unless we can reckon Mr. C. G. Leland as such. The present meeting will be more fortunate, for among those who have promised to come to London are MM. Cosquin, Schillot, Ploix, and Cordier, from France; Prof. Monseur, from Liège, the president of the newly-founded Société du Folk-lore Wallon; M. E. Krohn, from Finland; and Mr. W. W. Newell, the learned and energetic secretary of the American Folk-lore Society. The Anthropological Institute, the Gipsy-lore Society, and the Glasgow Society of Antiquaries have also sent delegates.

The scientific and the social sides of the Congress have both been well cared for. Among the former we may mention the appointment of an international folk-lore council, containing a great many distinguished names, which will be the standing authority to regulate all future meetings of the kind; and the report of a methodological committee, which will have to consider such questions as—a standard list of folk-lore incidents, a standard nomenclature for folk-lore research, a common plan for a folk-lore bibliography, and a universal set of folk-lore interrogatories. Amusement is to be provided by a conversazione in the Mercers' Hall, on Monday evening, when an old English mumming play will be represented, children's games will be given under the superintendence of Mrs. Gomme, folk-tales will be recited and songs sung in dialect, and there will also be an exhibition of portraits and other objects interesting to "story-ologists." The refreshments will include—but will not be limited to—old English commemorative cakes.

The ordinary meetings of the Congress will be held in the rooms of the Society of Antiquaries, Burlington House. On Thursday, October 1, Mr. Andrew Lang was to deliver his inaugural address as president at 2.30 p.m. On Friday, Mr. E. Sidney Hartland was to open the folk-tale section. Saturday is devoted to a visit to Oxford, where Mr. Lang and Prof. Rhys will entertain the members, and a visit will be paid to the Pitt-Rivers Museum. The mythological section will be opened by Prof. Rhys on Monday, and the institutions section by Sir Frederick Pollock on Tuesday. On the evening of Tuesday there will be a dinner; and on Wednesday the concluding meeting will be held. Among the papers promised we may specially mention: "The Problem of Diffusion," by Mr. Joseph Jacobs; "The Problems of Heroic Legend in the Light of Recent Research upon Celtic and Teutonic Saga," by Mr. Alfred Nutt; "The Origins of Mythology," by Mr. J. S. Stuart-Glennie; "A Comparative Study of Indo-European Customs, with Special Reference to Marriage Customs," by Dr. M. Winternitz; and "The Testimony of Folk-lore to the European or Asiatic Origin of the Aryans," by Mr. F. B. Jevons, whose conclusion is in favour of the possibility of contact between the pro-ethnic Aryans and the pro-ethnic Finnish-Ugrians. "If this be so, we must place the original Aryan home in the North, probably near the Ural mountains, possibly in Russia, but certainly not near the Baltic."

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Next week, as the new volume of the "Adventure Series," "A Master Mariner," containing the life and adventures of Captain Robert William Eastwick, edited by Mr. Herbert Compton. The Captain was born in 1772, and his narrative proper commences from the time of the Gordon Riots.

The same publisher announces—"Travels in Peru," by a lady traveller—Miss Blanche Clark; Prof. Thorold Rogers's posthumous work "The Industrial and Commercial History of England" (which is partly a criticism on certain theories of John Stuart Mill) on Dr. Birkbeck Hill's lectures; "Writers and Readers"; a new volume of "The Cameo series," "Concerning Cats," an anthology by Mrs. Graham R. Tomson; the Cobden Club prize essay for 1892 on "Factory Act Legislation," by Miss Victorine Jeans; the genuine "Autobiography of an English Gamekeeper" (John Wilkins of Stanstead, Essex), edited by Capt. Byng and Mr. Stephen M. Stephens, and illustrated by Mr.

Sidney Starr; M. Jusserand's new work, "A French Ambassador at the Court of Charles II.: Le Comte de Comings, 1662-5," illustrated with photogravures; thoroughly revised editions of "Switzerland," "The Jews under the Romans," and "Russia" in "The Story of the Nations" series, of which forthcoming volumes will be "The Byzantine Empire," by Mr. C. W. C. Oman; "Sicily," by Mr. E. A. Freeman; and "The Tuscan Republics," by Miss Bella Duffy; "John Sherman and Dhoya," by Ganconagh, and "European Relations," by Talmage Dalin, will be added to the "Pseudonym Library"; and the last volume of "The Century Dictionary," containing portraits and biographical details of authors quoted in the work.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Christian Doctrine of Immortality," by Prof. S. D. F. Salmond, of Aberdeen; "The Early Church; a History of Christianity in the First Six Centuries," by the late Prof. David Duff, of Edinburgh; "The Apology of the Christian Religion, historically regarded with reference to Supernatural Revelation and Redemption," by the Rev. Dr. James Macgregor, of Oamaru; "The Lord's Supper and the Passover Ritual": being a translation of the Substance of Prof. Bickell's work termed "Messe und Pascha," by Mr. William F. Skene, with an introduction by the translator on the "Connexion of the Early Christian Church with the Jewish Church"; "The Story of Jerusalem" (Bible Class Primer Series), by the Rev. Hugh Callan: also English translations of Prof. Harnack's "Grundriss der Dogmengeschichte," Prof. Buhl's "Kanon und Text des Alten Testaments," and Prof. Schultz's "Alttestamentliche Theologie."

MESSRS. GAY & BIRD'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Japanese Girls and Women," second edition, by A. M. Bacon; "The Lily of the Arno, or Florence, Past and Present," by V. W. Johnson, illustrated; "Hunting in the Jungle," by W. F. Kellogg, illustrated; "Juvenile Stories: "Queen Hildegard," illustrated, "Hildegard's Neighbours," illustrated, "Captain January," by Laura Richards; "The Bird's Christmas Carol," by Kate Douglas Wiggin, illustrated, "Our Common Birds," by J. B. Grant, illustrated; "Copper Smelting," new edition, by E. D. Peters; "Handy Lists of Technical Literature," part 5, "Fine Arts," part 6, "Architecture," part 7, "Works of Reference," by H. E. Haferkorn; "Twenty Good Stories," by Opie P. Read, illustrated; "A Double Life," by Ella Wheeler Wilcox; "Question of Time," by Gertrude F. Atherton; "Half True Tales," stories founded on fiction, by C. H. Augur; "Sunset Pass," by Captain Chas. King, illustrated; two novels based on theosophical teachings: "On the Heights of Himalay," by A. Van den Naillen; "Talking Image of Uruk," by Franz Hartmann.

MESSRS. HOULSTON & SON'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The National Choir," part songs, standard and original, including Musical Gems of All Nations, with notes, historical, personal, and critical, an introduction by Prof. Blackie, and a portrait of Burns, staff or sol-fa notation; "Daisy's Story," by Annie G. Fisher, illustrated; "From Out the Past," a temperance tale, by Jessie Armstrong; "British Beekeeper's Guide Book," by T. W. Cowan, eleventh edition, thoroughly revised, illustrated; "Life in Featherland," by M. M. W., illustrated; "Things We Must Not Expect": Religious, Secular, Domestic, by Arthur F. Chapple; "History of Cornwall for My Children," by Their Father; and Campbell's Series of Diaries.

Annual volumes of "The Homilist and Preacher's Analyst," crown series, vol. i., "The Adviser," "The Children's Messenger," "The Dayspring," "The Gospel Banner," "The Little Gleaner," and "The Sower."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BOURGERT, Paul. Sensations d'Italie: Toscane, Ombrie, Grande-Grèce. Paris: Lemerre. 3 fr. 50 c.
 CLEMEN, P. Die Kunstdenkmäler der Rheinprovinz. 1. Bd. II. Der Kreis Geldern. Düsseldorf: Schwann. 3 M.
 FOURÈS, Aug. Les Cants del Soulelh: poésies languedociennes. Paris: Savine. 8 fr. 50 c.
 FREYCIERT, Les Discours choisis de Ch. de. Paris: Charpentier. 7 fr. 50 c.
 HALÁVY, L. Récits de guerre. L'Invasion 1870—1871. Livr. 1. Paris: Boussoit. 5 fr.
 KAUFMANN, D. Urkundliches aus dem Leben Samsen Wertheimers. Wien: Konegen. 3 M.
 RABUSSON, H. Moderne. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
 RÖHTER, A. Erasmus-Studien. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
 SCHRADER, O. Victor Hehn. Ein Bild seines Lebens u. seiner Werke. Berlin: Calvary. 3 M.
 SCHÜRER, W. M. A. Ueb. Erziehung, Bildung u. Volksinteresse in Deutschland u. England. Dresden: Damm. 1 M. 80 Pf.
 SERVIÈRES, G. Richard Wagner jugé en France. Paris: Du Parc. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- MAIMONIDES' Commentar zum Tractat Kilajim. Zum 1. Male im arab. Urtext hrg. u. a. v. v. B. Bamberger. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Kaufmann. 2 M. 50 Pf.
 WEILL, Alex. Nombres: 4^e Livre des cinq Livres (Mosaïstes) de Moïse. Paris: Sauvaire. 5 fr.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BECKER, W. Ueb. die Teilnahme der Städte an den Reichsversammlungen unter Friedrich III. 1440—1493. Bonn: Röhrscheid. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 BUCK, W. Der deutsche Kaufmann in Nowgorod bis zur Mitte d. 14. Jahrh. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 DUHR, B. Pombal. Sein Charakter u. seine Politik nach den Berichten der kais. Gesandten im geheimen Staatsarchiv zu Wien. Freiburg-i.-Br.: Herder. 2 M. 30 Pf.
 FLÈBS, le Marquis de. Le Roi Louis-Philippe. Vie anecdotique, 1773-1850. Paris: Dentu. 10 fr.
 GÜDEMANN, M. Quellschriften zur Geschichte d. Unterrichts u. der Erziehung bei den deutschen Juden. Von den ältesten Zeiten bis auf Mendelssohn. Berlin: Hofmann. 12 M.
 HEIKKEL, I. A. Beiträge zur Erklärung v. Plutarchs Biographie d. Perikles. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 LENTZ, E. Das Verhältnis Venedigs zu Byzanz nach dem Fall d. Exarchats bis zum Ausgang d. 9. Jahrh. 1. Thl. Venedig als byzantin. Provinz. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 SMOLLE, L. Feldmarschall Radetzky. Sein Leben u. seine Thaten. Wien: Szellinki. 1 M. 40 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BILFINGER, G. Die Sterntafeln in den ägyptischen Königsgräbern v. Biban el Moluk. Stuttgart: Wildt. 2 M.
 COHEN, E. u. E. WEINCHENK. Meteoreisen-Studien. Wien: Hölzer. 2 M.
 KUTL, E. Die Gastropoden der Schichten v. St. Cassian der süd-alpinen Trias. 1. Thl. Wien: Hölzer. 12 M.
 RAAB, F. Wesen u. Systematik der Schlussformen. Logische Untersuchung. Wien: Konegen. 3 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- DOUAY, L. Etudes étymologiques sur l'Antiquité américaine. Paris: Maisonneuve. 8 fr.
 MURRAY, A. T. On Parody and Paratragedia in Aristophanes. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 ROSNY, Léon de. Chan-Hai-King, antique géographie chinoise. T. 1. Paris: Maisonneuve. 30 fr.
 SORTAIS, G. Ilios et Iliade. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"A BALADE OF OUR LADY"—BY LYDGATE.

Cambridge: Sept. 26, 1891.

I am now able definitely to settle the authorship of this poem, ascribed to Chaucer in the black-letter editions. It is the twenty-sixth poem in Stowe's edition; and in my edition of Chaucer's Minor Poems (Pref. p. xxvii.) I quote Tyrwhitt's statement that it is ascribed to Lydgate by Tanner, and I show how it has clear marks of Lydgate's style.

The clearest proof, however, is that an imperfect copy of it, containing only eleven stanzas, exists in MS. Ashmole 59, fol. 39 back, in which the following heading occurs:—

"Here folowethe next a devoute balade by Lidgate of Bury, made at the reverence of oure lady Qwene of mercy. Inc. A Thowsande stories I kouthe to you reherce; &c."

It is always a gain to fix the authorship of a poem. In the present instance a special interest attaches to the fact—already noticed by me but not, I think, sufficiently considered—that Lydgate quotes in this poem the first line of Chaucer's "Merciless Beautee." I quote the whole of the twenty-second stanza from the reprint of Thynne's edition, made in 1550, of which I have a copy.

"Where myght I loue euer better beset
 Than in this lylie, lykynge to beholde?
 The lace of loue, the bond so wel thou knyht,
 That I may se the or myne herte colde,
 And or I passe out of my dayes olde,
 Tofore syngunge euermore viterly—
 Your eyen two wol slee me sodainly."

We ought to allow full value to this extraordinary quotation; for we all know that when Lydgate quotes at all, it is his "master" whom he quotes, and no one else. He quotes him or imitates him several other times in the same poem, the most remarkable instance being his imitation of the Man of Law's Tale, line 778, which I have already cited in my book.

I also think that not enough weight has been given to the MS. evidence; for "Merciless Beautee," the last poem in MS. Pepys 2006, is preceded by eight genuine poems of Chaucer. It is clear to me that the compiler of that MS. deliberately intended to include in his volume poems by Chaucer above all things, but extended his plan so as to take in some by Lydgate or by other pupils of Chaucer.

Of Chaucerian poems there are about fifteen, some being duplicates. The non-Chaucerian poems are only these: (1) Complaint of the Black Knight, by Lydgate; (2) Temple of Glasse, by the same; (3) Legend of the Three Kings of Colen; (4) The War between Cesar and Pompey (in which the author refers to "my master Chaucer"); (5) A translation of some fragments of Cato (in which the author also refers to "my master"). See Todd's Illustrations, pp. 116-118.

I suppose "The Three Kings of Colen" is Lydgate's; there is a bit of it at the beginning of MS. Ashmole 59, which contains so many of his. And if the "Cesar and Pompey" is the same as the "Tragedye of Rome" in that MS., that is Lydgate's also. I therefore contend that the MS. evidence is strongly in favour of the fact that "Merciless Beautee" is either Chaucer's or Lydgate's; and it is not Lydgate's.

I have never been able to understand why the internal evidence is not absolutely convincing. The poem forms a Triple Roundel, constructed with great artistic skill and a complete mastery of rhythm, such as none but Chaucer ever attained to in the Middle English period. It is absolutely the finest example of a Triple Roundel extant—perhaps, indeed, the only one; and none but a master of rhythm could beat it even now. Let them try. To my mind it is just the best thing in the volume of Minor Poems—that is, if fairly considered with relation to its length. And where are the Roundels which Chaucer says that he wrote?

WALTER W. SKEAT.

NOTES ON HERO(N)DAS.

II.

Oxford: Sept. 20, 1891.

I resume the elucidation of the first poem. As before, K. = Kenyon's printed transcript of the MS., R. = Rutherford's "first recension," and L. and S. = Liddell and Scott; and the text is R.'s, except where it is otherwise stated.

(17) I. 8. στρέψον τι, δούλην.

R. says "Take yourself off," for which L. and S. seem to show no justification. Render "Spin something" or "Spin a bit," as an English mistress would say, "Do some sewing."

(18) I. 47. ἄλλα μὴ τις ἐστῆκες

48. ὄτνε . ττ . ΗΜΙΝ
 Μητριχη
 οὐδὲ εἰς.
 Γυλλίς

ἄκουσον δὴ

49. ἔ σοι χροσίζους' ὠδ' ἐβην ἀπαγγεῖλαι·

Here K. says that a dot is placed over the last letter of 47, "presumably to cancel it," gives ημων (which he says is apparently "corrected to ημιν"), and reads συνε[σ]τ υ[φ] ημων.

Restore 47.

ἄλλα μὴ τις ἐστῆκες

48. σύνεγγυς ἦμιν;

Gullis has come to tell Mētrichē that some one is in love with her, and, before beginning, she wishes to make sure that they are not overheard. The restoration explains the two readings ημων and ημιν, as σύνεγγυς takes both cases. The dative probably was more used in and after Hero(n)das's time; but the genitive (for which we should have to substitute ἡμῶν) seems for that reason the more likely to be genuine. I leave the point in abeyance for the present. Of course what K. has read as the cross stroke of a T is the tops of two ΓΓ.

By the way, note how in 49 ἀπαγγεῖλαι confirms the ἀπαγγεῖλε of 75.

(19) I. 56. ἰδὼν σε καθ' ὄδου τὴν Μίσης ἐκύμηνε

57. τῆς Γρα . . ΧΙΕΡΑC . . καρδίην ἀνοιστρηθείς.

I have already vindicated the MS. reading of 56; and, in 57, the MS. reads not τῆς but τας. Restore

56. ἰδὼν σε καθ' ὄδου τῆς Μίσης, ἐκύμηνε

57. τὰς γραῦς, χίερασεν καρδίην ἀνοισ-
 τρηθείς.

Misē was a mystic deity, for whom see L. and S. Her καθ' ὄδου was obviously a procession, in which her image (or a person representing her) was brought down from one place to another, or else a festival celebrating her return (another meaning of the word). It was at this function that Mētrichē, emerging from her seclusion, was seen by the young man mentioned. His obvious infatuation ruffled the composure of (ἐκύμηνε) the old woman present (of whom the narrator was one), and he performed the rites (ἔρασαν) with a heart tormented by love.

I have only to add that καθ' ὄδου is an instance of the temporal dative used "of regular feasts or stated occasions, as τοῖς Διονυσίοις . . τοῖς πόμπαις" (Donaldson, Gk. Gr., p. 487).

(20) I. 69. μὰ τὴν φίλην Δήμητρα

The MS. gives και. Read καί.

(21) I. 74.

μῦθον δὲ μετρήτης
 πρέπει γυναιξὶ τῆς νέρης.

In his errata R. inserts a τῆς before μετρήτης. The insertion hurts the rhythm, is not in the MS., and seems to me needless.

(22) In I. 76 R. needlessly alters Πυθεω to Πυθίω. Puthēas was the commoner name of the two.

(23) I. 79. Θρείσσα, τὴν μελανιδ' ἔκτριψον

80. νεκταρ τ' ὄρον τ' ἐσφρῆισα, και εἶπεν ἀκρητον

81. καὶ ὄδωρ ἐπιστάξασα δὸς πιεῖν.

Θρείσσα

δόσω.

Μητριχη

82. τῆ, Γυλλί, πῶθ'· δέξιν οὐ σ' ὀργυθεῖσων.

Had the Greeks of this time a separate drink called "nectar"? If so, would it not be a mixture? and would it be kept ready mixed? And if, as R. believes, these dialogues were "really intended for representation," would the action wait while the slave was mixing (at least) four ingredients? For, note that the next line does not begin till the cup is ready.

But the fatal objection to 80 is that it only very partially follows the indications of the MS., which gives

. . . κτ . . . ρους . ρεις . τα
 [α]κρητον

Restore 80. χηκρημόρους τρεῖς Ἰταλικῶ χέ' ἀκρητου

—which is exact. Ἐκρημόροι (εὐθ. κνάδοι) were, of course, cups holding $\frac{1}{2}$ of the current local liquid measure; if that were the κοτύλη, then the amount of wine poured out would be about 1/2 of a pint; and, as water would be added in the proportion of 3 : 2 or 2 : 1, that would swell the draught to between 3/4 and 5/8 of a pint. As for Italian wine, see Bekker and Göl's Charikles, ii. 341. In Lucian Navig. 13 a man dreaming himself rich will have only οἶνον ἐξ Ἰταλίας on his table for the future; and Alciphron vi. § 9, speaks of an Italian wine as σφόδρα ἡδύς (cf. perhaps the epithet ἡδύς, used in both 86 and 87).

In 81, for δάσω K. gives . δ . ωι, and says that the last letters of some of the lines in this column are doubtful. Read ἡδέως.

(24) I. 83. πείσουσά σ' ἤλθον, ἀλλὰ . . . ὦΝ . . Ν
I suggest that the last three words are ἀλλὰ βαιὸν ὠνήθην (or ὠνήμην).

(25) I. 89. καὶ Ἐντίμη.
But K. gives κ . . . ιμη, so that Κηντίμη would be better. However, I do not find Entimé, or Eutimé, or Timé, in Pape's lexicon of Greek proper names; while I do find three instances of Simé. Quære, then, καὶ Σιμή.

So much for the first poem for the present. I have also begun the second, and here are one or two notes on it.

(26) II. 1. Ἄνδρες δικασταί, τῆς γενεῆς μὲν οὐκ ἐστὲ
2. ἡμέων κριταὶ δὴ κοῦθὲν οὐδὲ τῆς δόξης.
Read δήκοθεν (= "of course," "I presume"), as K. does.

(27) II. 28 τὸν αὐτὸν ἐχρῆν, ὅστις ἐστὶ κῆξ οἴου
29. πηλοῦ πεφύρηται, τὸθ' ὡς ἐγὼ ζῶειν
30. τῶν δημοτῶν φρίσσοντα καὶ τὸν ἥκιστον

In 29 the MS. has πεφυρητισθῶ. It habitually uses ι for ει, and often fails to change a final τ before a rough breathing. The MS. text is accordingly equivalent to

29. πηλοῦ πεφύρητ' εἰδῶθ', ὡς ἐγὼ ζῶειν

i.e., this alien, knowing who he is, and what his origin is, ought to live as I (another alien) do, in awe of the least among the citizens. Of course this is right.

(28) II. 39. τὰ πάντα ταῦτ' ἐρηξῃ.
K. gives the first word as apparently η. Read ἦ—"See! he did all this."

(29) II. 77. κῆποροβόσκειν πάντες ἀλλ' ἔκητ' ἀλκῆς

78. θαροῦν ἐγὼ λέγοιμ' ἂν εἰ θαλῆς εἴην
79. ἔργῃ σὺ μὲν ἴσως Μυρτάλη τῶν σῶν ἔνδον,

80. ἐγὼ δ' ἐπίρουσ' ταῦτα δοὺς ἐκέειν ἔξεισ'.

81. ἦ νῆ Δί' εἰ σοὶ θάλαπτα τι τῶν ἔνδον
82. ἔμβυσον ἐς τὴν χεῖρα Βαττάρφ τιμήν
83. καῦτος τὰ σεωντοῦ τῆ λαβὼν θικωσ χρήζεισ.

What R. ought to have printed is this:—In 77 θαροῦν ἢ λεφῶ, probably, for the MS. has λε[ω?]. not ἐγὼ. In 79 Μυρτάλης (οὐδὲν δεινόν), as the MS. (with an unintelligible correction of the last two words, and of course without stops and accents). In 80 probably ἐπίρουσ with the MS., as a dialectal form. In 81 ἦ and (with the MS.) σευ. In 83 not τῆ, but θαλῆ, as the MS., which in this case gives even the accent. And now to make this evident.

Battaros is asking the judges to inflict a fine on Thalés for setting fire to Battaros's house and forcibly haling Murtalé, one of the women in it; and he has produced her in court, tattered from head to foot. He says that his father and grandfather followed the same occupation as himself, "but" (77) "for protection I have confidence in the public (θαροῦν ἢ λεφῶ). If I were Thalés, I should say—Perhaps you are yourself a lover of Murtalé (Μυρτάλης) (it would be nothing strange [οὐδὲν δεινόν]), and for my part I committed arson: give me what I want, and you shall have what you want. Yes (81), by Zeus if you've any warmth in your (σευ) heart (lit., if any of your inwards is warm), stop Battaros's hand with a fine, and take your own property and bruise (θαλῆ) it as you will." Of course θαλῆ is the Ionic imperative of θαλάω.

Lastly, what is to be said of a "recension," even a first recension, which jumps from II. 4 to II. 21, and simply prints between them the words "Sixteen mutilated lines"? Of those lines, indeed, distinctly more than half the text is left; and in a future letter I shall contribute something to their restoration, and shall vindicate the MS. in one or two more passages in this second poem against the blind alterations of the "first recension."

EDWARD W. B. NICHOLSON.

P.S.—May I add that I had not read Mr. Headlam's two letters in the Athenæum until I had sent you the above? There are various points on which we coincide to some extent.

JOHN OF WESTPHALIA.

Oxford: Sept. 21, 1891.

A Prognostication for the year 1476, by Jan Laet, which was printed (without date, but in 1475) by John of Westphalia, bears a colophon which appears to be of exceptional interest to students of early typography from the additional light which it throws upon that printer's aspirations and history.

The only known copy is in the Bodleian (Arch. Seld. B. 25). Owing to its not having been catalogued hitherto elsewhere than in the 1697 Catalogus MSS. Angliæ, it has, I believe, remained undescribed, with the exception of a brief note sent to Dr. Campbell by Henry Bradshaw (see the Typogr. Néerl. No. 1081). The colophon, which is in smaller type than the text, runs as follows:

"Hec ego ioannes d' paderborne in vvestfalia / florentissima in vniuer | sitate louaniensi residens / vt in manus venerunt imprimere curau: nonnul | l' lorum egregiorum virorum desideria obsecutus | qui prenominatum pronostican | tem futura vere inculco quamuis stilo conpluribus annis prenun | ciasse ferunt. | Non reuera quo vtilitatem magnam ipse consequer (vtilius enim opus eam | obrem suspendi) sed quo simul plurimorum comodis ac voluptati pariter | inseruiens : stilum meum nouum quo posthac maiori et minori in volumine vt | propono / signi mei testimonio curiosis ac bonarum rerum studiosis pa | lam facerem."

Passing over the doubtful compliment to the author, the first point to remark is the apology for printing a work of temporary value and unpolished style; this is exemplified by the list of the printer's earliest dated works, which are, without exception, either large standard books of the time or classical works. These scruples, certainly little shared by his fellow-printers of the North, are perhaps a reminiscence of his sojourn in Italy.

The most important part of the colophon is the concluding statement, the interpretation of which turns on the meaning assigned to the word "stilus." Whatever this "stilus" may be, it is clearly used for the first time in this work. In l. 4 it stands simply for the "style" of the author. In the colophon to his Petrus de Crescentiis, of 1474, the printer uses the word to signify the art of printing itself, the type being named "littera." Here it cannot mean either "style" or the "art of printing": but it may either signify the large type used for the text (Holtrop, Mon. Typogr., plate 49[87]e), in which case this tract will rank before the Juvenal of September 20, 1475, which is the first dated book in this character; or, as seems more probable, it may refer to the engraved portrait of himself which follows the colophon, and which he usually terms "signum." In this latter case the book will stand before the Justinian of November 21, which has been considered the earliest example of this work (W. M. Conway, Woodcutters of the Netherlands, p. 16). His declared intention to use this "stilus" in small as well as large books for the future points to the mark being meant rather than the type. Moreover, a date before September 20 seems rather early for a Prognostication of the ensuing year; and the "greater work" which he postponed would be the Justinian of 217 leaves, rather than the Juvenal of 70.

R. G. C. PROCTOR.

"TALLYHO!"

Selling, by Faversham: Sept. 17, 1891.

In a (much misprinted) letter of August 27 I stated that Littré disdained even to mention tayaut; but I have since, by the merest accident, discovered that he did mention its equivalent, but quite unawares, as "Haut-à-haut (hò-ta-hò). Cri de chasse pour appeler." This is also to be found in previous Dictionaries, such as Fleming and Tibbins (1841): "Cri de chasse que l'on fait pour appeler son camarade . . . hoo-up, blowing a call or reheat." Of course haut-à-haut is mere feeble pedantry for "Ho! taho!" as found in the "Dit de la chace dou Cerf." Indeed, Pairault's fairly good Dictionnaire des Chasses (1885) gives "Ho! à ho! Cri par lequel les veneurs ou les valets de chiens s'appellent. On l'emploie également en parlant aux chiens lorsque l'on entre avec eux dans une enceinte, pour la fouler: Ho mes chiens! ho! à ho!"

And again:

"Ho! lo, lo, lo, looo! Cri aux chiens pour les exciter et les encourager à quêter."

These instances serve to confirm the belief that the vocal (and MS.) "taho" became the printed tayaut which, again, gave us our "tallyho."

JOHN O'NEILL.

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: Sept. 28, 1891.

In connexion with Mr. O'Neill's letter in the ACADEMY for September 5, it may be interesting to note that Sir Walter Scott, on what authority I know not, assigns a different origin to the word "Tally-ho!"

The following passage occurs in the continuation of Strutt's unfinished romance of "Queen-hoo Hall," undertaken by Scott at the instance of John Murray in 1807-8.

"A hart of the second year . . . broke cover very near where the Lady Emma and her brother were stationed. An inexperienced varlet, who was nearer to them, instantly unloosed two tall greyhounds, who sprung after the fugitive with all the fleetness of the north wind. Gregory . . . followed, encouraging the hounds with a loud tayout, for which he had the hearty curses of the huntsman, as well as of the baron.

Of the word tayout, Scott says in a note, "Tailliers-hors, in modern phrase, Tally-ho!"

This fragment, printed at the end of Waverley in the edition of 1829, is doubly interesting: firstly, as being the earliest published specimen of Sir Walter Scott's romantic composition; secondly, from the fact that in this "essay piece," as the author styles it, the well-known ballad, "Waken, lords and ladies gay," made its first appearance.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

"CONTENT," "CONTENTS."

Oxford: Sept. 24, 1891.

I wish to ascertain for the Dictionary what is the prevalent educated accentuation of these words in the following sentences: "This book has a table of contents"; "turn out the contents of your pockets"; "to find the cubic content of a pyramid"; "the mind looks at actions to see what may be their ethic content" (Mark Pattison).

I shall be obliged to everyone who will send a post-card, with the place of the accent marked on the word in each of these sentences, addressed "Dr. Murray, Oxford." The younger generation is said to accent the word differently from the older. Is it so?

J. A. H. M.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 7, 8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Elizabethan Domestic Tragedy," by Mr. Frank Payne.

SCIENCE.

The History of Human Marriage. By Edward Westermarck, Lecturer on Sociology at the University of Finland, Helsingfors. (Macmillans.)

Two years ago there came into the hands of anthropologists an academical dissertation from the University of Helsingfors, written in English, and purporting to be part i. of a work bearing the above title. This thesis, notable not only for its origin, but for its independence of thought, has now been completed in a volume published in London, which at once takes an important place in the much debated problem of primitive society.

By the word "marriage," Dr. Westermarck means, as he carefully explains, a more or less durable connexion between male and female lasting till after the birth of the offspring. In this definition he follows Darwin; and as marriage in such a "natural history sense" is common to man and lower animals, this accounts for the work being called History of Human Marriage. The title sounds singular to readers who give to the word "marriage" its more usual meaning of a legal institution; but it is the key to the argument that the tie which joins male and female is an instinct continuous through the higher mammalia to man. Indeed the author, a most thorough advocate of the development-theory, holds marriage to have become instinctive through natural selection, the father's protection of the offspring enabling the species to subsist in the struggle for existence. Considering "human marriage" as thus on the same lines with the pairing of lower animals, Dr. Westermarck appropriately leads off with the argument that in primitive times man paired at definite seasons of the year, and even tends to do so still. In 1876 Dr. Kulischer, in a paper in the Zeitschrift für Ethnologie, collected details of human pairing seasons, as marked by festivals of plainly matrimonial intent, and brought forward still more distinct evidence from the statistics of births, which show maxima and minima, pointing to two especial pairing times, about New Year and in late spring. Dr. Westermarck brings new evidence to bear on the subject, and goes so far back to first principles as to propound a general theory of pairing seasons among animals. These are due, in his opinion, not to the condition of the parents, but to the welfare of the offspring, which are to be born at the times of year most favourable to them. When one asks, how are the parent animals guided towards this remote result, his answer is, natural selection. Here, as elsewhere in the book, he is satisfied to show that a tendency is to the advantage of the race, and then natural selection is taken to have developed the race accordingly. For my own part, I should like to know more as to how and why the beneficial varieties arose to be selected from; but this is biology, and I leave it to biologists, who certainly will find this and several other applications of the doctrine of selection worth examining, and confirming or refuting. Difficulties as to the causes of the primitive pairing-seasons of mankind are fairly shown; and the fact that such seasons are now not always obvious is met by the argument that civilization, by so far equalising climate and food all the year round, has reduced their importance. Still, even civilized Europe shows traces of the winter and spring pairing-time, so much so that to regard them as survivals of an instinct inherited by men from lower ancestors is the modern reading of facts in nature long acknowledged.

"In the Spring a fuller crimson comes upon the robin's breast;
In the Spring the wanton lapwing gets himself another crest;
In the Spring a livelier iris changes on the burnished dove;
In the Spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love."

From its prominent place in the book, it seems possible that this analogy between man and lower animals as to pairing may have suggested to Dr. Westermarck to follow natural history further as a guide to the origin of marriage. At any rate, natural history justifies him in continuing with an adverse "criticism of the hypothesis of promiscuity," in which he puts the arguments fully, and at least in part convincingly, that no tribes of men in any normal state really live thus, and that the customs, relationship-terms, &c., which have been taken to prove primeval promiscuity really do not prove it. It cannot be denied that the doctrine of promiscuity or communal marriage, if interpreted in its extreme sense, would imply that primitive man lived at a lower level of social development than is found among the apes and other mammalia. This of course brings Dr. Westermarck into conflict with those who may hold the doctrine in question, and the conflict extends to other doctrines as to primitive society which may be held more or less in connexion with it. This controversial character is made more prominent by the remarks of Mr. A. R. Wallace in his laudatory Introduction:—

"The origin and development of human marriage have been discussed by such eminent writers as Darwin, Spencer, Morgan, Tylor, Lubbock, and many others. On some of the more important questions involved in it all these writers are in general accord, and this agreement has led to their opinions being widely accepted as if they were well-established conclusions of science. But on several of these points Mr. Westermarck has arrived at different, and sometimes diametrically opposite, conclusions, and he has done so after a most complete and painstaking investigation of all the available facts. With such an array of authority on the one side and a hitherto unknown student on the other, it will certainly be thought that all the probabilities are against the latter. Yet I venture to anticipate that the verdict of independent thinkers will on most of these disputed points be in favour of the new-comer, who has so boldly challenged the conclusions of some of our most esteemed writers."

If, however, Mr. Wallace will examine the opinions of the writers named, he will find their agreement with one another less close than he takes it to be. As to the leading question of the sexual relations of primitive man, he will find such terms as "promiscuity" used so as to vary much from their extreme sense. Darwin's position is here very instructive. As to the existence of communal marriage among savages now, he refuses (I think rightly) to admit it in any case without further evidence. As to the theoretical inference that it was the original state of man, he gives a hesitating assent (I think wrongly) to the theory which infers it from classificatory terms of relationship, as when not only the actual parents, but a whole group of kindred, are entitled fathers and mothers. But he adds a proviso on the part of himself and Sir John Lubbock that the promiscuity need not have been absolute, and then continues: "Men and women, like many of the lower animals, might formerly have entered into strict though temporary unions for each birth, &c." But this is the very fundamental principle of Dr. Westermarck's book. Mr. Wallace, in his desire to press the claims of the author he is introducing, has put him in the extremely awkward position of a young champion arising to overthrow the erroneous teachings of an army headed by Darwin, whereas Darwin is the very chief after whom the young champion is marching. There is another person named among the eminent writers who has read with some surprise the prophesy of his impending fate—namely, the writer of the present review. Though unwilling to divert attention from the book I am discussing, I am obliged to state briefly my position. For many years, during which I have been a diligent student of all that has been written on primitive society, I have tried to avoid expressing opinions on the main questions, through distrust of the means available. It will not be expected of me to enter here on a criticism of the various views which have been put forth; but I may say that since reading Mr. Wallace's Introduction I have again examined the Principles of Sociology of Mr. Herbert Spencer, one of the five writers mentioned in the list, and continue in the belief that, if the problems of primitive society are ever to be finally solved, this must be done by altogether stricter methods of reasoning, applied to better collections of evidence. Two years ago, indeed, I made an attempt in a paper on "The Development of Laws of Marriage and Descent," printed in the Journal of the Anthropological Institute, to obtain statistically from my own extensive collection of classified data some inferences as to the position of the paternal and maternal systems, exogamy, capture, &c. No one feels how unsatisfactory this paper is more than its author; but at any rate it is an attempt, not to work the theories of a particular school, but to get away from pre-conceived theories altogether. I wish my friend Mr. Wallace had seen it, for it might have prevented him from classing me as one of a unanimous scientific "set." It is used by Dr. Westermarck.

The most valuable chapters in the present volume deal with the prohibition of marriage between kindred. The tendency to avoid marriage between the nearest relatives is general among mankind, and blends through further stages of kinship into exogamy, which bars marriage between clansfolk on the male or female side. This tendency has been explained more or less unsuccessfully from different motives, from divine law or natural modesty, from preference for captive wives from outside or fear of the ill-effects of breeding in and in. Dr. Westermarck treats it as based on an instinctive aversion to marriage between persons living closely together from childhood. As is well known, custom among many peoples bars marriage between those of the same household or even neighbourhood, a striking case being that of the Panches of Bogota, where the men and women in each town reckoned themselves brothers and sisters and did not intermarry, but an actual brother and sister, if born in different towns, might marry. The principle is well stated in a passage here quoted from Prof. Robertson Smith, as to the ancient Arab custom of marriage between half-brothers and sisters, who under polygamy would not be members of the same household. He remarks, "Whatever is the origin of bars to marriage, they certainly are early associated with the feeling that it is indecent for housemates to intermarry." A disinclination to marriage within the household in the civilised world is recognised by popular sayings, and there is a passage in Montesquieu as to marriage between first cousins being natural or not according as they live in the same house or not. The manner in which Dr. Westermarck handles the evidence connecting an instinctive aversion to intermarriage in the household with the rule of intermarriage between the kinsfolk who generally live together there, and extends it to the rule of exogamy in the whole clan, is very ingenious. He is even prepared to explain the origin of such instinctive aversion to close intermarriage. Taking it as generally admitted that close interbreeding is detrimental to the species,

"the law of natural selection must inevitably have operated. Among the ancestors of man, as among other animals, there was no doubt a time when blood-relationship was no bar to sexual intercourse. But variations, here as elsewhere, would naturally present themselves; and those of our ancestors who avoided in-and-in-breeding would survive, while the others would gradually decay and ultimately perish."

Thus an instinct would be developed which "would display itself simply as an aversion on the part of individuals to unions with others with whom they lived; but these, as a matter of fact, would be blood-relations, so that the result would be the survival of the fittest."

Here, indeed, the arising of a class of individuals who not only avoid in-and-in-breeding but transmit the aversion to their offspring, seems to me just what needs to be accounted for and not to be taken for granted. But, at any rate, Dr. Westermarck is well on the track, and I for one hope he will be able to devote the years of labour needed for working out the whole statistical data of the subject.

Dr. Westermarck judges of the origin and development of the family, on the principle of following on from the lower orders of mammalia. It is easily understood that his method leads him on the lines of a patriarchal system, in general accord with Darwin, whose ancestral men live in small communities, each with a single wife or, if powerful, with several or many. Dr. Westermarck's argument from the habits of existing savages and the distribution of the sexes among mankind, however, is more in favour of monogamy being the early type of human life, later stages of civilisation tending for ages to favour polygyny, which eventually, however, tends to revert toward the earlier form. This argument must here be mentioned rather than discussed, but it may be noticed that the somewhat extreme stress he lays on paternal guardianship in constituting family life makes him as strong a patriarchalist as Maine. This leads him to minimise and explain away the states of society in which the father's influence is not paramount, especially where the wife remains in her own family. Had he had the opportunity of visiting a matriarchal community, he would realise how the father's position in his wife's house must make his power over her and her children subordinate to that of her brothers and uncles living there, who naturally make common cause against him. There is, so far as I know, no proof that the present matriarchal communities in America or Asia represent the primitive state of mankind, nor that their existing rules of kinship on the mother's side justifies us in arguing back to a primeval period when there was no recognised paternity; but, at any rate, the maternal system is still to be found as a well-marked social order in the world, while traces of female descent and the like show that in past times it was immensely more prevalent. To acknowledge this is to admit that the patria potestas (to use the term vaguely) has not always and everywhere been the leading social principle. Polyandry, an abnormal custom on which so much speculation as to the early state of mankind has been unsoundly based, is here fairly treated according to the facts, which reduce it to its really small dimensions.

In noticing a work so large and so heavily weighted with information, many topics discussed must be passed over; but there are two points to be recommended to the attention of biologists. One is the attempt to get rid of the well-known difficulty known to students of Darwin's theory—that of harmonising with natural selection the sexual selection which seems to run across it with results harmful to the species. Dr. Westermarck argues that, though the sexual colours, odours, and sounds of animals are to a certain extent harmful to the species by attracting enemies, they more than counterbalance this harm by enabling the sexes to find one another, and thus become developed by selection. Mr. Wallace, who ought to know, values this suggestion, differing somewhat from his own view, though in general harmony with it. The other subject is the argument differing from Darwin's, that the different standards of beauty among mankind are due to racial differences, these again being the result of natural selection operating on the congenital variations of mankind, so as to preserve and intensify characters suited to the conditions under which the various races lived. The distinguishing character of Dr. Westermarck's whole treatise is his vigorous effort to work the biology-side and the culture-side of anthropology into one connected system; and there can be no doubt of the value of the resulting discussions, which will develop further as the inquiry goes on in this direction.

EDWARD B. TYLOR.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE INTRODUCTION OF BUDDHISM INTO CHINA.

London: Sept. 21, 1891.

Mr. Herbert J. Allen's article on "Similarity between Buddhism and Early Taoism" had not been seen nor heard of by me when my paper on the present subject was published in the Babylonian and Oriental Record. It would have given me great pleasure to point out where we agree and where we cease to do so. Now that I have read his remarks (ACADEMY, September 12), I hasten to declare that he has really indicated before me the Sienmen, as Sramana, in the twenty-eighth book of Tzema Tsien, and also in the sixth book of the same work. On the other hand, I cannot agree with his alleged disclosure of proofs of the entrance of Buddhism into China in 221, neither with the date of 215 B.C. for the appearance of Tze-Vrao, the Buddhist missionary, which I have mentioned as having occurred in 219 B.C.

The facts are by themselves interesting and worth recording; they are given as follows in the two books cited of the Historical Records of Szema Tsien.

In 221 B.C., She Huang-ti, having pacified the empire, collects all the military weapons (which were then made chiefly of bronze) in his capital city, Hien-yang; he melts them and makes from them metal bells with their supports, and twelve "metal men" each weighing 1000 shih. Nothing more is said by Tzema Tsien on the subject; the remainder is the addition of commentators. One of these quotes an extract from the "Annals of the Han Dynasty," section of the Five Elements: In the twenty-sixth year (of She Huang-ti, i.e., 221 B.C.) some tall men, five tchang (i.e., above fifty feet) in height, with feet six teh'ih (i.e., cubits) in length, all barbarians dressed like the Tsihs, twelve altogether, were seen at Lin-tao; it was for this reason that he (She Huang-ti) collected all the weapons and implements, and with the metal made their images. Another commentator, in the "Annals of the Later Han Dynasty," says that these "copper-men" were real weng-tchung (i.e., statues placed in rows leading to a palace or a tomb, and so called since A.D. 237). It is not stated that these tall men seen at Lin-tao in 221 B.C. were metal images, or even images or statues, or in any way connected with Buddhism. The Annals of the Sung Dynasty (A.D. 420-429) state positively that it was only after the Han period that Buddhist statues were made, and the metal-men cast by order of the Huang-ti are not alluded to in the collection of extracts concerning such statues which I have consulted. Therefore I do not see how Mr. Allen can claim to have discovered in this fact that Buddhism was introduced into China in 221 B.C. He says that these statues were metal or golden images of (the) Buddha. His authority for this statement is not mentioned either in his article or in his letter. The introduction of Buddhism in 221 B.C. is quite possible; but if Mr. Allen has no other proof to give than the above story, the fact is still unproven.

I do not know if the geographical position of Lin-tao has been taken into consideration by Mr. Allen; but if it has, he has omitted to mention it. In 239 B.C. Tcheng Ts'in Wang, the future She Huang-ti, had removed thither the population of Tun-liu (Shansi's.), a city which he destroyed

(cf. She Ki, Kiv. 6, fol. 3). In the geographical arrangements of the Ts'in Dynasty (221 B.C.), Lin-tao gave its name to a Kiuu having its centre near the present Si-Ho hien, and including Min tchou, in the extreme south-west corner of the modern Kansuh province, near the borders of Shensi and of Tibet. It derived its name from the Tao river, and it stands on the road to the sources of the Huang-ho, which were not explored before the time of Tchang Kien (122 B.C.). The region was hardly known, and being inhabited by Kiang (Tibetan) tribes, was not looked upon without awe. No evidence or any basis for inference favours the existence of any Buddhist settlement there in 221 B.C. Buddhism was not introduced into the Tarym valley, or Chinese Turkestan, before 158 B.C., nor into Tibet before A.D. 227. Now it was only from one of these two countries that the missionaries could have reached Lin-tao, as there was no road as yet from the alternative country of Shuh, through which I have shown reasons to believe that they really came into China.

The following event is that which I have mentioned in my paper, and which I think is the earliest evidence available. In the third year of his imperial reign (219 B.C.) She Huang-ti goes to the Tai shan and to the seashore of Puh-hai (Gulf of Petchili, near Lai tchou) to offer sacrifices. Then he requests the presence of the holy men, Sienmen and his companions (She Ki, Kiv. 28, fol. 10). On a following page (fol. 11) Tzema Tsien gives Tze Kao as the name of this Shaman.

In the thirtieth year of Tsin She Huang-ti (217 B.C.), the Western Shaman Li-fang, with seventeen others, arrives at Loh-yang with Sanskrit books (cf. Fa lin, P'o sie lun, and without date, the Fah wan tchu lin).

In his thirty-second year (i.e., 215 B.C.) She Huang-ti goes to Kieh-shih (in Liao-si, near the present Tcheng-teh, Upper Petchili), and from there sends Lu-sheng, a native of Yen, to fetch the Sienmen Kao-she (cf. She-Ki, Kiv. 6, fol. 18 verso). Mr. Allen says Kaoshih or Tzekao, because he wants to identify the latter with the former; but it is not so in the text of Tzema Tsien, where the expeditions of She Huang-ti in 219 and 215 are quite distinct in different regions (cf. She Ki, Kiv. 6, fol. 14 and 18, and Kiv. 28, fol. 10 and 12); and there is no evidence that Tzi'-Kao' of 219, and Kao'-shih' of 215 B.C. (which names I give in Pekinese) were one and the same man.

The first Buddhist statue heard of in Chinese history is the golden idol carried off on the Hiung-nu Prince of Hiu-tu (north of present Liang-tchou in Kansuh), by the young commander Ho-Kiu-ping, in the spring of 121 B.C. The (probable) statement that it was Buddhist, which is not in the original text of the Tsien Han Shu, is an addition of a commentator.

The expedition of Siu-fu to the Fairy Islands in 219 B.C. is considered by Mr. Allen as Buddhist. The words of Tzema Tsien do not favour this view; but as the matter is peculiarly interesting if taken in connexion with other events, I must leave it for another occasion.

Shamans, or Buddhist missionaries, were spoken of, as we have seen, on three different occasions, namely in 219, 217, and 215 B.C. The oldest is that which I have mentioned in my special paper, and I do not see any reason to modify my statement that this is the earliest date hitherto known for the introduction of Buddhism in China.

After 215 B.C. no further mention of Sienmen occurs, I think, until 112 B.C., and then only in a passing way. Luan-ta, an adept in magical arts, and a native of Kiao-tung (near the present P'ing-tu tchou in Shantung peninsula) was presented to the credulous emperor Han Wu-ti, whom he persuaded that he had travelled by sea, and seen the residence of Ngan-K'i sheng (a famous magician of the fourth century) and of the Sienmen (cf. She Ki, Kiv. 12, fol. 6 v., and Kiv. 28, fol. 28 v.). His boasting shows, in any case, if nothing more, that Sienmen had ceased at that time to inhabit any part of the Chinese dominion, and that their former presence in 219-215 B.C. had been an unsuccessful attempt.

TERRIEN DE LACOUPERIE.

ON THE WORD "BUJJHAKA" IN THE DĪPAVAMSA.

Dedham, Essex: Sept. 19, 1891.

"Orohetaṇa Suppāraṃ sataśatai ca te tadā vipulam sakkārasammānam akamsu te Suppārakā . . .

Tesu sakkariyamānesu Vijayo ca sahāyikā sabbe luddāni kamāni kurumānā na bujjhaka."
(Dīpavamsa, ix. 16-17.)

The following is Prof. Oldenberg's translation:

"The people of Suppāra then invited these seven hundred men to disembark, and offered them lavish hospitality and honours. During this hospitable reception Vijaya and all his followers unnoticed (?) committed barbarous deeds."

The editor suggests that na-bujjha-kā is equivalent to na-buddha-kā* "unnoticed." But this sense of the word deprives the passage of all point. It is not at all probable that Vijaya and his lawless band could commit the foul deeds attributed to them without being noticed. Their treacherous actions did not pass unnoticed, but were well known to the people of Suppāra, who threatened to slaughter them.

The meaning of the last verse, in the passage quoted above, is this: though Vijaya and his band were guests of, and not at war with, the folk who so generously entertained them, yet they shamefully ill-treated them.

The term na-bujjha-ka = a-vujjhaka = a-vujjjhaka = a-yuddhya-ka "not fighting" (compare Sanskrit a-yuddha), hence "not at war." The change of bujjha for vujjha is like that of buddha for vuddha "old." But vujjha represents an older vujjha "battle," "fighting." For the interchange of v and y we may compare āvudha with ayudha "weapon."

Childers gives no examples of vujjha, but under yuddha he notices the occurrence of vujjhāya for yuddhāya (in the Mahāvamsa), the dative of a noun derived from yudhya (?). There is good authority for the use of vujjha with the sense of yuddha: "Tumhe mā bhāyatha vujjhe sati aham jānāmi" (Jāt. iii. 4). We also find vujjhana in Jāt. iii., p. 82, ll. 6, 18, "So . . . elakānam vujjhāna thānam sampāpuni." With vujjhana, which corresponds in meaning to Sanskrit yodhana, we may compare bujjhana (Mil. 194), as if from buddhyana*, with the sense of Sanskrit bodhana. It is quite possible, since vujjhana and bujjhana do not belong to the oldest remains of Pāli, that they are formed from the stem found in the verbs bujjhati and vujjhati. Compare vujjhāpana in Milinda, p. 178.

In Sumangala, p. 85 (Digha, i. 1, 13), nir-buddha (explained by malla-yuddha "wrestling," "boxing") answers in meaning to Sanskrit niryuddha, though in form it corresponds to a Sanskrit niryuddha, through an intermediate nir-vuddha. See Milinda, p. 232; Cullavagga, i. 13, 2; Suttavibhanga, i., p. 180.

R. MORRIS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE Leopoldinisch-Karolinisch Academy of Natural History at Hallé has conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Philosophy upon Mr. Thiselton-Dyer, Director of Kew Gardens, in recognition of the great services rendered by him to botany.

WE have received several recently published parts of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal (London: Kegan Paul) containing the continuation of the late E. T. Atkinson's elaborate catalogue of the coleopterous insects of the Oriental region, with lists of the families of water-beetles, Dytiscidae and Gyrinidae; also of the Paussidae (fifty-one species) Hydrophilidae, Silphidae, Corylophidae, Scydmaenidae, Pselaphidae (extending to twenty-two pages), and Staphylinidae; also Surgeon J. H. T. Walsh's memoir on certain spiders which mimic ants; Mr. W. Doherty's list of the butterflies of Engano, with remarks on the Danaidae; and Mr. George King's continuation of his "Materials for a Flora of the Malayan Peninsula" devoted to the Malvaceae; and a list of the Diamond Island Plants, by Mr. D. Prain.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE next number of the Asiatic Quarterly will contain an official report of the proceedings of the recent Oriental Congress, including papers that were not noticed at the time in the newspapers, such as Mr. Flinders Petrie's second paper, "The Importance of Epigraphy in Egyptology," illustrated by his recent discoveries; Mr. Claire's visit to the interior of Sumatra; Sir Monier Williams's and Prof. Stanley Leathes's schemes of transliteration; Dr. Taylor's paper on the "Pirke Aboth," &c.

ACCORDING to a telegram from Irkutsk, the Russian scientific expedition to Northern Mongolia, under the leadership of M. Radloff, has completed the objects of its mission. The expedition proceeded along the Orkhon river as far as Karakorum, the ancient residence of the Mongolian emperors, and after pushing on to the Gobi desert, made explorations in the region to the south of the Changai range, where a number of antique bas-reliefs and Runic inscriptions were found. M. Radloff eventually made his way back to Russian territory by way of Pekin. M. Jandrinzeff, a member of the expedition, has returned to Kiachta with collections of considerable value.

FINE ART.

THE ART MAGAZINES.

THE Art Journal for this month does honour more often due than paid to the rising school of American art, or perhaps more properly speaking of American artists. Mr. George Hitchcock, who is beginning to be known even in England, is the subject of an excellent article by Mr. Lionel Robinson. His "Maternité," one of the most remarkable and worst hung of the pictures in the Royal Academy this year, is fairly well rendered in photogravure, and his famous "Culture des Tulipes" and exquisite "The Manger" are "processed" in the text. Mr. Boyes' account of Mr. Scharf, the illustrated article on the grand scenery of the Sounds of New Zealand, and the continuation of Mrs. Ady's "Pilgrim's Way," make a very interesting number.

MR. WALTER ARMSTRONG has not much to say about Mr. David Murray in the Magazine of Art, and little about his work except that it wants sympathy with all that makes for depth in art. Miss Marion Hepworth Dixon is much more communicative about the late M. Charles Chaplin. Mr. Claude Phillips' résumé of the sculpture of the year is well done; and Mr. F. G. Stephens chats pleasantly about Knoke, a subject which finds a congenial illustrator in Mr. Fulleylove.

THE American monthly, the Art Amateur (London: Griffith Farran & Co.), continues to be the best publication of the kind that we know. It sets before its subscribers every month a large number of well-chosen illustrations of the best modern pictures mixed with clever sketches, and gives a large amount of excellent information on art topics which should be useful to art amateurs of the best class. Specially interesting to us on this side of the channel are the glimpses it gives of the art movement in New York. Some sketches by members of the Art Students' League in New York given in a recent number speak well for the system of study pursued by the league. They are full of life and style.

THE last Heft of the Jahrbuch der Koniglich Preussischen Kunstammlungen would be notable if only for the admirable engraving by E. M. Geyger after the wonderful head of a young Venetian, painted by Antonello da Messina, which is one of the well-known treasures of the Museum at Berlin. Dr. Bode, who contributes a note on this picture, has another paper on a marble relief of Apollo and Marsyas (a copy of an ancient gem), now in the possession of Herr Z. von Lippart, which is supposed to be an early work of Michael Angelo. The other papers, like those by Jarl Springer on a sketch-book of Marten von Heemskereck and by Paul Seidel on the restoration of old Berlin tapestries, maintain the high character of this periodical for careful study and research.

L'Art is principally occupied with the sales of the year, but it contains some charming reproductions of sketches by Watteau, &c. It also bears testimony to the great success which has attended the cleaning of the noble Longford Holbein in the National Gallery.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE AMORITES AND HEBREWS IN EARLY CUNEIFORM INSCRIPTIONS.

Queen's College, Oxford: Sept. 21, 1891.

Phoenician mythology, as described by Philo Byblius and quoted by Eusebius, declared that in the fourth generation after the Creation giants existed who gave their names to the mountains of Cassius, Lebanon, Anti-Lebanon, and Brathy. The order in which the names are enumerated shows that Brathy must be a title of Hermon, "the Sanctuary," the most southern of the great mountains of Phoenicia. Many years ago, Sir Henry Rawlinson proposed to identify with the name of Brathy that of Martu, also written Marte and Marta, which denotes the western land of Syria in the Accado-Sumerian texts.

I am now able to verify this identification. The Tel el-Amarna tablets have made it clear that the geographical name which represents Syria in the Assyrian inscriptions, and has hitherto been read Akharrû, "the West," was really pronounced Amurrû in the earlier cuneiform documents, whatever may have been its pronunciation in the later age of Assyrian history. It denoted the land of "the Amorites," whose territory extended, according to the letters of Tel el-Amarna, northward of what was afterwards Galilee, and eastward of the cities of Phoenicia. To the south of it came Kinakkhi or Canaan.

Now Amurru is the regular translation of the Sumerian Martu; and since we learn from Deut. iii. 9 that Hermon was in the country of the Amorites, who called it Shenir (Senir), we need hesitate no longer to believe that Brathy and Martu are the same word.

Shenir is called Saniru in an inscription of Shalmaneser II. (W. A. I. iii. 5. 6. 45.), and must be identified with the 'Sanir of certain old geographical lists, in which it is stated to be equivalent to the country of 'Subur or 'Subarti, a name which is frequently written 'Su-edinna, "the plateau of 'Su." The letter of the king of Mitanni found at Tel el-Amarna, has informed us where this "plateau of 'Su" was (see ACADEMY, Jan. 25, 1890); it was the district which corresponded to the Aram-Naharaim of the Old Testament, and stretched from the land of the Amorites to the eastern side of the Euphrates. In 'Subur, which the Semitic Babylonians transformed into the feminine 'Subarti, we must accordingly see a name which included both the "plateau of 'Su" and also the land of the Amorites, and therefore answered pretty exactly to the Biblical Aram in its widest sense.

'Sanir and 'Subarti are further ideographically written 'Su-NER, which was probably pronounced 'Surra; but a play was intended upon the pronunciation of 'Sanir, as well as upon the meaning of 'Su-edinna, since NER represents the Assyrian padanu, a word which we find in the Old Testament in the name of Padan-Aram. Padanu has the double signification of "field" or "plateau" and "road," the latter reminding us of the name of the great city of Kharran or Haran, derived from the "high road" which led through it from east to west. The ideograph NER twice repeated represented Tidnum, an Accadian name of Amurru, the land of the Amorites; and, as Hommel and Amiaud have pointed out, Tidnum must be identified with Tidanum, mentioned in the early Sumerian inscriptions of Gudea found at Tello. It is possible that Tidnum claims connection with Dhidhi, stated in an old geographical list to be a mountain of Amurru.

In this same geographical list (W. A. I. ii. 51. 3.) Khabur is conjoined with Amanus as being the mountainous district from which cedar-wood was brought. Khabur must be connected with Khubur, which according to an ancient geographical tablet (W. A. I. ii. 50. 51.) was synonymous with the land of 'Subarti. As the Sumerian affix of locality is attached to the name, it is one which must go back to the Accado-Sumerian period.

Twenty years ago Dr. Haigh asked me if Khubur were not the Biblical Eber. At that time it was impossible to answer in the affirmative, partly because no instance was then known in which a Babylonian kh answered to a Hebrew 'ayyin, partly because 'SU-NER was explained by Elamtum, which it was natural to suppose meant the country of Elam. But we now know better. The tablets of Tel el-Amarna have shown us that a Canaanitish or Hebrew 'ayyin was regularly represented by kh in early Babylonian, and that "the plateau of 'Su" had nothing to do with Elam. Elamtum, "the highlands," is, in fact, only the explanation of the word, Subar or 'Suburra, which is elsewhere interpreted elatum, "the high (country)," (W. A. I. ii. 30. 20, 22.) It will thus be an equivalent of the Biblical Aram, if we adopt for the latter the signification usually assigned to it.

The existence of Khubur or Eber, "the Hebrew," in Aram-Naharaim in the Sumerian period of Babylonian history, throws a flood of light on many passages of the Old Testament, including, it may be, the reference to Eber in the prophecy of Balaam (Numb. xxiv. 24.) It may also serve to explain the Hebraic character of the language of the inscriptions of Panammu, discovered by the German explorers at Sinjerli in the neighbourhood of Mount Amanus.

While the name of Khubur goes back to Sumerian times, that of Amurrû is of Semitic origin. We may, perhaps, infer from this that the Amorite settlement in Syria was of later date than the first Babylonian campaigns in the West. However that may be, it is possible that in the two letters of the Tel el-Amarna collection, which are written in the language of Arzapi (more probably to be read Arzawa), we have examples of the lost language of the Amorites. At all events, a letter addressed to an Amorite about Amorite affairs, a translation of which I am publishing in the next volume of the Records of the Past, is written in the same peculiar form of cuneiform script as the letters from Arzapi, which seems to indicate that it was the form of script in use among the Amorites. If so, it is interesting to note that the Arzapi forms of the possessive pronouns of the first two persons, mi and tu, ti, have a curiously Indo-European appearance.

A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE two next numbers of Mr. Griggs's Journal of Indian Art, which are to be published together in November, will be devoted to illustrations of the Prince of Wales's Indian presents. They will also include sketches of Marlborough House and Sandringham, as well as portraits of the Prince and Princess of Wales. The letterpress is written by Sir George Birdwood.

MR. LOUIS FAGAN, of the British Museum, announces a course of three lectures, at St. George's Hall, on line-engraving, etching, and mezzotint, illustrated with reproductions shown by the lantern.

IN view of the attention now being paid to technical instruction by county councils and similar bodies, the Guild and School of Handicraft has issued a circular, stating that it is prepared to supply competent craftsmen as instructors in the elementary handling of different materials, such as wood, metal, clay, &c., and also in such work as carpentry, joinery, wrought and hammered ironwork, carving, modelling, &c. It invites visits to the workshops at Essex House, Mile End-road, E.

A SERIES of articles on "Monumental Brasses," accompanied by illustrations in facsimile, has been commenced in the Building World. The first of these, which appears in the October issue, deals with the famous D'Abernon brasses, of which a photograph is given showing their actual state.

SOME frescoes have just been discovered in the Church of the Angels at Lugano adorning the walls of a chapel. They belong to the Louvain School, and represent the Flight into Egypt, the Adoration of the Magi, and the Nativity. The Italian Government has decided to restore these paintings, and to entrust the work to Signor Masella, the architect.

IN consequence of the difficulties arising from the numerous laws existing in different provinces in Italy as to the exportation of works of art, the Italian Government proposes, it is said, to enact a fresh law, applicable to the whole of Italy, by which a duty of ten per cent. will be charged on such exports, provided the Government has not exercised its right of pre-emption.

THE Italian Government has purchased the Sciarra Gallery (which contains "The Violinist" by Raphael), and also some important pictures from the collection of the Prince Borghese.

THE STAGE.

"THE AMERICAN" AT THE OPERA COMIQUE.

MR. HENRY JAMES has prepared an elaborate disappointment for his admirers. The announcement of a drama by the most carefully undramatic novelist of the day was certainly a little startling. Mr. James shares with Mr.

Howells the distinction of being one of the two heads of the very modern school of story-telling which considers it unbecoming to have any story to tell. The school is most interesting in its way, though the products of the school, it must be confessed, are often more appropriately described by some other word than interesting. With Mr. James it is partly a question of length. His short and comparatively short stories are generally full of charm, of acute humour, and of minute observation. He always writes with distinction, and if his long novels are apt to bore or exasperate the reader before he has finished them, that is only because Mr. James has miscalculated our power of enduring and enjoying fine subtleties. It is like drinking Chartreuse out of champagne glasses. From Daisy Miller to Beltrajio, Mr. James's nouvelles have been so delightful that we have never cared to press him for the stories he so artfully evades telling. It is enough for us that his heroines had all those fascinating little emotions about the course of action they were not going to take. When they happened to act, they acted, of course, quite differently from the way in which they had intended; and we felt that it was quite natural, and that we had always expected them to cheat our expectations. But what is admissible in a novel is not always admissible in a play.

Mr. James has constructed his play as he constructs his novels. Everything happens, nothing is prepared for or led up to. The dialogue is of course admirable, at times a little trifling, a little insistent on the importance of not very important notes, but, compared with the usual stage dialogue, simply admirable. But without having the exquisite slightness of a piece of dramatic bric-a-brac like "Beau Austin," Mr. James's play has no substance. He has attempted too much and too little. Not content with giving us a charcoal drawing, he has worked up his sketch into a picture, and he has introduced some strangely crude effects of colour. There is a first act, in a Parisian parlour, which, as a sort of mild farce, like a well-bred drawing of Mr. du Maurier, is quite amusing. The second act, at the Hôtel de Bellegarde, promises some action, more or less serious, and suggests the possibility of interesting developments. The third act, at the American's, is not amusing, and can scarcely be taken seriously. Its action and its accidents are on loan from the Adelphi. In the fourth act everything falls to pieces: people come in and out of doors, curse one another, kiss one another, hand round incriminating letters and finally destroy them, announce extremely unpleasant horrors, and elope melodramatically. And in all this tangle of irresponsible incident, there is but one really distinct and noticeable character—Christopher Newman, the American, quite admirably played by Mr. Edward Compton. The man is certainly very human, he is himself throughout, and we can imagine him only as he was presented to us by Mr. Compton. But look at the vague, all but effaced, heroine, Claire, Comtesse de Cintré! An unconvincing character, she was played without conviction by Miss Elizabeth Robins. Has the Adelphi already set its fatal mark upon the cultured and original actress to whom we are so memorable, so absolutely convincing, a presentation of Hedda Gabler? Miss Adrienne Dairrolles was charming—how could she help being so?—as the not very important French girl; Miss Bateman did all she could for the Marquise de Bellegarde, and would have done more had more opportunity been given her; Miss Louise Moodie made a most genteel, discreet, and sympathetic old family servant; and the actors might easily have done a little better or a little worse than they did.

Mr. James's experiment upon the public is curious. Here is a man who writes stories with infinite art, who has studied the stage in England and in France, who has written penetrating essays on actors and acting; and yet, when it comes to the construction of an actual play—the mere stage-carpentry which a stage-carpenter of the rank of Messrs. Buchanan and Sims would never bungle over—here is the man of letters as utterly out of his element as the stage-carpenters would be in their endeavour to write a piece of literature like, let us say, Roderick Hudson. Perhaps, after all, it is less curious that this should have been the case than that Mr. James should have failed to realise it himself. Is it conceivable that the play satisfied the author of the novel? If so, then there is something new to be said on the strange way in which self-criticism deserts those who are in perilous need of it.

ARTHUR SYMONS.

STAGE NOTES.

WE understand that Mr. Henry Irving's production of "Henry VIII.," for which most elaborate preparations are being made, is hardly likely to take place until the new year. He will not himself return to the Lyceum before the second week in December.

THE news seems to be true that Lord Tennyson has written a "comedy" for the Daly company, which will first be performed in America, with Miss Ada Rehan in the principal part.

THE second performance of the Independent Theatre Society will be given at the Royalty Theatre on Friday next, October 9, when M. Zola's drama, "Thérèse Raquin," translated by Mr. A. Teixeira de Mattos, and specially revised for the occasion, by Mr. George Moore, will be produced under the direction of Mr. H. de Lange.

MUSIC.

MESSRS. NOVELLO & Co. propose to issue a Mozart centenary number of the Musical Times on December 5. Mr. Joseph Bennett will contribute a sketch of the composer's life, and an essay on his genius and works. The illustrations will include a portrait etched by Mr. Herkomer.

Technical Study in the Art of Pianoforte Playing. By C. A. Ehrenfechter. (W. Reeves.) This little book discusses pianoforte playing on "Deppe's principles." Deppe was discovered by Miss Amy Fay; and in her delightful book Music Study in Germany, she devoted a whole chapter to the master who taught her more than Kullak, Tausig, or even Liszt. What special advantages Mr. Ehrenfechter may have enjoyed of becoming acquainted with Deppe and his system we know not; but so far as the book under notice is concerned, there is nothing specially new or startling. Miss Fay told us about arm, wrist, fingers, tone, scales, &c. Mr. Ehrenfechter makes many remarks on the subject of pianoforte playing generally; many of these are true but not new, as for instance when, in reference to practising, he tells us that "it is quality, not quantity, that is required." The author appears to have had much experience as a teacher, but his attacks on various systems show zeal rather than discretion; many matters are discussed in a dogmatic and, at times, not over courteous tone towards those whose system differs from that of Deppe. The book does not enter into sufficient detail to satisfy either teachers or pupils. Surely everyone will not agree with Mr. Ehrenfechter when he says a beautiful touch is not a natural gift, but "open to all who wish for it to obtain it." And we do not approve of his uniform fingering for the scales; his observations on fingering generally, are, indeed, the least satisfactory part of his book.

LITERARY OPINION.

An Illustrated Review of English and Foreign Literature

Price 3d. Monthly.

Annual Subscription, including Christmas Number, Four Shillings, post free.

* * The above amount includes the cost of Postage to the Continent of Europe, the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and most of the British Colonies.

CONTENTS for OCTOBER.

- "A BELGIAN DÉCADENT." By "TASMA."
 "THE FEUD." An Unpublished Poem by ADAM LINDSAY GORDON. (With Portrait of Gordon and Illustration of his Bush Home.)
 PORTRAIT and CRITICAL MEMOIR of MARION CRAWFORD.
 AUSTRALIAN LITERATURE and AUSTRALIAN AUTHORSHIP. By A. PATCHETT MARTIN.
 THE CONDITIONS of CRITICISM.
 A THEATRICAL WORTHY. (With Two Portraits of E. L. Blanchard.)
 A MAORI ROMANCE.
 RICHARD WAGNER. (With Portrait.)
 CROZET'S VOYAGE.
 AN AMBITIOUS PLAYWRIGHT.
 BOOKS of the BOUDOIR. (Illustrated.)
 POETRY of the MONTH.
 OLLA PODRIDA. (Illustrated.)
 A LITERARY GOSSIP.
 A MUSICAL MEDLEY.
 A MONTH at the PLAY.
 OUR CONTINENTAL LETTER.
 OUR AUSTRALIAN LETTER.
 AMERICAN NOTES.
 CANADIANA.
 CORRESPONDENCE.

Among the Contributors to LITERARY OPINION may be mentioned:—

Dr. ALEXANDER, Lord Bishop of Derry; Mr. J. M. BARRIE; MACKENZIE BELL; VERNON BLACKBURN; Dr. J. G. BOURINOT (Ottawa); Madame AUGUSTE COUVREUR ("TASMA"); S. E. DAWSON (Montreal); Sir CHARLES and Lady DILKE; CHARLES L. GRAVES; JOSEPH HATTON; Dr. ALEX. H. JAPP; MARTIN GRIFFIN (Canada); Mr. and Mrs. PATCHETT MARTIN; PHILIP MENNELL; Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED; GEORGE R. PARKIN; GILBERT PARKER; J. ALMON RITCHIE (Canada) Mr. and Mrs. ST. LOE STRACHEY; Professor HERBERT A. STRONG; JOHN STUART; HENRY GYLES TURNER (Melbourne); A. M. TOPP (Melbourne); H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON; THEODORE WATTS; His Honour Chief Justice WAY, D.C.L. (South Australia); and THOMAS WOOLNER, R.A.

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO.,
 PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

FROM MR. WALTER SCOTT'S CATALOGUE.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

Edited by HAVELOCK ELLIS.
 Crown 8vo, Cloth. 3s. 6d. each; Half-Morocco, 6s. 6d. Illustrated.
THE EVOLUTION OF SEX. By Prof. Patrick Geddes and J. Arthur Thomson.
ELECTRICITY IN MODERN LIFE. By G. W. de Tunzelmann.
THE ORIGIN OF THE ARYANS. By Dr. Taylor.
PHYSIOGNOMY AND EXPRESSION. By P. Mantogazza.
EVOLUTION AND DISEASE. By J. Bland Sutton, F.R.C.S.
THE VILLAGE COMMUNITY. By G. L. Gomme.
THE CRIMINAL. By Havelock Ellis.
SANITY AND INSANITY. By Dr. C. Mercier.
HYPNOTISM. By Dr. Albert Moll (Berlin).
MANUAL TRAINING. By Dr. C. M. Woodward.
THE SCIENCE OF FAIRY TALES. By Edwin Sidney
PRIMITIVE FOLK. By Elie Reclus. [Hartland.
BACTERIA AND THEIR PRODUCTS. By Dr. Sims Woodhead.
EVOLUTION OF MARRIAGE. By Letourneau.
EDUCATION AND HEREDITY. By J. M. Guyau.
THE MAN OF GENIUS. By Prof. Lombroso.
THE GRAMMAR OF SCIENCE. By Prof. Karl Pearson. [Shortly.]

IBSEN'S PROSE DRAMAS.

Edited by WILLIAM ARCHER.
 COMPLETE IN FIVE VOLUMES.
 Uniform and Authoritative English Edition.
 Crown 8vo, Cloth, 3s. 6d. per Vol.
 Vol. I.
 With Portrait of the Author and Biographical Introduction.
 "A DOLL'S HOUSE," "THE LEAGUE OF YOUTH" (never before translated), and "THE PILLARS OF SOCIETY."
 Vol. II.
 "GHOSTS," "AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE," and "THE WILD DUCK." With an Introductory Note.
 Vol. III.
 "LADY INGER OF OSTRAT," "THE VIKINGS AT HELGELAND," "THE PRETENDERS." With an Introductory Note and Portrait of Ibsen.
 Vol. IV.
 "EMPEROR AND GALILEAN." A World-Historic Drama.
 The Fifth and last Volume of this Series, containing ROSMERSJOLM, THE LADY FROM THE SEA, and MR. WILHELM ARCHER'S translation of HEDDA GABLER is now ready.
 Set of 5 Vols. in Case, 17s. 6d.; also 5 Vols. in Half-Morocco, in Case, 32s. 6d.

THE CAMELOT SERIES.

Edited by ERNEST RHYS.
 IN SHILLING VOLUMES, CROWN 8VO.
 The CAMELOT SERIES may be had in the following Bindings:
 Cloth, cut edges, 1s.; Cloth, uncut edges, 1s.; Red Roan, gilt edges, 3s.; and in Half-Morocco, gilt top, antique (in a variety of new reproductions of old tints).
 Introductions by JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, RICHARD JEFFERIES, WALT WHITMAN, DR. FURNIVALL, JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, DR. RICHARD GARNETT, &c., &c.
Romance of King Arthur.
Thoreau's Walden.
English Opium-Eater.
Landor's Conversations.
Plutarch's Lives.
Religio Medici, &c.
Shelley's Letters.
Prose Writings of Swift.
My Study Windows.
Great English Painters.
Lord Byron's Letters.
Essays by Leigh Hunt.
Longfellow's Prose.
Great Musical Composers.
Marcus Aurelius.
Specimen Days in America.
White's Selborne.
Defoe's Singleton.
Mazzini's Essays.
Prose Writings of Heine.
Reynolds' Discourses.
Papers of Steele and Addison.
Burns's Letters.
Volsunga Saga.
Sartor Resartus.
Writings of Emerson.
Seneca's Morals.
Democratic Vistas.
Life of Lord Herbert.
English Prose.
Ibsen's Pillars of Society.
Irish Fairy and Folk Tales.
Epictetus.
The English Poets.
Essays of Dr. Johnson.
Essays of William Hazlitt
Landor's Pentameron, &c.
Poe's Tales and Essays.
Vicar of Wakefield.
Political Orations.
Chesterfield's Letters.
Thoreau's Week.
Stories from Carleton.
Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table.
Jane Eyre.
Elizabethan England.
Writings of Thomas Davis
Spence's Anecdotes.
More's Utopia.
Sadi's Gulistan.
English Folk and Fairy Tales.
Northern Studies.
Famous Reviews.
Aristotle's Ethics.
Landor's Aspasia.
Annals of Tacitus.
Essays of Elia.
Shorter Stories from Balzac.
De Musset's Comedies.
Coral-Reefs.
Sheridan's Plays.
Our Village.
Master Humphrey's Clock
Tales from Wonderland.
Handbook of Swindling.
Essays and other Writings of Thoreau.

THE CANTERBURY POETS.

A New Comprehensive Edition of the Poets.
 EDITED BY WILLIAM SHARP.
 Introductions by Hon. RODEN NOEL, Mrs. SYDNEY DOBELL, ERNEST RHYS, JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, JOSEPH SKIPSEY, Countess MARTINENGO-CESARESCO, S. WADDINGTON, &c., &c.
 IN SHILLING VOLUMES, SQUARE 8VO.
 Cloth, Red Edges, 1s.; Cloth, Uncut Edges, 1s.; Red Roan, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.; Padded Morocco, Gilt Edges, 5s.; and in Half-Morocco, Gilt Top, Antique (in a variety of new reproductions of old tints).

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES ARE NOW READY.

CHRISTIAN YEAR.
 COLERIDGE.
 LONGFELLOW.
 CAMPBELL.
 SHELLEY.
 WORDSWORTH.
 BLAKE.
 WHITTIER.
 POE.
 CHATTERTON.
 BURNS. Songs.
 BURNS. Poems.
 MARLOWE.
 KEATS.
 HERBERT.
 VICTOR HUGO.
 COWPER.
 SHAKESPEARE. Songs, Poems, and Sonnets.
 EMERSON.
 SONNETS of this CENTURY.
 WHITMAN.
 SCOTT. Lady of the Lake, &c.
 SCOTT. Marmion, &c.
 PRAED.
 HOGG.
 GOLDSMITH.
 LOVE LETTERS of a VIOLINIST, &c.
 SPENSER.
 CHILDREN of the POETS.
 BEN JONSON.
 BYRON. Miscellaneous.
 BYRON. Don Juan, &c.
 SONNETS of EUROPE.
 ALLAN RAMSAY.
 SYDNEY DOBELL.
 POPE.
 HEINE.
 BEAUMONT and FLETCHER.
 BOWLES, LAMB, &c.
 SEA MUSIC.
 EARLY ENGLISH POETRY.
 HEURICK.
 BALLADS and RONDEAUS.
 IRISH MINSTRELSY.
 PARADISE LOST.
 JACOBITE BALLADS.
 DAYS of the YEAR.
 AUSTRALIAN BALLADS.
 MOORE.
 BORDER BALLADS.
 PHILIP B. MARSTON.
 HORACE.
 OSSIAN.
 ELFIN MUSIC.
 SOUTHEY.
 CHAUCER.
 GOLDEN TREASURY.
 POEMS of WILD LIFE.
 PARADISE REGAINED.
 CRABBE.
 DORA GREENWELL.
 GOETHE'S FAUST.
 AMERICAN SONNETS.
 LANDOR'S POEMS.
 GREEK ANTHOLOGY.
 HUNT and HOOD.
 HUMOROUS POEMS.
 LYTTON'S PLAYS.
 GREAT ODE.
 OWEN MEREDITH.
 THE PAINTER-POETS.
 WOMEN POETS.
 ENGLISH LOVE LYRICS.
 AMERICAN HUMOROUS VERSE.
 SCOTTISH MINOR POETS.

GREAT WRITERS.

A NEW SERIES OF CRITICAL BIOGRAPHIES.
 SHILLING VOLUMES, CROWN 8VO.
 Bindings:—Cloth, cut edges, 1s.; Cloth, uncut edges, 1s.; and in Half-Morocco, gilt top antique (in a variety of new reproductions of old tints).

VOLUMES ALREADY ISSUED.

LONGFELLOW. By Prof. Eric S. Robertson.
 COLERIDGE. By Hall Caine.
 DICKENS. By Frank T. Marzials.
 DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. By J. Knight.
 SAMUEL JOHNSON. By Colonel F. Grant.
 DARWIN. By G. T. Bettany.
 CHARLOTTE BRONTË. By A. Birrell.
 THOMAS CARLYLE. By R. Garnett, LL.D.
 ADAM SMITH. By R. B. Haldane, M.P.
 KEATS. By W. M. Rossetti.
 SHELLEY. By William Sharp.
 SMOLLETT. By David Hannay.
 GOLDSMITH. By Austin Dobson.
 SCOTT. By Professor Yonge.
 BURNS. By Professor Blackie.
 BUNYAN. By Canon Venables.
 VICTOR HUGO. By Frank T. Marzials.
 EMERSON. By Richard Garnett, LL.D.
 GOETHE. By James Sime.
 CONGREVE. By Edmund Gosse.
 CRABBE. By T. E. Kebbel.
 HEINE. By William Sharpe.
 MILL. By W. L. Courtney.
 SCHILLER. By Henry W. Nevinson.
 MARRYAT. By David Hannay.
 LESSING. By T. W. Rolleston.
 MILTON. By Richard Garnett.
 GEORGE ELIOT. By Oscar Browning.
 BALZAC. By Frederick Wedmore.
 JANE AUSTEN. By Goldwin Smith.
 BROWNING. By William Sharp.
 BYRON. By Hon. Roden Noel.
 HAWTHORNE. By Moncreu Conway.
 SCHOPENHAUER. By Professor W. Wallace.
 SHERIDAN. By Lloyd Sanders.
 THACKERAY. By Herman Merivale.
 CERVANTES. By H. E. Watts.

LIBRARY EDITION, in Handsome Binding, Demy 8vo, Price 2s. 6d. per Volume.

COUNT TOLSTOÏ'S WORKS.

Crown 8vo, Cloth, 2s. 6d. per Vol.; Half-Polished Morocco, Gilt Top, 5s.

VOLUMES ALREADY ISSUED.

A RUSSIAN PROPRIETOR.
 THE COSSACKS.
 IVAN ILYICH.
 THE INVADERS.
 MY RELIGION.
 LIFE.
 MY CONFESSION.
 CHILDHOOD, BOYHOOD, YOUTH.
 THE PHYSIOLOGY OF WAR.
 ANNA KARENINA. (2 Vols.)
 WHAT TO DO?
 WAR AND PEACE. (4 Vols.)
 THE LONG EXILE.
 SEVASTOPOL.
 THE KREUTZER SONATA, and FAMILY HAPPINESS.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

IMPRESSIONS OF RUSSIA. By Dr. Georg Brandes.

BY COUNT TOLSTOÏ. NEW "BOOKLETS."

Bound in White Grained Boards, with Gilt Lettering, 1s. each.

1. WHERE LOVE IS, THERE GOD IS ALSO.
2. THE TWO PILGRIMS.
3. WHAT MEN LIVE BY.
4. THE GODSON.
5. IF YOU NEGLECT THE FIRE, YOU DON'T PUT IT OUT.
6. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT A MAN?

Now ready, at all Libraries and Booksellers.

SOUTH AFRICA: FROM ARAB DOMINATION TO BRITISH RULE.

Edited by R. W. MURRAY, F.R.G.S., of Cape Town.

With 5 Maps, and Views of Cape Town in 1668 and 1891.

Demy 8vo, cloth elegant, price 12s. 6d.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

FRESH LIGHT on the DYNAMIC ACTION, and PONDEROSITY of MATTER. By "WATERDALE." A System of Dynamics based on the Inertia of the Etherial Fluid, being identical with that of other matter, evolving therefrom its automatic cause of gravity.

MANCHESTER COURIER.—"An excellent text-book for students, written in a very lucid and masterly style. The writer deals with the constitution of the etherial fluid, primary cause of gravity, transplacement, specific ponderosities of elementary atoms, &c.

OBSERVER.—"The volume will hardly fail to interest all who are conversant with the prevailing methods of dealing with scientific subjects."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"In these days it is somewhat unusual to find a scientific book written by an anonymous author, and in this case the nature of the subject and the method of treatment only whet one's curiosity all the more to know who the writer is. To thus summarily knock away the bases upon which some of the most universally acknowledged beliefs of the physical scientists are founded by a clever process of reasoning, which seeks also to build up new ideas, is a proceeding daring and audacious, and it remains to be seen whether the views advanced will meet with acceptance."

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 912.—OCTOBER, 1891.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.—CURRENT INFLUENCES ON FOREIGN POLITICS, by Kópios.—MOLIÈRE'S DEBUTS ON THE THEATRE.—DANOVITCH: A RUSSIAN ROMANCE.—A WINTER STATION.—CAPTAIN LUDWEY'S JUMP, by Dorothea Gerard.—ELVES—IMPS, by Will Foster.—CHRONICLES OF WESTERLY: A PROVINCIAL SKETCH.—AN HISTORICAL CLOCK, by J. A. Owen.—IMAGINATION, by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.—TO JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, by W. W. Story.—JOHN INGLIS, JUSTICE-GENERAL OF SCOTLAND.—THE SEAL-FISHERIES QUESTION: PROSPECTIVE AND RETROSPECTIVE, by F. H. H. Guillemard.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR OCTOBER.

PEACE or WAR? By the Rt. Hon. G. OSBORNE MORGAN, Q.C., M.P.
JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. By F. H. UNDERWOOD, LL.D.
THE BALANCE-SHEET OF SHORT-HOURS. By JOHN RAE.
CARLYLE'S MESSAGE to his AGE. By W. E. H. LECKY.
DR. SCHURER on the FOURTH GOSPEL. By Prof. SANDAY, D.D.
THE RISE of the SUBURBS. By SIDNEY J. LOW.
THEOLOGICAL DEGREES for NONCONFORMISTS. By H. W. HORWILL.
THE ABBE'S REPENTANCE. By GRANT ALLEN.
THE POSITION of GREEK in the UNIVERSITIES. By the Rev. J. E. C. WELLDON.
AMERICAN and BRITISH RAILWAY STOCKS. By G. BARTRICK BAKER.
THE ANTIPODEANS (Conclusion). By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.
LETTER to the EDITOR. By R. W. DALE, LL.D.

ISBISTER & Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

OCTOBER.

THE EMANCIPATION of WOMEN. By FREDERIC HARRISON.
LA BÊTE HUMAINE. By J. A. SYMONDS.
THE DEMORALISATION of RUSSIA. By E. B. LANIN.
UNDER the YOKE of the BUTTERFLIES. By the Hon. AUBERON HERBERT.
THE BERLIN RENAISSANCE MUSEUM. By WILHELM BODE.
A NATIONAL PENSION FUND. By EDWARD COOPER.
ENGLISH and AMERICAN FLOWERS—I. By A. R. WALLACE.
WOMEN and the ROYAL COMMISSION. By LADY DILKE.
SOCIAL LIFE in AUSTRALIA. By FRANCIS ADAMS.
IMPRESSIONS of ENGLAND. By A SON of ADAM.
A HUMAN DOCUMENT. Chaps. I.—III. By W. H. MALLOCK.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited.

THE NEW REVIEW.

OCTOBER.—Price Ninepence.

IS TURKEY FRIENDLY to ENGLAND? By "IMPARTIAL."
EXCURSION (FUTILE ENOUGH) to PARIS: AUTUMN, 1891 (To be continued). By THOMAS CARLYLE.
THE BUDDHIST GOSPEL. By W. S. LILLY.
FRENCH COUNTY COUNCILS a CENTURY AGO. By Lady MARGARET DONVILLE.
SOME LESSONS of the CENSUS. By G. B. LONGSTAFF, M.B., F.R.C.P.
THE MAGYAR LITERATURE of the last FIFTY YEARS. By Professor VAMBERT.
VILLAGE LIFE in PERSIA. By J. THEODORE BENT.
TRAINING: Its Bearing on Health.—No. II. By SIR MORELL MACKENZIE.
A YEAR of MY LIFE. By JOHN LAW.
LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

THE JOURNAL OF EDUCATION,

No. 267, for OCTOBER.

1. OCCASIONAL NOTES:—Report of Select Committee on Teachers' Registration Bill—The Manchester Conference—Oxford Summer Meeting—St. Paul's School—The Hygienic Congress.
2. TEACHERS' GUILD CONFERENCE:—Prof. Laurie's Inaugural Address—Papers and Discussions on Physical Education (Mr. T. C. Horsfall), The Training of Teachers (Mrs. Scott and Miss Hughes), State Organisation of Secondary Education (Sir George Young), &c.
3. PARENTS and HIGH SCHOOLS.
4. A FROBEL METHOD of TEACHING HISTORY.
5. MRS. ORR and HER CRITICS.
6. IN MEMORIAM. W. H. WIDGERY.
7. CORRESPONDENCE:—Private Governesses; Hindoo Mathematics; Oxford Local Certificates; An Appeal to Publishers.
8. FOREIGN NOTES:—Schools and Universities.
9. NOTES on ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.
10. NATIONAL ASSOCIATION of ASSISTANT MASTERS.
11. REVIEWS and MINOR NOTICES.
12. TRANSLATION PRIZES.

Price 6d., per post, 7d.

Office: 86, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Now ready, price 6d.

THE EXPOSITORY TIMES.

For OCTOBER, containing:—

- NOTES of RECENT EXPOSITION.
ISRAEL as a CHOSEN NATION. By Dr. NEUBAUER, Oxford.
SUMMUM BONUM. By JAMES STALKER, D.D.
THE POTTER and the CLAY. By Principal DOUGLAS, D.D.
BIBLICAL ARCHAEOLOGY and the HIGHER CRITICISM. By Professor SAYCE, LL.D.
CHRIST'S APPEAL to the OLD TESTAMENT. By Canon DRIVER.
STUDY of THEOLOGY at LEIPZIG. By Professor GREGORY.
POPULAR BOOKS among the JEWS in the TIME of our LORD. By Professor ALLAN MENZIES, D.D., &c., &c.
Edinburgh: T. T. CLARK, 38, George Street.

Now ready, Part IV., price 1s. 6d.

THE CRITICAL REVIEW

OF THEOLOGICAL AND PHILOSOPHICAL LITERATURE.

Edited by Professor S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D.

This Part completes Volume I., which may be had, bound in cloth, price 7s.

Edinburgh: T. T. CLARK, 38, George Street.

Fifty-third Thousand.—Post 8vo, 5s.

MODERN EUROPE: a School History.

By JOHN LORD, LL.D. New Edition. With Four Additional Chapters, comprehending all the Leading Events which have occurred since the Fall of Napoleon I. to the Fall of Napoleon III.; also copious Questions for Examination.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

ORIENTAL TRANSLATION FUND.

NEW SERIES.

A faithful Translation from the Persian of MIRKHOND'S "RANZAT-US-SAFA." Part I., Volume I., containing the Moslem version of our Bible Stories from the Creation of Genii before Adam up to the Death of Aaron.

Printed, Published, and Sold under the Patronage of the ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY,
22, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON.

Price Ten Shillings.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE TRUMPET CALL. Mr. Leonard Boyne, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, L. Rignold, C. Dalton, Douglases, East, Russell, Leigh, Keith, Drew, J. and W. Northcote, &c.; Miss E. Robins, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Leigh, and Miss Clara Jacks.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE. Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrej, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, P. S. Champion, W. Wyes, and Geo. Giddens; Misses Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne. At 8.15, ROSABEL.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Augustin Daly's Company, in THE LAST WORD. Miss Ada Rehan, Mr. Drew, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Wheatleigh, Miss Irving, Miss Cheatham.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs. Murray Carson, G. W. Cockburn, Eardley Turner, T. W. Percival, J. A. Welch, De Solla, Victor, Alker, Dwyer, Ludlow, &c.; Mesdames Leslie Bell, Bertie Willis, L. Seccombe, L. Wilmot, L. Wyatt, M. Herrick, and Miss Grace Hawthorne. At 7.30, TWO IN THE BUSH.

OPERA COMIQUE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.20, THE AMERICAN. Mr. Edward Compton, Messrs. Lewis Ball, C. Blakiston, Y. Stewart, S. Paxton, C. M. Hallard, H. Hunter, F. W. Permain; Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe), Misses Louise Moodie, Adrienne Dairrolles, Evelyn Mc'Nay, C. Lindsay, and Miss Elizabeth Robins. At 7.45, A DEAD LETTER.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT-BASING.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, ARRAN-NA-POGUE. Miss Julia Warden, Mrs. John Carter, and Ella Terriss; Messrs. Henry Neville, Wilfred E. Shine, Bassett Roe, Chas. Ashford, Henry Bedford, John Carter, T. Verner, T. Kingston, and Arthur Daere.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, THE IDLER. Followed by MOLIÈRE. Mr. George Alexander, Mr. Nutcombe Gould, Mr. Ben Webster, Mr. Wilton Lackaye, Mr. Alfred Holles, Mr. V. Sansbury, and Mr. Herbert Waring; Lady Monckton, Miss Gertrude Kingston, Miss Lily Hanbury, Miss Laura Graves, and Miss Marion Terry.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE NAUGHT GIRL. Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, Lemaistre, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, Louise Rowe, A. Cole, C. Tinnie, Saumarez, and Kate James. At 7.40, CAPTAIN BILLY. Messrs. Lemaistre, &c.; Mesdames Moore and R. Brandran.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR. And at 10, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Misses E. Chester, B. Lamb, D. Drummond, S. Grey, and Miss Norreys; Messrs. B. Thomas, F. Dawson, C. Coutts, C. P. Little, W. L. Branscombe, Lacy, and W. Grossmith.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

THE ACADEMY:

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

VOL. XL. commenced July 4th.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d.

Edited by J. S. COTTON.

Among the Contributors to THE ACADEMY are:

- | | | | | |
|--------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|---------------------------|
| Acton, Lord | Dobson, Austin | Hicks, Rev. E. L. | Murray, George | Simcox, G. A. |
| Aitken, G. A. | Dore, J. R. | Hodgetts, E. A. Brayley | Murray, Dr. J. A. H. | Simcox, Miss Edith |
| Alexander, S. | Douglas, Prof. R. K. | Hodgkin, Dr. T. | Myers, Ernest | Simpson, W. |
| Allen, Grant | Dow, J. G. | Hodgson, Shadworth H. | Myles, Rev. W. Percy | Skeat, Prof. W. W. |
| Allen, J. B. | Dowden, Prof. E. | Houghton, Rev. W. | Napier, Prof. A. S. | Smith, G. Barnett |
| Arnold, Arthur | Doyle, J. A. | Howlett, R. | Nettleship, Prof. H. | Smith, Miss L. Toulmin |
| Axon, W. E. A. | Driver, Prof. S. R. | Howorth, H. H. | Nettleship, J. T. | Sommer, H. Oskar |
| Bain, R. Nisbet | Drummond, Rev. R. B. | Hunter, Sir W. W. | Neubauer, Dr. A. | Sonnenschein, Prof. E. A. |
| Ball, Rev. C. J. | Dryden, Sir Henry | Ingram, J. H. | Newton, Sir C. T. | Stephens, H. Morse |
| Balzani, Count Ugo | Duff, E. Gordon | Ingram, Prof. J. K. | Nicholson, Cecil | Stephens, Prof. G. |
| Barnett, P. A. | Dunlop, R. | Jacobs, Joseph | Nicholson, Dr. E. | Stevenson, W. H. |
| Bayne, Rev. Ronald | Earle, Prof. J. | Jevons, F. B. | Nicholson, E. B. | Stewart, J. A. |
| Beazeley, M. | Ebers, Prof. G. | Johnson, Lionel | Noble, J. A. | Stokes, Whitley |
| Beeching, Rev. H. C. | Edgeworth, Prof. F. Y. | Jolly, Prof. J. | Noel, Hon. Roden | Strachey, G. |
| Bell, H. T. Mackenzie | Edinburgh, The Bishop of | Jones, Rev. W. H. | O'Grady, Standish H. | Strong, S. Arthur |
| Benn, A. W. | Edwards, Miss Amelia B. | Keane, Prof. A. H. | Oman, C. W. C. | Sully, James |
| Bennett, A. W. | Ellis, Robinson | Keene, H. G. | Patterson, Arthur J. | Sweet, H. |
| Bensley, Prof. R. L. | Elton, C. I. | Kingsford, C. L. | Paul, C. Kegan | Symonds, J. A. |
| Bezold, Prof. C. | Elton, Oliver | Kirkup, T. | Peacock, E. | Symons, Arthur |
| Blind, Karl | Ely, Talfourd | Lang, Andrew | Pearson, Prof. Karl | Taylor, Canon Isaac |
| Boase, Rev. C. W. | Evans, Arthur | Lankester, Prof. E. Ray | Pelham, Prof. H. F. | Temple, Capt. R. C. |
| Bonaparte, Prince Louis- | Field, Michael | Leach, A. F. | Peterson, Prof. | Temple, G. T. [Prof. |
| Bonar, J. [Lucien | Firth, C. H. | Lee, Miss Jane | Phillips, Claude | Terrien de Lacouperie, |
| Bradley, Henry | Fita, Padre F. | Lee, S. L. | Pinker, J. B. | Thompson, E. Maunde |
| Bradley, J. W. | Fitch, J. G. | Lee, Vernon | Pollard, A. W. | Toynbee, Paget |
| Brown, Dr. Robert | Fortnum, C. Drury E. | Le Gallienne, R. | Poole, R. S. | Tozer, Rev. H. F. |
| Brown, H. F. | Fowler, Prof. T. | Legge, Prof. J. | Postgate, Prof. J. P. | Tucker, R. |
| Brown, R., Jun. | Fowler, Rev. J. T. | Lewin, Walter | Powell, F. York | Twiss, Sir Travers |
| Browne, E. G. | Frazer, J. G. | Lewis, Prof. W. J. | Raine, Canon J. | Tyler, Thomas |
| Browne, J. W. | Freeman, Prof. E. A. | Lindsay, W. M. | Ramsay, Prof. W. M. | Tylor, E. B. |
| Browne, Prof. G. F. | Freshfield, Douglas W. | Lyall, C. J. | Rashdall, Rev. H. | Vambéry, Prof. A. |
| Bryce, Prof. J. | Friedländer, Dr. M. | Lyster, T. W. | Reid, J. S. | Venables, Precentor |
| Buchanan, Robert | Furnivall, Dr. F. J. | Macdonell, Prof. A. A. | Rhys, Prof. John | Villari, Linda |
| Bühler, Prof. G. | Gaidoz, H. | Macdonell, G. P. | Rhys-Davids, Prof. T. W. | Vinson, Prof. Julien |
| Burton, Sir Richard | Gairdner, J. | Mackay, J. S. | Richards, F. T. | Wallace, Prof. W. |
| Bywater, I. | Galton, Arthur | Mahaffy, Prof. J. P. | Richards, H. P. | Wallace, W. |
| Caine, Hall | Gardiner, S. R. | Mann, J. S. | Richter, Dr. J.-P. | Warren, Rev. F. E. |
| Campbell, Prof. Lewis | Gardiner, Mrs. S. R. | Margoliouth, Prof. D. S. | Robertson, Prof. Edmund | Waters, E. Chester |
| Canton, W. | Garrod, H. B. | Markham, Clements R. | Robertson, Prof. Eric | Watkins, Rev. M. G. |
| Capes, Rev. W. W. | Gonner, Prof. E. C. K. | Markheim, W. | Robinson, Rev. C. J. | Watson, W. |
| Cheetham, Archdeacon | Grant-Duff, Sir Mount- | Martin, C. Trice | Roby, H. J. | Watts, Theodore |
| Chester, Greville J. | stuart E. | Marzials, F. T. | Rolph, J. F. | Wayte, Rev. W. W. |
| Cheyne, Prof. T. K. | Grant, Col. F. | Mayhew, Rev. A. L. | Rolleston, T. W. | Weale, W. H. James |
| Church, Prof. A. H. | Gray, J. M. | Merk, Rev. C. | Rudler, F. W. | Webster, Rev. Wentworth |
| Clouston, W. A. | Greenhill, Dr. W. A. | Merry, G. R. | Rye, Walter | Wedmore, Frederick |
| Collins, J. C. | Grey, William E. | Minchin, J. G. C. | Ryland, F. | West, Dr. E. W. |
| Conway, W. Martin | Groome, F. H. | Minchin, James Innes | Saintsbury, G. | Westlake, Prof. John |
| Cotterell, G. | Hager, Dr. H. | Minto, Prof. W. | Salmon, Prof. G. | Westwood, Prof. J. O. |
| Cotton, H. J. S. | Hamerton, P. G. | Monkhouse, Cosmo | Salmoné, Prof. H. A. | Wharton, E. R. |
| Courtney, W. P. | Hamilton, J. A. | Moore, Rev. Dr. E. | Sanday, Prof. W. | Wharton, H. T. |
| Crawford, O. | Hardy, W. J. | Morfill, W. R. | Sandys, Dr. J. E. | Wheeler, Stephen |
| Creighton, Prof. M. | Haverfield, F. | Morris, Rev. Dr. R. | Sargent, Rev. H. | Wickham, W. |
| Davidson, John | Hawkins, F. | Morris, Judge O'Connor | Sayce, Prof. A. H. | Wicksteed, Rev. P. H. |
| Dawkins, C. E. | Herford, Prof. C. H. | Morshead, E. D. A. | Sayle, C. | Wilkins, Prof. A. S. |
| De Vere, Aubrey | Hessels, J. H. | Muir, Dr. Thomas | Secley, Prof. J. R. | Wilson, C. E. |
| Dickins, F. V. | Hewlett, H. G. | Müller, Prof. F. Max | Sharp, William | Wilson, H. F. |
| Doble, C. E. | Hickey, Miss E. H. | Murray, A. S. | Shedlock, J. S. | Wollaston, A. N. |

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

To be had at all Railway Stations, and of all News-vendors in Town and Country.

GRIFFITH FARRAN & CO.'S

ANNOUNCEMENT OF BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG FOR CHRISTMAS, 1891.

STORY BOOKS, ILLUSTRATED IN COLOUR, AND BLACK-AND-WHITE.

GRANNY'S WONDERFUL CHAIR and its Tales of Fairy Times. By FRANCES BROWNE. Illustrated with 16 coloured and 63 black-and-white Pictures by Mrs. Seymour Lucas. Crown 4to, paper boards, price 5s.

TWICE FOUR. Original Stories by E. NESBIT, Mrs. PATCHETT MARTIN, Mrs. GELLIE, ALICE WEBER, THEO. GIFT, ROWE LINGSTON, Miss EDWARDS, Mrs. WORTHINGTON BLISS. With 8 coloured Illustrations by H. J. Johnstone, E. Hume, F. T. Underhill, J. M. Dealy, E. Welby, and 50 black-and-white by C. M. Watts, J. Fullwood, F. Mapleston, Fanny Moody, C. Hammond, A. Jameson, A. W. Strutt, J. Finemore, W. Lance, A. S. Fenn, &c. Uniform with "Over the Sea." Crown 4to, paper boards, price 3s. 6d.

SOME SWEET STORIES of OLD. Boys of Bible Story. By the Rev. C. J. RIDGEWAY, M.A. With 8 Coloured Illustrations by Henry Ryland, and 28 black-and-white by May Bowley. Crown 4to, paper boards, price 2s. 6d.

Hagar and Ishmael.

Hiding of Moses.

Hannah and Samuel.

Shunamite Woman and Son.

The Young King Josiah.

St. John the Baptist.

The Holy Child.

The Presentation in the Temple.

STORY BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG, ILLUSTRATED IN BLACK-AND-WHITE.

NOBODY'S BUSINESS. By Edith CARINGTON, Author of "Stories for Somebody." Profusely Illustrated by Ethelene E. Dell. 4to cloth elegant, gilt edges, price 6s.

A NEW BOOK of the FAIRIES. By BEATRICE HARRADEN, Author of "Things will Take a Turn," "Master Roley," &c., &c. Illustrated by E. Lupton. 4to, cloth elegant, gilt edges, price 6s.

"THOSE CHILDREN." By Helen Milman, Author of "Boy," "The Little Ladies." With Illustrations by Emily J. Harding. 4to, cloth elegant, price 3s. 6d.

GRIFFITH FARRAN & CO.'S ANNUALS.

THE OLD CORNER ANNUAL. Large 4to, boards, price 3s. 6d.

OUR CHRISTMAS BOX. Containing popular Old-fashioned Nursery Favourites and Short Stories about Animals. Fully Illustrated with Full-page Colour Pictures and in black-and-white. Fcap. 4to, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

POETICAL SELECTIONS FOR THE YOUNG.

THE CHILDREN'S CASKET of FAVOURITE POEMS for RECITATION. By E. R. BROWNING, JEAN INGELOW, C. G. ROSSETTI, M. HOWITT, L. M. ALCOTT, F. R. HAVERGAL, A. T. WHITNEY, &c., &c. Compiled by ANNIE M. HONE, Author of "Woman's Enterprise and Genius," "Self-Help for Women," &c. Uniform with "The Boy's and Girl's Own Poetry Books." Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, price 3s. 6d.

THE OLD CORNER SERIES.

The following additions to this Popular and Attractive Series of newly Illustrated Editions of Old Nursery Favourites will be issued this year. They each contain 32 pages all illustrated, folscap quarto. With Coloured Frontispiece and cover. Price Sixpence each.

ALI BABA and the FORTY THIEVES. Illustrated by A. Chasmore.

GOODY TWO SHOES. Illustrated by W. J. Hodgson.

JACK, the GIANT KILLER. Illustrated by W. J. Hodgson.

NEW BOOKS FOR BOYS.

NEW ILLUSTRATED STORIES IN THE 5s. SERIES.

BURR JUNIOR! His Struggles and Studies at School. By G. MANVILLE FENN, Author of "Three Boys," "Cutlass and Cudgel," &c., &c. Illustrated by A. W. Cooper. 384 pages, large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, price 5s.

WITH the GREEN JACKETS; or, the Life, and Adventures of a Rifleman. By J. PERCY GROVES, Major, late 27th Inniskillings. Author of "From Cadet to Captain," "A Soldier Born," "The Duke's Own," "Anchor and Laurel," &c., &c. With numerous Illustrations by Lieut.-Colonel Marshman. 384 pages, large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, price 5s.

ADDITION TO THE BOYS' OWN FAVOURITE LIBRARY.

A JOURNEY to the CENTRE of the EARTH. By JULES VERNE. With 53 Illustrations by Rion. Crown 8vo, 400 pages, cloth, gilt edges, price 3s. 6d.

NEWBERY PRIZE SERIES OF 3s. 6d. BOOKS.

PAUL BLAKE. By A. T. Elwes. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt edges.

LUKE ASHLEIGH. By A. T. Elwes. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt edges. Illustrated by George Du Maurier.

NEW TWO SHILLING SERIES.

AMONG the ZULUS: the Adventures of Hans Sterk in South Africa. By Gen. A. W. DRAYSON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, price 2s.

THE YOUNG GOVERNESS. A Tale for Girls. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, price 2s.

NEW BOOK IN CORONET SERIES.

TARBUCKET and PIPECLAY. By Major J. PERCY GROVES. Illustrated by J. Schonberg. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, price 2s. 6d.

NEW BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

NEW STORIES IN THE 5s. SERIES.

FAY ARLINGTON. By Anne Beale, Author of "Simplicity and Fascination," "Gladys the Reaper," "The Miller's Daughter," "Rose Mervyn," "Nothing Venture, Nothing Have," &c. With numerous Illustrations by Marcella Walker. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, price 5s.

CHANGED LOTS; or, Nobody Cares. By FRANCES ARMSTRONG, Author of "Her Own Way," &c. Illustrated by Annie S. Fenn. 384 pages, large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, price 5s.

ADDITION TO THE GIRLS' OWN FAVOURITE LIBRARY.

MISCHIEF MAKERS; or, the Story of Zipporah, the Jewish Maiden. By M. E. BEWSHER. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, price 3s. 6d.

NEW BOOK IN THE CORONET LIBRARY FOR GIRLS.

NIMPOS TROUBLES. By Olive Thorne MILLER, Author of "Little Folks in Feathers and Fur," &c. Illustrated by Mary Hollock and Sol. Eyttinge. Crown 8vo, 320 pp., cloth elegant, price 2s. 6d.

THE NEWBERY PRIZE SERIES OF THREE SHILLING BOOKS.

ADVENTURES in AUSTRALIA; or, the Wanderings of Captain Spencer in the Bush and the Wilds. By Mrs. R. LEE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth.

ANECDOTES of the HABITS and INSTINCTS of ANIMALS. By Mrs. R. LEE. Illustrated by Harrison Weir. Crown 8vo cloth.

ANECDOTES of the HABITS and INSTINCTS of BIRDS, REPTILES, and FISHES. By Mrs. R. LEE. Illustrated by Harrison Weir. Crown 8vo, cloth.

THE HALF-CROWN HISTORICAL LIBRARY.

TRUE STORIES from AFRICAN HISTORY. By W. PIMBLETT. Profusely Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, price 2s. 6d.

TRUE STORIES from GREEK HISTORY. By Mrs. ALFRED POLLARD. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, fully illustrated, price 2s. 6d.

THE NEWBERY TOY BOOKS.

A New Series of Crown Quarto Toy Books, each containing 32 pages of Reading and Pictures, every page illustrated, with frontispiece and coloured cover, printed in 12 colours, price 6d. each.

THE BOOK of BEDTIME. By M. Cook.

THE BOOK of PLAYTIME. By M. Cook.

THE BOOK of DAYTIME. By M. Cook.

ADDITIONS TO THE KINGSTON SIXPENNY SERIES.

ROBINSON CRUSOE. By Daniel Defoe. In large 8vo, paper covers. Illustrated.

THE VICAR of WAKEFIELD. By Oliver GOLDSMITH. In large 8vo, paper covers. Illustrated.

OUR BOYS' AND GIRLS' LITTLE LIBRARY.

Pictures and Reading for Little Folks. A Series of 12 elegant little volumes especially suited for Sunday School Prizes and Rewards. Every page is illustrated.

OUR BOYS' LITTLE LIBRARY. Pictures and Reading for Little Folk. Price Fourpence each, paper flush. Every page is illustrated. Especially suited for School Prizes and Rewards.

Papa's Pretty Gift Book.
Mamma's Pretty Gift Book.
Neddy's Picture Story Book.
Stories for Play Time.
The Christmas Gift Book.
The Prize Picture Book.

OUR GIRLS' LITTLE LIBRARY. Pictures and Reading for Little Folk. Price Fourpence each, paper flush. Every page is illustrated. Especially suited for School Prizes and Rewards.

Nellie's Picture Stories.
Stories and Pictures for Little Troublesome.
Little Trotabout's Picture Stories.
Stories for Little Locks.
Bright Pictures for Roguish Eyes.
Pretty Pets Gift Book.

THE PLEASEWELL PAINTING BOOKS, for the Children to Colour. Large 8vo, 8 pages, price One Penny each.

Funny Pictures.
Natural History Pictures.
Pictures of Home and Child Life.

THE NEWBERY PAINTING BOOKS, for the Children to Colour. Large 8vo, 16 pages, price Twopence each.

Funny Pictures.
Natural History Pictures.
Scenes of Homes and Child Life.

DETAILED CATALOGUES may be obtained from all Booksellers.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, LONDON AND SYDNEY.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1014.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

New Volumes of "The Adventure Series." Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. each.

THE STORY of the FILIBUSTERS. By JAMES JEFFREY ROCHE. To which is added "The Life of Colonel David Crockett."

"The record of their adventures is thrilling.With boys the book should be a prodigious favourite.....'The Life of Crockett' is very quaint and amusing reading."

Notes and Queries.

A MASTER MARINER: being the Life and Adventures of Captain Robert

WILLIAM EASTWICK. Edited by HERBERT COMPTON.

[Ready.]

A Book for the Curious.

NAMES and their MEANING. By LEOPOLD WAGNER. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"A curious and interesting book.....The work is well done and will instruct everyone not specially a student of philology; while even students will take a pleasure in the work.....Its index makes it useful for reference."—Scotsman.

New Book by the Author of "How to be Happy though Married."

THE BUSINESS of LIFE: a Book for Everyone. By the Rev. E. J. HARDY, Author of "How to be Happy though Married." Square imperial 16mo, cloth, 6s.

"It is the merit of these essays that they say not only tolerably but pleasantly and forcibly, what everyone knows has to be said.The book will doubtless prove as widely popular as its predecessors from the same hand."—Scotsman.

Second Edition, with Portrait of the Author.

A MINOR POET. By AMY LEVY. (Vol. VII. of "The Cameo Series.") Fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, 3s. 6d.

"This delicious little volume is a perfect oasis in the desert of average verse. Instinctively one rests here and tells one's fellow-pilgrims not to miss it."—Pictorial World.

The Children's Library.—Vols. I. and II.

THE BROWN OWL. By FORD H. HUEFFER. With Two Illustrations by Madox Brown.

"A clever and amusing fairy tale.The volume is very prettily got up—it is almost too daintily pretty for the thumbing which it is sure to get."—Scotsman.

STORIES from FAIRYLAND. By GEORGES DROSINES and other Greek Writers. Translated by Mrs. EDMONDS. Illustrated.

Large post 12mo, fancy cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

By Helen Zimmern.

HEROIC TALES: Retold from Firdusi the Persian. With Prefatory Poem by

E. W. GOSSE, and Illustrations after Etchings by L. Alma Tadema. New and Popular Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, 5s.

The Pseudonym Library.—Vol. VIII.

SOME EMOTIONS and a MORAL. By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS. 24mo, paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"That this author has a future of brightness and honour, is as sure as the ret. urn of mid-day. I thank him publicly for his powerful delineation."—Dr. JOSEPH PARKER.

By Ascott R. Hope.

ROYAL YOUTHS: a Book of Princehoods. By ASCOTT R. HOPE. Illustrated. Crown

8vo, cloth, 5s.

"Mr. Hope succeeds in imparting an interest such as will make any boy who reads the sketches wish to read more. The volume is well illustrated."—Scotsman.

By William Chatterton Coupland, D.Sc., M.A.

THE GAIN of LIFE, and other Essays. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The work is so well written as to be likely to attract readers not specially addicted to metaphysics."—Scotsman.

The "Lives Worth Living" Series. Two New Volumes.

THE LIVES of ROBERT and MARY MOFFAT. By their Son, JOHN SMITH MOFFAT, Popular Edition.

FAMOUS MUSICAL COMPOSERS. By LYDIA J. MORRIS. Second Edition.

[Ready.]

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

Life with the Incas.

TWELVE MONTHS in PERU. By BLANCHE CLARKE. Eight Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

[Next week.]

By Dr. Austin Phelps.

MY NOTEBOOK: Fragmentary Studies in Theology and Subjects adjacent thereto. By AUSTIN PHELPS, D.D., LL.D., Author of "My Study, and other Essays," &c. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Professor J. E. Thorold Rogers' Work on

THE ECONOMIC INTERPRETATION of HISTORY: Lectures on Political

Economy and its History. New and Cheaper Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

The Ridout Letters.

TEN YEARS of UPPER CANADA, in PEACE and WAR, 1805-1815: being the Ridout Letters, with Annotations by MATILDA EDGAR. Also, an Appendix of the Narrative of the Captivity among the Shawanese Indians, in 1788, of Thomas Ridout, afterwards Surveyor-General of Upper Canada; and a Vocabulary compiled by him of the Shawanese Language. Frontispiece, Portrait, and Maps. Royal 8vo, cloth, bevelled edges, 10s. 6d.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SIDGWICK'S ELEMENTS OF POLITICS, by A. W. BENN	303
PURVES'S TRANSLATION OF THE ILIAD, by E. D. A. MORSEHEAD	304
MISS DRANE'S LIFE OF ST. DOMINIC, by ARTHUR GALTON	305
YEATS'S REPRESENTATIVE IRISH TALES, by T. W. ROLLESTON	306
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE	307
SOME BOOKS ON THE COLONIES, by J. S. C.	308
NOTES AND NEWS	310
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	311
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TO EDWARD CLODD," by W. WATSON	311
MESSRS. GRIFFITH FARRAN & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	311
MESSRS. WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS	311
THE NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY	312
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	312
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Allego and Shakespeare: A Warning , by F. T. P.; Notes on the Colubrids, III. , by E. W. B. Nicholson, Herbert Richards, Walter Headlam, and A. E. Crawley	312
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	314
MATHEMATICAL BOOKS	314
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Gupta-Vatashi Era , by Dr. James Burgess	315
PHILOLOGY NOTE	315
THE PRE-RAPHAELITE LOAN COLLECTION AT BIRMINGHAM, by J. M. GRAY	316
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	317
THE EXCAVATIONS AT SILCHESTER	317
THE BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	317
MUSIC NOTES	318

WANTED by a Young Man of Literary Taste, with a University Education and first-rate French and German (52 years' residence abroad), SITUATION IN LIBRARY, London or vicinity preferred.—Address F. L. Heathfield, Gateshead.

SCULPTURE STUDENTS instructed, and prepared for the Schools of the Royal Academy, by a Gold Medalist and Experienced Teacher, all of whose Pupils have passed first sending up. The majority have been awarded medals and other distinctions.—Write in first instance SCULPTOR, 37, Chelsea Gardens, S.W.

CATALOGUE.
FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel Poetry, &c.) are invited to forward them for Consideration MSS. read within 14 days of receipt, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. Rejected MSS. promptly returned.

DIGBY, LONG, & CO., Publishers,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

GLADWELL BROTHERS' FINE ART GALLERY, 20 and 21, Gracechurch Street, E.C.—A dissolution of partnership being in progress, the remaining STOCK, accumulated during the past half century, is now being SOLD for cash, without regard to publication prices.

GLADWELLS' important SALE of FINE ART STOCK is now in progress, and will be continued for a short time only, as the partnership heretofore subsisting will be dissolved on Dec. 31st. A large portion of the Stock will be sold for cash at less than half price.—GLADWELL BROTHERS, 20 and 21, Gracechurch Street.

ESTABLISHED 1861.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON
(LADIES' DEPARTMENT).
13, Kensington Square (close to High Street Kensington Station).

In this department Lectures are given to Ladies in the various subjects of University Education by Professors and Lecturers on the Staff of King's College. The Lectures are adapted for Ladies above the age of 16.
For a Prospectus or further information apply to the Vice-Principal, Miss C. G. SCHWITZ, at the above address. In return for four stamps, a complete Syllabus of Lectures may be obtained.
The College RE-OPENS on MONDAY, OCTOBER 12TH.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.
Professor W. F. R. WILSON, M.A., F.R.S., will deliver, during the ensuing Session, a COURSE OF LECTURES on "THE DECAPOD CRUSTACEA," intended specially for Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology. The Lectures will be given twice weekly, commencing SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17TH, at 10 a.m.
The GENERAL COURSE OF LECTURES on ZOOLOGY, suitable for Students preparing for the various Examinations of the University of London, commences MONDAY, OCTOBER 5TH, at 4 p.m.

FRENCH CONVERSATIONAL LESSONS.—A LADY, who has been engaged for eight years in conducting large public English Classes for the Ville de Paris, and also for the Association Polytechnique in that city, is now desirous of finding PUPILS who wish to continue their fluency of speech in the French language.—Address F. T. M., care of Mrs. Evans, 62, Blomfield Road, Maida Hill, W.

FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.

The objects of this Society are the Collection and Preservation of Folk-Lore. Annual Subscription £1 s. Forms of application for Membership may be had of the Honorary Secretary, J. J. FOSTER, Offa House, Upper Tooting, S.W.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY,
22, Albemarle Street, W.

THIRTEENTH SESSION, 1891.
AT 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, AT 8 P.M.
NOVEMBER 2ND.—THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL ADDRESS—"MATTER." SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, M.A., LL.D.
AT OXFORD, The Common Room, Jesus College, at 8 P.M.
NOVEMBER 16TH.—SYMPOSIUM—"ORIGIN OF THE PERCEPTION OF AN EXTERNAL WORLD." THE PRESIDENT, BERNARD BOSANQUET, M.A., and D. G. RITCHIE, M.A.
H. WILSON CARR, Hon. Secretary.

BOOKS ON FINE ARTS.—Mr. MARTINUS NIJHOFF, at the Hague (Holland), will send, post free on application, his latest CATALOGUE, No. 226, containing Ancient and Modern Books on Fine Arts, 1,452 Nos.

Fourth Edition, Revised, and Illustrated, price 4s.
THE FROG: an Introduction to Anatomy,
Histology, and Embryology. By A. MILNES MARSHALL, M.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Zoology in the Owens College, Victoria University.
London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co. Manchester: J. E. CORNISH.

Fifty-third Thousand.—Post 8vo, 5s.
MODERN EUROPE: a School History.
By JOHN LOBB, LL.D. New Edition. With Four Additional Chapters, comprehending all the Leading Events which have occurred since the Fall of Napoleon I. to the Fall of Napoleon III.; also copious Questions for Examination.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

DULAU & CO, 37, Soho Square, W.

METHOD GASPEY - OTTO - SAUER,
for the Study of Modern Languages.
Published by JULIUS GROOS, Heidelberg.
The advantage which this method has over all others is its combination of theory and practice, i.e., a clear scientific exposition of the Grammar, combined with numerous practical exercises. By strictly adhering to this Method, the great difficulty of enabling the pupil to speak and write foreign languages has been successfully solved for the first time.
Just published.

ITALIAN CONVERSATION-GRAMMAR. A new and practical method of learning the Italian language. By C. M. SAUER, Counsellor of the Government, Director of the Superior Commercial Academy Revoltella at Trieste, formerly Professor at the Commercial Academy of Prague, and at the Public Commercial School of Leipzig. Sixth Edition. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

KEY. Fifth Edition. 8vo, boards, 2s.
AN ITALIAN READER consisting of choice specimens from the best modern Italian writers. With an Appendix containing typical extracts from the most celebrated writers in prose and verse, together with a table of all the idioms occurring in the extracts, and a complete Vocabulary. By G. CAPTANEO, Teacher of the Italian language and literature at the Royal Polytechnic, and at both the Royal Public Schools at Stuttgart. 8vo, cloth, 3s.

SPANISH CONVERSATION-GRAMMAR.—By C. M. SAUER. Fifth Edition. 8vo, cloth, 5s.
KEY. 8vo, boards, 2s.

RESUME de L'HISTOIRE de la LITTÉRATURE FRANÇAISE par ALFRED ANSPACH, Professeur de langue et littérature française à l'École Saint-Pierre de St. Pétersbourg. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.
Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE TRUMPET CALL. Mr Leonard Boyne, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, L. Rignold, C. Dalton, Douglass, East, Russell, Leigh, Keith, Drew, J. and W. Northcote, &c.; Miss E. Robins, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Leigh, and Miss Clara Jecks.

COMEDY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE. Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrej, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, P. S. Champion, W. Wyes, and Geo. Giddens; Misses Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne. At 8.15, ROSABEL.

CRITERION THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
THIS EVENING, at 8.45, MISS DECIMA. Mr. David James, Messrs. Chas. Conyers, Chauncey Olcott, Templar Saxe, Welton Dale; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Josephine Findlay, Lucy Buckstone, and J. Nesville. At 8, LISCHEN and FRITZCHEN.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
THIS EVENING, at 8, A SAILOR'S KNOT. Messrs. C. Warner, C. Glenney, E. Gurney, J. Cross, W. Lugg, F. Damer, A. Phillips, F. Dobell, T. Terriss, B. Power, W. Staunton, and H. Nicholls; Mesdames J. Millward and Kate James.

GAIETY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, JOAN OF ARC. M. Marius, Messrs. F. Emney, E. Bantock, W. Warde, and Arthur Roberts; Mesdames Florence Dysart, Alma Stanley, Agnes Hewitt, Linda Verner, Louisa Gourlay, Alice Lethbridge, K. Seymour, Day Ford, V. Moncton, and Marion Hood. Preceded, at 7.25, by FIRST MATE.

GARRICK THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, SCHOOL. Mr. Mackintosh, Mr. Vincent, Mr. Gerthorne, Mr. Gilbert Hare, Mr. H. B. Irving; Miss Annie Hughes, Miss Fanny Robertson, and Miss Kate Rorke.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE DANCING GIRL. Mr. Tree, Mr. Fernandez, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. F. Kerr, Mr. Allan, Mr. Robb Harwood, Mr. Batson, Mr. Leith, Mr. Hudson, Mr. Worden; Miss Julia Neilson, Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Horlock, Miss Ayrton, Mrs. E. H. Brooke, Miss Gunn, Miss Hethcote, and Miss Norreys.

LYCEUM THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Augustin Daly's Company, in THE LAST WORD. Miss Ada Rehan, Mr. Drew, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Wheatleigh, Miss Irving, Miss Cheatham.

LYRIC THEATRE.
Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, LA CIGALE. Misses Geraldine Umar, E. Clements, A. Rose, A. Newton, F. Melville, St. Cyr, E. Jeffreys; Messrs. Harry Monkhouse, E. Lewis, G. Muddle, J. Peachy, Forteous, and C. Hayden Coffin. At 7.30, LOVE AND LAW.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs. Murray Carson, G. W. Cockburn, Eardley Turner, T. W. Percyval, J. A. Welch, De Solla, Victor, Alker, Dwyer, Ludlow, &c.; Mesdames Leslie Bell, Bertie Willis, L. Secombe, L. Wilmot, L. Wyatt, M. Herrick, and Miss Grace Hawthorne. At 7.30, TWO IN THE BUSH.

OPERA COMIQUE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.20, THE AMERICAN. Mr. Edward Compton, Messrs. Lewis Ball, C. Blakiston, Y. Stewart, S. Paxton, C. M. Haillard, H. Hunter, F. W. Perrin; Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe), Misses Louise Moodie, Adrienne Duiroules, Evelyn M'Nay, C. Lindsay, and Miss Elizabeth Robins. At 7.45, A DEAD LETTER.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT-BASING.
THIS EVENING, at 7.45, ARRANNA-POGUE. Miss Julia Warden, Mrs. John Carter, and Ella Torgus; Messrs. Henry Neville, Wilfred E. Shinn, Bassett Roe, Chas. Ashford, Henry Bedford, John Carter, T. Verner, T. Kingston, and Arthur Dacre.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 7.15, THE IDLER. Followed by MOLIERE. Mr. George Alexander, Mr. Nutcombe Gould, Mr. Ben Webster, Mr. Wilton Luckaye, Mr. Alfred Hollis, Mr. V. Sansbury, and Mr. Herbert Waring; Lady Monckton, Miss Gertrude Kingston, Miss Lily Hanbury, Miss Laura Graves, and Miss Marion Terry.

SAVOY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL. Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, Lemaistre, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, Louise Rowe, A. Cole, C. Timmie, Saunarez, and Kate James. At 7.40, CAPTAIN BILLY. Messrs. Lemaistre, &c.; Mesdames Moore and R. Brandram.

SHAFESBURY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR. And at 10, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Misses E. Chester, B. Lamb, D. Drummond, S. Grey, and Miss Norreys; Messrs. B. Thomas, E. Dawson, C. Coutts, C. P. Little, W. L. Branscombe, Lacey, and W. Grossmith.

STRAND THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDWARDS.
THIS EVENING, at 8.45, THE LATE LAMENTED. Messrs. Willie Edouin, H. Stauding, H. Eversfield, G. P. Hawtrej, F. Cope, S. Barnaclough, and A. May; Mesdames Glad Richards, E. Morry, E. Phelps, and V. Bennett. At 8, BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

A FATAL SILENCE.

On the 20th October, will be published FLORENCE MARRYAT'S New Novel, "A FATAL SILENCE." Three Volumes. Published by Griffith Farran & Co., London.

A FATAL SILENCE.

On the same day, at all the Libraries, may be had GENERAL CRAUFURD and his LIGHT DIVISION, with many Anecdotes, a Paper and Letters, by Sir John Moore, and also Letters from the Right Hon. W. Windham, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Londonderry, and others. By the Rev. Alexander H. Craufurd, M.A., formerly Exhibitioner of Oriel College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 16s. Published by Griffith Farran & Co., London.

Griffith Farran & Co. have also just issued CLEMENT BARNOLD'S INVENTION, a new Story by Lionel Hawke, an Australian Author. It is full of strong situations, and breaks quite fresh ground. Crown 8vo, 350 pages, cloth, price 5s.

JAPANESE POTTERY,

WITH NOTES

Describing the Emblems, the Poetical Associations, and other thoughts and subjects employed in the Decoration of the Wares, an Account of the Festivals, and of some of the Customs of Japan.

By JAMES L. BOWES.

Imperial 8vo, cloth, 600 pp., with Plates, £2 12s. 6d.

e "Extra Illustrated Edition," half-morocco, gilt top, £6 6s. (Only a few copies left.)

Japan Mail.—"It is a noble book... a book of the most valuable and genuine character. It is evident that Mr. Bowes has brought together a really representative collection, and that he has made every specimen it contains the object of careful search and intelligent scrutiny."

China Telegraph.—"Few are entitled to speak with absolute authority, but of these Mr. Bowes stands foremost. Virtually a complete history of the art. To the true connoisseur it needs little recommendation."

The Academy.—"Produced with singular care and completeness... A worthy sequel to the author's previous labours in the cause of Japanese art."

The Times.—"Worthy of its subject and its author."
The Art Journal.—"Remarkably free from mistakes."
The Saturday Review.—"Let us repeat our admiration of Mr. Bowes' beautiful and enticing volume."

The Architect.—"A guide for the collector, and the best of its kind."
The Builder.—"Not only one of the most beautiful, but one of the most useful and rational books upon Japanese art which has been published in England."

Notes and Queries.—"To collectors his books are as authoritative as is to the lover of Enzevils the priceless book of Mr. Wilkins."
St. James's Gazette.—"The volume is one in which the connoisseur will delight."

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited
Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL.

ORIENTAL TRANSLATION FUND.

NEW SERIES.

A faithful Translation from the Persian of MIRKHOND'S "RANZAT-US-SAFA." Part I., Volume I., containing the Moslem version of our Bible Stories from the Creation of Genii before Adam up to the Death of Aaron.

Printed, Published, and Sold under the Patronage of the ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY,
22, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON.

Price Ten Shillings.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 346, will be published on SATURDAY, October 17th.

- I. ARCHBISHOP TAIT.
 - II. THE BODLEIAN LIBRARY.
 - III. ABRAHAM LINCOLN.
 - IV. POACHING.
 - V. LAURANCE OLIPHANT.
 - VI. LANDSCAPE PAINTERS OF HOLLAND.
 - VII. TAINE on NAPOLEON I.
 - VIII. ENGLISH REALISM and ROMANCE.
 - IX. WALWICK, the KING MAKER.
 - X. CHURCH PROGRESS and CHURCH DEFUNCT.
 - XI. EXECUTIVE GOVERNMENT and the UNIONISTS.
- JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

READY. ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

PITMAN'S SHORTHAND

IS WRITTEN BY

93 per Cent. Reporters

(Vide Printers' Register),

AND

98 per Cent. Clerks

(Vide Western Morning News).

Write for POCKET ALPHABET (free), or send 6d. for the "PHONOGRAPHIC TEACHER," to your nearest Bookseller, or to the Publishers,

ISAAC PITMAN & SONS,
AMEN CORNER, E.C.; BATH, AND NEW YORK.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE SPANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

THIRD AND CONCLUDING VOLUME OF MR. LAW'S "HISTORY OF HAMPTON COURT."

A HISTORY OF HAMPTON COURT PALACE. By ERNEST LAW, B.A., Barrister-at-Law. Vol. III. ORANGE and GUEPH TIMES. Fcap. 4to, with numerous Etchings, Engravings, Maps, and Plans, 31s. 6d.

This volume concludes the History of the Palace down to the year 1891, with an Appendix of all the occupants of Private Apartments for the last 130 years, with notes on their lives; and an exhaustive Index to the whole work.

Vol. I. (TUDOR TIMES), Vol. II. (STUART TIMES), 21s. each.

ARISTOTLE on the ATHENIAN CONSTITUTION. Translated, with Introduction and Notes, by F. G. KENYON, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford.

1. Small Paper Edition, post 8vo, printed on hand-made paper, at the Chiswick Press, and bound in buckram, 4s. 6d.
 2. Large Paper Edition, post 8vo, limited to 150 copies, 10s. net.
- Both editions contain an autotype facsimile of a portion of the original MS.

"Mr. Kenyon's translation, with its equipment of introduction commentary, and explanatory notes, shows that he is well qualified to define the bearing of the new information upon previously received notions of the history and polity of Athens."—Times.

THE THOUGHTS OF MARCUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS. Translated, with Notes, Biographical Sketch, and Introductory Essay, by GEORGE LONG, M.A. New Edition, printed at the Chiswick Press, on hand-made paper, and bound in buckram. Post 8vo, 6s. (Large-Paper Edition out of print.)

"Few care to read Marcus Aurelius in the original, and few would profit by doing so. His 'Thoughts' belong to the literature of the world in virtue of their matter, not in virtue of their style, and, as Matthew Arnold long ago pointed out, Mr. Long's presentation of them in English dress is beyond comparison the best."—Times.

Just published.

UNIFORM with LONG'S "ANTONINUS" and KENYON'S "ARISTOTLE on the ATHENIAN CONSTITUTION."

THE DISCOURSES OF EPICTETUS.

With the Encheiridion and Fragments. Translated, with Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE LONG, M.A. New Edition. 2 vols., post 8vo, printed on hand-made paper at the Chiswick Press, and bound in buckram, 10s. 6d.

Large-Paper Edition, 2 vols., post 8vo, limited to 150 copies, 21s. net.

This is now the only complete English Translation of Epictetus, comprising as it does Arrian's "Discourses," together with the Encheiridion and Fragments.

EURIPIDES: a New Literal Translation in Prose. By E. P. COLERIDGE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each.

Vol. I. Rhesus—Medea—Hippolytus—Alceste—Hecuba—Suppliants—Troades—Ion—Helen.

Vol. II. Andromache—Electra—Bacchae—Hecuba—Hercules Furens—Phoenissae—Orestes—Iphigenia in Tauris—Iphigenia in Aulis—Cyclops.

NEW VOLUMES OF BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

RICARDO on the PRINCIPLES of POLITICAL ECONOMY and TAXATION. Edited, with Introductory Essay, Notes, Appendices, Bibliography, and Index. By E. C. K. GONNER, M.A., Lecturer on Economic Science, University College, Liverpool. Small post 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"The book is one that will prove invaluable to students of Political Economy."—Daily Chronicle.

VOLTAIRE'S TALES. Translated by R. B. BOSWELL, M.A. Vol. I., containing "Babouze," "Zadig," "Plato's Dream," "Candide," "L'Ingénu," and other Tales. 3s. 6d.

COUNT GRAMMONT'S MEMOIRS of the COURT of CHARLES II. together with the "Boscobel Tracts." Including two not before published, &c. New Edition, thoroughly Revised. 3s. 6d.

SELECTED ESSAYS of ARTHUR SCHOENHAUER. Translated by E. BELFORD BAX. 5s.

GOETHE'S FAUST. Part I. The German Text, with the Prose Translation of ABRAHAM HAYWARD. Thoroughly Revised, with Notes, Introduction on the History of the Faust Legend, and Bibliography. By Dr. C. A. BUCHHEIM. 5s.

BOHN'S LIBRARY OF SPORTS AND GAMES.

Vol. V. ATHLETIC SPORTS. Containing Cycling and Athletics, by H. HEWITT GRIFFIN; Skating, by DOUGLAS ADAMS. With 188 Illustrations. Small post 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Vol. VI. ATHLETIC SPORTS. Containing Practical Horsemanship and Riding for Ladies, by W. A. KERR, V.C. With 58 Illustrations. Small post 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
YERK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

TRISCHLER'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Ready this day, at all Booksellers' and Libraries.

FOLLY AND FRESH AIR. By Eden PHILLIPOTT.

The Daily Telegraph says:—"The author has a droll, dry manner that reminds one not a little of the style of such American humorists as Frank Stockton and Charles Dudley Warner. The book is not merely funny—it abounds in acute observations of human nature, snarley expressed; passages of bold and original thought; and descriptions of natural scenery at once truthful and picturesque. Altogether the volume is a delightful one." Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

A MERCIFUL DIVORCE. By F. W. Maude.

A vivid, pungent, and realistic story of aristocratic social life. This book promises to be one of the most eagerly read works during the coming season. 1 vol., cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SCUDAMORES."

JARDYNE'S WIFE. 3 vols. By C. J. Wills.

Glasgow Herald says:—"The work is exceedingly clever. The parodies of the characters introduced are gems in their way. Altogether the novel is very enjoyable." The Pall Mall Gazette says:—"The story is sufficiently ingenious and exciting to command a great deal of attention."

FRENCH FICTION OF TO-DAY. By Madame VAN DE VELDE.

Daily News says:—"Madame Van de Velde has written two serious, yet light and amusing, volumes on French Fiction of Today. The author's renders full justice to the exquisite sense of style in most French fiction." Glasgow Herald says:—"Readers will gather from the book more information regarding contemporary French novelists than from any other single book with which we are acquainted." In 2 vols., 21s.

AN AMERICAN WIDOW. By Albert KEVILL DAVIES.

The Morning Post says:—"An American Widow' is very amusing, very brightly written, and original." The Scotsman says:—"Is cleverly written and ingeniously contrived. A very clever sensational melodrama."

The Sunday Times says:—"Few better novels than this have been published lately." Cheap and Revised Edition, Handsome Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

THE DEAN'S DAUGHTER. By Sydney GRUNDY and F. C. PHILLIPS.

A New and Original Play in 1 vol., Paper Covers, 1s.

THE PIT TOWN CORONET. By C. J. Wills.

The World says:—"The Pit Town Coronet' is the best of a batch of novels now being before us. Its author has won distinction in another field of literature by his admirable sketches of Persian life in the 'Land of the Lion and Sun.' The keen observation and subtle sense of humour there exhibited reappear in his novel, which possesses, moreover, a clever plot and several interesting characters." New and Revised Edition, Elegant Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

THE RAILWAY FOUNDLING. By Nomad.

The Daily Telegraph says:—"Amongst some excellent novels recently issued, a clever story by 'Nomad,' 'A Railway Foundling,' deserves recognition. Here is a story which from the outset is delightfully fascinating. It is a story that must be read to be understood. There is vivacity and adventure in it, and good as the author's previous work, 'The Midway,' was, it is not too much to say that this is better." Cheap Edition, Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

SCARLET FORTUNE. By Henry Herman.

The Globe says:—"Mr. Herman has written a tale of quite sensational interest." Picture Boards, 2s.

TRISCHLER & CO., NEW BRIDGE ST., BLACKFRIARS.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other

Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

"It is superfluous to recommend with praise a volume by Dr. Alexander MacLaren, of Manchester, England." Christian Union (New York).

"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled." Independent (New York).

"Dr. MacLaren is, perhaps, the finest sermon builder of living preachers." Christian Commonwealth.

"Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address." Independent (London).

"Dr. MacLaren holds a unique place amongst the great preachers of the day, because of his well-balanced combination of gifts." The Modern Church.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons

on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other

Sermons. "It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth." Christian World.

"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon." Christian Leader.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, F.C.

VERE FOSTER'S WATER-COLOUR SERIES.

Just published, in Four Parts, 1s. 6d. each; or complete in cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

Reynolds and Children's Portraiture in England.

By W. J. LOFTIE.

Eight Coloured Plates and many reproductions of Celebrated Pictures by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Thomas Gainsborough, George Romney, Sir Thomas Lawrence, James Sant, R.A., and Sir J. E. Millais, Bart., R.A. With practical hints for Figure Painting in Water Colours by E. J. Floris.

Recently published, uniform with the above. In Four Parts, 1s. 6d. each; or complete in cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

Landseer and Animal Painting in England.

By W. J. LOFTIE.

Eight Coloured Plates and many reproductions of Celebrated Pictures after Landseer, Briton Riviere, R.A., H. W. B. Davis, R.A., Morland, W. Hunt, &c.

 Full Illustrated List of Vere Foster's Water-Colour Series sent post free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 49 and 50, OLD BAILEY.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

Established 1857. Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

Discussions of the legal events of the week.

Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

Explanatory and critical disquisitions on all the cases of importance decided in the Courts of Common Law and Equity, pointing out their relations to the previous law.

Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

In this department are given all new Rules and Orders in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

Special Reports of Cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

A complete record of the progress of legislation during each session.

The "SOLICITORS' JOURNAL" will contain Notes and Reports giving, from week to week, early information and explanation of the Decisions of the Courts on the New Practice.

A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

New legal works are carefully noticed in this department.

Full reports of the proceedings of the law societies. A careful summary is given of all the legal news of the week, and special attention is bestowed on furnishing early copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s.; when paid in advance.
SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

 The JOURNAL and REPORTER can be ordered from any date, and a proportionate reduction will be made in the Subscription up to the end of the current volume.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

MR. MURRAY'S FORTHCOMING WORKS.

- THE BAMPTON LECTURES, 1891.—THE INCARNATION of the SON of GOD. By Charles Gore, M.A., Principal of Pusey House, Oxford; Editor of "Lux Mundi." 8vo.
- MY CANADIAN JOURNAL, 1872-1878: Extracts from Home Letters written while Lord Dufferin was Governor-General. By the MARCHIONESS of DUFFERIN. Portraits, Map, and Illustrations. Crown 8vo.
- JASMIN: BARBER, POET, PHILANTHROPIST. By Samuel Smiles, LL.D., Author of "The Lives of the Engineers," &c. Post 8vo.
- WINTER JOURNEYS in PERSIA and KURDISTAN; with a Summer in the Upper Karun Region, and a Visit to the Rayah Nestorians. By Mrs. BISHOP (ISABELLA BIRD). Maps and Illustrations. 2 vols., crown 8vo.
- A DICTIONARY of HYMNOLOGY: the Origin and History of the Christian Hymns of all Ages and Nations, with special reference to those contained in the Hymn Books of English-speaking Countries. By Rev. JOHN JULIAN, M.A. 1,600 pages. Medium 8vo.
- ESTHER VANHOMRIGH: a New Novel. By Mrs. Woods, Author of "A Village Tragedy," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.
- JAPANESE LETTERS: Eastern Impressions of Western Men and Manners, as contained in the Correspondence of Tokiware and Yashiri. Edited by Commander HASTINGS BERKELEY, R.N. Post 8vo.
- EXPLOSIVES and their POWERS. Translated and Condensed from the French of M. Berthelot. By Colonel J. P. CUNDILL, R.A., H.M. Inspector of Explosives, and C. NAPIER HAKE, Inspector of Explosives in Victoria. Illustrations. 8vo.
- HANDBOOK of GREEK ARCHAEOLOGY: Sculpture, Vases, Bronzes, Gems, Terracottas, Architecture, Mural Paintings, &c. By A. S. MURRAY, Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities, British Museum. Illustrations. Crown 8vo.
- THE PSALTER of 1539: a Landmark of English Literature. Comprising the Text, in Black-Letter Type. Edited, with Notes, by JOHN EARLE, M.A., Professor of Anglo-Saxon at Oxford. Square 8vo.
- BEGUN in JEST: a New Novel. By Mrs. Newman, Author of "Her Will and Her Way," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.
- THE BARONETAGE of GREAT BRITAIN: a History, a Criticism, and a Vindication. Including all ascertained Facts as to the Foundation of the Order, with Curious Particulars as to the Varied Fortunes of certain Titles and their Holders, and Thoughts on the Degeneracy of the Order. By ROBERT DENNIS. Square 8vo.
- THE COMBAT with SUFFERING. By Major E. Gambier Parry. Fcap. 8vo.
- TRAVELS amongst the GREAT ANDES of the EQUATOR. By Edward Whymper, F.R.G.S. With 4 Maps and 140 Original Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s. net. Uniform with "Scrambles amongst the Alps."
- SUPPLEMENTARY APPENDIX to TRAVELS amongst the GREAT ANDES of the EQUATOR. Illustrated with Figures of New Genera and Species. With Preface. By EDWARD WHYMPER. With 60 Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 15s. net.
- HOW to USE the ANEROID BAROMETER. By Edward Whymper. With Tables. Medium 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.
- LUX MUNDI. A Cheaper Edition. A Series of Studies in the Religion of the Incarnation. By Various Writers. Edited by Rev. CHARLES GORE, M.A. Fifteenth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Next week.]
- EGYPT UNDER the PHARAOHS. A History derived entirely from the Monuments. By Heinrich Brugsch-Bey. A New Edition, Condensed and Thoroughly Revised, by M. BRODRICK. With Maps. 8vo.
- STUDIES in the ART of RAT-CATCHING. A Manual for Schools. By H. C. Barkley, Author of "My Boyhood," &c. Post 8vo.
- PRIMITIVE CULTURE. Researches into the Development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion, Language, Art and Science. By EDWARD B. TYLOR, F.R.S., Keeper of the Museum, Oxford. Third Edition, Revised. 2 vols., 8vo.
- THE INDIAN EMPIRE; a Handbook for Travellers in India in One Volume. With Maps and Plans. Post 8vo.
- THE JAPANESE EMPIRE; a Handbook for Travellers in Japan. Third Edition (1891). Revised and for the most part Rewritten. By B. H. CHAMBERLAIN and W. B. MASON. With 15 Maps. Post 8vo. 15s. net. [Ready.]
- LIFE of ALEXANDER N. SOMERVILLE, D.D. In Scotland, India, America, Australasia, Europe, &c. 1813-1889. By GEORGE SMITH, LL.D. Popular Edition. Portrait. Post 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]
- OLD ENGLISH PLATE: Ecclesiastical, Decorative, and Domestic. By Wilfred J. Cripps, C.B. Fourth Revised Edition. Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s. [Ready.]
- DR. WM. SMITH'S YOUNG BEGINNER'S LATIN COURSE—Part III. Easy Exercises on the Latin Syntax, with the Principal Rules of Syntax, Questions, Vocabulary, and an English-Latin Dictionary to the Exercises. 16mo, 2s. This Work is the Third and Last of a Short Series intended for the Use of Young Beginners in Latin. [Ready.]

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS.

- TEXT-BOOKS for Study and Reference, in connection with the authorised Courses of University Extension Lectures, Edited by Professor KNIGHT, of St. Andrews.
THE FIRST INSTALLMENT IS PUBLISHED THIS DAY—VIZ.:
- THE PHILOSOPHY of the BEAUTIFUL. By Professor Knight, University of St. Andrews. Post 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- THE FINE ARTS. By Professor G. Baldwin Brown, University of Edinburgh. With Illustrations. Post 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- ENGLISH COLONISATION and EMPIRE. By A. Caldecott. Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Maps and Plans. Post 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- THE USE and ABUSE of MONEY. By Dr. W. Cunningham, Fellow of Trin. Coll., Cambridge, Professor of Economic Science, King's Coll., London. Post 8vo, 3s.
- IN THE PRESS AND NEARLY READY:*
- THE REALM of NATURE: A Manual of Physiography. By Hugh Robert Mill, University of Edinburgh. With Maps and Illustrations.
- FRENCH LITERATURE By H. G. Keene, Wadham College, Oxford, Fellow of the University of Calcutta.
- THE ELEMENTS of ETHICS. By John H. Muirhead, Balliol College, Oxford, Lecturer on Moral Science, Royal Holloway College.
- THE STUDY of ANIMAL LIFE. By J. Arthur Thompson, University of Edinburgh.

Other volumes will be published at short intervals.

FOR PROSPECTUS APPLY TO THE PUBLISHER,

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET. Digitized by Google

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

New Novels Now Ready.

READY THIS DAY.

THE NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF
"A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER."

MR. CHAINES'S SONS.

By W. E. NORRIS,
Author of "Thirby Hall," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER A CHARM."

BEACON FIRES. By E. Werner,

Author of "Success," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The reader who does not grow enthusiastic over 'BEACON FIRES' must be very hard to please. The present writer has tried to read the book with all the judicial soberness of a critic; but he confesses that its absorbing interest took his critical sense captive at an early stage of the story, and did not relax its hold till the end.... The incident of the 'ride for life or death' and a few others in the story recall (by no resemblance of fact, but by the same rapid, picturesque, and passionate movement) some of the more thrilling passages in Scott—such as every one will remember in 'The Talisman' and 'Ivanhoe.'"

Academy.

NOW READY.

VIOLET MOSES. By

LEONARD MERRICK. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The cleverness of the workmanship is unmistakable, indeed the book is in various ways one of the ablest of recent novels."—Spectator.

"The difficulty of novel-writing is to hit on anything original, but Mr. Merrick, so far as our pretty extensive experience goes, is fairly entitled to the honours of a discoverer. He has struck into a new social stratum, and he seems to be at home in it.... It is doubtful to the very last whether passion or virtue will triumph, and the scene where the long and earnest pleading by Mr. Morris of his evil cause is broken only by the clamour of the eager gamblers is powerful and pathetic."—Times.

NOW READY.

RULING the PLANETS.

By MINA E. BURTON. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"If this is a first novel it shows very considerable promise. The story of an atrocious swindle. Each step plunges the conspirators deeper in deceit; they are treading gingerly through a labyrinth of circumstantial lies; and the delightful thing is the moral tone they preserve throughout. Just as vice has been rewarded, and the conspiracy has apparently been crowned with complete success, it is cleverly baffled by an unforeseen circumstance. Indeed, the novel is so adroitly worked up that it is extremely readable."—Times.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GODFREY HELSTONE."

PATIENCE HOLT. By

GEORGIANA M. CRAIK, Author of "Diana," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "HER OWN COUNSEL."

EVELYN'S CAREER. By the Author of "Dr. Edith Romney." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Delightfully written, with a grace and restraint of style that are as welcome as they are rare."—Academy.

A NEW EDITION.

ALDYTH. By Jessie Fothergill,

Author of "The First Violin." In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

OLIPHANT ANDERSON & FERRIER'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.—AUTUMN 1891.

I.

Annie S. Swan's New Story.

Cloth extra, 3s. 6d. [November.]

Who Shall Serve? A Story of the Times. By ANNIE S. SWAN, Author of "The Ayres of Studleigh," &c., &c.

A New Edition (completing 22,000) of "THE AYRES of STUD-LEIGH," by Annie S. Swan, is Now Ready, price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

II.

Cloth extra, 5s. [Ready.]

After Touch of Wedded Hands.

By HANNAH B. MACKENZIE.

III.

Cloth extra, 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

Comrades True. By ELLINOR

DAVENPORT ADAMS. Six Original Illustrations by Edith Scannell.

IV.

Cloth extra, 3s. 6d. [October.]

Richard Tregellas: a Memoir of his Adventures in the West Indies in the year of Grace 1781. By DAVID LAWSON JOHNSTONE. Sixteen Original Illustrations by W. Boucher.

V.

Cloth, 5s. [October.]

That Good Part, and other Sermons. By Rev. ROBERT RUTHERFORD, M.A.

VI.

Cloth extra, with Frontispiece, 2s. [Ready.]

Molly. By A. C. HERTFORD,

Author of "Among the Heather," &c.

VII.

Cloth extra, with Frontispiece, 2s. 6d. [Ready.]

The Magic Flower - Pot. By

EDWARD GARRETT, Author of "By Still Waters," &c. New Edition.

VIII.

Illustrated, 1s., cloth. [Ready.]

Milestones, and other Stories.

By JESSIE M. E. SAXBY, Author of "Kate and Jean," &c.

IX.

With Portrait. Paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. [Ready.]

Mr. Gladstone: a Popular Bio-

GRAPHY. By E. A. MACDONALD, Author of "The Story of Stanley."

X.

With Frontispiece. Paper boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d. [Ready.]

The Sandcliff Mystery. By SCOTT

GRAHAM, Author of "A Bolt from the Blue," &c. Cheap Edition.

XI.

NEW LIBRARY EDITION.

Large 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d. [Ready.]

The Letters of Samuel Ruther-

FORD. Edited by Rev. ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D.

"In every respect this is a perfect edition. All lovers of good men and good books should have it."—British Weekly.
The CHEAP EDITION, 3s. 6d., cloth, may still be had.

OLIPHANT'S POPULAR 1s. SERIES.

OVER 500,000 SOLD.

NEW VOLS. :—

Disinherited. By MARGARET M. BLACK.

Paper covers, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

False Witness. By MARY CROSS. Paper covers, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

Bits from Blinkbonny. By JOHN STRATH-

ESK. Paper covers, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

OLIPHANT ANDERSON & FERRIER,
LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

SERMONS for DAILY LIFE.

By the Rev. Canon DIGGLE. Author of "Bishop Frazer's Lancashire Life," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE TOMBS of the KINGS of ENGLAND. By J. CHARLES WALL. Dedicated by permission to H.M. the QUEEN. With 57 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, £1 1s.

AT THE ANTIPODES; Travels

in Australia, New Zealand, Fiji Islands, the New Hebrides, New Caledonia, and South America, 1888-89. By G. VERSCHUER. Translated by MARY DANIELS. Numerous Illustrations and Map. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS:

a Historical, Geographical, Ethnographical, Social, and Commercial Sketch of the Philippine Archipelago and its Political Dependencies. By JOHN FOREMAN F.R.G.S., In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 500 pages, with Map and Frontispiece, cloth extra, One Guinea.

The CRUISE of the "FALCON":

a Voyage to South America in a Thirty-ton Yacht. By E. F. KNIGHT, Barrister-at-Law. With numerous Illustrations and Map. New Edition (Sixth). Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

MARY HARRISON'S GUIDE

to MODERN COOKERY. By the Author of "The Skilful Cook," &c. With a Preface by the Right Hon. Sir THOMAS DYKE ACLAND, Bart. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

WOMEN and their WORK. By

VEVA KARSLAND, Authoress of "Smitten and Slain," &c. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s. A Series of Articles on the Various Employments open to Women.

A COMPLETE TREATISE on the ELECTRO-DEPOSITION of METALS, comprising Electro-Plating and Galvanoplastic Operations, the Deposition of Metals by the Contact and Immersion Processes, the Colouring of Metals, the Method of Grinding and Polishing, &c. Translated from the German of Dr. GEORGE LANGBEIN. With Additions by WILLIAM T. BRANNT, Editor of "The Techno-Chemical Receipt Book," &c. Illustrated by 125 Engravings. Demy 8vo, cloth, 25s.

TWO NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

GODIVA DURLEIGH. By

SARAH DOUDNEY, Author of "A Woman's Glory," "Where the Dew Falls in London," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

A RED SISTER: a Story of

Three Days and Three Months. By C. L. PIRKIS, Author of "A Dateless Bargain," "At the Moment of Victory," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

PORT TARASCON: the Last

Adventures of the Illustrious Tartarin. By ALPHONSE DAUDET. Translated by HENRY JAMES. Numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Myrback, Rossi, and Montégut. New Edition. Square 8vo, cloth, 5s.

BETWIXT the FORELANDS.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "Juck's Courtship," &c. With numerous Illustrations. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

OUR ARMIES. Described and

Illustrated by RICHARD SIMKIN. Containing 100 Facsimile Water-Colour Drawings, together with the Descriptive Text of the British Cavalry, Artillery and Infantry, Indian Native Cavalry, Artillery and Infantry, and the British Army of the East. 1 vol., 4to, attractively bound, 6s. Also published in 5 books, at 1s. each, bound limp in coloured picture varnished covers.

HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE.

Volume for 1891. 4to in handsome cloth cover, 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. Containing numerous Original Stories, hundreds of Illustrations, and 12 Coloured Plates. "Turning over the pages of Harper's Young People we have come to this conclusion, that it must be a dull child who will not find materials in it for merry and happy hours."—Graphic.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C. 4.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1891.

No. 1014, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscripts.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Elements of Politics. By Henry Sidgwick. (Macmillans.)

AFTER the exotic pedantry, the forced physical analogies, the disingenuous rhetoric, and the distorted history that have formed the staple of sundry recent English contributions to political philosophy, one turns with relief to a treatise avowedly constructed on the lines of Bentham and Mill. And one cannot advance far in its perusal without experiencing not only relief, but profound admiration and satisfaction. The work is indeed worthy of the author and of the theme. It was to be expected that Prof. Sidgwick would bring to the consideration of any subject he chose to take up the judicial habit of mind, the capacity of looking at a question from every possible point of view, in which he surpasses every living writer, as well as the capacity for following out long trains of abstract reasoning, in which he is surpassed by none. But it might have been feared at the same time that these very qualities of all-sided accessibility to argument, of dialectical subtlety and depth and reach, might have hampered the constructive portion of the work, and left it without the equally needful qualities of clearness, practicability, and decision. Fortunately such apprehensions have not been realised. The present volume will add to Prof. Sidgwick's high reputation and extend it among new circles of readers. At once luminous and impartial, comprehensive and profound, adapted alike to the wants of the student, the journalist, and the statesman, it deserves to take rank as the best existing treatise on the subject. Dealing with a question on which the noblest intellects of all ages have been exercised, Prof. Sidgwick may challenge a comparison with the greatest. Some who had the advantage of coming earlier have shown more originality and brilliancy, but none, not even Aristotle, have done for their age what he has done for ours. Never before have the results of political experience and reflection been so thoroughly reduced to first principles, stated with such precision, weighed with such nicety, or made so immediately available for the guidance of legislation and of opinion.

Prof. Sidgwick is before all things a moralist. He treats politics as a theory not of what is but of what should be. It deals with societies in so far as they are subject to government, that is to an authority whose commands are ultimately enforced by irresistible physical compulsion. To know how this supreme authority should be constituted, we must first know what are its proper functions. The first answer is, that it must so act as to promote the greatest happiness of the greatest number, future generations being included. The author has argued for Utilitarianism elsewhere, and here assumes it as proved. But whether we admit the principle without qualification, or—what is now becoming rather common—take it as practically equivalent to some other principle of a different derivation, its application is attended with difficulties. According to one theory, government can best secure the well-being of the community by merely preventing its members from injuring one another, leaving them for the rest to pursue their own interests as best they can. According to the other, it should interfere to benefit people, or to make some people benefit others. The former theory is universally known as Individualism or laissez-faire. The latter Prof. Sidgwick, with commendable courage, calls Socialistic, not with the object of exciting prejudice or favour, but simply for convenience. The drift of legislation in the modern state has been towards Individualism; but Socialism has been admitted to some extent, and on Utilitarian principles no valid reason can be given for its absolute exclusion. The whole question is one of expediency. It would indeed be different if we could convince ourselves that the enormous mass of legislation which, in all countries and at all times, has been devoted to the prevention of aggressions and the enforcement of contracts could be reduced to the single principle of "the liberty of each, bounded only by the equal liberty of all." For the mildest Socialism involves more interference with the liberty of some than is necessary to protect the equal liberty of others; and so, on this interpretation, we have one set of laws inconsistent with at least the spirit of another set. But Prof. Sidgwick proves with his usual victorious good sense that such an interpretation is strained and inadequate. One of his arguments is particularly striking and ingenious.

"Individualists agree that, where law has not succeeded in preventing injury to person or reputation, it ought generally to enforce pecuniary compensation for the mischief from the wrong-doer, unless the injury is one that does not admit of being repaired—so as to bring about a condition of things approximating as far as possible to what would have existed had there been no injury. From the point of view of Utilitarian Individualism this duty is clear; but if freedom be taken in the ordinary sense, it is hard to see how the loss of freedom can be compensated by money. Moreover, to say that the richer man, as such, enjoys more freedom than the poorer—which would be implied in such a rule of compensation, if freedom be taken as the ultimate end of law—would render futile the fundamental aim of these Individualists, which is to secure by law equal freedom to all: since no one professes to secure equal wealth to all."

I am not quite sure, however, that a Spencerian would be silenced by this last consideration. He might grant that wealth was an element of liberty, while insisting that its forcible equalisation would be destructive to liberty in general. And he might maintain that in the supposed case a portion of the aggressor's liberty may appropriately be transferred to the aggrieved party as a compensation for his loss, without prejudice to the general guarantee of private property however unequal its distribution.

Another crux for the absolute Individualist is how on his principles to construct a consistent law of bequest and inheritance:

"It seems, on the one hand, that other men can have no right to a dead man's property, so far as its value is due to his own labour, or the labour of men whose free choice has transferred it to him—since it would not have been there at all but for him or them; and, on the other hand, it seems that the dead can have no right to control men's use of a material world to which they no longer hold any cognisable relation."

Here again we must fall back on the old Utilitarianism to help us out of our difficulties. The welfare of society requires that children should be provided for, and that the motives for acquiring property should be strengthened by giving the possessor an interest in its disposal after his death. That no one should be allowed to inherit more than a competence was suggested by J. S. Mill as part of an ideal code; but this and other restrictions on liberty of bequest are discountenanced by our author as dangerously diminishing the incentives to industry and thrift. But he agrees with Bentham in holding that all relations more remote than the descendants of the deceased person's parents should be excluded from intestate succession (pp. 101-3).

The mention of children suggests further possibilities of state-interference with individual liberty in matters connected with marriage and education, to which an Individualist can only take exception on the common ground of expediency. Here we find the practice of the modern state completely justified by the principles advocated in this treatise.

It will readily be understood from the foregoing that Prof. Sidgwick has no objection to Socialism, even of the most advanced type, except that it is not expedient. The decisive arguments against collective ownership are summed up in a passage (p. 152) too long for quotation and too condensed for abridgment. It is only by analogous reasoning that private property in land can be defended: on any a priori theory of justice, whether Individualistic or Socialistic, it is indefensible. But the equalisation of wealth, so far as this can be effected without mischievously checking its accumulation, makes for happiness, and should be an object of state action. Legislation for the benefit of the poorer classes unquestionably takes from the pockets of the taxpayers money which is not laid out for their protection, and so far runs counter to the Individualistic principle of securing to every man the fruits of his own industry; but the author seems to argue that, even accepting this principle, some compensation is due to those from whom an equal share in the natural resources of the land is withheld by our present system of appropriation (p. 156). Seeing, however, that many taxpayers have been defrauded of their share in the common heritage to precisely the same extent as those whom they are called on to support, I doubt the validity of such a plea, and fear that it involves a dangerous departure from the Utilitarian ground.

If Prof. Sidgwick accepts laissez-faire with certain important limitations as the guiding principle of civil law, he accepts it much more unreservedly under the name of non-intervention as the principle of international law. Deeply reasoned and instructive as are his chapters on this branch of public policy, I must regard them as the least lucid and satisfactory part of the work. It seems to me that each state must, merely as a matter of self-preservation, interest itself far more deeply in the affairs of other states than is here assumed. Let me note, however, that what I look on as the highest aim of true statesmanship, the Federation of the West, is recognised as not beyond the limits of sober conjecture (p. 209); although some of us may be disappointed to find that Russia is left out in the cold.

It is in dealing with the structure of government, a subject which occupies half the volume, that Prof. Sidgwick's great powers of analysis and combination are most effectively displayed. Throughout the work he proceeds deductively, reasoning down from the necessary conditions of human happiness, and from the known laws of human nature as existing in highly civilised societies, to the practical details of legislation. But while the first part is rather a justification than a criticism of what has been done and is still doing by the modern state, in the second part a more idealising treatment is adopted. From the primal necessity of preventing mutual aggressions, it follows that there must be authorities established for framing, applying, and enforcing those commands of the sovereign which we call laws. The cost of their maintenance demands taxation; and, to prevent oppression, taxes can only be granted by the elected representatives of the people, whose consent is also indispensable to the passing of just laws. Modern researches have shown that the separation of the three powers—the Executive, the Legislature, and the Judiciary—is far from being the simple problem it seemed to Montesquieu, and that in the English Constitution especially they are far more closely intertwined than was formerly supposed. Prof. Sidgwick shows the power and patience of a mathematician in unravelling all the complicated situations that may theoretically result from the interaction of these three bodies, or rather four bodies, taking the popular electorate into account. Here, again, the dominant idea seems to be mutual independence and compensatory action. The author favours a wide franchise—including single women otherwise qualified, but excluding illiterates, paupers, insolvent debtors, and sundry classes of disreputable persons—and vote by ballot. He objects to Hare's scheme of representation as applied to the whole country, but apparently would like to see it tried in constituencies returning more than one member. Any attempt on the part of the electors to dictate to their representatives should be discouraged, and rather long parliaments—say not much under our own legal limit—are advisable for the prevention of that evil.

Members of parliament are not to be paid—a point repeatedly emphasised by the author as giving the propertied classes that preponderance in the legislature which is necessary to secure them against spoliation by the numerical majority. A further guarantee is supplied by the institution of a Senate, to be chosen, as would appear, by some indirect system of double election, after the example of the French and American Constitutions. Disputes between the two Houses are to be determined by that appeal to the mass vote of the electorate known as the Referendum. Prof. Sidgwick evidently has no faith in the hereditary principle as a permanent political arrangement. Not only is it discarded in the case of the senators, but the institution of monarchy, for which he has much to say, is carefully dissociated from it. The instability of an executive whose existence depends on the will of the legislature is recognised as a pressing danger of representative government, and measures for securing a greater degree of independence than is possessed, for instance, by our Cabinet are elaborately discussed. Constitutional laws are to be separated from ordinary legislation; and a different machinery, probably including the Referendum, is to be provided for their alteration. In the chapter on the Judiciary, the most noteworthy point is the objection raised to our present jury system, which the author would at once abolish in civil cases, and, whenever an improved state of morality makes such a revolution possible, in criminal cases as well.

Prof. Sidgwick would not describe his ideal government as either a democracy or an aristocracy, but rather as a combination of what is best in each. From the one it takes the principle of popular control and active intervention of the whole people in public affairs; from the other the principle that government, in all its departments, is a work for experts, only to be undertaken by persons specially gifted and trained for the office. From whichever side we consider it, the commonwealth of the future finds its most deadly enemy in the spirit of party as known to us in its latest developments. Nothing can be more adverse either to the rule of the majority or to the rule of reason than the submission of every great question to the arbitration of fanaticism and hypocrisy, of petty cunning and sordid greed. To the discussion of this frightful disorder, its causes, consequences, and remedies, Prof. Sidgwick has devoted a chapter, which, as a piece of literary composition, is not only the finest in his work, but, so far as I know, is unsurpassed in the whole range of English political literature, as an example of that noblest denunciatory eloquence which goes over the heads of living individuals to strike at the impersonal forms of evil by whose temptations they are corrupted and enslaved. One feels how profoundly repugnant must be the exigencies of the party system to a nature of such absolute sincerity and equitableness as is the writer's; and that only under the influence of a burning moral indignation could his usually unimpassioned style have been exchanged for sentences in which the voice of the prophet more than that of the law-giver is heard. It is much to be wished that the chapter referred to could be separately reprinted and circulated as a political tract; but, failing this, I would earnestly recommend it to the attention of those who have not time to read the whole volume through.

ALFRED W. BENN.

The Iliad of Homer. Translated into English Prose by John Purves. Edited, with an Introduction, by Evelyn Abbott. (Percival.)

THIS translation, as we are informed by Mr. Abbott in his preface, was "the chief literary work of Mr. Purves's life." There is a pathos in the fact that such a work should appear posthumously and without the writer's final touches, however admirably the editor be qualified to polish and amend. The curious indifference displayed by Mr. Purves, as Mr. Abbott informs us, in "often translating repeated passages by two different versions" is just one of those flaws which we should expect in a translation kept too long upon the stocks and worked at, with many interruptions, during thirteen years, and then left in great measure unrevised. Mr. Abbott was of course right in amending this fault as far as possible, and also in correcting that other sure sign of scanty revision, the frequent occurrence of blank verse in what is meant to be poetical prose. I may be permitted, in passing, to observe that in the earlier books some further weeding-out of the blank verse was necessary: one would almost suppose that Mr. Purves considered that important speeches should begin with a blank verse and then lapse into prose; see, e.g., Book i. l. 148, p. 5—

"O brow of shamelessness, and heart of fraud."

Book iii., l. 39, p. 43:

"Paris, thou evil Paris, fair to see."

Book vi., l. 264, p. 105:

"Madam, my mother, fetch not wine for me."

and iv., l. 407, p. 109:

"Headlong, thy doughtiness will be thy death."

In each of these cases the blank verse, commencing the speech, forces itself upon the eye and ear. Probably Mr. Abbott was reluctant to amend this flaw, unless (as seems to have been the case in the later books—see Prof. p. v.) it became very frequent. But these defects, even where they have not been amended, do not interfere with the masculine vigour of the style and the frequent felicity of expression. It has been argued elsewhere that the work was not wanted; that Messrs. Lang, Leaf, and Myers have, in combination, achieved the task of presenting the Iliad in English prose, and that another version is superfluous. But, unless I am mistaken, Mr. Purves' work is anterior to theirs in performance, though not in publication; furthermore, the "chief literary work" of a lifetime too early cut short must not be blotted out because others have been over the same ground; let it stand as a memorial of "the light that failed."

In any case it challenges comparison with the work of Mr. Lang and his coadjutors. Writing without access, for the moment, to their volume, I can only speak from memory of it; to me it appears that their version is more graceful, more distinctly a work of literary art, more absolutely pleasing reading. Mr. Purves, on the other hand, in the best parts of his translation, shows a strong and eminently Homeric simplicity, with less conscious aiming at a certain style than his rivals display: they remind one more beautifully of Homer's story, Mr. Purves more powerfully of Homer's manner.

But let Mr. Purves speak for himself; first, in a scene of action; and, secondly, in a speech of powerful appeal: Hector shall burst the gate, and Priam sue to Achilles—Books xii., ll. 450-66, xxiv. ll. 485-506.

"As when a shepherd takes and lightly carries the fleece of a ram in one hand, an insignificant burden; so Hector lifted up the stone, and bore it straight toward the doors, the high and double doors, that made the firm-closed gate, which two encountering bars secured within, and a single lock-pin fastened them: he came, and stood nigh, his feet apart, that he might cast the firmer, and leant himself upon the throw, and struck the gate in the midst, and shattered both the hinges, and the stone fell inward by its weightiness, and the gate gave forth a groan, and the bars held not fast, and the doors were dashed open, this way and that, beneath the impact of the stone; and radiant Hector bounded in, his countenance like swift night; and he shone with appalling bronze, that covered him about, and he held a spear in either hand. None might have met him or driven him back, when once he had leapt within the gates; and his eyes burned with fire."

This is not perfect; the perpetual "and, and, and" gives a monotony to it; it is difficult quite to like "appalling bronze" for σμερδαλέω. Nevertheless, the action is vividly and strongly described.

Now let Priam plead.

"Remember thy father, Achilles, image of the gods; for I am old as he, upon the dismal threshold of old age: and he is molested of his neighbours, who dwell around, nor is there any to keep from him disquiet and vexation; but yet he hears that thou art alive, and takes comfort, and hath continual hope to see his son returning from Troyland; but what have I of comfort, who have begotten so many sons, the leaders of this land, and now not one is left? Fifty had I, when the sons of the Achaeans came; nine and ten from one womb, and the others handmaids bare me in my house. And all the rest are dead in battle broil; but he, mine only one, the defender of my city and my people, him thou slewest as yesterday, fighting for his own land, Hector; because of him am I come to the ships of the Achaeans, to buy him of thee, and I offer no petty price. Think, O Achilles, of the jealous gods, and have pity on the dead; and remember thine own father, for I am more miserable than he; and I have endured what earthly man hath never endured, that I should put to my mouth the hand of him who slew my son."

Here, too, there are slight flaws; the first line is ambiguous, and the emphatic σολο insufficiently marked; πω is omitted in the last line but one; for "mouth" one would prefer "lips." It falls short—who does not fall short?—of the pathos of the original; yet it is good, and up to this level the greater part of the translation is sustained.

In smaller matters perhaps objection may fairly be taken to the rendering of "δαμονίη" by "Witch!" (p. 57) and by "Madcap"

(pp. 107, 112), where the adjective is masculine. One of these terms is too abusive, the other too trivial, for the measured and sardonic irony of the original term. "Atride" and "Pelide" are not pleasing to the eye, nor is the usual, though not universal, rendering of κλισίας by "booths" attractive. "Panachaeans" is defensible, no doubt, but it suggests the modern, rather prosy, adjective Pan-anglican. "Rancorous battle" is perhaps improveable. But, viewed as a whole, this translation, though I cannot think it the best that has appeared in English prose, is yet a formidable competitor with that best, and a not unworthy monument of a scholar of unfulfilled renown.

E. D. A. MORSEHEAD.

The History of Saint Dominic, Founder of the Friars Preachers. By Augusta Theodosia Drane. (Longmans.)

To win mankind, we must fascinate them; to fascinate them, we must be winning, says a French author; and if we would understand the lives of those who founded the chief religious orders, we must remember their winning qualities, no less than their intellectual gifts, their commanding genius, and their organising power. Dominic de Guzman was born a grandee of Spain, in 1170. He was educated in the schools at Palencia, which were removed afterwards to the more celebrated university of Salamanca; and though it be the fashion to describe the twelfth century as an unlettered age, his academical studies occupied him for ten years, six years being devoted to the humane sciences, and four to the speculations of theology. In 1194 he joined himself to the Canons of Osma, who had adopted recently the institute and habit of Saint Austin; and they were not long in choosing Dominic to be their sub-prior, an office to which the archdeaconry of Osma was attached. In the retirement of a cloister, in the services of a cathedral, and in the administration of a diocese, he was exercised and strengthened for his great career.

The regularity of this quiet life was exchanged for a more active scene in 1203, when Dominic was sent upon an embassy in the bishop's train; after that, he undertook a pilgrimage to Rome, and at this time he was presented to that great Pope, Innocent III. Dominic and the bishop travelled on their return through the plains of Languedoc, which province was then given over to the Albigenses and their adherents. As these people affected a primitive or evangelical mode of Christianity, there were serious divergencies of belief and practice between them and the Catholic world of the thirteenth century. The Albigenses would have us believe that the true church failed in the reign of Saint Sylvester, "the first wealthy Pope," by acquiring temporal dominions. They denounced the mediaeval hierarchy as apostate, because it promoted or tolerated war. They were so very simple as to expect the clergy would live by the work of their own hands, as the Apostles did; they affirmed that no rents nor tithes should be paid to them, and that no property should be bequeathed to churches.

They were suspected of Manichean errors; and, under the cloak of a pretended austerity, they were supposed to conceal an unbounded license. They refused oaths; they condemned the tribunals of the church and every sort of ecclesiastical proceeding, and in return every ecclesiastical authority was willing to condemn the Albigenses. They denied purgatory, as well as the popular devotion to saints and relics; and they held that only "The Perfect" could receive or give the Sacraments. It is easier to hold this last opinion; than to act upon it. Such opinions as these are still impracticable and sterile: in the thirteenth century, they were criminal as well as foolish; for they threatened the whole fabric of society as it was then established, alike in the Church and in the State. As "The Perfect" or "The Converted" are not to be discerned with unerring accuracy, the sacramental system, the clerical estate, and the visible church itself must be in peril, if their existence is to depend upon a line of ministers, whose only warrant is in the vain imagination of themselves and their disciples. A barren philosophy or the tenets of a school may be preserved in books, and may be revived from time to time by the zeal of occasional adherents; but a religion for mankind at large can only be provided and maintained by a visible society, with all the attributes and rights of sovereign power, of development, and of unbroken continuity.

Against the Albigenses, and against their wealthy master, the Lord of Toulouse, there were arrayed the cupidity of neighbouring princes, the faith and the fears of an established priesthood, and the inflammable zeal of an orthodox and military population. All these were directed and put in motion by the pastoral care of Innocent III., by the sermons of Dominic, and by the fierce piety of Simon de Montfort. The crusades of this champion of the mediaeval order are condemned invariably by the professors of modern sentiment; though it would be difficult to prove that the slaughtering of Albigenses was not as justifiable as the slaughtering of the Communists by this age of ours. Indeed, if there be any advantage in the comparison, it might be shown to rest with the governments of the thirteenth century. The methods of the crusade were not gentle, though its cruelties may be distributed among the combatants on either side; and it is not easy to say why the whole weight of responsibility and crime should be laid upon the victors. By their apologists, Dominic is said to have been a peaceful warrior. His chief reliance was in a blameless and philanthropic life; his weapons were his boads and crucifix; his only battles were theological encounters, and in the chronicles of the orthodox he always marches from the lists with flying colours. An historian, however, may attribute the victory according to his taste, either to the supernatural arms of Dominic, or to the more carnal weapons of De Montfort.

Dominic had gathered followers in the progress of the war; and when it ended in 1213, by the capture of Toulouse, he retired into a monastery there with six disciples, who were to qualify themselves by a course of piety and learning for missionary labours among the survivors of the crusade. From this little beginning was developed the institute of Friars Preachers; with some difficulty the Papal confirmation was obtained, and the new Order was approved by Honorius III. in 1216. Dominic was careful to establish his children at the universities; they soon obtained houses at Paris and Bologna, and the learning of the Friars was as conspicuous as their poverty and zeal. The progress of the Dominicans was rapid; and at the second general chapter in 1221, we are told of the eight provinces into which the Order was divided, and of the sixty houses which it possessed. Among the provinces was England; and the first Friars landed there in the train of Peter des Roches, a bishop of Winchester, whose reputation is not good in the chronicles of Henry III., nor has it improved by being transferred thence to the pages of our fashionable historians. Before the Reformation, England could show fifty-six Dominican establishments; twenty-six of them were settled in country towns, where "The Friary" still has a familiar and often a comfortable sound. The Dominicans of Oxford were active and illustrious members of the university, though of their beautiful house even the ruins have disappeared; and in London only the name of Black Friars perpetuates the remembrance of an historical community. Dominic died at Bologna, in 1221; he was canonised in 1234; and in 1469 his relics were translated into that famous shrine by Nicholas of Pisa, where they now repose: "Exsultant sancti in gloria, laetabuntur in cubilibus suis."

Such are the outlines of the life of Dominic de Guzman, as they might be given by a sober and yet favourable historian. The details are filled in with great minuteness, though with a prudent selection, by his present biographer; and, as she is herself a Dominican, they are filled in with even greater partiality. Two questions are debated among those who investigate the life of Dominic: one relates to the Crusade, the other to the institution of the Rosary. Was Dominic a mild and blameless preacher of repentance? or did he march at the head of the crusading armies, with a two-edged sword in his hand, inciting them to pious massacres? When the Inquisition was in power, and the Dominicans in all the pride of office, they loved to style their Patriarch "The First Inquisitor," to delineate him after their own pattern, and to invest him with the prerogatives of their calling. This view is convenient no longer, and Miss Drane proves to her own satisfaction that it was never accurate; but, if we reject this once popular version of the legend, it is not so easy to maintain that Dominic was present with the Crusade at all. If his presence be granted to Miss Drane, we may be able with her to absolve him from any aggressive part in the holy war; though it would have been a more plenary absolution if we could find that he had ever opposed himself to its worst excesses. Miss Drane must have felt the force of this reasoning, since she argues that Dominic should be judged by the standard of his own age: to fortify her argument, she admits that age to be "semi-barbarous"; and she asserts that "there is no trace of toleration to be found in any religious body, before the Edict of Nantes." In no Christian "body," perhaps, between the first ages and our own is perfect toleration to be found; but it was a fixed principle in the Celestial Empire, among the disciples of Confucius, who formed neither the smallest nor the least virtuous portion of the human family; and, in the age of Dominic, a toleration unknown to the rest of Europe would seem to have been enjoyed by the subjects of the Mahommedans in Spain. Not only the life of Dominic, but the utterances and the policy of the Holy See, must come to be judged ultimately by the standard of the thirteenth century. It is easy enough to apply the low standard of "a semi-barbarous age" to many of the words and actions of the mediæval popes; the difficulty is to believe that the same authority should be at once semi-barbarous and infallible. It is not so easy to follow Miss Drane when she attributes the Edict of Nantes to a "religious body": that Edict was not a spontaneous concession by the Church of France; it was imposed by the wisdom of a victorious and royal convert upon a grateful but unwilling clergy; and it is its revocation that may be ascribed more truly to clerical manoeuvres.

As to the Rosary, Miss Drane appears to hold with Cardinal Newman, that "when we assert, we do not argue." "Rome has spoken," she says, "the cause is decided; and in presence of the authoritative decisions of so long a line of august pontiffs, all captious criticism must henceforth be put to silence." These are the resources of the desperate. If historical events will bear investigation, "a line of august pontiffs" is not required to demonstrate their truth; if they will not endure the tests of evidence and examination, not even pontifical assertions can make them trustworthy, for the credit of a witness can only be worth the precise value of his evidence. Though beads were in use long before the thirteenth century, though their use was not peculiar to the Christians, though the actual form and the most essential part of the Rosary as we have it now cannot be traced to Dominic, we must believe that he instituted the devotion. We may believe also, if we choose, that a pair of beads, with full instructions, was handed to Saint Dominic by the Blessed Virgin herself: but the existence of a legend is not the same thing as the truth of a legend; and the evidence, which will prove one, need not be sufficient by any means to prove the other. Miss Drane, in common with many biographers of saints, mistakes the two things; and hence, I think, she has diminished the value of a most interesting and painstaking compilation. How much wiser is the method of Joubert:

"Les merveilles de la vie des saints ne sont pas leurs miracles, mais leurs moeurs. Ne croyez pas à leurs miracles, si vous le voulez, mais croyez du moins à leurs moeurs, car rien n'est mieux attesté."

ARTHUR GALTON.

Representative Irish Tales. Compiled by W. B. Yeats. In 2 vols. (Putnam's Sons.)

MR. GLADSTONE not long ago issued an injunction to his countrymen to study Irish history. The exhortation certainly was not unneeded. One cannot take up the works even of eminent English historians who have had to deal with Irish affairs without being struck by the extent to which Irish history is an obscure and unfamiliar region to the English mind. Thus the other day the present reviewer, happening to look into the last edition of Mr. Green's Short History of the English People, found the Battle of Vinegar Hill dated at a time when the rebellion of which it was the most decisive action had not yet broken out. And this is modern history! If we look into Tudor or Norman times we find separate personages rolled into one; impossible clans evolved from misunderstood patronymics; and, in short, every possible evidence that Irish history has not been regarded as a subject worthy of serious study. It cannot be said that this state of things is likely to be affected to any good purpose by the mushroom growth of sketchy histories which sprung up to supply the demand created by Mr. Gladstone's exhortation.

A much better fruit of England's better mind towards Ireland is such a work as that with which we are here concerned. These two volumes of Putnam's very pretty Knickerbocker series will not indeed teach the inquirer anything to speak of about Irish history, nor will they give him anything available for political purposes; but they will give him the means of really learning something about Ireland and the Irish by bringing him into contact with the Irish spirit and genius, through many of its characteristic products, in many of its changeful moods. Altogether, about a dozen authors are represented in this collection. Among these we find not only such well-known names as those of Lever, Lover, and Miss Edgeworth; but several others which probably suggest little or nothing to the mass of English readers—Griffin, Carleton, the Banims, Charles Kickham. Between these two classes of writers there is a deep and important distinction. The former achieved much in their day, but their day is done: their books are the brilliant efflorescence of a transitory and unstable condition of social life which has now passed away for ever. The others, the peasant, Catholic, and Celtic writers, have little of achievement to show as yet; they lack culture, they lack art. But power and passion, observation and sympathy, they have in abundance; they are in touch with enduring realities; and if Ireland is ever to have a national literature springing from her own feelings and responding to her own spiritual needs, it is they who will be its progenitors.

The selection and editing of these tales could hardly have been put into better hands than those of Mr. Yeats, whose acute and finely-written Introduction deserves to be read with close attention. His criticisms are decisive and pregnant; and if one cannot always agree with them—he seems to us, for instance, to rate Maguire much too highly—one must differ with the respect due to genuine thought and knowledge. His remarks on Carleton are particularly striking and interesting—that new force, which came into literary Ireland about twenty years after the publication of Castle Rackrent, the greatest work of the greatest writer of the dominant classes:—

“Carleton commenced writing for the Christian Examiner. He had gone to Dublin from his father's farm in Tyrone, turned Protestant, and began vehemently asserting his new notion of things in controversial tales and sketches. The Dublin dilettanti, and there were quite a number in those days, were delighted. Here was a passion, a violence, new to their polite existence. They could not foresee that some day this stormy satire would be turned against themselves, their church, and, above all, this proselytising it now sought to spread. The true peasant was at last speaking, stammeringly, illogically, bitterly, but none the less with the deep and mournful accent of the people. Ireland had produced her second great novelist. Beside Miss Edgeworth's well-finished house of the intelligence, Carleton raised his rough clay ‘rath’ of humour and passion. Miss Edgeworth has outdone writers like Lover and Lever because of her fine judgment, her serene culture, her well-balanced mind. Carleton, on the other hand, with no conscious art at all, and living a half-blind, groping sort of life, drinking and borrowing, has, I believe, outdone not only them, but her also, by the sheer force of his powerful nature. It was not for nothing that his ancestors had dug the ground. His great body, that could leap twenty-one feet on a level, was full of violent emotions and brooding melancholy.”

The new spirit of Irish literature moving about to-day in its “penumbra of half culture” is also described with great insight by Mr. Yeats, whom, however, we must not wrong by quoting too much from his too short Introduction.

Mr. Yeats's selections seem, on the whole, well fitted for their purpose, and cannot be much impugned save on those grounds of personal predilection which one cannot give any reason for. Yet most people who know the prose literature of Ireland would, one thinks, have wished to find some things here, which are not, in place of others which are. Take, for instance, the selections from Carleton, of whom Mr. Yeats has written so well. Here we have four tales, of which one only, “The Battle of the Factions”—a tale full of dramatic power and grim humour—shows Carleton's real mastery of his craft. Of the other three, “Wildgoose Lodge” and “The Curse” are undoubtedly powerful pieces, but too obviously written for effect, while “Condy Cullen” is simply an ingenious trifle hardly worthy of being reprinted in a small collection of representative Irish tales. From none of these four tales would anyone suspect Carleton's mastery of tenderness and pathos, nor does any of these give us at all an adequate measure of the vis comica so richly shown in the humours of Findramore.

From Lever, too, something might have been taken—say, the tale of Bob Mahon's entertainment at his mansion in Castleconnell—with more of character and less of caricature than the account of Charles O'Malley's college life. And it is difficult to understand how so brilliant, cultured, and poetic a writer as Lefanu came to be entirely overlooked. Some of his tales are not only admirable as literary art, but, in theme, are racy of the soil, as his style always is; and the duel scene from The House by the Churchyard is one of the supremely good things in comic fiction. But Mr. Yeats has not only left him wholly unrepresented—he has permitted his printer, on the one occasion when he mentions Lefanu's name (ii. p. 208), to present him disguised as “Lefevre.”

Griffin, however, is well represented, especially by the “Death of the Huntsman.” What a fine poetic touch there is in the old huntsman's account of the delights his young master has abandoned for cock-fighting:—

“Ah, what's a cock-fight, Master Hardress, in comparison of a well-rod hunt among the mountains, with your horse flying under you like a fairy, an' the cry of the hounds like an organ out before you, an' the ground fleeting like a dream on all sides o' you, an' ah! what's the use o' talking!” Here he lay back on his pillow with a look of sudden pain and sorrow that cut Hardress to the heart.

“After a few moments he again turned a ghastly eye on Hardress, and said in a faint voice: ‘I used to go down by the lake in the evening to hear the stags belling in the wood; an' in the morning I'd be up with the first light to blow a call on the top o' the hill, as I used to do to comfort the dogs; an' then I'd miss their cry, an' I'd stop listening to the aychoes o' the horn among the mountains, till my heart would sink as low as my ould boots. An' bad boots they wor, too, signs on, I got wet in 'em; an' themselves an' the could morning air, an' the want o' the horse exercise I believe, an' everything, brought on this fit.’”

The really interesting thing about this is that it is no literary figment; it is not Griffin's fancy that we have to thank for it; it is absolutely true to nature and fact.

Before concluding, let us say that Mr. Yeats has added greatly to the value of this collection by the fine dedicatory poem which he has prefixed to it. We hear a good deal in these days of the great diffusion of poetic talent, and are threatened with a time when there will be “nothing left remarkable” in that region which bards in fealty to Apollo hold. But after all the strain of native power is easy enough to distinguish from that finish and dignity of style—an excellent thing too—which is caught from the love and knowledge of fine models. And these stanzas from Mr. Yeats's poem, if we are not much mistaken, seem to be distinctly marked by the true rhythmic passion of the poet:—

“There was a green branch hung with many a bell
When her own people ruled in wave-worn Eri,
And from its murmuring greenness, calm of faery
—A Druid kindness—on all hearers fell.

“It charmed away the merchant from his guile,
And turned the farmer's memory from his cattle,
And hushed in sleep the roaring ranks of battle,
For all who heard it dreamed a little while.

“Ah, Exiles, wandering over many seas,
Spinning at all times Eri's good to-morrow,
Ah, world-wide Nation, always growing sorrow,
I also bear a bell-branch full of ease.

“I tore it from green boughs, wind-tossed and hurled,
Green boughs of tossing always, weary, weary;
I tore it from the green boughs of old Eri,
The willow of the many-sorrowed world.”

A really good and choice collection of Irish verse would be a very welcome accompaniment to this series of prose tales, and would better deserve Mr. Yeats's happy simile of the Druid bell-branch.

T. W. ROLLESTON.

NEW NOVELS.

The Mischief of Monica. By L. B. Walford.
In 3 vols. (Longmans.)

Miss Maxwell's Affections. By Richard Price.
In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Narcissa Brendon. By Edward Peacock.
In 2 vols. (Hodges.)

Naboth's Vineyard. By E. G. Somerville and Martin Ross. (Spencer Blackett.)

The Web of the Spider. By H. B. Marriott Watson. (Hutchinson.)

The Vril Staff. By X. Y. Z. (Stott.)

Poor Zeph. By F. W. Robinson. (Wilmington.)

My Jo, John. By Helen Mathers. (White.)

Envy, Hatred, and Malice. By V. D. W. (Digby & Long.)

It is by this time unnecessary to say of a novel by Mrs. Walford that it exhibits a good deal of intellectual cleverness and fine literary art; but, as a whole, The Mischief of Monica is hardly up to the level of one or two of its predecessors. With perhaps the single exception of Mr. Joseph Scholfield—the generous, large-hearted uncle who makes a home for Monica and Bell—the reader is not introduced to a single person who fully commands his sympathies; and the lack of any high lights of character is a defect which must militate against the attractiveness of any work of fiction which is not obviously of satirical intent. From an intellectual point of view, a graver defect is a certain indeterminateness in the presentation of the author's principal characters. Monica Lavenham, for example, is evidently intended to be an essentially noble nature, whose finer qualities have been so obscured and warped by a thoroughly worldly training that they can only be made fully manifest in the fire of a painful remorse. The artistic error is that this conception is not perfectly embodied and realised until the story nears its close. In the earlier part of the book this finer side of Monica's nature is merely talked about, not dramatically exhibited; we know that it is there, because Mrs. Walford tells us so, but we are not permitted to see it even in eclipse. The heartless deliberation with which she sets herself to rob Daisy Schofield of her lover is made to seem not a mere aberration but a natural outcome of her nature; she has no misgivings, but relentlessly pursues her scheme to its miserable issue; and when the moral crisis comes and Monica sees what she has done in its true light, the change is of the nature of a conversion—a total transformation of character—rather than the result of a struggle between contending elements of good and evil. The characters next in prominence exhibit the same kind of inconsistency. The Harry Dorrien of the first volume and the Harry Dorrien of the third volume have hardly anything in common, and even Daisy Schofield surprises us by an exhibition of strength and nobility of nature for which we have been inadequately prepared. Elsewhere Mrs. Walford's imaginative grasp is much firmer and steadier. Joseph Schofield, Mrs. George, and the two elder Dorriens are admirable; and the details of description and situation which count for so much in work like that of Mrs. Walford are always carefully studied and delicately executed. As a matter of course, The Mischief of Monica is as much above the ordinary circulating-library novel as a picture by Millais is above an ordinary public-house sign; but if we judge the book by the high standard which is the only one that it is fair to apply, it can hardly be pronounced an entire success.

By the simple expedient of dismissing Miss Maxwell's Affections with a brief summary of the tale told in its pages, it might be made to seem one of the most commonplace of novels rather than what it really is—a vigorously conceived and delicately finished work of art. The heroine and her lover are separated by the wiles of the strong-willed schemer Lady Julia, who is determined that her niece shall make a "good" marriage, and the girl consents to become engaged to the man of her aunt's choice, who is really a very worthy, indeed noble, fellow; but a week before the wedding the lover appears again upon the scene; the unscrupulous plot is exposed, and the last chapter leaves the way clear for another marriage than that which has been arranged for. This is practically the whole story, and it will be seen that it is cast on very familiar lines—so familiar, indeed, that freshness of effect seems almost impossible; but Mr. Pryce's work, even when he chooses an unpleasant theme, has always the saving grace of originality, and Miss Maxwell's Affections is original and pleasant as well. Though portraits of women painted by men are, as a rule, less obviously unsatisfactory than portraits of men painted by women, it is not often that we find in a man's book a feminine figure so veraciously life-like in every detail of delineation as the figure of Gertrude Maxwell; and there could not well be any better evidence of the author's imaginative grip of the character than the strong interest he imparts to a love-story, the externals of which are so ordinary that subject counts for nothing and treatment for everything. Though love at first sight is probably commoner than it is supposed to be, it is not an artistic motive which lends itself to easy management, especially when the subject of it is a young lady who seems the reverse of impressionable; but Gertrude's sudden subjugation by an altogether undesigned appeal to her sympathies is so conceived that it seems not merely natural but inevitable, and the continuation and close of the pleasant romance sustain the interest of its fresh opening. Lady Julia is a happily individualised specimen of a familiar type, and would be good throughout were it not for that business of the lying letter, which nearly succeeds in permanently separating Gertrude from France Woodward. Miss Maxwell's aunt is unscrupulous enough; but the impression of her character derived from Mr. Pryce's pages is that of a woman who would stop short of absolute falsehood, if only for the reason that she is clever enough to dispense with it. This, however, is a small speck; and, when all possible exceptions have been taken, Miss Maxwell's Affections must be pronounced an usually good novel.

There is not much that needs to be said about Narcissa Brendon. It is nothing more than a well-meant failure; for the simple reason that Mr. Peacock, though a thoughtful and cultivated man, and a by no means unpleasing writer, is utterly unable either to construct or to tell a story. The natural result of his attempt at the impossible is the production of a novel which, while it contains isolated passages of merit and interest, is as a whole a weariness to the flesh and the spirit. The characters introduced would make a respectable crowd, and they are mixed up in such a bewildering fashion that the most careful reader after a single perusal of the book would fail to pass an examination upon their relations to each other. The motives which influence them in some of the most important actions of their lives are equally incomprehensible; and, indeed, Narcissa Brendon, considered as a narrative, is a mere collection of problems which are not sufficiently interesting to induce any ordinary person to attempt their solution. Mr. Peacock might write pleasing essays or social sketches, but the makings of a successful novelist are not in him.

Naboth's Vineyard is a very bright, brisk, and readable Irish story, dealing mainly with the misdeeds of the Land League, or more properly with the misdeeds of a certain scoundrel named John Donovan, a local secretary of the notorious organisation who uses its powers to gratify his own malice and cupidity. Donovan himself is capitally drawn, with much more of life than belongs to the conventional villain of fiction; and Mrs. Leonard, the grim widow who sets herself to fight the League and its secretary, and is well-nigh ruined in the attempt, is another successful creation. The plot of the story is well devised, poetic justice being achieved without any violation of probability; and Naboth's Vineyard is decidedly one of the best of recent Irish tales.

Mr. Marriott Watson is certainly not wanting in versatility. First he gave us his mystical romance Marahuna, then his thoughtful society novel, Lady Faint-Heart, and now we have from his pen an exciting story of New Zealand adventure which has some fresh item of stirring incident on nearly every page. Indeed, the only defect of The Web of the Spider is a certain lack of repose. The writer's white and coloured heroes and heroines are hurried from one peril to another at such a break-neck pace that a middle-aged reader feels as if he were losing his breath; but the hardier intellectual frame or youth will doubtless be sensible only of delightful exhilaration. Mr. Marriott Watson not only knows the life that he describes but knows also how to make it realisable to others.

The Vrill Staff is a queer and not very attractive jumble of magic and international politics. A young Irishman, named Zeno

Norman, has succeeded in generating that potent force "vrill," of which the late Lord Lytton was the original discoverer; and as he can dispose of an army in a few moments, he easily succeeds in revolutionising Europe. The wild story is by no means easy to follow; and as it has neither skill of construction nor charm of narration, it is not particularly worth following.

Mr. F. W. Robinson, as all the world knows, has written a number of admirable novels; but, so far, the simple, beautiful, and almost too pathetic story of Poor Zeph must be declared his masterpiece. It has been published before, for the present writer has a distinct recollection of reading it some years ago, and having read it a second time he looks forward to reading it yet again with undiminished admiration and gusto. The breaking of the heart of a bright, beautiful girl of the people, whose life might have been a happy one if—as she simply puts it—she had been "left alone," is a sad theme, and Mr. F. W. Robinson spares none of the sadness; but there is no strain, no exaggeration, no forced sentiment—nothing but the simple, quiet truthfulness of narration which is more impressive than any cunning rhetoric. One does not often get in change for a shilling anything so perfect as Poor Zeph.

My Jo, John, by Miss Helen Mathers, is a very pretty and attractive short story. Whether such people as Colonel and Mrs. John Anderson, after twenty years of happy married life, could have had such a serious misunderstanding as that which provides the author with a narrative scheme is, to say the least, doubtful; but if we allow Miss Helen Mathers the right to invent her own tale, we must admit that she tells it with much grace and charm. Col. Anderson's secret is very ingeniously kept, and the story throughout is decidedly pleasant and readable.

It seems that some lady considers that she has been wronged by the relatives of her late husband, who have insisted, without any show of reason, upon the exhumation of the body of the deceased gentleman. This conduct, which—sad to say—was abetted by the Home Secretary, has made another lady very angry; and in her anger the other lady has made the "outrage" the theme of a story to which she gives the appropriate name, Envy, Hatred, and Malice. The book is utter rubbish; but if the writing of it has relieved the feelings of "V. D. W.," it has at least accomplished one good object.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

SOME BOOKS ON THE COLONIES.

"UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS."—English Colonisation and Empire. By Alfred Caldecott. (John Murray.) We confess that we were not attracted to this book by the circumstance that it forms one of the first issues of a new series, and that a series primarily designed to aid the University Extension movement. As others may share our prejudices, it is our duty to say at once that, whatever the remaining volumes of the series may turn out to be, Mr. Caldecott's work shows no evil traces of its origin. Indeed, when we compare it with some other books that have recently been written about the colonies, we will go so far as to say that the author's experience as a lecturer seems to have invested it with a specially practical character. Not that it reads like a spoken discourse; but it bears manifest marks of being the result of strenuous efforts to be intelligible, and of that wholesome revision of opinions which comes from intercourse between teacher and pupil. We assume the author to be himself a pupil of Prof. Seeley and Prof. Marshall, who has been compelled to think out afresh the historical and economical lessons he has learned, by contact with the people and in face of the political questions of the day. And herein consists one of the most valuable features of the book. Wide as the field is—for it includes both India and the United States, as well as the colonies commonly so-called—Mr. Caldecott does not shrink from discussing any of the problems involved, stating the facts fairly, and putting both sides of the case without parti pris. He recognises that a crisis has been reached in the history of the empire, and that the important thing is to bring home the whole truth, whether palatable or not, to the people of this country, with whom the ultimate decision rests. The arguments to be drawn from the past are double-edged; the commercial future is obscure. Within the next twenty years, almost any conceivable change is possible in the relations between Great Britain and her colonies; and whatever change does come about, it will undoubtedly be the most decisive event in modern history. All this Mr. Caldecott fully realises, and has written so as to make his readers realise it too. We know no book on the subject that is at once so crowded with facts, so lucid in treatment, and so pregnant with ideas. It has given us more cause for thought than any we have read for a long time. One point only have we looked for in vain, without any help from an Index. Sufficient stress does not appear to have been laid upon the financial bond that holds both India and the colonies to Great Britain, by means of their public debts. This tie may break, like the others; but if it does, it will cause even a more profound disturbance than the rest.

An Historical Geography of the British Colonies. By C. P. Lucas. Vol. ii. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) We ought to have noticed long ago this addition to the excellent series of volumes in which Mr. Lucas is describing the history of our colonial empire. The Introduction is quite the best general sketch of the subject in all its relations that we are acquainted with. The second volume dealt with those Mediterranean and Asiatic dependencies which are hardly colonies at all, except in so far as they are under the Colonial Office. The present volume is concerned mainly with the West Indies, which specially lends itself to the historical mode of treatment. The time, no doubt, has passed away for ever when the destinies of the empire were decided by sea-fights in the Caribbean Sea, and when immense fortunes were made out of sugar and slaves. The growth of Australia, Canada, and the Cape has changed the very meaning of the word "colony" during the reign of Victoria. But it is pleasing to believe that the West Indies still have a prosperous future before them, if they will adapt themselves to changed conditions, and, above all, if they will follow the teachings of commercial botany. Mr. Lucas always writes with admirable clearness; and it seems to us that he is particularly successful in disentangling the complicated skein of geographical and historical conditions which has made the several islands so different and yet so alike.

Crozet's Voyage to Tasmania, New Zealand, &c., in 1771-72. Translated by H. Ling Roth. Illustrated. (Truslove & Shirley.) Mr. Ling Roth possesses the gift of knowing what out-of-the-way jobs of literary work are worth doing, and then of performing them with such completeness as the nature of the case permits. His monograph on the Aborigines of Tasmania (1890, privately printed) is one of those rare books that may be called final: it sums up everything that can now be learned about a closed chapter of human history. Not less thorough, if less generally interesting, is the Guide to the Literature of Sugar which he also issued last year. The present volume, though nominally a translation from the French, has been so enriched by notes and illustrations as to be an indispensable record of the discovery of New Zealand. Crozet—who has left his name to a small group of uninhabited islands in the Southern Ocean—wrote the account of a French voyage of discovery in which he took part, between the dates of Cook's first and second voyages. It is pleasing to find that, while Crozet praises in the highest terms the exactitude of Cook's chart, Cook uses similar language about Crozet's abilities, when he afterwards met him at the Cape. The French expedition was under the command of Captain Marion, who ultimately met with the same fate as Cook, being treacherously murdered by the natives of New Zealand. The scientific results of the voyage were not great; for the original scheme of exploring the Antarctic Ocean was soon abandoned. After a short visit to Van Diemen's Land (then thought to form part of Australia), where the natives were found quite impracticable, Marion rounded the North island of New Zealand, and anchored in Cook's Bay of Islands, which is still known by the same name. Here the Maoris at once showed themselves most friendly, and appointed Marion to be their grand chief. Why they suddenly changed and massacred the whole party on shore without warning, Crozet professes himself unable to explain. One theory is that it was in revenge for outrages committed by another French ship two years previously. According to Maori tradition, Marion violated tabu and was in other ways aggressive. However, the intimacy that continued for just one month allowed Crozet to obtain a great deal of accurate information about the habits of the Maoris, which the editor has illustrated from other sources. His plates are mostly reproduced from old water-colour drawings in the British Museum by Charles Heaphy, who was draughtsman to the New Zealand Company from 1845 to 1853. He has also given two maps, prepared from Crozet's log and charts in the naval archives at Paris; and a number of woodcuts showing specimens of Maori art.

The Voyage of François Leguat. Edited by Captain Pasfield Oliver. In 2 vols. (Printed for the Hakluyt Society.) None will blame the council of the Hakluyt Society for admitting a book of considerably later date than any that has previously appeared in their series. Leguat's New Voyage to the East Indies—for such is the original title—was first published, in both English and French, in 1708. Its historical importance consists in the fact that it gives a detailed description, long believed to be unique, of the extinct Solitaire of Rodriguez Island, a near relation of the Dodo of Madagascar. The veracity of Leguat's description has been confirmed in recent years by the discovery of abundant bones, which have permitted the reconstruction of several complete specimens, in the British Museum and elsewhere. Still more curious is the discovery of a MS. in the archives of the Ministry of Marine at Paris, dating from about 1730, which gives an account of the Solitaire, confirming that of Leguat, but manifestly not borrowed from it. Leguat also mentions another bird which he calls the Giant, six foot high, to be found in the marshes of Mauritius. Of this, as of the Solitaire, he gives a picture—both here reproduced in facsimile. Concerning this bird there is more doubt, for no remains of it have been found. But Prof. Schlegel, of Amsterdam, wrote in 1857 an elaborate paper, suggesting that it may have been a gigantic species of water-hen or rail; and Mr. R. W. Shufeldt, of the Smithsonian Institute, has constructed an ingenious restoration on that hypothesis. Leguat further gives an account of the colossal tortoises of Rodriguez, and of the manati or dugong, both of which are now extinct. Quite apart from its special contributions to natural history, Leguat's book is worth reading. The writer was a Huguenot, exiled from France on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, being then nearly fifty years old. With half a dozen fellow exiles, he set out in a Dutch ship to colonise some isle of Eden in the Indian Ocean, while others settled at the Cape, where they have prospered to this day. After much suffering, and being carried as a prisoner to Batavia, he finally came to England, where he died at a very advanced age. He was both a well-read man and a good observer; but it must be added that his narrative lies under the imputation of having been doctored by a certain anti-Jesuit pamphleteer, named Maximilien Misson. The present editor has obtained expert assistance to identify the fauna and flora referred to, and has himself added an excursus upon the discovery and history of the Mascarene group of islands. Not everybody knows that Rodriguez is now a British colony.

South Africa from Arab Domination to British Rule. Edited by R. W. Murray. With Maps, &c. (Edward Stanford.) Mr. Murray, who is well known as the proprietor and editor of a leading newspaper at Cape Town, has here brought together, in one volume, several miscellaneous articles about South Africa, the general aim of which is not very clearly expressed by the title. Of Arab domination we are told little, for there is little to be told; and as for British rule in the regions once dominated by the Arabs, it is a matter rather of promise than of performance. The real subject of the book is the history of the Portuguese in South-Eastern Africa, especially in the auriferous tract to which attention has been directed by the exploits of Mr. Cecil Rhodes. Prof. A. H. Keane begins with a general summary, full of linguistic and geographical information. Perhaps his most interesting point is the examination of the famous empire of Monomotapa. He shows that Monomotapa was really the name, not of an empire, but of an emperor, being a title which probably means "lord of the mines." He also quotes from De Barros the earliest description of the ruins of Zimbaôé, now being explored by Mr. Theodore Bent. Then follow a number of extracts, translated from the Dutch of Dapper's Africa (Amsterdam, 1685), which describe the empire of Monomotapa. Passing over brief summaries of the colonisation of the extreme south by the Dutch and the English, and of the recent advance northwards into the interior, the book concludes with two chapters which at least possess the merit of being written by eye-witnesses; one describes the march into Mashonaland, the other the condition of the Portuguese settlements on the coast. We have left to the last the most valuable part of the book—namely, the maps. They include reproductions of a Portuguese map of 1591, and a Dutch map of 1668; coloured maps showing the widest extent of Portuguese claims, and the actual partition that has been agreed to; and a surveyor's chart of the route to Mashonaland, giving the post-stations and other details. They are on a large scale, and therefore rather awkward to consult, but they are extremely interesting.

J. S. C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

IN connexion with the Folk-lore Congress, we may mention that Mr. G. S. Gomme is writing a work on Folke-lore and Ethnology, which will contain a complete statement of his views as to the functions of folk-lore as a means of ethnological research, and as to the principles to be applied in the scientific analysis of custom and belief.

Events in the Taping Rebellion is the title of a work based upon MSS. copied in the handwriting of General Gordon, which will be published in about ten days hence by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co. It is edited by Mr. Egmont Hake, who has added a biography, and also an introduction explaining the relations between the foreign powers and China during the Rebellion.

THE next number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review will contain an account of Col. Grambschewsky's explorations in the Pamir, and of his misunderstanding with the Indian Government.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL, the publishers of Dickens, announce a volume entitled A Week's Tramp in Dickensland, together with personal reminiscences therein collected, by Mr. W. R. Hughes, the biographer of Constance Naden. It will be illustrated by Mr. F. G. Kitton and others.

DR. W. J. ROLFE is preparing a Shakspeare Word-Book, a one-volume abridgment of Schumidt's Shakspeare Lexicon, with some revision. He will mark the once-used words with a special sign, and put another to those words with which, though printed in Shakspeare's volume—like the text of "Henry VIII.," "Titus," "Henry VI.," &c.—Shakspeare had, in the opinion of the best judges, little or nothing to do.

IN connexion with the Fitton-Herbert theory of Shakspeare's Sonnets, Mrs. Newdegate, of Arbury Hall, has found out that the Fitton badge was the pansy; so that when the jilted Shakspeare put into the mouth of the deserted Ophelia, "There is Pansies; that's forthoughts," he may have been thinking of his own Mary Fitton, if she ever was his love. At any rate, Mrs. Newdegate has discovered the cause of the frequent appearance of the pansy among the decorations of the Newdegates' seat, Arbury, for the Lady Newdegate of Queen Elizabeth's time was once Miss Ann Fitton.

WE may add that Mr. T. Tyler has come to the following conclusions, as the result of a visit to Arbury last week: that there is no portrait of Mary Fitton at Arbury; that the contrary supposition resulted from a curious mistake to be dated back, perhaps, to about the end of the last century; and that the only known representation of this now famous lady is the dark-haired, dark-complexioned figure at Gawsworth in Cheshire. Mr. Tyler hopes to say more on the matter shortly.

THE volume entitled With My Friends: Tales Told in Partnership, which Messrs. Longmans are to publish immediately, is intended to be a serious experiment in collaboration. It will contain six short stories, in each of which Mr. Brander Matthews has taken a part, together with Mr. Walter Pollock, F. Anstey, and others; and also an essay on the art of literary partnership.

THE initial volume of the "Victoria Library for Gentlewomen" (Henry & Co.) will appear in a few days. It is entitled The Gentlewoman in Society, and its author is Lady Violet Greville. It will be followed in November by The Gentlewoman's Book of Hygiene, written by Mrs. Kate Mitchell, M.D.

A NEW work on elocution, by Mr. J. Raymond Solly, entitled Acting and the Art of Speech, at the Paris Conservatoire, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

AMONG the articles in the new volume of Chambers's Encyclopaedia (vol. viii.), which will be ready shortly, are the following: "Peasant Proprietorship," by Mr. Jesse Collings; "Peking," by Prof. Legge; "Pelasgians," by Mr. F. B. Jevons; "Pentateuch" and "Book of Proverbs," by the Rev. J. S. Black; "Peeps," by Mr. H. B. Wheatley; "Perfumery," by Mr. C. A. Piessie; "Periodicals," by Mr. W. T. Stead; "Persia," by Sir R. M. Smith; "Personality" and "Philosophy," by Prof. Andrew Seth; "Peru" and "Pizarro," by Mr. Clements R. Markham; "Pessimism," by Prof. W. Caldwell; "Peterborough" and "Pope," by Mr. H. D. Trail; "Philippine Islands," by Prof. A. H. Keane; "Philology," by Dr. Peile; "Phoenicia," by Canon Rawlinson; "Phonetics," by the late Dr. Alexander Ellis; "Phonograph," by Mr. T. A. Edison; "Pitt," by Mr. W. E. H. Lecky; "Plato," by Mr. D. G. Ritchie; "Plutarch," by Dr. H. A. Holden; "Poetry," by Mr. Edmund Gosse; "Poland," by Mr. W. R. Morfill; "Polar Exploration," by Mr. J. S. Keltie; "Police," by Mr. James Monro; "Political Economy," by Mr. T. Kirkup; "Pope," by the Rev. W. Hunt and Father Gasquet; "Praed," "Prior," and "Richardson," by Mr. Austin Dobson; "Pre-Raphaelitism," by Mr. W. Holman Hunt; "Prisons," by Sir E. F. Du Cane; "Psalms," by Prof. Cheyne; "Psychology," by Prof. Sorley; "Q.," "Rome," and "Runes," by Canon Isaac Taylor; "Quaternions," by Prof. Knott; "Rabelais," by Mr. Walter Besant; "Raeburn," by Mr. J. M. Gray; "Raphael," by Sir Joseph Crowe; "Reade" and "Rogers," by Mr. F. H. Groome; "Public Records," by Mr. Walter Rye; "Reformation," by Mr. T. Hume Brown; "Religion," by Prof. Flint; "Rembrandt," by Mr. P. G. Hamerton; "Rose," by Mr. R. D. Blackmore; "Rossotti," by Mr. W. M. Rossetti; "Ruskin," by Mr. E. T. Cook.

A NEW edition of Mr. Oscar Wilde's poems is about to be issued by Mr. Elkin Mathews, with a new cover, designed by Mr. C. S. Rickett. The original edition has been out of print for some time.

MR. JOSEPH HATTON'S By Order of the Czar has now reached an eighth edition, the demand for it having been particularly great during the last two months. His new novel, to be entitled The Princess Mazaroff—a love story, with Russia again for its scene—will be published by Messrs. Hutchinson immediately.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN has ready the second edition of Miss Kettle's Magic of the Pinewoods.

WE are asked to state that the Anti-Jacobin is to be enlarged, improved, and more handsomely printed. The change will probably be made at the end of this month, when the winter season commences.

AMONG the articles in the forthcoming number of the Religious Review of Reviews will be "The Church Revival in Wales," by the Dean of St. Asaph; "The Christian Kingdom Society," by the editor; "The Work of the Church Missionary Society"; and sermons by Canon Scott Holland and the Rev. W. Leach.

DR. FARIS NIME, the distinguished Arabic scholar, is now in London on a short visit as the guest of Prof. H. A. Salmon. During the last fifteen years Dr. Nime has, in conjunction with Dr. Y. Sarrout, conducted the monthly Arabic review, Al-Mukhtaf, of Cairo, which may be considered the leading journal of the kind published in the East.

THE International Folk-lore Congress of 1891 has been a great success, even though it failed to attract any visitors from Germany, the original home of the study. Much of this success was due to the preliminary labours of the committees, of which Mr. Gomme, Mr. Jacobs, and Mr. Ordish were respectively chairmen. If the spirit of controversy ever threatened to wax warm, it was impossible that it could survive the light banter of the president, whose speech at the dinner was even more effective than his inaugural address. The papers read—of which perhaps the two most notable were those by Mr. C. G. Leland on "Etruscan Magic," and by Miss Owen on "Voodoo Magic"—have been reported in the daily newspapers, especially in the Times, at greater length than the ACADEMY can afford. We must content ourselves here with expressing our gratification at the quaint and instructive entertainments so admirably performed at the Mercers' Hall on Monday night. The ancient virtue of hospitality, which stamps the brotherhood of folk-lorists, was conspicuous throughout all the proceedings of this pleasant Congress.

MR. OSWALD CRAWFURD has accepted the post of chairman of committee of the proposed Authors' Club, whose range of membership will be wide enough to include journalists and also those who do not claim to follow the profession of letters. Women, however, according to the present arrangements, are to be excluded; and some of them, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Stannard (John Strange Winter), have resolved to found a similar club of their own, with an annual subscription of less than five guineas.

A Russian Priest has not been "blacked out." On the contrary, the Ruski Viedomosti, of Moscow, has been able to give a favourable report of Mr. Gausson's English translation:

"In the West they still continue to follow our literary progress attentively. M. Potapenko's story On Active Service has recently appeared in London in the 'Pseudonym Library,' and is called by the translator A Russian Priest. The translation is carefully performed, with a comprehension of the spirit of the Russian language."

THE next monthly meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom will be held on Monday, October 12, at 20, Hanover-square, when the following papers will be read:—(1) "Critical Analysis of the Association's Work (1877-1891), with Suggestions for Future Operations," by Mr. J. D. Brown, of the Clerkenwell Public Library; (2) "Can Mudie help the Public Libraries?" by Mr. J. Y. M. MacAlister (taken as read at the Nottingham meeting, now to be read for the sake of discussion).

THE Historical Society of Aix-la-Chapelle discussed at a recent meeting a question of more than local interest. The subject under consideration was, Where is Lord Heathfield, the defender of Gibraltar, buried? Two months before his death he retired to a favourite seat of his—Castle Kalkofen, near Aix-la-Chapelle—and there he died, on July 6, 1790. A former proprietor of the estate says that he was buried in a dense wood, lying south-east of the Schloss. But no trace exists; no stone, no monument marks the spot. Perhaps some English reader can aid the local savants in their researches? It may be added that the Politische Merkur of those days attributed the general's death to the "excessive use of the Aix-la-Chapelle waters."

UNDER the heading of "Social Verse"—which we can hardly suppose to have been chosen by the author—the Forum for October prints a review by Mr. Swinburne of the new edition of Mr. F. Locker-Lampson's "Lyra Elegantiarum." In its praise and its blame, in its epithets and its alliterations, it forcibly recalls some of its author's early writings. But was it worthy of a Balliol man to publish this doggerel—even in an American magazine—upon an alumnus of his own college?

“There was a bad poet named C—
Whom his friends found it useless to puff:
For the public, if dull,
Has not quite such a skull
As belongs to believers in C—.”

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

FULL term begins at Cambridge on Tuesday next, October 13; the Oxford term begins at the end of the same week.

On Thursday of last week Dr. Peile, master of Christ's College, was admitted to the office of vice-chancellor at Cambridge for the current year. The address of Dr. Butler on resigning that office, which was delivered in English, occupies five pages in the University Reporter.

PROF. R. C. JEBB has been selected as the Conservative candidate for Cambridge in the room of the late Mr. Raikes. The nomination, which is equivalent to the election, was to take place to-day (Saturday). Representatives of the physical sciences, and professors of law and political economy, are not unknown in parliament; but we believe that this is the first example of the classical scholar in politics. At the same time, Sir George Stokes has announced that he will not again come forward at the next general election.

PROF. JOHN F. HALES, Clark lecturer in English at Trinity College, Cambridge, announces two courses of lectures for next year—on “Bacon and other Essayists,” and on “Shakspeare's Comedies.”

THE Rev. Alfred Caldecott, of St. John's College, Cambridge—whose little book on English Colonisation and Empire is noticed in another column of the ACADEMY—has been appointed to the vacant chair of logic and mental philosophy in King's College, London, where it happens that he succeeds another Johnian.

PROF. REGINALD STUART POOLE announces two courses of lectures at University College, London, during the current term—on “Egyptian and Phœnician Archaeology.” The first lecture of each course is open to the public; and every lecture will be illustrated by a visit to the galleries of the British Museum. In addition, Mr. F. W. Rudler, curator of the Museum of Practical Geology, will deliver a course of six lectures, on behalf of the professor, upon “Prehistoric Archaeology,” dealing with the palæolithic and neolithic ages, the bronze period, and lake-dwellings.

A COURSE of ten lectures will be delivered at Queen's College, Harley-street, on Mondays at noon, beginning on October 12, by Prof. H. F. Wilson, on “The Fragments of the Greek Lyric Poets (exclusive of Pindar).” Mr. Farnell's recent edition of the Fragments will be used.

PROF. WILLIAM P. DICKSON, of Glasgow, has published a pamphlet (Macchese), criticising the draft ordinance for degrees in arts issued by the Scottish Universities Commission. His chief complaint is that this draft ordinance authorises no less than thirty optional subjects of study for graduation, including such special departments of learning as Sanskrit and Hebrew, ecclesiastical history and public law. One of his arguments is that no Scottish university but Edinburgh is in a position to give instruction in many of the proposed subjects. He further insists upon the supreme importance of establishing an entrance examination, not only for “graduands”—we commend the word to Dr. Murray—but also for all public students, reserving to professors the right to admit auditores tantum.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

TO EDWARD CLODD.

FRIEND, in whose friendship I am twice well-starred,
A debt not time may cancel is your due:
For was it not your praise that earliest drew,
On me obscure, that chivalrous regard,
Ev'n his, who, knowing fame's first steep how hard,

With generous lips no faltering clarion blew,
Bidding men hearken to a lyre by few
Heeded, nor grudge the bay to one more bard?
Bitter the task, year by inglorious year,
Of suitor at the world's reluctant ear,
One cannot sing for ever, like a bird,
For sole delight of singing! Him his mate
Salutes, listening with a heart elate:

Nor more his joy, if all the rapt heav'n heard.

WILLIAM WATSON.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co.'s
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Fiction.—“His Sister's Hand,” by C. J. Wills, in 3 vols.; “A Fatal Silence,” by Florence Marryat, in 3 vols.; “Clement Barnold's Invention,” by Lionel Hawke; “Allan's Wife,” by H. Rider Haggard, new and cheaper edition; Additions to the Standard Library—“Misadventure,” by W. E. Norris; “A Born Coquette,” by the author of “Molly Bawn”; “Naboth's Vineyard,” by the author of “An Irish Cousin”; “Just Impediment” and “An Evil Spirit,” by Richard Pryce; “Nan, and other Stories,” by L. B. Walford; “Only a Shadow,” by D. Christie Murray and Henry Herman; “Presumption of Law,” by a Lawyer and a Lady; “Jack and Three Jills,” by F. C. Phillips; and “Jaleberd's Bumps,” by James Greenwood.

Miscellaneous.—“Memoirs of the Prince de Talleyrand,” edited, with notes, by the Duc de Broglie, of the French Academy, translated by Mrs. Angus Hall, vol. iv., with portraits; “General Craufurd and his Light Division,” with many anecdotes, a paper and letters by Sir John Moore, and also letters from the Right Hon. W. Windham, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Londonderry, &c., edited by the Rev. Alexander H. Craufurd, with portrait; “Notable Generals and their Notable Battles,” by Major Percy Groves, with illustrations in black and white by Lieut.-Col. Marshman; “Evenings Out,” or, The Amateur Entertainer, by Constance Milman; “Twenty Minutes' Drawing-Room Duologues, &c.,” by Harriet L. Childe Pemberton; “Possible Plays for Private Players,” by Constance O'Brien; “The Heart of a Girl,” a Thesis; “Egyptian Science,” by V. E. Johnson; “The Shelley Birthday Book,” compiled and edited by J. R. Tutin; and “The Bijou Byron,” in 12 monthly volumes.

Educational.—“Darnell's New Series of Penny Copy Books,” for elementary schools, arranged in six parts; “The Geography of Durham,” with a map; “Drawing Books for the Standards,” an entirely new series, in twelve parts; “‘Up to Date’ Arithmetic,” mathematical examples for school and home use, arranged in six parts; and “How to Teach Drawing—Drawing under the Education Code,” a practical guide for the teacher of drawing in elementary schools.

Theological.—“The Sacrifice of Praise,” or, The Holy Eucharist, according to the use of the Church of England. Interleaved with Instructions and Devotions for the use of Communicants. Together with the Litany, and a brief Introduction concerning the Meaning of the Christian Sacrifice and the Ritual Accessories of the Service; “The Gospel Narrative,” a Life of Christ, collated from the Authorised Text of the Four Gospels, with Notes of all material changes in the Revised Version, and an Epitome and Harmony of the Gospels, forming together a complete narrative, in chronological order, of the Life and Discourses of Our Lord Jesus Christ, as derived from a synoptic view of the four Gospels, by Sir Rawson W. Rawson; “Messages from the Cross to the World,” by the Rev. E. H. Taylor; “Thought Seed for Holy Seasons,” by the Rev. Robert S. Barrett; “A Further Explanation of the Church Catechism for the Elder Classes in Sunday and Day Schools, and for Confirmation Candidates,” by Mrs. C. D. Francis; “The Westminster Library” forthcoming volumes: “The Prayer-book of Queen Elizabeth”; “The Apostolic Fathers,” vols. i. and ii.; “Sermons and Essays on the Apostolic Age,” by Dean Stanley; “The Prose Works of Bishop Ken.”

Story Books for the Young.—“Granny's Wonderful Chair and its Tales of Fairy Times,” by Frances Browne, illustrated with 16 coloured and 63 black-and-white pictures by Mrs. Seymour Lucas; “Twice Four,” original stories by E. Nesbit, Mrs. Patchett Martin, Mrs. Gellie, Alice Weber, Theo. Gift, Rowe Lingston, Miss Edwards, Mrs. Worthington Bliss, with 8 coloured illustrations: “Some Sweet Stories of Old,” Boys of Bible Story, by the Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, with 8 coloured illustrations and 28 black-and-white paper boards; “Nobody's Business,” by Edith Carrington, illustrated by Etheline E. Dell; “A New Book of the Fairies,” by Beatrice Harraden, illustrated by E. Lupton; “Those Children,” by Helen Milman, with illustrations by Emily J. Harding; “The Children's Casket of Favourite Poems for Recitation,” compiled by Annie M. Hone; “Burr Junior: his Struggles and Studies at School,” by G. Manville Fenn, illustrated by A. W. Cooper; “With the Green Jackets, or, The Life and Adventures of a Rifleman,” by Major J. Percy Groves, with illustrations by Lieut.-Col. Marshman; “Pay Arlington,” by Anne Beale, with illustrations by Marcella Walker; “Changed Lots, or, Nobody Cares,” by Frances Armstrong, illustrated by Annie S. Fenn; addition to the Boys' Own Favourite Library: “A Journey to the Centre of the Earth,” by Jules Verne, with 53 illustrations by Rion; addition to the Girls' Own Favourite Library: “Mischievous Makers, or, The Story of Zipporah, the Jewish Maiden,” by M. E. Bewsher, illustrated. “The Triumphs of Modern Engineering,” by Henry Frith, illustrated; “Paul Blake” and “Luke Ashleigh,” by A. T. Elwes, illustrated by George Du Maurier; “Adventures in Australia; or, The Wanderings of Captain Spencer in the Bush and the Wilds” and “Anecdotes of the Habits and Instincts of Animals,” by Mrs. R. Lee, illustrated by Harrison Weir; “Among the Zulus: the Adventures of Hans Sterk in South Africa,” by Gen. A. W. Drayson, illustrated; “The Young Governess,” a tale for girls, illustrated; new books in “Coronet Series”: “Tarbucket and Pipeclay,” by Major J. Percy Groves, illustrated by J. Schonberg; “Nimpos Troubles,” by Olive Thorne Miller, illustrated by Mary Hollock and Sol. Eytinge; “True Stories from African History,” by W. Pimblett, profusely illustrated; “True Stories from Greek History,” by Mrs. Alfred Pollard, fully illustrated; the “Old Corner Series”: “Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves,” illustrated by A. Chasemore; “Goody Two Shoes,” illustrated by W. J. Hodgson; “Jack the Giant Killer,” illustrated by W. J. Hodgson; the Newbery Toy Books: “The Book of Bedtime,” “The Book of Playtime,” “The Book of Daytime,” by M. Cook.

MESSRS. WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & Co.'s
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

“Pastoral Letters and Synodal Charges” delivered to the clergy and laity in the diocese of Lichfield, by Dr. Maclagan, Archbishop of York; the first two volumes of "The National Churches," edited by P. H. Ditchfield; I. "The Church in Germany," by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould; II. "The Church in Spain," by the Rev. Frederick Meyrick; "A Manual for Sundays," by the Rev. F. C. Woodhouse; "Words for the Weary," by Rev. G. H. Sharpe, with Preface by the Archbishop of York; "The Authority of the Church," as set forth in the Book of Common Prayer, Articles, and Canons, by the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix; "The Intermediate State," an Essay upon the Relation of Prayer to a Conscious and Progressive Life in the Intermediate State, by the Rev. Arthur Williamson; "The Activities of the Ascended Lord," adapted by permission from addresses by Canon Body; "Sunday Key-Notes," a little book of devotions for each Sunday and Saint's Day, by M. E. Townsend; a large paper edition of "The Rambles of a Dominic," by Francis A. Knight; "The Little Treasure Book," a Selection of Poems and Hymns for reading and recitation, edited by Miss Bramston; "The Legend of Dahut, and other Poems," by S. E.; "Heroes of Modern Days," by Mrs. Herbert Percival; "Christiana," the Story of "The Pilgrim's Progress" (second part) simply told, by Helen L. Taylor; "Geoff and Jim," by Ismay Thorn; "Darton's Leading Strings," with numerous illustrations by T. Pym, and other artists; "The Quest of Jack Hazelwood," by Marion Andrews; "In Nelson's Days," by George Hewett; also the annual volumes of Friendly Work, Friendly Leaves, Chatterbox, Sunday, The Prize, The Artist, Mothers in Council, The Young Standard Bearer, &c.

THE NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

THE Delegates of the Clarendon Press are to be congratulated on the proved success of their plan for accelerating the progress of the greatest publishing enterprise that the world has known. Last July appeared the first part of Volume III. of the New English Dictionary, containing the greater portion of the letter E, which had been edited independently by Mr. Henry Bradley, on the lines laid down by Dr. Murray, and with his cordial assistance. Now, after an interval of less than three months, Dr. Murray has himself brought out another Part, containing a large instalment of the letter C. When we add that each Part consists of more than 500 pages, closely printed in treble columns, some idea may be gained of the material difficulties that have been overcome. Of the quality of the work, this is not the occasion to speak. We must here content ourselves with the hope that additional Parts will follow with similar speed, and that the public will thus be taught to recognise, better than they have done hitherto, the practical utility of the learning placed at their disposal.

The following are some facts gleaned from Dr. Murray's Prefatory Note. The present Part extends from the beginning of CLO- to the word CONSIGNOR. Three-fourths of it are occupied with the vast mass of words beginning with the Latin prefix col-, com-, con-, without, however, reaching the end of the con- words. Hence, while the earlier pages contain many words of Old English origin—including the important word "come," which takes up 23 columns, the largest space yet claimed by any word in the Dictionary—there follow 200 pages of words exclusively Romanic, amid which the word "con" and its few derivatives are the sole representatives of the original stock of our language.

The words thus derived from Latin (directly, or through French) are, mainly, verbs and their derivatives, expressing some of the most important general and abstract notions in the language. Of these, the etymology and form-history offer, in general, little difficulty, though the exact circumstances in which the words entered English are not always evident. But the sense-history is often extremely difficult to trace: from the beginning, the English "grip" of many of these words has lacked firmness and precision, and this has led to their employment in an immense variety of vaguely defined shades of meaning and use.

Among the class of words interesting for their derivation and form-history—on which the historical treatment has thrown new light, or dispelled the errors of unscientific assumption—are "cockatrice," "cockney," "clough," "clow," and "comely." Under "cold" will be found a table of affinities of the various derivatives of the Teutonic root kal, showing the relations of "cold," "cool," "chill," "akele." Important early references are given for certain words that have entered the language at times more or less recent—such as "coach," "coco," "coffee," "colonel," "comet," "communism."

In no previous part of the vocabulary have the current Dictionaries been found so deficient, or so infected with error. The great number of bogus or ghost words, originating in mistakes of many kinds and of many authors, from the early days of English lexicography onwards—which have been uncritically copied by one compiler from another, until, in recent compilations, their number has become serious—has induced Dr. Murray and his coadjutors to prepare "A List of Spurious Words Found in Dictionaries," to be given at the end of the work, to which list such verba nihili are relegated from the text.

This last piece of information is interesting, for more reasons than one. Not less interesting is it to find Dr. Murray looking forward thus confidently to "the end of the work."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ALDEGREYER, H., 1502–1555. Ornamente. Facsimiles . . . nou hest. v. P. Seiner. Regensburg: Coppenrath. 10 M.
 CYON, E. de. La Russie contemporaine. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
 GRÉVILLE, H. L'Héritière. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
 JULIEN, Ad. Richard Wagner: sa vie et ses œuvres. Paris: Lib. de l'Art. 40 fr.
 LE ROUX, Hugues. Portraits de cire. Paris: Lecène. 3 fr. 50 c.
 QUINET, Mme. Edgar. Le Vrai dans l'éducation. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
 SCHMÄCHER, K. E. prähistorische Ciste im Museum zu Karlsruhe. Heidelberg: Siebert. 8 M.
 WILLE, R. Das Feldgeschütz der Zukunft. Berlin: Eisen-schmidt. 6 M.
 ZANGEMEISTER, K. Die Wappen, Helmzierden u. Standarten der grossen Heidelberger Liederhandschrift (Manesse Codex) u. der Weingartner Handschrift in Stuttgart. 2. u. 3. Lfg. Heidelberg: Siebert. 7 M. 50 Pf.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- FICKER, J. Die Konfutation d. Augsbürgischen Bekenntnisses, ihre erste Gestalt u. ihre Geschichte. Leipzig: Barth. 10 M.
 FUNK, F. X. Die apostolischen Konstitutionen. Eine literar-histor. Untersuchung. Rottenburg: Bader. 6 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- CECI, L. La lingua del diritto romano. I. Le etimologie dei giuriconsulti romani raccolte ed illustrate. Turin: Loescher. 6 fr.
 CHOLET, le Comte de. Etude sur la Guerre bulgare-serbe. Paris: Baudoin. 5 fr.
 GUBAL, A. La République de Berne et la France pendant les guerres de religion. Paris: Godelge. 5 fr.
 GODCHOT, le Capitaine. Les Neutres: étude juridique et historique de droit maritime international. Paris: Challamel. 7 fr. 50 c.
 KEMPIEN, E. Die Rechtsquellen der Gliedstaaten u. Territorien der Vereinigten Staaten v. Amerika. Zürich: Füssli. 3 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- MARCELL, E. Traité d'optique. Paris: Gauthier-Villars. 41 fr.
 TOCCO, F. Le Opere inedite di Giordano Bruno. Florence: Loescher. 4 fr.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- Corpus inscriptionum latinarum. Vol. III. Supplementum. Fasc. II. 29 M. Vol. VIII. Supplementum. Pars I. 52 M. Berlin: Reimer.

GRIGER, W. Lautlehre d. Balúci. München: Franz. 2 M.
 GRIMM, J. u. W. Deutsches Wörterbuch. 8. Bd. 7. Lfg. Romanbauherr—Ruck. Bearb. unter Leitg. v. M. Heyne. Leipzig: Hirzel. 2 M.
 PERSSON, P. Studien zur Lehre v. der Wurzelerweiterung u. Wurzelvariation. Upsala. 8 M. 80 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ALLEYN AND SHAKSPERE: A WARNING.

Lyme Regis, Dorset: Sept. 30, 1891.

When trying to date some document dateable only by internal evidence, students desirous to fix a year before which the document in debate could not have been written often have recourse to the negative argument, that it is not mentioned by some writer whose age is ascertained, and who must, it is thought, have known and noticed it had it been then in existence. Especially is this argument now in favour with critics who approach a question with some predetermined theory, dominant over their own minds, to support. But this line of reasoning has been always regarded with a certain scepticism (like the somewhat analogous argument from discrepant details in point of diction or metre), by readers free from that species of veiled dogmatic prejudice which the Germans have delicately named "tendency."

So remarkable an instance of the fallacy of this negative argument was given in the last number of the ACADEMY (September 26), that I venture to repeat it from your interesting review of Alleyn's Life:

"It is worth notice that, although he was contemporary with Shakspeare, and, like him, a theatrical manager, no mention of the name of the great dramatist occurs in Alleyn's diary or papers, except the record of the fact that he gave fivepence for a copy of Shakspeare's Sonnets."

Every condition for the notice of Shakspeare (and the case equally meets that of those, if any such survive, who question his identity) appears to have been here fulfilled. Alleyn was his contemporary; he practised and lived by the same art; he also held theatrical property; he must have met or heard of Shakspeare a thousand times. His journal is unquestionably authentic; it is copious, it is (I believe) preserved in its integrity. Yet Shakspeare, as we see, is noticed only once, and that as sonneteer, not as dramatist. The only hint bearing on this strange phenomenon may be afforded by the fact, that Alleyn's journal begins with the year after Shakspeare's death.

It may be added that precisely similar instances how deceptive is the argument from non-notice occur perpetually, if we read the travels of one or two centuries back. Constantly in these the buildings or the works of art contained in European cities most familiar to us are slurred over in silence by travellers who fully describe other and often later monuments. Thus (to give one notable example), Goethe, if I remember right, when at Assisi ignores the great churches of that city, with all their magnificent pictorial wealth, and dwells only upon the fine Roman portico still extant in the Piazza del Comune, as (so limited in truth was the poet's often-vaunted taste in art) throughout his Italian journey he is similarly all but silent on the finest pictures of Venice and Florence, while the secondary and degenerate art of the Caracci or Guercino absorbs his attention.

Your readers are too well acquainted with modern criticism, especially that mode which from Germany has passed into popularity in England, not to be able to name frequent examples of quibus, haec fabula. Whether this age be one characterised by credulity or by scepticism is fairly debateable. But to those who accept, with satisfaction or the reverse, the latter definition it may perhaps be equally suggested whether there is not now ample room for the impartial, the not unamusing, attitude of Scepticus Scepticorum.

F. T. P.

NOTES ON HERO(N)DAS.

III.

Oxford: Sept. 27, 1891.

Mr. Hall's suggestion of θ[σμί]ζεις in I. 9 cannot be right, because the entire point of the context is that Gullis hardly ever came to town. R.'s τί σὺ θ[ε]ς πρὸς ἀνθρώπους, implying that her visits, like those of angels, were few and far between, is not only very pretty, but exactly fills the gap in the MS.

Nor will Mr. Hall maintain his alteration of I. 73 if he looks again at the line. The sense is perfect—"And don't you come to me again, friend, with (lit. bearing) one single word of such talk as you've been talking (μηδὲ ἐν τοίῳ): bring me a story that is fit for virtuous young wives."

I resume my notes on the second poem.

(30) II. 5. (MS.) περ ἐξεί Βατταρον μῆ . as Read ἄλλ' εἶπερ ἐξεί Βάτταρον τι πημήνας which exactly fills the gaps (for εἰ would be written ε).

(31) II 13. (MS.) ἦς εα ταυτα τ ουν δυντος

I find that both Mr. Hall and Mr. Headlam have anticipated me in filling up [ἦ]λ[ι]ον, but I may point out that the conjecture is virtually proved by καὶ ταυτα νυκτός in 25.

This seems the place where we ought to have some mention of the burning of which Battaros afterwards complains; and I suggest that the line began with κήρησε, followed by a neut. pl. in εα, such as θεία, which last is probably not the exact word.

(32) II. 14. (MS.) χε χλαινον. Possibly the defective word is ἐρηχε, but K. supposes only three letters to be missing.

(33) In II. 18 K. has not seen that τυρου should be τυρου; this is shown by the word forming the fourth foot, for τυρός, "cheese," has υ. R. does not print the mutilated lines 5-20 at all.

(34) Battaros, in the course of his speech, asks that the water-clock may be stopped while the clerk recites the law on which the prosecution relies, for he is afraid the clerk may mumble it to his own toes, and that this part of his speech may reach only the carpet, and not the ears of the judges. He means that in that case it would not be fair that the time taken up by the recital should be deducted from the time allotted to his own speech. The words I have italicized are expressed as follows in the MS.:

II. 44. μη προς τε κυσος φησι χω ταπης ημιν 45. το του λογου δη τουτο ληηης κυρση

I suggest that this is entirely right, unless the unknown neut. κυσος is wrong. There is, however, a masc. κυσός, which has two anatomical senses, one of which is πωγή; and I suggest that the neuter word may mean the bottom part or pit of the court (cf. Hesychius, "κυσέρη· πυθμήν. χάσμα"). But anyhow the sense is plain; and R.'s changes—τ' ἄκυρον and θαλῆς—are needless. As for φησι (changed by R. to φητι), I submit that it may be an Ionic survival of the Homeric subjunctive, φῆσι or φῆσι. As for ληηης (changed by R. to ληηη), it is governed by κυρση, "obtain a prize," and το του λογου δη τουτο, probably—"as regards this part of the speech forsooth." Mr. Headlam, indeed, says that the latter words "of course" mean "as the saying is." It is true that τὸ τοῦ λογου is found in that sense; but the τοῦτο makes a world of odds, and it would be necessary to construe τουτο ληηης κυρση "obtain this much of spoil."

(35) The clerk proceeds to recite the law:

II. 46. ἐπην δ' ἐλευθερός τις αἰκίσθη δούλην 47. ἢ ἔλκων ἐπίσην.

Here we have another of R.'s needless changes: the MS. reads ἐκων, and that is quite right, "wittingly notice." It does not in the least matter that Battaros elsewhere accuses Thalcs of ἔλκων Murtalc: that is comprehended in αἰκίσθη.

(36) II. 63. πύξ ἐπλήγγην, ἢ θύρη καθήρακται 64. τῆς οἰκίης μου τῆς τελείω τρίτην μισθού, 65. τὰ ὑπέρυψ' ὄπτα. δείρα, Μυρτάλη, καὶ σὺ Battaros has already complained (35-8) that Thalcs invaded his house with torches, and set it on fire. As Thalcs's object seems to have been merely to carry off one of the inmates, no doubt this setting on fire was quite accidental: and of course the tops of the doorways through which the ravishers passed with their torches would be as likely to be injured as anything. Accordingly Battaros tells the judges that the door has been broken down, the lintels scorched (or baked). But among R.'s notes to the poem will be found "65. 'All that lies inside the door is open to view.'" What!!!

In 64, moreover, the MS. gives μισθον, and rightly. Battaros means that he pays the third part of the profits of the house "as rent." R. says, "Battaros lives in a συνοικία." But is it likely that a house of ill-fame would be a third part of a συνοικία, and not a separate house of itself?

(37) In II. 87. ην δ (i.e., ἦν δ'), at the beginning of a line, is altered by R. to κῆν δ'. This, again, is totally uncalled for.

(38) II. 95. νῦν δεξέθ' ἢ Κῶς χῶ Μέρου κύπον δραινει 96. χῶ Θεσσαλὸς τίν' εἶχε Χήρακλῆς δίξαν. 97. Χώσκληπίδης κούτ' ἦλθεν ἰθαδ' ἐκ Τρικκης. 98. κῆτικτε Λητοῦν ὦδ' ἐτ' εὐχοριν Φοίβη.

Another needless change. In 97 the MS. reads κῶς (accent included). That is quite right, there ought to be no stop after 96, and 97 = "and how Asklepios," &c.

I have only begun to read the third poem, but have three notes on it to offer. Métrotimé brings her son Kottalos to Lampri-skos, whom she asks to give him a good beating. She says he is not content with knucklebones, he has ruined her by tossing, and she can't pay the schoolmaster when the 30th of the month comes round.

(39) III. 9. καὶ τριηκὰς ἢ πικρῆ 10. τὸν μισθὸν αἰτεῖ. Κοτταλὸς κῆν τὰ Ναννάκου κλαύσω 11. οὐκ ἂν ταχίως λήξειε τὴν γ' ἐμὴν παίστην.

So R., but K. rightly divides γε μην (=nevertheless); and the Athenaeum reviewer rightly gives all three lines to the mother. I hope to explain παίστην in a future letter.

(40) The mother says that the knucklebones

III. 20. ἐν τῆσι φύσῃς τοῖς τε δικτύοις κείνται 21. καὶ τῆ κύθηρ ἡμῶν ἢ ἐπὶ παντὶ χρώμασθα.

In II. 67 R. has changed the το[υ]ν[ο]υ[s] οὖς ορης of the MS. to τ. τυός ο. Here he has, on the contrary, changed the τῆς of the MS. to ἦ! But the MS. also reads, not καὶ τῆ κύθηρ, but τῆς ληκίουσ! R. says he makes the correction under the belief that ληκύθηρ was written as a gloss; but, if anyone wanted to explain κύθηρ, would he not explain it by its Attic form χύτρα? Would he be likely to explain it by the name of another vessel of a quite different shape and used for quite different purposes? The κύθηρ was an earthenware cooking-vessel, sometimes, if not always, with two handles; the λήκυθος, was an earthenware bottle, with one handle, and generally, I fancy, a long neck, used for oil, wine, vinegar, &c.

I maintain that the MS. is once more quite right. The mother says she finds her son's knucklebones in the bellows and in the netting of the λήκυθος, which they use for all purposes (or to season all their dishes with). This netting was evidently inserted in the neck of the vessel either to strain the liquid or to stop flies from getting into it.

(41) III. 42. τί μεν δοκεῖς τὰ σπλάγχχνα τῆς κοκῆς πάσχειν 43. ἐπὴν ἴδω μιν. Λομπρισκος κού τῶσος λόγος τοῦδε: Μητροτιμη

44. ἀλλ' ὁ κέρατος πᾶς ὥσπερ ἴτρια θλῆται,

I would make all this part of Métrotimé's speech, printing not κού, but κού, and a comma instead of the interrogation: "And it is not so much him that I'm afraid for (when he's sitting astride the roof, 40-41), but he smashes all the tiling."

I suppose we must not take the ἰδωμι of the MS. to be another dialectal survival; and, if not, I suggest that ἰδωμικου may represent ἴδω μιν: οὐ, as we have in I. 69 a case of K miscopied for N.

EDWARD W. B. NICHOLSON.

P.S.—In I. 37 I prefer Mr. Headlam's κατ' to my κᾶτ'. In I. 60 the accent on ἀγκαλιζει in the MS. shows that someone took the first two letters to = ἀγ, i.e. ἀνά, as R. docs; but I still prefer my own view. In II. 77 I ought to have accented λεῖ.

Wadham College, Oxford: Oct. 5, 1891.

In the third poem of Herodas a mother is complaining to the schoolmaster of the conduct of her boy. I give the Greek just as it stands in the Museum text:

5. ἐκ μεν τάλαινης τὴν στεγὴν πεπορθηκεν χαλκίδα παιζων και γαρ οὐδ' ἀπορνεουσιν αἱ ἀστράγαλοι Λαμπρισκε συμφορηε δ' ἠδη ρμαι ἐπι μεζον κου μεν ἠ θυρη κῆται του γραμματιστεω και τριηκας ἠ πικρη 10. τον μισθον αἰτι κην τα Ναννακου κλαυσω ουκ αν ταχίως λήξειε τὴν γε μην (οἱ τὴν γ' ἐμην) παίστην ουκου περ οἰκίζουσιν οἱ τε προνυκοι και δρηπεται σαφ οἶδε κητερωι διζαι.

This is chaos, and Dr. Rutherford's treatment of it is no assistance. On l. 7 he writes: "If the reading is sound, this must mean 'it becomes of greater importance where,' &c. Boys were sent to the γραμματιστής when they were about seven years old." He gives κῆν τὰ Ναννάκου . . παίστην to the boy, reading τὴν γ' ἐμην, and taking παίστην to mean "gambling"; and he supposes the mother to resume at ὅκυπερ in l. 12. It is to be regretted that he has not written notes on the uses of κ-τ, μ-ν, λήγειν, and οἰκίζειν which his text and comment seem to imply. But the change of a single letter in the Greek will bring order out of chaos. The mother speaks throughout—συμφορῆς δ' ἦδη ἱρμῶ ἐπὶ μεζον· κού μεν ἠ θυρη κῆται τυῶ γραμματιστεῶ και τριηκὰς ἠ πικρῆ τον μισθον αἰτεῖ, κῆν τὰ Ναννάκου κλαύσω, ουκ αν ταχίως λήξειε. τὴν γε μην παίστην ἵκουπερ οἰκίζουσιν οἱ τε προνυκοι χου δρηπεται, σάφ' οἶδε χητήρωφ διζαι.

—i.e., he is going from bad to worse. He does not know the way to school, but he can guide anybody to the place where street-porters and runaway slaves plant or lodge their gaming-table. I am not sure that οἰκίζουσι is right. Παίστην is formed like ἀρχήστρα, κολομβήθρα, μάκτρα, &c., and is so used again in l. 64, πρὸς δε τὴν παίστην . . φοιτέων. In l. 7 αἱ ἀστράγαλοι is a difficulty, for αἱ γ' ἀστράγαλοι would give us an anapaest in the second foot.

The mother proceeds:

κῆ μεν τάλαινα δελτος ην εγω κᾶνω 15. κηρουσ εκαστου μηνος ορφανη κῆται προ της χαμευνης του ἐπὶ ταιχον ερμινος κην μηκοτ αυτην οἰον Αἰδην Βλεψας γραψη μεν ουδεν καλον ἐκ δ' ολην ἐνση αι δορκαλιδες δε γαι παρωτεραι πολλων 20. εν τῆσι φύσῃς τοῖς τε δικτύοις κείνται τῆς ληκυθου ημεων τῆ ἐπὶ παντὶ χρώμασθα.

Dr. Rutherford puts a comma after μέν in 18, but leaves the Greek of 17-18 unchanged: 19-21 he changes in an astonishing way, and yet leaves us with the rose nihilī παρω. Probably Herodas wrote somewhat as follows:

κῆ μεν τάλαινα δέλτος, ἦν ἐγὼ κᾶνω κηραῖσ' ἐκᾶστου μηνίος, ὄρφανη κῆται: πρό τῆς χαμευνης τοῦ ἐπὶ ταιχον ερμίνος; κῆν μηκέτ' αὐτὴν οἶον Αἰδὴν βλεψῆ, γραψῆ μεν οὐδὲν καλόν. ἐκ δ' ὄλην ἐξῆσει· οἱ δορκαδες δὲ γε λιπορώτεραι πολλων ἐν τῆσι φύσῃς τοῖς τε δικτύοις κείνται τῆς ληκυθου ἡμεων τῆ ἐπὶ παντὶ χρώμασθα.

The tablet on which he does his lessons is thrown out of the way under the bed, or, if he can be brought to look at the hateful thing, he will scrape off all the wax instead of writing something in a nice hand; but his dice are found lying about all over the place, greasier and more shiny with use than the common oil-flask. Here again I doubt whether I have got the words exactly right, but they must be something very much like this.

There is no good reason for giving ll. 31-36 to the schoolmaster, as Dr. Rutherford does, and still less for making him interject καὶ τόσος λόγος τοῦδε as a question at 43. The mother says she is horrified at seeing the boy on the roof: καὶ τόσος λόγος τοῦδε, ἀλλ' ὁ κέραμος κ.τ.λ., "and it isn't that I care so much about him: it's the tiles that he breaks and I have to pay for."

In l. 70, δῶτα τις εἰς τὴν χεῖρα πρὶν χολὴ βηξαι Dr. Rutherford reads πρὶν χολὴν ληξαι; but surely this gives us a wrong sense. Perhaps πρὶν χολὴν βῆξαι.

In 74, ἀλλ' εἰς ποιεῖρος, Κότταλ', ὥστε καὶ πένας οὐδέεις σ' ἐπαιέσειεν, read καὶ for καί. The first two lines of the poem would be made neater by the omission of τε, which may easily be due to error. In 58, μη λασσον αὐτω Μητροτιμη ερευχεο, it seems likely that λασσον should be μᾶσσον, for the schoolmaster appears to interrupt at this point; but the reading of 56-59 is uncertain throughout.

I add a few notes on the other poems. In 2.28, ὄν ἐχρήν αὐτὸν should be altered, not to ὄν (οἱ τὸν) αὐτὸν ἐχρήν, but to ὄν χρήν μὲν αὐτὸν, μὲν being answered by νῦν δέ in 31, and αὐτὸν governed by the εἰδῶτα which Mr. Nicholson has seen to be contained in 29.

In 4, 35-8, the MS. is imperfect:

τὸν Βατάλην γὰρ τοῦτον οὐχ ὄρησ. Κυνοῦ, ὄκωσ β. β. . . . ἀνδράντα τῆς Μύττεω; εἰ μὴ τις αὐτὴν εἶδε Βατάλην, Βλέψας ἐς τοῦτο τὸ εἰκόνημα μὴ . . . ἦς δέισθω.

I suggest very doubtfully ὄπως πεπολήτ', and μὴ ἐτέρης δέισθω. Dr. Rutherford φωνήσ.

4, 73-4 (of Apelles) οὐδ' ἑρέεις "κέινος ἄνθρωπος ἐν μὲν εἶδεν ἐν δ' ἀπηρηθήσ."

Dr. Rutherford says in a note: "It is easy to see that in place of ἀπηρηθήσ we require a term meaning 'represented,' 'depicted.'" But could ἐν μὲν, ἐν δέ be used in this way for seeing one thing and representing another? The meaning is that he did not see one thing and fail to see another. His hands were true ἐς πάντα γράμματα, as the speaker has just said. ἀπηρηθήσ in a passive sense, though very questionable, may be right ("another thing was denied him"): if not, what we want is a word bearing the general sense of οὐκ εἶδεν, such, c.g., as ἀπεκρίθησ.

In 5, 18, φερ ἴσ σου should be φείρεις σύ: "are you bringing" the rope of l. 11.

Poem 6 begins thus:

καθῆσο Μητροὶ τῆ γυναικίας ἐς δίφρον ἀνασταθεῖσα πάντα δεῖ με προσταττειν αὐτην σὺ δ' οὐδεν ἀ ταλαινα ποιηταῖς αὐτη ἀπο σαυτῆς μα λίθος τις οὐ δουλα 5. ἐν τῆ οἰκίῃ εἰς.

Dr. Rutherford reads:

καθῆσο Μητροῖ τῆ γυναικίῳν δίφρον ἀνασταθεῖσαν πάντα κτλ.

But from the editor's note another reading is all but certain. He writes "apparently the scribe began to write γυναικίος, but altered the word before reaching the last letter, as the last two letters of γυναικίας are written over δο." The lady addresses first her visitor, then her slave-girl:

καθῆσο Μητροῖ τῆ γυναικί δὸς δίφρον ἀνασταθεῖσα πάντα δεῖ με προσταττειν αὐτὴν· σὺ δ' κ.τ.λ.

The beginning of Theocritus' fifteenth poem is exactly similar with its ὄρη δίφρον, Εὐνόα, αὐτῆ. Cf. also the beginning of the first of these poems of Herodas, where Dr. Rutherford translates στρέψον τι, δούλη in l. 8, "take yourself off": the real meaning seems to be "turn round a seat" for the visitor. In the fifth line here Dr. Rutherford inserts μὲν before εἰς, which is likely enough to be right: but ἀνασταθεῖσα and λίθος suggest the possibility of κέισ' for κέισαι in the place of εἰς.

HERBERT RICHARDS.

King's College, Cambridge: Oct. 2, 1891.

1. 43. [οἶα] δ' ἄγριος χεῖμῶν [ἐπέρχετ' ἀνδρας μοῖρα]. καὶ οὐδὲ εἰς οἶδεν [τὸ μέλλον] ἡμ[ων], ἄστατος γὰρ ἀνθρώπων [αἰών]

57. ΤΑΓΓΡΑ . . . XI are the relics of ΤΑΧΠΑΛΓΧΝ:

- ἐκύμηγε τὰ σπλάγγων ἐρ[ωτι] κ. ἀ. 61. κᾶτ' ? (Or perhaps ΟΙΑ is for ΘΙΑ i.e. θεία 71. δς [λή] II. 5. [ἀλλ' εἰ] περ ἕξει Βάτταρον [κα-] ημ[ύσ]ατ 14. [ἀνευ]θε [μόχθ]ων, ἀνδρες, [εἰλη]χε χλαῖναν Cf. 21. 17. [στέγ]ουσα 19. ἦν γὰρ οὐδ' οὗτος πυροῦς [δυνατὸς ἀλλῆ]θειν οὐτ' ἐγὼ πάλιν [πε]μῆν 28. ὄν χρῆν, ἐαυτὸν ἕσπετι ἐστὶ κακ ποιου πηλοῦ πεφόρητ' εἰδῶτ', ὡς ἐγὼ ζῶειν, . . Cf. v. 78 71. μὴ μὴ ἰκετεύω πρὸς σε Μουσεῶν, Λάμπρισκε (?) 72. ὁ Βρ[α]χχος? Cf. Lactant. ad Stat. Theb. viii.: 198, etc. 79. Stet ξάην. 97. οἱ [πότν]αι IV. 46. ὄρη [έων]. VI. 10. ὄτ' ἐστὶ χρ[εῖη]. VII. 13. τῆ[ν] κόνιν (δ') ἀποψήσω. 19. [σ]αμβαλουχην. 22. ὄρηθ' ὄπως πέπηγε [χαλκείος ἦλ]οις· ἐζητήται πάντα, κ' οὐ τὰ μὲν καλ[ῶ]ς τὰ δ' οὐχὶ καλῶς, ἀλλὰ π[ά]ντ' ἔχει καλῶ[ς]. 38. τὰ θ' ἰμά. 50. τ[ὸ]ντ' ἦν [μῆ] ὄμιν ἀνδ[ρ]άην. 69. εἰ τοῦτο [έρεῖς] γάρ, σὺ σέ ῥήδιον (οἱ ῥήδιω). 96. Ῥοτ ΛΙΧΛΕΟΕΩΝ, read ΑΚΛΕΩΕΩΝ: ὥστ' ἐκ μὲν ἡμέων ἀκλεῶς, ἐῶ, πρήξεις. 102. δαιμονίους I take to be a gloss on χρωσέους. 105. φέρ' ἐλόβοῦ [σὺ] τῶν τριων . . .] δοῖναι καὶ ταῖτα καὶ ταῦτ' [ἄλλα πέντε] δαιμονίων ἔκητι Μητροῦς τῆσδ[ε]. Κ. κέντε δαι[μ]ν[ι]κῶν [εἰ]ναί τὸ μ' ἐλάσαι σάμβαλ[ο]ν.] 109. λιθῶν ἐς θεοῦς ἀνα[σ]τή[ναι]. 112. οἰ[νοῖς]. 126. δουλ[ῶ]ν[?] WALTER HEADLAM.

St. John's School, Leatherhead: Sept. 30, 1891.

- III. 29. ἀωρή I take to mean "carelessness" (ἀ-ῶρα. Cf. Stuid. ἄω[ε]ω). 34. Ἀπολλων ἀργεῖν = "Ap. god of vacations," rather than R. and K.'s text, ἀργεῖν. 49. ὥστε μῆδ' ὀδόντ' ἀκινετήν. keeping MS. ὀδόντ' and changing -σαῖ to -τέιν. Tr. "so that not a tooth is idle."

A. E. CRAWLEY.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 11, 7 p.m. Ethical: "Signs and Wonders," by Mr. J. H. Muirhead. MONDAY, Oct. 12, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Head and Face," I, by Prof. W. Anderson. 8.30 p.m. Library Association: "Critical Analysis of the Association's Work," by Mr. J. D. Brown; "Can Mudie help the Public Libraries?" by Mr. J. Y. M. MacAlister. THURSDAY, Oct. 15, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Head and Face," II, by Prof. W. Anderson.

SCIENCE.

MATHEMATICAL BOOKS.

The American Journal of Mathematics. Vol. XIII. Nos. 3, 4. (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press.) The earlier number opens with a third memoir on "A New Theory of Symmetric Functions," by Major MacMahon (pp. 193-234), in which the author carries on the development of the theory of separations. The theory is here brought up to the point where modes of calculating tables of separations may be advantageously discussed. Sections 8 and 9 (the numbering is continuous from the previous memoirs) lay down the fundamental laws of operation which in sections 10 to 12 are applied to the deduction of some comprehensive theorems of algebraic symmetry. Section 13 is concerned with the multiplication of symmetric functions; and the closing section (14) commences the application of the operators to the functions which appear in a table of separations, and establishes the theorem which is preliminary to further researches "which may possibly appear in a future number." It should be stated that the main result of this memoir was communicated verbally at the February meeting of the London Mathematical Society (1889), and the memoir finished in April of the same year. The next memoir is entitled "Remarque au sujet du théorème d'Euclide sur l'infinité du nombre des nombres premiers," by M. J. Perott. This is in continuation (beginning with section ii.) of a previous paper, and extends from p. 235 to p. 308 (in No. 4). All but the last short section seems to have been written before the publication of M. Lipschitz's article in the Journal für Mathematik (Band cv.). Prof. Karl Pearson publishes here his remarks on "Ether Squirts," being an attempt to specialise the form of ether motion which forms an atom in a theory propounded in former papers (pp. 309-362). The three papers alluded to appeared in the Transactions of the Cambri lge Philosophical Society (vol. xiv.), and the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society (vol. xx., p. 38 and p. 297). Many, if not all, of the results of this paper were laid before the Mathematical Society in February, 1890. The author abstracts his results thus:

"I have developed the results which flow from supposing the ultimate atom to be a sphere pulsating in a perfect fluid. I have shown that this hypothesis is not without suggestion for the phenomena of chemical affinity, cohesion, and spectrum analysis in the first paper; that it can be applied to explain dispersion and other optical phenomena, as well as certain electrical and magnetic phenomena in the second paper; while the fact that it leads to generalised elastic equations is developed in the third paper. In the present memoir I have endeavoured to show that all these results still hold good if the pulsating sphere be replaced by an ether squirt which resists variations in its rate of flow. From whence the ether flows, and why its flow resists variations, are problems which, as they fall outside the range of physics, I leave to the metaphysicians to settle. The ether squirt as a model dynamic system for the atom seems at any rate to possess the property of simplicity. But the action of one group of ether squirts upon a second group leads to equations, the complexity of which seems quite capable of paralleling any intricacy of actual nature. The main portion of the paper is devoted to the investigation of inter-atomic and inter-molecular forces, and brings out the striking influence in producing cohesion of 'kin-atoms' in different molecules. The law of gravitation and the theory of the potential are shown to be more intelligible on the ether squirt theory than on that of the pulsating sphere as developed in my first paper."

The closing papers of the volume are on "The Matrix which represents a Vector," by C. H. Chapman (pp. 363-380), and "sur une forme nouvelle de l'équation modulaire du huitième degré," by Signor Brioschi (pp. 381-386).

A Treatise on Plane Trigonometry. By E. W. Hobson. (Cambridge: University Press.) Mr. Hobson's necessarily brief sketch, in his Encyclopaedia Britannica article, had whetted our curiosity, and we were on the look-out for a novel treatment of even the well-worn subject trigonometry at his hands. The expectation has not been falsified. We have had occasion to examine many Trigonometries, large and small, in the course of the last few years, and we can say that the perusal of no one work has interested us so much as this. The touch of a master hand is visible throughout, and there can be few students who will not derive some fresh ideas from this exhaustive treatise. The work is not at all intended for junior students, but is just what is wanted for the final revision for the Senate House and college examinations. In fact, the author hopes that his book "will assist in informing and training students of mathematics who are intending to proceed considerably further in the study of analysis." The treatment of the circular functions is founded upon the definitions employed by De Morgan in his Double Algebra and Trigonometry. This seems to afford the readiest way for arriving at proofs that are perfectly general, since they apply to angles of all magnitudes. Then the sine and cosine formulae of the sum of two or more angles, and the addition and subtraction formulae, are easily obtained by the method of projection. A collection of "various theorems" is given in chapter vii. This will be a most useful one for intending candidates for scholarships. It consists of numerous identities and transformations, examples in solution of equations and eliminations, in maxima and minima, and in what Dr. Wolstenholme has called Porismatic Systems of Equations. The student will not find an account of the theory of logarithms of numbers, as this is generally given in works on Algebra, but he will find a full account of the construction of trigonometrical tables. No space also is devoted to an account of the modern geometry of the triangle, but the ordinary properties of triangles and quadrilaterals are adequately discussed. The last six chapters (xiii.-xviii.) contain an exposition of the first principles of the theory of complex quantities, and may be studied in connexion with Prof. Chrystal's treatment of them in his Algebra. All this last part is most satisfactory. Prof. Chrystal has lately remarked upon the unsoundness of the demonstrations given of the resolution of $\sin. \theta$ and $\cos. \theta$ into factors in the works of Todhunter, Lock, and Johnson, and has said that, to his knowledge, Mr. Hobson's Encyclopaedia Britannica article is "the only separate English treatise where a sound proof can be found." Mr. Hobson has availed himself of the researches of Cauchy, Abel, Gauss, and others, and placed "the theory of infinite series and products, where real or complex quantities are involved, on a firm scientific basis." There are a great number of varied examples, and many recent German, French, and other memoirs have been drawn upon. A few trivial errors have met our eye. The only thing lacking is a careful index, which would assist the student in more readily finding out what he wants than he can at present do with the aid of the "Contents," though that is full.

Logarithmic Tables. By Prof. G. W. Jones. (Ithaca, New York.) This is the third edition of a handy set of tables. It contains in a compact form the logarithms of numbers; the natural and logarithmic trigonometric functions; a six-place table of Napierian logarithms for the numbers 1-10791; meridional parts; table of useful constants, with their logarithms and Gaussian logarithms. A carefully drawn-up explanation of the tables forms an Appendix to the work. Mr. Jones is the joint author, with Profs. Wait and Oliver, of Cornell University, of a work on Algebra, which has been previously noticed in the ACADEMY. The same trio have compiled an excellent treatise on trigonometry, and are preparing a drill book in algebra, which is to be an abridgment of the above-named larger work, specially adapted to the work of preparatory schools. They are also writing a treatise on projective geometry. A curious feature about these publications is that the writers themselves own the copyright and the plates of their books, and have the books manufactured at their own cost, so that they are in effect their own publishers, and can set such prices and make such terms as they please with their fellow-teachers. The specimens before us compare favourably, as to get-up and printing, with similar works.

The Number System of Algebra treated Theoretically and Historically. By H. B. Fine. (Boston, U. S.: Leach, Shewell & Sanborn.) With no high claims to originality, this is a very interesting and careful account drawn from such sources as Peacock, Grassmann, Hankel, Weierstrass, Cantor, and Thomae. References are also given to quite recent papers (p. 131). The original idea of the writer was to give, in the historical portion, only a brief account of the origin and history of the artificial numbers. "But I cannot bring myself to ignore primitive counting and the development of numeral notation." And then he was led to write a résumé of the history of the most important parts of elementary arithmetic and algebra. The little work is a worthy addition to the now numerous list of handbooks by American mathematicians. After a careful perusal we have noted only two slight typographical errors.

Solutions of the Examples in Charles Smith's Elementary Algebra. By A. G. Cracknell. (Macmillans.) The fact that this work has had the benefit of Mr. Smith's revision is sufficient to commend it to all admirers of his exceedingly able text-book. The solutions themselves are as clear and full as any teacher (or student) could require. Mr. Cracknell has aimed at presenting the solutions so as to accord with the student's knowledge of formulae and theorems at the stage to which he has attained. This is, of course, a good feature.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GUPTA-VALABHI ERA.

22, Seton Place, Edinburgh: Sept. 24, 1891.

Some considerable time ago, my friend Prof. G. Bühler communicated to me his conviction that the Gupta era commenced from the abhisheka or coronation of Chandragupta I., with an outline of the argument leading to this conclusion. In his essay Die indischen Inschriften und das Alter der indischen Kunstpoesie, he has stated his dissent from Mr. Fleet's theory of the origin of the era, and that it dates from the accession of Chandragupta I. In a paper in the Vienna Oriental Journal, Prof. Bühler now gives the details of the argument by which he substantiates this position against the objections of Mr. Fleet.

Mr. Fleet's views may be summarised in these particulars: (1) The name of the Guptas is not distinctly connected with the era till the time of Al-Beruni in the eleventh century; (2) the era is not of astronomical origin, but must be connected with some historical event in 320 A.D.; (3) this event cannot have been the coronation of a Valabhi prince, for they were mere feudatories till about 640 A.D.; (4) nor of the first Gupta prince, for Sri Gupta and his son were simple Maharajas and feudatories; (5) Chandragupta I. became an independent king; but, as Chandragupta II. was on the throne in the 94th or 95th year of the era, and Kumāragupta till the 130th—"an average of thirty-two years for four successive reigns of Hindu fathers and sons, seems from every point of view an impossibility. And this prevents our making the Gupta era run from the commencement of the reign of Chandragupta I."; (6) as we know of no event in Indian history occurring in 320 A.D., we must look for its origin elsewhere; and (7), such an era is found among the Lichchhavis in Nepal. This tribe conquered Nepal about 330 A.D., and the era may refer to that conquest or to the establishment of a Lichchhavi monarchy. Chandragupta I. married a Lichchhavi princess, and Nepal was one of the countries paying tribute to Samudragupta, the son of this prince: hence it may have come to be adopted thence.

Prof. Bühler shows that, even were all the five dates from Nepālese inscriptions on which Mr. Fleet relies for his conclusion interpreted correctly, it would only show that this era was used in Nepal from the seventh to the ninth century A.D.—not that it was of Lichchhavi origin, or used there in the time of the early Guptas. But three of the five dates are not proved to be Gupta dates, and two of them at least (of Manadeva) must clearly belong to a much earlier epoch. Then, as Samudragupta made Nepal tributary to himself before 82 of the Gupta era, it is natural to infer that the Lichchhavi princes there adopted this era, just as at a later date the Nepal kings adopted the Harsha era on being subdued by Sri Harsha. Prof. Bühler next shows that Mr. Fleet's first position is not tenable, as both the Morbi copper-plate and Skandagupta's Girnār inscription prove that the era was called that "of the Guptas." And to the fifth point in the argument, Prof. Bühler opposes the fact that, in the Chaulukya dynasty of Gujarat, we have four generations, from Bhima I. V. (Sam. 1078) to the death of Kumārapāla, V. (Sam. 1229), covering a period of 151 years; and, in the eastern Chalukya dynasty, we have four generations in succession, from Vishnuvardhana III. to Vijayāditya II., reigning 135 or perhaps 139 years. The objection, therefore, to the Gupta sovereigns, Chandragupta I., Samudragupta, Chandragupta II., and Kumāragupta, in four successive generations, reigning for fully 130 years, is not valid.

From these results it is argued that the era styled—even in the time of the third ruler—that "of the Guptas" must have been established by a Gupta king, and the first Mahārājadhira of the dynasty—viz., Chandragupta I. He married Kumāradevi, the daughter of the powerful Lichchhavi king; and the Lichchhavis ruled before the conquest of Nepal, and possibly also to a later period, at Pushpapura or Pataliputra. It was possibly this marriage that led to Chandragupta's becoming an independent king, either by peaceful succession to his father-in-law or by superseding his brothers-in-law. That Pataliputra was the Gupta capital and not Kanauj—as Mr. Fleet assumes—is shown by Prof. Bühler from the Udayagiri cave inscription, where Virasena, the minister of foreign affairs of Chandragupta II., is described as "an inhabitant of Pataliputra," and the natural inference from this is that this city was the capital of the empire. Mr. V. A. Smith (Coinage of the Gupta Dynasty) had already come to the same conclusion; and Prof. Bühler regards Kusumapura, where, according to his inscription, Samudragupta "took his pleasure," as only another name for Pataliputra.

That the era also, in later times, received the name of Valabhi-Samvat, Prof. Bühler believes to be owing to the legend, current in Gujarat, that Valabhi was destroyed in Vikrama-Samvat 375, the epoch of the Gupta era—the history of its origin and introduction into Gujarat having been completely forgotten long before this title was applied to it.

Lastly, Prof. Bühler is inclined to reject Mr. Fleet's epoch of A.D. 319-20, and to accept the year 318-19 as the true beginning of the Gupta era.

Such are the main outlines of Prof. Bühler's argument, which will probably be generally accepted as conclusive. It is another step in the steady progress which Indian research has been making, especially during the last twenty years, based on a more accurate and extended study both of inscriptions and literary records, brought within reach of scholars by the collection of mechanical impressions of epigraphs, and by the Government search for Sanskrit MSS., in which Prof. Bühler took so active a part.

JAS. BURGESS.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MR. W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE'S second paper before the Oriental Congress, which has not hitherto been published, on "The Importance of Epigraphy in Egyptian Research," will appear in the next number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review, edited by Google.

FINE ART.

THE PRE-RAPHAELITE LOAN COLLECTION AT BIRMINGHAM.

THE Museum and Gallery of the city of Birmingham already contain many interesting objects of art in their permanent collection, notably the fine series of landscapes by David Cox, bequeathed by the late Mr. J. N. Nettlefold, and various works by Müller, Dawson, Etty, Henry Moore, and Leighton; and the directors have now brought together a particularly interesting loan exhibition, illustrative of the rise and progress of pre-Raphaelitism, which is supplemented by several important productions of the school, acquired during recent years by the Purchase Committee.

The works of individual pre-Raphaelite masters have on various occasions been brought before the public with greater completeness than in the present collection—the works of Rossetti at the Royal Academy and the Burlington Club, those of Mr. Holman Hunt at the Fine Arts Society, those of Sir John Millais at the Fine Arts Society and the Grosvenor, those of Mr. Burne Jones in a previous exhibition at the Birmingham Gallery—but, with the exception of the Manchester International Exhibition of 1887, this is the most comprehensive view of the movement and its productions that has yet been presented to the public.

Mr. Ford Madox Brown is the painter whose work is most largely represented in this exhibition, some fourteen of his pictures appearing on the walls to our left as we enter the gallery, grouped round "The Last of England," permanently acquired last year—one of the few paintings in which the more strenuous moments of modern life have been treated with pictorial dignity and impressiveness, "The Entombment" and "Jesus washes Peter's Feet" may be accepted as thoroughly representative of the religious art of this painter, works full of individuality and earnestness. In the former we may note the beauty and extreme purity of the face of Mary Magdalene seen in profile to the left, and observe the little accessory touches by means of which the painter has deepened the pathos of the scene—the broken tendril of vine that trails over the face of the rock-hewn sepulchre, the palm branch, trodden under foot now and dragged in the dust, and the action of the mother to the right, who gently turns the child's head that it may look at the pale countenance that is being borne past, still in the peace of death. Near these hang the great painting of "Romeo and Juliet," one of Mr. Madox Brown's masterpieces, remarkable for its powerful expression, in face and figure, of the utmost intensity of passionate feeling, and, technically, as a learned study in varying tones of red, and for its vivid rendering of the awakening colour and brilliancy in a morning sky. But the most harmonious and perfect of the works by Mr. Madox Brown now shown is undoubtedly his "Cordelia's Portion," a picture possessing all that weird and fascinating strangeness which is one of the most characteristic notes of its painter, combined with a treatment that is vividly imaginative and deeply dramatic. The grand seated figure of the white-bearded Lear is perhaps the very noblest that the painter has produced; the impersonations of the various characters, and very especially of Goneril and Regan, are at once original and convincing; the colouring of the whole is marvellously rich and glowing. "The Coat of Many Colours," originally one of the illustrations of "Dalziel's Bible," is a less perfect work, erring a little on the side of undue grotesqueness. The "Cromwell Dictating to his Secretaries, Milton and Marvel," has more than needful uncouthness in the figure and attitude of the Protector; but that of Milton, seated in front of an organ, whose carved and gilded decorations crown him as with a wreath of poet's laurel, is a high success, full of refinement and dignity.

The examples of Mr. Holman Hunt are headed by the noble "Scene from the Two Gentlemen of Verona," painted before 1851, and showing a wealth of exquisite detail and a dramatic expressiveness such as the painter has never excelled. Near it hang the pathetic "Scapegoat," of 1856, and the smaller version of "The Shadow of the Cross"; while on the right wall is the impressive "Isabella and the Pot of Basil," with its dark-eyed lady clad in a thin white robe which has grown "a very opal" in the cool blueness of its shadows, and the warmth of its lights where the rosy skin makes itself felt beneath its delicate texture. One other example of Mr. Hunt's art cannot be passed without remark—"The Strayed Sheep," in many ways the most remarkable example of "landscape with figures" produced in our own or any other century. The rendering of the rocky cliffs of the further middle-distance, and of their grassy tops, in their clear definition of detail combined with a due feeling of distance, and in their truth of relation to the sky behind them and to the sheep in front, is one of the most wonderful passages of painting with which we are acquainted. On the opposite wall hangs a somewhat similar effect of clear sunlight, excellently painted, though with power far short of this, by another of the pre-Raphaelites, or rather by an artist to some extent associated with the movement—the well-known "Stonebreaker" of Mr. John Brett.

The exhibition enables us to trace the art of Sir John Millais from its first to at least the beginning of its final phase. "The Baptism of Guthrum the Dane" is a work of his earliest youth, consonant with the art of the time, a work strictly academic in conception and execution, its figures relieved in the manner of the time against shadows of conventional brown. In "Mariana," of 1851, however, we have as typical a specimen as could have been selected of the quaintness and the intensity of his pre-Raphaelite period, of which progressive examples are also shown in "The Proscribed Royalist," of two years later, in the noble full-length of Mr. Ruskin, 1853, standing amid the rocks and torrent of Glenfinlas, in the "pure crude fact" of "The Blind Girl," of 1856, and in the solemn "Vale of Rest" of 1858; while "The Widow's Mite," dating from 1869, which forms part of the Birmingham permanent collection, more than hints at the breadth and power of the artist's last period, with its splendidly delicate and powerful flesh-painting, to which every accessory is unhesitatingly subordinated.

Of the earliest puristic period of Rossetti's art, the period that produced the "Girlhood of Mary Virgin" and "The Annunciation," in the National Gallery, there are no examples in the present exhibition; but of the romantic and mediæval phase that followed we have a sufficiently typical specimen in the "Sir Galahad," while the "Sir Tristram and Isult drinking the Love-potion" may also be assigned to the same period, though it has less of the frank, vivid splendour of colour which gives the painter's earlier water-colours—with all their faults, the most spontaneous and characteristic pictorial products of his genius—qualities akin to those of missal-painting. The "Beata Beatrix," a somewhat altered version of the National Gallery picture, completed by Mr. Madox Brown, the "Venus Verticordia," and "The Damozel of the Sanct Grail," are distinctly favourable examples of Rossetti's later work in oils.

The fully-developed style of Mr. Burne Jones is perfectly exhibited in "The Star of Bethlehem," commissioned for the Birmingham Gallery, which is too well known to call for comment or description here. It is enough to say that it is a work of which any painter or period might well be proud—one of the masterpieces of an artist who, without dropping any of the mystic quaintness and the detailed elaboration which gave such a charm to the productions of his earlier period, has been able gradually to add to these a perfection and freedom of technical method, and an accurate command of the human form, such as has been possible to none of the other pre-Raphaelites or their associates. He is also represented by a "Flamma Vestalis," potent in colouring, and of exquisite purity in facial expression; and by his smaller "Wheel of Fortune," a noble study in variously embrowned bronze tones; but of his early work in water-colour—work of the period of "The Merciful Knight," the "Sidonia the Sorceress," and "Dorothy"—no example appears.

A curious section of the display is that devoted to the works of the minor pre-Raphaelites and of artists more or less closely associated with the movement. Seven subjects exhibit the always graceful, if never forcible, work of Mr. Arthur Hughes. The pose, figure, and face of the central subject in his triptych from "The Eve of St. Agnes" are especially refined and delicate. Mr. Henry Wallis's tragic and powerful rendering of the dead "Chatterton," lying in his attic with the peace of the sunrise streaming over his quiet face, hangs beneath his vividly-coloured picture of a wounded trooper returning from Marston Moor to his cottage home; and in "The Renunciation of St. Elizabeth of Hungary" we have a work by Mr. James Collinson, one of the original members of "The Brotherhood." The two examples of Mr. Simeon Solomon are representative of both the weakness and the excellence of this wayward painter. The face of the lady in "The Painter's Pleasure" is as feeble a bit of work as could well be, while the figure of the standing girl to the right in the same picture is wholly excellent. In "Bubbles," a cottage scene with children, by Mr. J. D. Watson, we have work that recalls the practice of the pre-Raphaelites, but with a blackness in the flesh-painting which we hardly find in them. The examples of the art of Mr. W. L. Windus will be examined with interest by those who remember the enthusiastic praise bestowed by Mr. Ruskin upon that painter's "Burd Helen" when it was shown at the Royal Academy. The professional subject, titled "The Young Duke," is no more than a sketch, one free in handling, rich in colouring; but the scene from "The Surgeon's Daughter" is a work of greater elaboration, unfortunately painted on a bituminous ground, which has rendered the picture little more than a wreck, but exhibiting great delicacy and spirit of touch, fine expressional power, and admirably refined and silvery flesh-painting in such portions as the face of Zilia.

The works by Mr. J. F. Lewis are interesting in connexion with the pre-Raphaelite pictures that surround them, as independently anticipating many of their characteristics. "The Dancers" cannot be regarded as an exemplary work—it is disjointed and unrestful, without a centre or focus, without a main point of interest; but "The Doubtful Coin" is a work noble alike in colour and composition. This last has been permanently acquired by the Gallery, as has also the splendidly modelled "Roman Lady," which, with "Death crowning Innocence," represents Mr. Watts in the exhibition.

A few other of the artists associated with the pre-Raphaelites, such as Messrs. W. H. Deverell and Frederick Sandys, might have been represented. But, as it is, the collection is valuable and instructive; and the Birmingham Art Gallery Committee and their keeper, Mr. Whitworth Wallis, are to be congratulated upon their success in bringing it together.

The exhibition was opened on Friday, October 2, with a vigorous and effective, if too desultory, address by Mr. William Morris, dealing with the history and aims of pre-Raphaelitism, and its effect upon present-day European art. Two of the original members of the Brotherhood, Mr. Holman Hunt and Mr. F. G. Stephens, were present on the occasion.

J. M. GRAY.

THE EXCAVATIONS AT SILCHESTER.

WE quote the following from the Times :—

"In spite of the interruptions of bad weather and a prolonged harvest, the systematic excavation of the Roman city at Silchester, begun last year under the auspices of the Society of Antiquaries, has been steadily and quietly carried on for the past four months; and it is now possible to summarise briefly the results obtained.

"In continuation of our system of working out the site by the squares into which it was divided by the Romans, the work this year has been confined to the two squares, or insulae, immediately to the west of the great basilica—that is, in the centre of the city; and also to the completion, since harvest, of the large insula north of the forum which was commenced last year.

"The northern of the two new insulae, the cost of excavating which has been undertaken by Dr. Edwin Freshfield, has yielded very interesting results. The centre of it seems to have been chiefly open ground or gardens, with buildings ranged round the four street sides. These include the more or less perfect remains of a number of shops and houses, the latter having rooms warmed by channelled hypocausts and floored with mosaic pavements. One very perfect set of shops has been uncovered, attached to a small but complete house, with winter room warmed by a curious composite hypocaust, and a principal room with mosaic floor of unusual pattern. A model to scale of this interesting group is in course of construction. The rubbish pits scattered over the insula, like those found last year, have yielded a great many interesting and curious objects. Chief among these are the fictile vessels, of which a considerable number of more or less perfect specimens have been unearthed, representing all the principal kinds of Romano-British pottery, as well as the imported pseudo-Arrentine. Of minor articles in bronze (including a beautiful little enamelled stand), bone, and glass, many interesting examples have come to light; together with numerous coins, though mostly in indifferent preservation. The pits have also yielded great quantities of animal bones, which are now under examination by experts. Among them is the almost complete skeleton of a Romano-British dog. The architectural fragments do not include any of great importance, but a base of a column of good design and workmanship may be noticed. A small and perfect mosaic pavement in one of the houses has been successfully taken up for preservation.

"The southern of the two new insulae has been excavated at the cost of the late Mr. Walter Foster, whose premature death in July last is a sad loss to his fellow-workers at Silchester. This insula has also yielded many interesting remains from its very numerous rubbish pits, including pots and vessels of all kinds, a quantity of fruit stones and fish-bones, a set of bronze bucket handles, a bronze bowl or saucapan, fibulae, pins, and other objects. From the trenches have also been unearthed various antiquities, part of an inscription on a Purbeck marble slab, coins, and a number of interesting architectural fragments. Like its fellow, this insula contained a good deal of open ground; but among other buildings, &c., uncovered, is the complete ground plan of a house, a large series of chambers of uncertain use, a remarkable pavement of hard white opus signinum, and the remains of other houses and hypocausts. The tessellated floors in this insula are, unfortunately, but ill-preserved. Close to the house mentioned above, a well lined with wood has just been discovered, and is now being cleared out.

"The excavation of the uncompleted insula north of the forum has only been begun since harvest, and the work is still in progress. Already the inclosure of, probably, a small shrine or altar has been uncovered, and a series of chambers along the main street. Some interesting remains have also come to light, including a perfect bronze figure of a goat, of good workmanship, and a considerable fragment of some rare foreign marble, used probably as a wall lining. Another, but lesser, piece of the same kind of marble was found earlier in the year in a different part of the excavations.

"On the whole, the results of the season's work have, so far, been satisfactory, the find of pottery and earthenware vessels being very encouraging. A valuable addition, too, has been made to our knowledge of Romano-British building, showing the differences that exist between the town houses of Silchester and the country houses or villas. Both again differ in a remarkable way from the typical Roman house as seen in Italy—a fact that cannot be too often insisted on.

"In all probability, all the plans, drawings, and models, and the whole of the antiquities found will be exhibited in the rooms of the Society of Antiquaries, at Burlington-house during the winter, when those who are interested will have every opportunity of seeing them.

"Through the kindness of the Duke of Wellington, all the antiquities found at Silchester will ultimately be deposited in the Reading Museum, where the objects found last year have already been placed. An excellent nucleus of what will in time be a most important Romano-British collection has thus been formed.

"W. H. ST. JOHN HOPE."

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. GEORGE WALLIS, F.S.A., who for eight and twenty years has been senior keeper of the South Kensington Museum, has resigned his appointment. For fifty years Mr. Wallis has been closely connected with art education in this country, and as early as 1839 he was delivering lectures advocating state aid. He was head master of the Spitalfields School of Art in 1843, and of Manchester from that year until 1846. In promoting the Exhibition of 1851, the Prince Consort recognised Mr. Wallis's services and experience by appointing him deputy commissioner and superintendent of the British textile division. In 1853 he was appointed head master of the Birmingham School of Design, and while there he was specially selected by the Government as special commissioner to the United States. His report on art manufactures was presented to Parliament in 1854. In 1858 he came to South Kensington, and was made senior keeper in 1863.

MRS. CECIL LAWSON has presented to the Chelsea Free Library the statue of Sir Joshua Reynolds modelled by her father, the late J. Birnie Philip. The statue is heroic size, and was reserved from the sale of the sculptor's effects by Cecil Lawson, who intended to have it cast in bronze, and presented to Sir Joshua's native place, Plympton. But he died before carrying out his intention; and its present resting-place is not inappropriate, as Philip's studio recently occupied the site of the library.

MUSIC.

THE BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Birmingham: Oct. 7, 1891.

AFTER long and careful rehearsals, both in London and Birmingham, the Festival opened yesterday morning with Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The prominent position accorded to this Oratorio at festivals is frequently the subject of comment; but there is no doubt that Birmingham, which witnessed its production more than forty years ago, will cling to it as long as possible. Whatever the merits or demerits of "Elijah," it stands foremost in rank and in popularity among modern Oratorios. The singing of the choruses for the most part was admirable: the quality of the male voices is excellent, but I am somewhat disappointed with the quality of tone of the sopranos. The solo vocalists were, with the exception of Mr. Lloyd, not all that could be desired. Neither Mrs. Macintyre nor Mr. Santley was in good voice; and the former, in addition, made some unfortunate slips. Miss Hilda Wilson sang in a good, though not striking, manner. Dr. Richter conducted with marked decision. The hall was crowded. In the evening came the first novelty, a setting of Dryden's paraphrase of the Latin poem "Veni, Creator Spiritus," for chorus, solo quartet, and orchestra, by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, produced under his direction. On many previous occasions the composer has displayed great skill and talent; and again here, there are many proofs that his hand has not lost its cunning, but, nevertheless, this will not rank among his best efforts. Dryden's poem, it must be confessed, is scarcely calculated to inspire a composer, and one may feel disposed to ask whether Dr. Mackenzie chose it of his own free will. The portions best worthy of mention are the two quiet sections, especially the second, with its appropriate word-painting, and the brilliant fugal writing towards the close of the work. With regard to the orchestration, the frequent use of brass produces a somewhat fatiguing effect. The choir sang with great spirit, and the composer was much applauded. The soloists were Miss Macintyre, Miss H. Wilson, and Messrs. Iver McKay and Brereton. A new duet, "The Dawn," by Mr. A. Goring Thomas, was successfully sung by Miss Macintyre and Mr. Brereton. The music is essentially French, and a great deal of the scoring is effective. The duet is, however, somewhat long, and the words by Victor Hugo were not clearly articulated by the vocalists. The superb rendering of Beethoven's Violin Concerto by Dr. Joachim was a feature of the evening, also the fine accompaniment of the band under Dr. Richter's direction. The intonation of the eminent violinist fell now and then short of perfection, but the reading of the work was an ideal one. Conductor and orchestra also greatly distinguished themselves in Brahms's grand Symphony in F, and in Bennett's "Naiades" Overture.

Bach's St. Matthew Passion was performed on Wednesday morning, and for three hours and a half a large audience listened patiently and reverently to the old master's musical commentary on the Gospel story of the Passion. Patience was certainly necessary, for the large amount of recitative undeniably proved monotonous. Bach wrote his work for a religious service: here at Birmingham it was given as a musical performance, and accordingly the recitative was no longer—at least by the majority of the audience—listened to in the manner intended by the composer. To me, however, the performance proved one of absorbing interest. I was curious to know how Dr. Richter would present the music—whether he would adhere as closely as possible to Bach's score, or whether he would avail himself of Robert Franz's additional accompaniments. An attempt was made to reproduce Bach's score. Obsolete instruments were replaced, and in one instance omitted; further, English horns acted as substitutes for two different kinds of obsolete instruments. Bach's indications with regard to the instrumental accompaniments to the chorales were entirely disregarded; and in many of the soli sufficient prominence was not given to the organ, and the accompaniments—to use a familiar but expressive phrase—sounded all top and bottom. The antiphonal effects in the double-choir movements as intended by Bach who indicated organ parts for each choir, were not heard; but for want of a second organ these could not, of course, be carried out. Surely, with the large choirs and large halls of the present day, it is better to use additional accompaniments than to follow the letter of the score, which often proves little more than a hollow mockery. Dr. Richter, six years ago, tried to present Handel's "Messiah" in legitimate modern dress, but aroused a storm of opposition from those who prefer the master in half dress; and so he probably thought that Bach must be left to share the fate of his great contemporary. The performance was in many ways praiseworthy; especially would I notice the beautiful smooth singing of the chorales by the choir, and their rendering of the double-choir movements. Dr. Joachim played the violin solo to two of the airs, and one could not help noticing how carefully he attended to the values of the appoggiatura notes. Some of the vocalists and instrumentalists were less careful in this matter. Miss Macintyre was in better, though still not good, voice. Mr. Santley interpreted his music with much feeling. Mr. Lloyd greatly distinguished himself.

On Wednesday evening was produced Dr. C. V. Stanford's new Dramatic Oratorio, "Eden." The poem by Mr. Robert Bridges is an ambitious one: it treats not only of woman's first disobedience, but of the contending powers of good and evil. The first act, "Heaven," carries us among the angels who are singing the hymn of man's birth. The angel of the Earth joins them and listens to the story of the new creation. The second act presents to us Satan and his hosts by the sulphury lake. The enemy of mankind has "spied a blot in God's new world." Spirit and matter are joined, but the latter will prevail. There is exultation over the expected victory. The devils hail Satan as "King of death! king of hate! king of night," and then an echo of angelic song is heard, "God of might! God of love! God of light!" to which "All Devils" reply, with perhaps more point than poetry, "Ha! ha! cease!" Before noticing the third and longest act, let us see what pictures poet and musician have presented to us of the upper and the lower world. It is scarcely necessary to say that the task they took upon themselves was a heavy one, and in any criticism of these two acts this fact should be remembered. Mr. Bridges' "Dialogue" of the angels of beauty, poetry, music, &c., is a happy conception; and here the musician supports him with some of his most skilful and picturesque music. The "Beauty" motive—for, be it noted, the system of representative themes is extensively used—is most charming, and is employed here and in later portions of the Oratorio with striking effect; it shines, to a certain extent, however, with borrowed light, for it certainly owes something both to Beethoven and Wagner. In other portions of the music sung by angels, the composer writes in the style of the sixteenth century; and it may well be asked why we should be thus reminded of a distant contrapuntal past, as in the skilfully written chorus in six parts, and the scholarly "Madrigale spirituale"! In his opening instrumental Prelude, and in subsequent portions of the work, Dr. Stanford makes use of two phrases of the plain-song melody "Sanctorum meritis" from the Sarum Missal. This mixture of styles seems a heaven divided against itself: one heaven, one mood, whether of the sixteenth or the nineteenth century, would be more satisfactory. The tenor solo, "My sphere slowly turneth," has an interesting accompaniment, and some effective orchestration. In the second act, entitled "Hell," it is natural enough that there should be plenty of sound and fury; but how far with such a theme it is possible to keep within the limits of true art, is a question of some moment. Some of the most daring tone-pictures of great modern composers have been received with the respect due to great talent, or even to genius; but they will scarcely rank as their noblest achievements. I will not for a moment deny the vigour and technical skill which pervade this section, but somehow or other it seems to me to lack true power and imagination. The influence of Wagner and of Berlioz is plainly manifest. With regard to the former, Dr. Stanford boldly adopts his methods of development. The distortion of the opening theme of the Oratorio, typical of divine power, the whole style of the accompaniment in Satan's solo "In the visions of God," are some among many instances which could be instanced to show this. And not only the method of Wagner is copied, but at times his music seems to haunt the composer; the "Satan" motive may claim affinity with that of Klingsor in "Parsifal." Act III., entitled "Earth," is divided into two parts. First comes the story of the Fall. Adam and Eve are in the garden of Eden, enjoying the beauties of nature; the music is pastoral and pleasing. The following number, in which the serpent is seen, is marked by a curious touch of realism: the movements of the enemy of mankind thus disguised are depicted in the orchestra. The scene of the Temptation is not lacking in interest from a dramatic point of view; the anxious utterances of Eve, the insinuating attitude of Satan, and the mysterious voices of angels bidding the woman "take heed," are portrayed with a certain power of characterisation. The expulsion from Eden, the regrets and prayers of the unhappy exiles, form the concluding subject matter of the first part. Part II. describes the visions of war, plague, and so on, which pass before Adam. Finally, the "Vox Christi" is heard proclaiming rest unto the weary, and here the theme of divine power is appropriately employed. This series of visions might have tempted the composer, but I do not think Dr. Stanford has managed to sustain the musical interest. The Oratorio closes with a chorus of angels.

The performance was a fine one: band and chorus had plenty of work to do, and they did it well, the latter singing with great firmness and power. The principal soloists were Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Henschel. The composer, who conducted, was much applauded. The concert terminating this evening at a late hour, it is impossible to do full justice to Dr. Stanford's Oratorio. There are many points in it which, if they do not succeed in making of it an epoch-making work, show the thought and skill displayed in its construction. "Eden" will in due course be given in London, and then we shall have another opportunity of speaking about it.

Dvůřák's "Requiem," which will be produced here on Friday morning, the last day of the Festival, will claim special notice next week.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTE.

MAX BRUCH's new Violin Concerto (No. 3 in D minor) will be performed for the first time in England, at the South Place Institute, on Sunday next, October 11, at 7 p.m. Mr. Hans Wesseley will be the solo violinist; and the pianoforte accompaniment, which has been arranged from the orchestral score by the composer himself, will be played by Mr. Ortan Bradley. The Concerto will again be performed by Señor Sarasate, at his orchestral concert on the following Saturday.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Just published, Svo. cloth, 18s. net.

SCHLIEMANN'S EXCAVATIONS: An Archæological and Historical Study. By Dr. C. SCHUCHHART, Director of the Kestner Museum in Hanover. Translated from the German by EUGENIE SELLERS. With an Appendix on the Recent Discoveries at Hassarlik by Dr. SCHLIEMANN and Dr. DORPFELD, and an Introduction by WALTER LEAF, Litt.D. Illustrated.

* * A popular but strictly accurate account of the whole series of Dr. Schliemann's Excavations and their results. It is believed that the book will be of great value and interest even to those who already possess Dr. Schliemann's larger works, not only as bringing them up to date, but also in showing the connecting links between the several discoveries.

AN IMPORTANT NEW WORK ON THE SUDAN.

Just Ready, Svo. cloth, 30s. net.

MAHDIISM and the EGYPTIAN SUDAN: being an Account of the Rise and Progress of Mahdism, and of subsequent events in the Sudan to the present time. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A., D.S.O., Assistant-Adjutant-General for Intelligence, Egyptian Army. With Seventeen Maps and numerous Plates.

* * * Compiled from Official Sources, and likely to be regarded as the final account of the campaign which ended in the death of General Gordon. The fullest possible details are given as to the fall of Khartoum.

A POPULAR WORK ON ELECTRICITY.

Just Published, super-royal svo. cloth, 31s. 6d.

ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. Translated from the French of ANEDEE GUILLEMIN. Revised and Edited by SILVANUS P. THOMPSON, D.Sc., B.A., F.R.S., Principal and Professor of Physics in the City and Guild of London Technical College, Finsbury; late Professor of Experimental Physics in University College, Bristol. With 600 Illustrations.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "MADEMOISELLE IRE."

Just Ready, crown svo. cloth 3s. 6d.

CECILIA DE NOEL. By Lanoe Falconer, Author of "Mademoiselle Ire."

A NEW STORY BY A NEW WRITER.

Just Ready, crown svo. cloth, 6s.

TIM: A Story of School Life.

THE LATE PROFESSOR F. D. MAURICE.

Just Ready, Vol. I., crown svo., cloth, 3s. 6d.

SERMONS PREACHED in LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.

By the late FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE, M.A., formerly Chaplain at Lincoln's Inn. In Six Volumes. Monthly from October.

* * These sermons have long been out of print, and it has been thought that a new edition of them would be acceptable to the wide circle of Mr. Maurice's admirers.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CHEAP EDITION OF MISS YONGE'S NOVELS.

Just Ready, crown svo. cloth, 3s. 6d.

P'S and Q'S: or, The Question of Putting Upon, and Little

Lucy's Wonderful Globe. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe."

NEW EDITION.

Just Ready, Ninth Edition, crown svo. cloth, 12s. 6d.

FAMILIAR QUOTATIONS. A Collection of Passages, Phrases, and Proverbs, traced to their Sources in Ancient and Modern Literature. By JOHN BARTLETT.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

LIBRARY EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s. per Volume.

THE WORKS OF HEINRICH HEINE.

Translated by CHARLES G. LELAND (HANS BREITMANN).

Volume I. containing FLORENTINE NIGHTS, THE MEMOIRS OF HERR VON SCHNABELEWOPSKI, THE RABBI OF BACHARACH, and SHAKESPEARE'S MAIDENS and WOMEN.

Volumes II. and III. PICTURES OF TRAVEL. In 2 vols. [Nearly ready.

Volume IV. THE BOOK OF SONGS. In 1 vol.

Volumes V. and VI. GERMANY. In 2 vols.

Other Volumes will be announced later.

Times.—We can recommend no better medium for making acquaintance at first hand with the 'German Aristophanes.'

PROSPECTUS ON APPLICATION.

THE DRAMATIC WORKS OF ARTHUR W. PINERO.

Published in Monthly Volumes, each containing a Complete Play, with its Stage History.

Price 1s. 6d., paper cover; 2s. 6d., cloth extra.

I. "THE TIMES," a New and Original Comedy, to be produced at Terry's Theatre.

II. "THE PROFLIGATE." With a Portrait. [Ready November.

III. "THE CABINET MINISTER." [Ready December.

To be followed by LADY BOUNTIFUL, THE HOBBY-HORSE, DANDY DICK, THE MAGISTRATE, THE SCHOOLMASTER, THE WEAKER SEX, LORDS and COMMONS, THE SQUIRE, and SWEET LAVENDER.

TWO NEW PLAYS.

THE PRINCESS MALEINE:

A Drama in Five Acts.

By MAURICE MAETERLINCK.

Translated by GERARD HARRY.

With an Introduction by OSCAR WILDE. [In the press.

THE FRUITS OF ENLIGHTENMENT:

A Comedy in Four Acts.

By Count LYOF TOLSTOY.

Translated by E. J. DILLON.

With an Introduction by A. W. PINERO.

4to, with Portrait, 5s. [Ready.

GIRLS AND WOMEN.

By E. CHESTER.

Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d.; or gilt extra, 3s. 6d.

Contents:—An Aim in Life.—Health.—A Practical Education.—Self-support: Shall Girls Support Themselves?—Self-support: How Shall Girls Support Themselves?—Occupation for the Rich.—Culture.—The Essentials of a Lady.—The Problem of Charity.—The Essentials of a Home.—Hospitality.—Bric-à-Brac.—Emotional Women.—A Question of Society.—Narrow Lives.—Conclusion.

STRAY THOUGHTS.

By ELLEN TERRY.

In 1 vol., small 4to, illustrated. [In the press.

GOSSIP IN A LIBRARY.

By EDMUND GOSSE.

In 1 vol., 16mo. [In the press.

WOMAN—THROUGH A MAN'S EYEGLASS.

By MALCOLM C. SALAMAN.

With Illustrations by Dudley Hardy. Fcap. 8vo. [In the press.

LITTLE JOHANNES:

An Allegory of a Poet's Soul.

By Dr. VAN EEDEN.

Translated from the Dutch by CLARA BELL.

With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG.

And Illustrations by Dudley Hardy.

Imperial 16mo.

3 ALSO A LIMITED LARGE-PAPER EDITION. [In the press.

M A G O N I A:

A Poem.

By CHARLES GODFREY LELAND (HANS BREITMANN).

Fcap. 8vo.

[In the press.

POEMS, NEW AND OLD.

By WILLIAM WATSON,

Author of "Wordsworth's Grave."

Fcap. 8vo.

MR. HALL CAINE'S NEW NOVEL.

THE SCAPEGOAT:

A Romance.

By HALL CAINE,

Author of "The Bondman," &c.

In 2 vols., 21s. Third Edition. [At all Libraries.

Scotsman.—"There can be no thoughtful man or woman, who appreciates what is intellectual and who loves the beautiful, who will not say that 'The Scapegoat' is a work to take a first rank in the classic literature of the country."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.—3s. 6d. each.

THE BONDMAN. | THE LITTLE MANX NATION.

NEW NOVELS IN ONE VOLUME.

AMELIE RIVES'S NEW NEW NOVEL.

ACCORDING TO ST. JOHN.

By AMELIE RIVES,

Author of "Quick or Dead," &c.

5s.

"TASMA'S" NEW NOVEL.

THE PENANCE OF PORTIA JAMES.

By "TASMA,"

Author of "Uncle Piper of Piper's Hill," &c.

3s. 6d.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

UNCLE PIPER OF PIPER'S HILL.

By "TASMA."

Cheap Edition.

ADA CAMBRIDGE'S NEW NOVEL.

THE THREE MISS KINGS.

By ADA CAMBRIDGE.

3s. 6d.

National Observer.—"A pleasanter tale has not been told these many days."

Observer.—"It is pleasure to read this novel."

Graphic.—"Interesting, wholesome, and altogether above the average."

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

A MARKED MAN:

Some Episodes in his Life.

By ADA CAMBRIDGE.

Popular Edition. 3s. 6d.

Athenaeum.—"A charming study of character."

Morning Post.—"A depth of feeling, a knowledge of the human heart, and an amount of tact that one rarely finds."

HAROLD FREDERIC'S NEW NOVEL.

IN THE VALLEY.

By HAROLD FREDERIC.

Popular Edition. 3s. 6d. Illustrated.

Times.—"A charming tale of the American War of Independence. The literary value of the book is high.....A life-like picture of the English, Dutch, and German settlers of those days.....it is a very excellent historical novel."

J. H. PEARCE'S NEW NOVEL.

INCONSEQUENT LIVES:

A Village Chronicle.

By J. H. PEARCE,

Author of "Esther Penreath," &c.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

- SOPHOCLES: the Plays and Fragments. With Critical Notes, Commentary and Translation in English Prose by R. C. JEBB, Litt D., LL.D., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. Part V.—TRACHINIAE. Demy 8vo. [In the press.]
- THE ORIGIN of METALLIC CURRENCY and WEIGHT STANDARDS. By W. Ridgeway, M.A., Professor of Greek, Queen's College, Cork, and late Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. [Shortly.]
- A HISTORY of EPIDEMICS in BRITAIN. Vol. I. From A.D. 664 to the Extinction of the Plague in 1666. By CHARLES CREIGHTON, M.D., M.A., formerly Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo. [Shortly.]
- DIGEST XIX. 2, LOCATI CONDUCTI. Translated, with Notes, by C. H. Monro, M.A., Fellow of Gonville and Caius College. Crown 8vo. [Immediately.]
- A TREATISE on THERMODYNAMICS. By J. Parker, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 9s.
- A TREATISE on ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS. New and Enlarged Edition. By S. L. Loney, M.A., formerly Fellow of Sidney Sussex College. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- SOLUTIONS of the EXAMPLES in a TREATISE on ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS. By the SAME AUTHOR. [In the press.]
- THE ELEMENTS of STATICS and DYNAMICS. By S. L. Loney, M.A. 7s. 6d.
Also in Two Parts. [Pitt Press Mathematical Series.]
Part I.—THE ELEMENTS of STATICS. 4s. 6d. | Part II.—THE ELEMENTS of DYNAMICS. 3s. 6d.
- THE CODEX SANGALLENSIS (Δ): a Study in the Text of the Old Latin Gospels. By J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A., formerly Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge, and now Professor of Biblical Languages and Literature in Haverford College, Pennsylvania. Demy 8vo, 3s.
- SOME INTERESTING SYRIAN and PALESTINIAN INSCRIPTIONS. By J. Rendel Harris, M.A. Demy 8vo, 4s.
- TEXTS and STUDIES: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature. Edited by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Christ's College.
- Vol. I. No. 1. THE APOLOGY of ARISTIDES on BEHALF of the CHRISTIANS. Edited, from a Syriac MS., with an Introduction and Translation, by J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A. With an Appendix containing the main portion of the Original Greek Text by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.
- Vol. I. No. 2. THE PASSION of S. PERPETUA. The Latin Text Freshly Edited from the Manuscripts with an Introduction and Appendix containing the Original Form of the Scillitan Martyrdom. By J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D. (Editor). Demy 8vo, 4s. net.
- Vol. I. No. 3. THE LORD'S PRAYER in the EARLY CHURCH. With Special Notes on the Controverted Clauses by F. H. CHASE, B.D. Christ's College, Principal of the Clergy Training School, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.
- Vol. I. No. 4. THE FRAGMENTS of HERACLEON. The Greek Text with an Introduction by A. E. BROOKE, M.A., Fellow of King's College. Demy 8vo, 4s. net.
- Vol. II. No. 1. A STUDY of CODEX BEZAE. By J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A., formerly Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge, and now Professor of Biblical Languages and Literature in Haverford College, Pennsylvania. Demy 8vo. [Immediately.]
- Vol. II. No. 2. THE TESTAMENT of ABRAHAM. By M. R. JAMES, M.A., Fellow of King's College. With an Appendix containing Translations from the Arabic of the Testaments of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, by W. E. BARNES, M.A., Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo. [In the press.]

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS MATHEMATICAL SERIES.

- AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on PLANE TRIGONOMETRY for the USE of SCHOOLS. By E. W. HOBSON, M.A., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, and University Lecturer in Mathematics, and C. M. JESSOP, M.A., Fellow of Clare College. [In the press.]
- ARITHMETIC for SCHOOLS. By C. Smith, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. [Nearly ready.]
- SOLUTIONS to the EXERCISES in EUCLID, BOOKS I.-IV. (Pitt Press Mathematical Series, by H. M. TAYLOR, M.A.) By W. W. TAYLOR, M.A. [In the press.]

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

- THUCYDIDES, BOOK VII. The Text newly Revised and Explained, with Introduction, Summaries, Maps, and Indexes. A recollection of the British Museum MS. M. has been made for this Edition. By Rev. H. A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D. 5s.
Also in Two Parts.
Part I. INTRODUCTION AND TEXT. Part II. NOTES AND INDEXES. 5s.
- MILTON'S ODE on the MORNING of CHRIST'S NATIVITY, L'ALLEGRO, IL PENSEROSO and LYCIDAS. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Indexes, by A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College. 2s. 6d.
- MILTON'S SAMSON AGONISTES. With Introduction, Notes, and Indexes. By the SAME EDITOR. [In the press.]
- CICERO.—PRO PLANCIO. Edited by Rev. H. A. Holden, LL.D., Examiner in Greek to the University of London. New and Revised Edition. 4s. 6d.
- LIVY.—BOOK IX. With Notes and Introduction by the Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., formerly Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. [In the press.]

EXAMINATION PAPERS for ENTRANCE and MINOR SCHOLARSHIPS and EXHIBITIONS in the COLLEGES of the UNIVERSITY of CAMBRIDGE.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1890.

- Part I. MATHEMATICS and SCIENCE. 2s.
Part II. CLASSICS, MEDIÆVAL and MODERN LANGUAGES and HISTORY. 2s.

LENT TERM, 1891.

- Part III. MATHEMATICS and SCIENCE.
Part IV. CLASSICS, LAW, and HISTORY.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1015.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

JESUS CHRIST. By the Rev. Father DIDON, of the Order of St. Dominic. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s.

"These two volumes command admiration by their logical coherence. The narrative of a life whose divine purity has stood the test of centuries is characterised by wonderful harmony of language, a striking grandeur of imagery, a dazzling amount of colouring."—Times.

THE PSALTER: its Origin and Religious Contents.

In the Light of Old Testament Criticism and the History of Religions. By T. K. CHEYNE, D.D., Canon of Rochester. Demy 8vo, 16s.

"Dr. Cheyne has long been recognised as one of the most learned and devout of the modern school of Oxford theologians. These qualities are displayed in his Bampton Lectures."—Times.

THE JEWISH RELIGION. By M. FRIEDLANDER. Crown 8vo, 5s.

H.R.H. the DUKE of CLARENCE and AVONDALE in SOUTHERN INDIA. By J. D. REES. With 5 Autotype Portraits and 28 Views in Photogravure. Super-royal 8vo. [Shortly.]

PRINCIPLES of POLITICAL ECONOMY. By ARTHUR LATHAM PERRY, LL.D., Orrin Sage Professor of Political Economy in Williams College. Large post 8vo, 9s.

MISCELLANIES, Vol. V. Chiefly Academic. By Prof. F. W. NEWMAN. Demy 8vo, 12s.

CONTENTS: One Side of Plato—On Pindar—On the Northern Elements of Latin—Modern Latin as a Basis of Instruction—On Forms of Government—Epicureanism, Ancient and Modern—Strivings of Greece for Union—The Moral Character of Roman Conquest—Modern Science Religious in the Long Run—The Political Side of the Vaccination System—Religion at the Bar of Ethics, &c., &c.

BIRTHRIGHT in LAND. By WILLIAM OGILVIE, of Pittenear. With Biographical Notes by D. C. MACDONALD. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"A really thoughtful work."—Spectator.

THE BIGLOW PAPERS. By JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. New Copyright Edition. Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

AT SUNDRY TIMES and in DIVERS MANNERS. By the late MARY ELEANOR BENSON. With Portrait and Memoir. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

IN the HEART of the STORM. By MAXWELL GRAY. With Frontispiece by Gordon Browne. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The nobility and seriousness of purpose, the keen sense of humour, the boldness and brilliance in description, will all be familiar to the readers of her previous works. It stands far, very far, above our average fiction."—Speaker.

THE "FRIEND of LONDON": or, the Rajputs of Meywar. By C. E. BIDDULPH. 8vo, sewed, 1s.

EARLY HISTORY of BALLIOL COLLEGE. By FRANCES DE PARAVICINI. Demy 8vo, 12s.

GARDEN-CRAFT: Old and New. With Sixteen Full-page Illustrations and Plans. By JOHN D. SEDDING. With Introductory Memoir by the Rev. EDWARD FRANCIS RUSSELL, M.A. Demy 8vo, 12s.

BRITISH EDIBLE FUNGI: How to Distinguish and How to Cook them. With Coloured Figures of upwards of 40 Species. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

TAXIDERMY and ZOOLOGICAL COLLECTING. By W. T. HORNADAY. With 22 Plates and 100 Figures in Text. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE MODERN FACTORY SYSTEM. By R. WHATELEY COOKE TAYLOR, H.M. Inspector of Factories. Demy 8vo, 14s.

MORAL ORDER and PROGRESS: an Analysis of Ethical Conceptions. By S. ALEXANDER, Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford. Second Edition. Large post 8vo, 14s. [Trübner's Philosophical Library.]

"A thoughtful and learned book. Without affecting elegance of style he writes in a clear, manly, direct, and occasionally humorous fashion."—Athenaeum.

"Mr. Alexander's book is marked throughout by distinguished philosophical ability."—Academy.

THE CHILDHOOD of RELIGIONS. By EDWARD CLODD. New Edition, Revised throughout and partly Re-written. Small crown 8vo, 5s. Also a Special Edition for Schools, price 1s. 6d.

"The style is very charming. There is something in the author's enthusiasm, something in the pellucid simplicity of his easy prose, which beguiles the reader along."—Academy.

THE GEORGICS of VIRGIL. Translated into English Verse by JAMES RHOADES. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

A GRAMMAR of the KHASI LANGUAGE. For the Use of Schools, Native Students, Officers, and English Residents. By the Rev. H. ROBERTS. Crown 8vo, 16s. 6d. [Trübner's Simplified Grammars.]

THE BOOK of CHINESE POETRY: being the Collection of Ballads, Sagas, Hymns, and other Pieces known as the Shih Ching or Classic of Poetry. Metrically Translated by CLEMENT F. R. ALLEN. Demy 8vo. [Immediately.]

LOOSE BLADES from the ONE FIELD. By FRANCIS OSMASTON. Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

RECENT VOLUMES in the INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 5s. each.

COLOUR BLINDNESS and COLOUR PERCEPTION. By F. W. EDRIDGE-GREEN, M.D. With 3 Coloured Plates.

The first plate is a diagram illustrating psychophysical colour perception. The other two plates illustrate misconceptions of colour which, within the author's knowledge, have occurred to the "colour blind."

SOCIALISM NEW and OLD. By Professor WILLIAM GRAHAM. Second Edition.

"Professor Graham's book may be confidently recommended to all who are interested in the study of Socialism, and not so intoxicated with its promises of a new heaven and a new earth as to be impatient of temperate and reasoned criticism."—Times.

"A valuable book, in short, much wanted in this country."—Athenaeum.

INTRODUCTION to FRESH-WATER ALGÆ. With an Enumeration of all the British Species. By M. C. COOKE. 13 Plates.

"Fills a distinct vacuum in botanical literature."—Academy.

"We can recommend this as a useful work of reference."—Spectator.

THE COLOURS of ANIMALS: their Meaning and Use, especially considered in the case of Insects. By E. B. POULTON, F.R.S. With Chromolithographic Frontispiece and upwards of 60 Figures in Text.

"Mr. Poulton's valuable work."—Morning Post.

"The author is particularly well qualified to write upon this popular subject.....The excellence of the book, which we can cordially recommend."—Pall Mall Gazette.

PHYSIOLOGY of BODILY EXERCISE. By FERNAND LAGRANGE, M.D.

"A valuable addition to a valuable series."—Guardian.

"Well adapted for popular use, and ought to find favour."—Nature.

THE PRIMITIVE FAMILY in its ORIGIN and DEVELOPMENT. By C. N. STARCKE.

"Thoroughness and industry displayed in this readable and exceedingly instructive work."

"Displays wide knowledge and patient research."—Morning Post. [Athenaeum.]

LONDON: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.		PAGE
RUDYARD KIPPLING'S LIFE'S HANDICAP, by LIONEL JOHNSON.		327
ADMIRAL COLOMB'S NAVAL WARFARE, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS.		328
THE LIFE OF SIR GEORGE BURNS, by J. G. C. MISCHEIN.		329
TWO BOOKS ON THE CAUCASUS, by W. R. MORFILL.		330
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH.		331
ROMAN CATHOLIC THEOLOGY.		332
NOTES AND NEWS.		334
FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.		334
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.		335
ORIGINAL VERSE: "Harvest Thoughts," by the Hon. Mrs. LIONEL TOLLEMACHE.		335
OBITUARY: JOHN WILLIAMS, the Rev. PERCY MYLES, and Rev. HOSKYN ABRAHAM, &c., by J. S. C.		335
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.		336
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.		336
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Notes on Heroides , by J. B. JEVONS and W. R. HARDIE;
"Measure for Measure," Act I., Scene 1, by S. J. WHITEFORD; Guillaume de Digulleville , by Paget TOYNBEE; Papal Infallibility , by Prof. C. de HARLEZ;
"The Scapenot," by Hall CAINE.		336
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.		338
A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE CHALDEAN EPIIC, by Prof. SAYCE.		338
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Celtic Etymologies in Fick's Comparative Dictionary , Vol. I., by Whitley STOKES.		339
SCIENCE NOTES.		340
SMITH'S DICTIONARY OF GREEK AND ROMAN ANTIQUITIES.		340
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Mention of an Ionian Greek in the Tablets of Tel el-Amarna , by Prof. Sayce; "The Story of the Sokhti," by F. L. GRILLITH; The Amorites and Hebrews in Early Canaanite Inscriptions , by the Rev. H. G. TOMKINS.
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.		341
STAGE NOTES.		342
THE BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, by J. S. SHEDLOCK.		342
MUSIC NOTES.		342

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE of CHEAP SECOND-HAND BOOKS Now Ready.—JAMES WILSON, Bookseller, MANCHESTER.

BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE of ANTIQUARIAN BOOKS, Historical, Geographical, Dramatic, &c. Post free from W. BORRELL, 74, George Street, Euston Road.

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel Poetry, &c.) are invited to forward them for Consideration MSS. read within 14 days of receipt, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. Rejected MSS. promptly returned.

DIGBY, LONG, & CO., Publishers, 18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON

SCULPTURE STUDENTS instructed, and prepared for the Schools of the Royal Academy, by a Gold Medalist and Experienced Teacher, all of whose Pupils have passed first sending up. The majority have been awarded medals and other distinctions.—Write in first instance SCULPTOR, 87, Chelsea Gardens, S.W.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

GLADWELL BROTHERS' FINE ART GALLERY, 20 and 21, Gracechurch Street, E.C.—A dissolution of partnership being in progress, the remaining STOCK, accumulated during the past half century, is now being SOLD for cash, without regard to publication prices.

GLADWELL'S important SALE of FINE ART STOCK is now in progress, and will be continued for a short time only, as the partnership heretofore subsisting will be dissolved on Dec. 31 next. A large portion of the Stock will be sold for cash at less than half price.—GLADWELL BROTHERS, 20 and 21 Gracechurch Street.

FRENCH CONVERSATIONAL LESSONS.—A LADY, who has been engaged for eight years in conducting large public English Classes for la Ville de Paris, and also for the Association Polytechnique in that city, is now desirous of finding PUPILS who wish to continue their fluency of speech in the French language.—Address F. T. M. (French), 16, Breakspoor Road, St. John's, S.E.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS GRANTS THE DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN. The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Exeter, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c. For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holl, R.A., Oulss, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTO TYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 180 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

COLLEGE of PRECEPTORS.—The Council are about to appoint an EXAMINER in SPANISH. Applications, accompanied by testimonials, should be addressed to the DEAN of the COLLEGE of PRECEPTORS, Bloomsbury Square, W.C., not later than the 31st OCTOBER. C. R. HODGSON, B.A., Secretary.

Just published, price 2s. 6d.

ON the ANCIENT LANGUAGE of the NATIVES of TENERIFE. A Paper contributed to the Anthropological Section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, 1891, by JOHN, MARQUESS of BUTE, K.T. (Mayor of Cardiff). London: J. MASTERS & Co., 78, New Bond Street, W.

DISEASES of the VEINS: more especially of Venosity, Varicocele, Hemorrhoids, and Varicose Veins, and their Medical Treatment. By J. COMPTON BURNETT, M.D. London: JAMES EPPS & Co., 170, Piccadilly, and 48, Threadneedle St.

DEAFNESS: its Treatment by Massage (Hommel's Method), Baths, and Remedial Agents. With Cases of Nervous Deafness. By R. T. COOPER, M.A., M.D. London: JAMES EPPS & Co., 170, Piccadilly, and 48, Threadneedle St.

FURTHER RELIQUES of CONSTANCE NADEN: being Essays and Tracts for our Times. Edited, with an Analytical and Critical Introduction, and Notes, by George M. McCrie. With Portrait and Facsimile of her last Letter. Demy 8vo, cloth, top edge gilt, 7s. 6d. BICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester Square, London, W.C.

BIRKBECK BANK, Southampten Buildings, Chancery Lane. ESTABLISHED 1851. THREE PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand. TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT. For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE a HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR a PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH. The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE, SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also, ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA, TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS. SOLE ADDRESS—11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI. THIS EVENING, at 8, THE TRUMPET CALL. Mr. Leonard Boyne, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, L. Rignold, C. Dalton, Douglass, East, Russell, Leigh, Keith, Drew, J. and W. Northcote, &c.; Miss E. Robins, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Leigh, and Miss Clara Jecks.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE. Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrey, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, P. S. Champion, W. Wyes, and Geo. Giddens; Misses Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne. At 8.15, ROSABEL.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM. THIS EVENING, at 8.45, MISS DECIMA. Mr. David James, Messrs. Chas. Conyers, Chauncey Olcott, Templar Saxe, Wilton Dale; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Josephine Findlay, Lucy Buckstone, and J. Nesville. At 8, LISCHEN and FRITZCHEN.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS. THIS EVENING, at 8, A SAILOR'S KNOT. Messrs. C. Warner, C. Glenney, E. Gurney, J. Cross, W. Lugs, F. Dancer, A. Phillips, F. Dobell, T. Terriss, R. Power, W. Staunton, and H. Nicholls; Mesdames J. Millward and Kate James.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, JOAN OF ARC. M. Marius, Messrs. F. Emney, E. Bantock, W. Warde, and Arthur Roberts; Mesdames Florence Dysart, Alma Stanley, Agnes Hewitt, Linda Verner, Louisa Gourlay, Alice Lethbridge, K. Seymour, Day Ford, V. Moncton, and Marion Hood. Preceded, at 7.25, by FIRST MATE.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE. THIS EVENING, at 8, SCHOOL. Mr. Mackintosh, Mr. Vincent, Mr. Gerthorne, Mr. Gilbert Harc, Mr. H. B. Irving; Miss Annie Hughes, Miss Fanny Robertson, and Miss Kate Rorke.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE DANCING GIRL. Mr. Tree, Mr. Fernandez, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. F. Kerr, Mr. Allan, Mr. Robb Harwood, Mr. Batson, Mr. Leith, Mr. Hudson, Mr. Worden; Miss Julia Neilson, Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Horlock, Miss Ayrton, Mrs. E. H. Brooke, Miss Gunn, Miss Hethcote, and Miss Norreys.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Augustin Daly's Company, in THE LAST WORD. Miss Ada Rehan, Mr. Drew, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Wheatleigh, Miss Irving, Miss Cheatham.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER. THIS EVENING, at 8.15, LA CIGALE. Misses Geraldine Umar, E. Clements, A. Rose, A. Newton, F. Melville, St. Cyr, E. Jeffreys; Messrs. Harry Monkhouse, E. Lewis, G. Mudie, J. Peachy, Porteous, and C. Hayden Coffin. At 7.30, LOVE AND LAW.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs. Murray Carson, G. W. Cockburn, Eardley Turner, T. W. Percyval, J. A. Welch, De Solla, Victor, Alker, Dwyer, Ludlow, &c.; Mesdames Leslie Bell, Bertie Willis, L. Seecombe, L. Wilnot, L. Wyatt, M. Horrick, and Miss Grace Hawthorne. At 7.30, TWO IN THE BUSH.

OPERA COMIQUE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.20, THE AMERICAN. Mr. Edward Compton, Messrs. Lewis Ball, C. Blakiston, Y. Stewart, S. Paxton, C. M. Hallard, H. Hunter, F. W. Porman; Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe), Misses Louise Moodie, Adrienne Darolles, Evelyn McNay, C. Lindsay, and Miss Elizabeth Robins. At 7.45, A DEAD LETTER.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT-BASING. THIS EVENING, at 7.45, ARRAN-NA-POGUE. Miss Julia Warden, Mrs. John Carter, and Ella Terriss; Messrs. Henry Neville, Wilfred E. Shine, Bassett Roe, Chas. Ashford, Henry Bedford, John Carter, T. Verner, T. Kingston, and Arthur Dacre.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, THE IDLER. Followed by MOLIERE. Mr. George Alexander, Mr. Nutcombe Gould, Mr. Ben Webster, Mr. Wilton Lackaye, Mr. Alfred Holles, Mr. V. Sansbury, and Mr. Herbert Waring; Lady Monckton, Miss Gertrude Kingston, Miss Lily Hanbury, Miss Laura Graves, and Miss Marion Terry.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL. Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, Lemaistre, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, Louise Rowe, A. Cole, C. Timie, Saumarez, and Kate James. At 7.40, CAPTAIN BILLY. Messrs. Lemaistre, &c.; Mesdames Moore and R. Brandram.

STRAND THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDWIN. THIS EVENING, at 8.45, THE LATE LAMENTED. Messrs. Willie Edouin, H. Standing, H. Eversfield, G. P. Hawtrey, F. Cape, S. Barracough, and A. May; Mesdames Cicely Richards, E. Moore, E. Phelps, and V. Bennett. At 8, BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER. THIS EVENING, at 8.15, PRINCE AND PAUPER. Messrs. Forbes Dawson, Mark Kinghorne, Bassett Roe, Chas. Fulton, Cecil Crofton, A. T. Hendon, and H. H. How; Misses L. Linden, M. Linden, Mrs. Macklin, and Miss B. Hatton.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

NEW NOVELS.

MY DANISH SWEETHEART.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL,
Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" &c.
3 vols. [Ready.]

H O V E N D E N, V.C.

By F. MABEL ROBINSON,
Author of "The Plan of Campaign," &c.
3 vols. [October 20.]

URITH: a Story of Dartmoor. By S. Baring-GOULD.

Author of "Mehalah," New Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Mr. Baring-Gould is at his best in 'Urith.'—Times.
"Mr. Baring-Gould has been able to create a strong interest and to maintain it at a high pitch. There is, perhaps, no more careful or vigorous delineator of rough archaic types; and 'Urith' contains some of its author's best work in this respect. Its strength and effectiveness are undeniable."—Athenaeum.

THE RED GRANGE. By Mrs. Molesworth.

Author of "The Cuckoo Clock," &c. With Illustrations by Gordon Browne. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

A PINCH OF EXPERIENCE. By L. B. Walford.

Author of "Mr. Smith," &c. With Illustrations by Gordon Browne. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

ELSA: a Novel. By E. McQueen Gray.

Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Careful and accurate study of German, Italian, French, and English character. A bright and cleverly told story. We strongly recommend this eminently readable fiction."—Daily Telegraph.
"Picturesque and interesting. As good a tale as we have read for some time."—Spectator.

JACK'S FATHER. By W. E. Norris, Author of "Matrimony," &c.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
"It may be doubted whether any of his novels are so perfect in the sense of being absolutely flawless as are two or three of these stories."—Academy.

HEPSY GIPSY. By L. T. Meade, Author of "A Girl of the People," &c.

Illustrated by Everard Hopkins. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
THE HONOURABLE MISS: a Tale of a Country Town. By L. T. MEADE, Author of "Scamp and I," "A Girl of the People," &c. With Illustrations by Everard Hopkins. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE COLLEGES of OXFORD: their History and their Traditions.

Twenty-one Chapters by Members of the Colleges. Edited by ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Fellow of Lincoln. 8vo, 7s.

"Whether the reader approaches the book as a patriotic member of a college, as an antiquary, or as a student of the organic growth of college foundations, it will amply reward his attention."—Times.

LYRA HEROICA: a Book of Verse for Boys.

Selected and Arranged by W. E. HENLEY. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Nearly ready.]

THE LIFE of ADMIRAL LORD COLLINGWOOD.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" &c. With Illustrations by F. Brangwyn. 8vo, 15s.
"Collingwood has at last found an excellent vates sacer in Mr. Clark Russell, than whom no living writer is better fitted to tell the brave deeds of Nelson's friend and fellow-worker. Those who believe that there is no better reading than the lives of those who have fought and died and died for their country, will be glad that there has at length appeared a really adequate biography of such a true Englishman as Lord Collingwood."—Anti-Jacobin.

THE PATH TOWARDS KNOWLEDGE:

Discourses on Some Difficulties of the Day. By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Professor of Economics at King's College. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.
Among the subjects treated are Marriage and Population, Socialism, Positivism, Education, Civil Obedience, &c.

BRAND. A Drama by Henrik Ibsen.

Translated by WILLIAM WILSON. Crown 8vo, 5s.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES.—Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

PSYCHOLOGY. By F. S. Granger, M.A.

VICTORIAN POETS. By A. Sharp.

A HISTORY of ENGLISH SOCIAL ECONOMY. By L. L. PRICE, M.A., Fellow of Oriel College, Oxon.

SOCIAL QUESTIONS OF TO-DAY.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

MUTUAL THRIFT: an Inquiry into the Working of Friendly Societies.

By J. F. WILKINSON, M.A.

TRADE UNIONISM—NEW and OLD. By G. HOWELL, M.P.

PROBLEMS of POVERTY: an Inquiry into the Industrial Conditions of the Poor.

By J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

The CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT TO-DAY

By G. J. HOLYOAKE.

ENGLISH LEADERS of RELIGION.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with Portrait, 2s. 6d.
A Limited Edition on hand-made paper, demy 8vo, half-velum, 10s. 6d.

BISHOP WILBERFORCE. By G. W. DANIELL, M.A.

[Ready.]

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO.

THE PRINCESS TARAKANOVA: a Dark Chapter of Russian History. Translated from the Russian of DANILEVSKI, by IDA DE MOUCHANOFF. With 4 Engraved Plates. 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d. [In a few days.]

NEW NOVELS.

A NEW NOVEL BY A NEW NOVELIST.

A KING'S DAUGHTER. By G. CARDELLA. 3 vols. [Shortly.]

DR. and MRS. GOLD. By Edith A. BARNETT. 6s. [Ready.]

By Prof. MAX MULLER.—A NEW EDITION OF GERMAN LOVE. New Edition. 3s. 6d.; vellum, 5s.

THE DILETTANTE LIBRARY.—Elegant fcap. 8vo volumes, 2s. 6d. each.

1. DANTE and his IDEAL. By Herbert BAYNES, M.R.A.S. With Portrait.
2. BROWNING'S MESSAGE to his TIME. By Dr. EDWARD BERDOE. With Portrait and Facsimile Letters. [Second Edition.]

*• The Next Volume will be on HENRIK IBSEN, by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED.

THE ANTIQUARIAN LIBRARY.—Fully Illustrated, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

1. MONUMENTAL BRASSES. By Rev. HERBERT W. MACKLIN, B.A., late Hon. Sec. Camb. Univ. Assoc. of Brass Collectors. [2nd Edition.]
2. SYMBOLISM in CHRISTIAN ART. By Prof. F. E. HULME, F.S.A., of King's College, London.
The Next Volume will be on HERALDRY, by Prof. HULME.

LEGAL HANDBOOKS SERIES.—Each 3s. 6d.

LEGAL HANDBOOK for EXECUTORS and ADMINISTRATORS. Intended for the Use of the Practitioner and the Layman, after the Grant of Probate or Administration, with all the necessary Forms. By ALMARIC RUMSEY, Barrister-at-Law.

A NEW HISTORY OF TITHES.

HISTORY of TITHES. By Rev. Henry W. CLARKE, B.A., Trin. Coll., Dublin, Author of "The Past and Present Revenues of the Church of England and Wales." 6s. [This day.]

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.—Each 2s. 6d.

"It would be fitting to close our remarks on this little work with a word of commendation of the publishers of so many useful volumes. We have now received and read a good number, and can speak in the highest terms of them. They are written by men of considerable knowledge; they are concise; they give a fair estimate.... are well up to date; and are published at a price within the resources of the public."—Westminster Review, July, 1891.

NEWEST VOLUMES,

39. THE LONDON PROGRAMME. By SIDNEY WEBB, LL.B.
40. THE MODERN STATE. By P. LEROY BEAULIEU.

*• Full Lists of the whole Series will be sent free on application, or of any bookseller.

RIDDLES of the SPHINX: a Study in the Philosophy of Evolution. By A. TROGLDYTE. 8vo, 12s.

"Distinguished by real literary charm, and often rises to eloquence."—Westminster Review. "A book of very considerable force and interest. His thinking is genuine, and his writing is good."—National Observer.

STUDIES in HEGEL'S PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION. By Professor J. MACBRIDE STRETT, D.D. 7s. 6d.

"Is sure to attract attention."—Christian Commonwealth.

SOME STUDENTS' TEXT-BOOKS.

Botany Practical Elementary Text-Book of. Edited from Prof. W. STRASBURGER, by Prof. W. HILL-HOUSE, M.A. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. With additional Cuts. 8vo, 9s.

Botany, Elementary Text-Book of. By Prof. W. PRANTL and S. H. VINES, D.Sc., M.A. Sixth Edition. 8vo, 3s.

Microscope, in Theory and PRACTICE. By Prof. C. NAEGELI and Prof. S. SCHWENDENER. Illustrated. 8vo, 21s.

Petrographical Tables for the MICROSCOPICAL DETERMINATION of ROCK-FORMING MINERALS. By Prof. H. ROSENBUSCH. Edited by F. H. HATCH, B.Sc. 4to, limp cloth, 3s. 6d.

Vital Statistics. The Elements of. By A. NEWSHOLME, M.D. With Tables, Diagrams, &c. 7s. 6d. [Second Edition.]

Zoology, Elementary Text-Book of. By Prof. W. CLAUDE. Edited by ADAM SEDGWICK, M.A., F.R.S., Examiner in Zoology to Univ. Lond., and F. G. HEATHCOTE, M.A. [Second and Third Editions.]

I. GENERAL INTRODUCTION; PROTOZOA to INSECTA. 21s.
II. MOLLUSCA to MAN. 16s.

The Musician: a Guide for Pianoforte Students. By RIDLEY PRENTICE. In Six Grades, each 2s. Contains Analysis of well-known Pieces, progressively arranged, enabling the Pupil to unite a Study of Musical Form with ordinary Pianoforte Practice.

Greek and Latin, Comparative GRAMMAR of. By Prof. VICTOR HENRY. Translated by R. T. ELLIOTT, M.A. Oxon. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Pedagogy, The History of. By Prof. GABRIEL COMPAYRE. Translated, with an Introduction, Notes, and Index, by Prof. W. H. PAYNE, M.A. 6s.

Froebel's Letters on the Kindergarten. Translated from Posselt's Edition of 1887 by EMILIE MÜLLER and H. KEATLEY MOORE, B.A. B.Mus. 3s.

History of Philosophy. By Dr. J. E. ERDMANN. Edited by Prof. W. S. HOUGH. Second Edition. I. ANCIENT and MEDIEVAL 16s. II. MODERN. 15s. III. SINCE HEGEL. 12s.

A NEW ELEMENTARY GEOGRAPHY. School Geography: Junior Course. By A. SONNENSCHNEIN and Prof. KIRCHHOFF (Halle). With 34 Full-Page Plates and numerous Cuts and Diagrams. 2s. 6d.

Historical Chart of the XIII. CENTURY. By A. M. C. Designed for the Use of University Extension and other Students and Teachers in Elementary Schools. 32 by 22. 6d. net post free, 9d.

INTRODUCTORY SCIENCE TEXT-BOOKS.

1. PETROLOGY. By F. H. HATCH, Ph.D., F.G.S. With 43 Illustrations. 3s. 6d. Second Edition. "A model of what a student's text-book should be; clear, concise, and yet full."—Literary World.

2. BOTANY. By Edward Aveling, D.Sc., Fellow of Univ. Coll., Lond. With 271 Illustrations. 4s. 6d. "The best and most practical elementary text-book of botany in the English language."—National Observer.

3. PHONETICS. By Laura Soames. With Preface by DOROTHEA BEALE. 6s. "Miss Soames has earned a further claim to the gratitude of every right-minded and conscientious teacher, for whom the manual will prove a welcome and useful guide."—Education.

4. POLITICAL ECONOMY. By R. T. ELY, Professor of Political Economy at Johns Hopkins University. 4s. 6d. "It shows, as no other book has ever shown, what the scope of economic study is. The entire field is mapped out, and the survey is from the right standpoint—the sociological."—Professor F. H. GIDDINGS.

5. ETHICS. By Professor GIZYCKI and Dr. STANTON COIT. 4s. 6d. "Admirably arranged. It is a book which will stimulate thought."—Spectator.

*• Other Works are in active preparation for the Series

TRISCHLER'S LIST.

Ready this day, at all Booksellers' and Libraries.

FOLLY AND FRESH AIR. By Eden

PHILLIPOTS. Author of "The End of a Life." Crown 8vo, 298 pp.
The Daily Telegraph says:—"The author has a droll, dry manner that reminds one not a little of the style of such American humorists as Frank Stockton and Charles Dudley Warner. The book is not merely funny—it abounds in acute observations of human nature, smartly expressed; passages of bold and original thought; and descriptions of natural scenery at once truthful and picturesque. Altogether the volume is a delightful one." Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

A MERCIFUL DIVORCE. By F. W. Maude.

A vivid, piquant, and realistic story of aristocratic social life. The Daily Chronicle says:—"A scathing exposure of the venere and the vice of society as it largely exists in the West-end of London." 1 vol., cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A PIT TOWN CORONET."

JARDYNE'S WIFE. 3 vols. By C. J. Wills.

GLASGOW HERALD says:—"The work is exceedingly clever. The parodies of the characters introduced are gems in their way. Altogether the novel is very enjoyable."

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—"The story is sufficiently ingenious and exciting to command a great deal of attention."

THE DEAN'S DAUGHTER. By F. C. Philips and SYDNEY GRUNDY. A New and Original Play in 1 vol., Paper Covers, 1s.THE RAILWAY FOUNDLING. By Nomad.

The Daily Telegraph says:—"Amongst some excellent novels recently issued, a clever story by 'Nomad,' 'A Railway Foundling,' deserves recognition. Here is a story which from the outset is delightfully tantalizing. It is a story that must be read to be understood. There is vivacity and adventure in it, and good as the author's previous work, 'The Millers,' was, it is not too much to say that this is better." Cheap Edition, Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

SCARLET FORTUNE. By Henry Herman.

The Globe says:—"Mr. Herman has written a tale of quite sensational interest." Picture Boards, 2s.

TRISCHLER & CO., NEW BRIDGE ST., BLACKFRIARS.

ORIENTAL TRANSLATION FUND.NEW SERIES.

A faithful Translation from the Persian of MIRKHOND'S "RANZAT-US-SAFA." Part I., Volume I., containing the Moslem version of our Bible Stories from the Creation of Genii before Adam up to the Death of Aaron.

Printed, Published, and Sold under the Patronage of the ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY,
22, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON.

Price Ten Shillings.

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

THE WELSH REVIEW.

Edited by ERNEST BOWEN-ROWLANDS.

Will be published OCTOBER 20th,

And will contain a Poem, by Lewis Morris, M.A.; articles on "The Drink Question," by Lord Carmarthen, M.P.; "The Movement for Free Schools," by Thomas Ellis, M.P.; "Love as the Beggetter of Poetry," by Honble. Stephen Coleridge; "Samoa," by Sir Thomas Esmonde, Bart., M.P.; "The Redemption of the Welsh Episcopal Church," by Rev. Elvet Lewis; "Welsh Literature," by Tudor Evans; "Modern Critics," by W. Hamilton Johnstone; "Reviews," "Welsh Notes," "Editorial," and

THE FIRST INSTALLMENT OF A NEW WELSH STORY

ENTITLED

"OWAIN SEITHENYN,"

Written by JANE AMBRACH; and

"THE VIEWS OF THE MEMBER FOR TREORKY."

Illustrated by Phil. May.

Price SIXPENCE.

"The Welsh Review" can be ordered at once of all Booksellers, and the Publishers, KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co., Paternoster House, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

This day at all Libraries and Bookstalls.

THE SCOTTISH REVIEW.

OCTOBER, 1891.—CONTENTS.

- ART. I.—WITCHCRAFT IN SCOTLAND. By F. LEAKE.
" II.—A RETROSPECT ON THE EUXINE and the CASPIAN.
By ANDREW T. SHIBBALD.
" III.—GAELIC HISTORICAL SONGS.
" IV.—THE NORSE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.
" V.—BEGINNINGS OF THE SCOTTISH NEWSPAPER PRESS.
By J. D. COCKBURN.
" VI.—SCOTCH DIVINES and ENGLISH BISHOPS. By FLORENCE M'KENNA.
" VII.—THE FORMER PROPRIETOR OF ABBOTSFORD. By TARON J. GIBBS, D.D.
" VIII.—LOCAL GOVERNMENT and ADMINISTRATION in IRELAND. By Judge O'CONNOR MURPHY.
" IX.—SUMMARIES OF FOREIGN REVIEWS.
" X.—CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.
ALEX. GARDNER, Publisher to her Majesty the Queen, Paisley and 26, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

Vol. I., just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. 6d. (large-paper, 5s. net).

ABBOTSFORD SERIES of the SCOTTISH POETS. Edited by GEORGE ERNE-TODD.—VOL. I. EARLY SCOTTISH POETRY: Thomas the Rhymer, John Barbour, Andrew Wyntoun, and Henry the Minstrel.

WILLIAM HODGE & Co., Glasgow.

Mr. WILLIAM HEINEMANN has pleasure in announcing, for publication in a few days, TASMA'S NEW NOVEL, "THE PENANCE of PORTIA JAMES" by the Author of "Uncle Piper of Piper's Hill," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo., 3s. 6d.

21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

ACCORDING to ST. JOHN: a Novel.

By AMELIE RIVES,

Author of "The Quick or the Dead," &c.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 5s.

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

Established 1857. Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

Discussions of the legal events of the week.

Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

Explanatory and critical disquisitions on all the cases of importance decided in the Courts of Common Law and Equity, pointing out their relations to the previous law. Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

In this department are given all new Rules and Orders in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

Special Reports of Cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

A complete record of the progress of legislation during each session.

The "SOLICITORS' JOURNAL" will contain Notes and Reports giving, from week to week, early information and explanation of the Decisions of the Courts on the New Practice.

A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

New legal works are carefully noticed in this department.

Full reports of the proceedings of the law societies. A careful summary is given of all the legal news of the week, and special attention is bestowed on furnishing early copies of all Court Papers.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other
Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.
"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.
THE GOD of the AMEN, and other
Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.,
Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

"It is superfluous to recommend with praise a volume by Dr. Alexander MacLaren, of Manchester, England."

Christian Union (New York).
"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled."—Independent (New York).

"Dr. MacLaren is, perhaps, the finest sermon builder of living preachers."—Christian Commonwealth.

"Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent (London).

"Dr. MacLaren holds a unique place amongst the great preachers of the day, because of his well-balanced combination of gifts."—The Modern Church.

WILLIAM HEINEMANN & SHEPHEARD 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

ONE REASON WHY. By Beatrice WHITBY. Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," &c. 2 vols.

PEGGY'S PERVERSITY. By Mrs. CONNEY. Author of "A Lady Horse-breaker," "A Line of Her Own," &c. 3 vols.

CHARLIE IS MY DARLING. By ANNE BEALE. Author of "Fay Arlington," "The Pennant Family," "Squire Lisle's Bequest," &c. 2 vols.

MAHME NOUSIE. By G. Manville FENN. Author of "The Master of the Ceremonies," &c. 2 vols. "A spirited tale of scenes and adventures quite off the lines of the usual novel plot. Aube is a very graceful heroine, perfectly good and sweet, as well as beautiful."—Guardian.

CASPAR BROOKE'S DAUGHTER. By ADELINE SERGEANT. Author of "Little Miss Colwyn," "A Life Sentence," &c. 3 vols. "Like all Miss Sergeant's novels, her latest is healthy in style and tone, while at the same time not devoid of incidents of a mildly sensational description."—Scotsman.

A SCOTCH EARL. By the Countess of MUNSTER. Author of "Dorinda," 3 vols. "The strength of the book lies in the delicate and accurate analysis of feminine motives and character."—Literary World.

A MOORLAND IDYL. By Algernon GISSING. Author of "A Village Hampden," &c. 3 vols. "For sustained interest and dramatic skill, Mr. Algernon Gissing's novel, 'A Moorland Idyl,' may be well recommended."—Daily Telegraph.

HURST & BLACKETT'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, each 3s. 6d.

THE AWAKENING OF MARY FENWICK. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS. By MABEL HART.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman."

MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE. By M. E. LE CLERC.

A MARCH in the RANKS. By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

A SELECTION FROM

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, PRICE 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX."

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.	CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.
A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS ABOUT WOMEN.	A NOBLE LIFE.
A LIFE for a LIFE.	HANNAI.
NOTHING NEW.	THE UNKIND WORD.
MISTRESS and MAID.	A BRAVE LADY.
THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.	STUDIES from LIFE.
	YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

BY THE AUTHOR of "SAM SLIOK."

NATURE and HUMAN NATURE.	THE OLD JUDGE; or, Life in a Colony.
WISE SAWS and MODERN INSTANCES.	TRAITS of AMERICAN HUMOUR.
	The AMERICANS at HOME.

BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

DAVID ELGINBROD.	ALEC FORBES.
ROBERT FALCONER.	SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

ADAM GRAEME.	LIFE of IRVING.
LAIRD of NORLAW.	A ROSE in JUNE.
AGNES.	PHOEBE, JUNIOR.
	IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

BISHOP CHARLES WORDSWORTH'S RECOLLECTIONS.

ANNALS OF MY EARLY LIFE, 1806-1846.

By CHARLES WORDSWORTH, D.C.L., Bishop of St. Andrews. 8vo, 15s.

THE TIMES.—"A man who is himself a scholar, and the son of a scholar, the nephew and associate of one of the greatest poets of the century, the friend and mentor of so many men who have made the history of England during the last sixty years, cannot turn to his early memories without saying much to which every one will gladly listen.... A book to be enjoyed."

MORNING POST.—"Certainly no one can with justice call this a dry autobiography. Serious it is for the most part, and devoted to serious subjects, but it contains many little bits of comedy. The last part of the book is largely devoted to the Oxford Movement, and to the writer's impressions of the men who were its chief promoters. Here, as always, Dr. Wordsworth writes temperately of those with whose views he may have widely differed, and good temper is indeed one of the leading features of his book."

NEW BOOK BY ARCHDEACON FARRAR.

DARKNESS AND DAWN;

Or Scenes in the Days of Nero. An Historic Tale.

By the Venerable Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S. 2 vols., 8vo, 25s.

"This novel of Imperial Rome is the most notable, and will also prove, we expect, the most popular, piece of fiction we owe to the author's pen.... It is impossible not to admire the vigorous portraiture of historical personages, and the brilliancy and extraordinary vivacity of the descriptions.... It is just the kind of book to become widely popular."—St. James's Gazette.

A SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUME TO MR. FROUDE'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

THE DIVORCE of CATHERINE of ARAGON: the Story as told by the Imperial Ambassadors resident at the Court of HENRY VIII. In Usam Laicorum. By J. A. FROUDE. 8vo, 16s. [On Oct. 21.]

SEAS and LANDS. Reprinted, by permission of the Proprietors of the Daily Telegraph, from Letters published under the title "By Sea and Land" in that Journal. By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, M.A., K.C.L.E. With Illustrations. 8vo, 21s. [On Oct. 22.]

THE BLUE POETRY BOOK. Edited by ANDREW LANG. With 12 Plates and 88 Illustrations in the Text, by H. J. Ford and Lunelot Speed. Crown 8vo, 6s. "This is one of the most acceptable gift-books of the season..... There is a piece in the book one could wish away, and the illustrations are excellent."—Scotsman.

THE LAND of the LAMAS: Notes of a Journey through China, Mongolia, and Tibet. With 2 Maps and 61 Illustrations. By WILLIAM WOODVILLE ROCKHILL. 8vo, 15s.

INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of the HISTORY of LANGUAGE. By HERBERT A. STRONG, M.A., LL.D., WILLEM S. LOGEMAN, and BENJAMIN IDE WHEELER. 8vo, 10s. 6d. "This book will be welcomed, and deservedly so, by all students of language."—Journal of Education.

PRINCIPLES of the HISTORY of LANGUAGE. By HERMANN PAUL. Translated by H. A. STRONG. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

WORKS BY WM. LEIGHTON JORDAN, F.R.G.S.

THE OCEAN: a Treatise on Ocean Currents and Tides, and their Causes. Second Edition. 8vo, 21s.

STANDARD of VALUE. Sixth Edition. 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. WALFORD.

THE MISCHIEF of MONICA. By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," &c., &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 25s. 6d. "The Mischief of Monica' is, in short, witty and wise."—Times.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW. No. 358.

CONTENTS.

- | | |
|--|--|
| 1. SIR ROBERT PEEL. | 6. AUSTRIA in 1848-9. |
| 2. A MOORLAND PARISH. | 7. THE LIFE of ARCHBISHOP TAIT. |
| 3. THE WATER-COLOUR PAINTERS of ENGLAND. | 8. THE AFFAIRS of CHINA. |
| 4. THE WRITINGS of JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. | 9. GERMANY and VON MOLTKE. |
| 5. MAJOR CLARKE on FORTIFICATIONS. | 10. THE TWELFTH PARLIAMENT of the QUEEN. |
- * GENERAL INDEX to the EDINBURGH REVIEW, from Vol. 141—Vol. 170 inclusive (January, 1875—October, 1889). [Now ready.]
Two Numbers, 8vo, 12s.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, M.A., LL.D. No. 24, OCTOBER. Royal 8vo, price 5s.

1. Articles.
THE INTRODUCTION of KNIGHT SERVICE into ENGLAND. By J. H. ROUND. Part II.
THE CONFRATERNITIES of PENITENCE. By Capt. I. S. A. HERFORD.
THE EARLY HISTORY of the REFERENDUM. By the Rev. W. A. B. COOLIDGE.
LOUIS DE GEER. By the Rev. GEORGE EDMUNDSON.
IRELAND: 1793—1880. By His Honour Judge WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.
2. Notes and Documents. 3. Reviews of Books. 4. List of Historical Books recently published. 5. Contents of Periodical Publications.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.]

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S

LIST OF

FORTHCOMING WORKS.

BY W. P. FRITH, R.A.

JOHN LEECH: his Life and Work. By WILLIAM POWELL FRITH, R.A. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portrait and Illustrations.

MRS. FRANK GRIMWOOD'S NARRATIVE.

MY THREE YEARS in MANIPUR, and ESCAPE from the RECENT MUTINY. By ETHEL ST. CLAIR GRIMWOOD. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Illustrations.

BY THE HON. MRS. RICHARD MONCK.

MY CANADIAN LEAVES: an Account of a Visit to Canada. By FRANCES E. O. MONCK. In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

BY M. LAVISSE.

THE YOUTH of FREDERICK the GREAT. From the French of ERNEST LAVISSE. By STEPHEN LOUIS SIMEON. In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

NEW VOLUME OF ROAD TRAVEL.

ACROSS ENGLAND in a DOGCART: from London to St. Davids and back. By JAMES JOHN HISSEY, Author of "A Drive through England." With 20 Illustrations from Sketches by the Author, and a Plan of the Route. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

BY THE REV. C. H. COPE.

REMINISCENCES of CHARLES WEST COPE, R.A. By his Son, the Rev. CHARLES HENRY COPE, M.A. With Portrait and Facsimile Reproductions. In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

EDITED BY MAJOR FISHER.

FORTY-FIVE YEARS' RECOLLECTIONS of SPORT. By JAMES HENRY CORBALLIS. Edited by ARTHUR T. FISHER, late 21st Hussars. With Frontispiece. In 1 vol., demy 8vo. Hunting—Shooting—Deer-Stalking—Salmon and Trout Fishing—Falconry—Golf.

BY MRS. J. H. RIDDELL.

A MAD TOUR; or, Rambles on Foot through the Black Forest. By CHARLOTTE E. L. RIDDELL, Author of "George Geith of Fen Court." In 1 vol., large crown 8vo.

BY CAPTAIN GOFF.

RECORDS of the NINETY-FIRST ARGYLLSHIRE HIGHLANDERS. Containing an Account of the Formation of the Regiment in 1794, and of its subsequent Services to 1881. Arranged by GERALD LIONEL GOFF, First Battalion Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. With numerous Illustrations, and a Roll of Officers from the Raising of the Regiment. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 30s.

BY MR. GREENHOUGH SMITH.

THE ROMANCE of HISTORY. By HENRY GREENHOUGH SMITH. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with a Portrait. Musaniello—Lochiel—Bayard—Marino Faliero—Benzowski—Tamerlane—Jacqueline de Laguette—Casanova—William Lithgow—Vidocq—Prince Rupert.

BY DR. WALTERS.

PALMS and PEARLS; or, Scenes in Ceylon. Including a Visit to the Ancient Royal City of Anuradhapura, and the Ascent of Adam's Peak. By ALAN WALTERS, M.A. In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

BY CHARLES ROBERT MATURIN.

MELMOTH, the WANDERER. By the Author of "Bertram." Reprinted from the Original Text, with a Memoir of the Author. In 3 vols., post 8vo.

BY MR. SIDNEY COOPER, R.A.

MY LIFE. By Thomas Sidney COOPER. A New and Cheaper Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.SOCIAL VERSE. By Algernon Charles SWINBURNE. See THE FORUM for OCTOBER. Price 2s. 6d.ENGLISH ROYALTY; its Cost and its Uses. By HENRY LABOUCHERE, M.P. See THE FORUM for OCTOBER. Price 2s. 6d.An ENGLISH ESTIMATE of LOWELL. By the Venerable Archdeacon FARRAR. See THE FORUM for OCTOBER. Price 2s. 6d.

THE BOY'S BOOK OF THE SEASON.

BAREROCK; or, the Island of Pearls. By HENRY NASH, with numerous Illustrations by LANCELOT SPEED. Large crown 8vo, handsomely bound, gilt edges, 6s. [Just ready.]

TALKS WITH CHILDREN ABOUT ANTIQUITY.

FRIENDS of the OLDEN TIME. By ALICE GARDNER, Lecturer in History at Newnham College, Cambridge. An endeavour to reproduce the Life of Antiquity in a way to interest and entertain children. With Illustrations, square 8vo. [Just ready.]

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

ANIMAL LIFE and INTELLIGENCE.

By Professor C. LLOYD MORGAN, F.G.S., Principal of University College, Bristol, &c. With 40 Illustrations and Diagrams. Second Edition, demy 8vo, 16s.

"The Author has succeeded in the difficult task of furnishing in a manner as interesting to the general reader as to the special student, an almost exhaustive review of the facts and theories which at the present time are of the most general importance to the sciences of biology and psychology." Professor G. J. ROMANES.

ELEVENTH EDITION NOW READY.

A BOOK about ROSES. By the Very Rev. S. REYNOLDS HOLE, Dean of Rochester. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d."A perfectly charming book."—Daily Telegraph.

SECOND SERIES NOW READY.

TWENTY MODERN MEN. The Second Series of Literary Portraits from the National Observer. At all Booksellers and Bookstalls. Price 1s. The FIRST SERIES can still be obtained. Price 1s.BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS.*DUMAS' MONTE CRISTO. Edited by FRANCIS TARVER, M.A., Senior French Master at Eton College. With Biographical Introduction and Notes. Square 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.HENRY GREVILLE'S PERDUE. Edited by JAMES BOELLE, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Senior French Master in Dulwich College. Authorised Copyright Edition for English Schools. Square 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.VICTOR HUGO'S QUATRE-VINGT-TREIZE. Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by JAMES BOELLE, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Senior French Master in Dulwich College, &c. Authorised Copyright Edition. Square 8vo, cloth, red edges, 2s. 6d. net.FRENCH REVOLUTION READINGS, selected from the best-known Writers, and Edited, with Helps for Composition, Notes, and Historical Introduction, by A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Camp Hill, Birmingham, and C. M. DIX, M.A., Assistant Master at the Oratory School, Birmingham. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. net.DUMAS' LES TROIS MOUSQUETAIRES. Edited by F. C. SUMICHRIST, of Harvard University. 289 pages. Cloth, 3s. 6d.MODERN FRENCH READINGS.

With Helps for Composition. Edited, by A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Camp Hill, Birmingham. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. The volume consists of sustained extracts from Dumas, Victor Hugo, Gautier, Guizot, &c.

WILLIAMS and LASCELLES' INTRODUCTION to CHEMICAL SCIENCE. Edited by B. P. LASCELLES, M.A., F.C.S., Assistant Master and Librarian at Harrow School. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d., with 50 Illustrations.LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD,
37, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.
*Publisher to the India Office.Sampson Low, Marston & Company's
NEW BOOKS.*LIFE of an ARTIST: an Autobiography. By JULES BRETON. Translated by MARY J. SERRANO. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. This book abounds in vivid glimpses of a group of clever Painters in whom the art world is interested.RANDOLPH CALDECOTT: a Personal Memoir of his Early Art Career. By HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Academy Notes," and Author of "Breton Folk," &c. With 172 Illustrations. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.AT THE ANTIPODES; Travels in Australia, New Zealand, Fiji Islands, the New Hebrides, New Caledonia, and South America, 1888-89. By G. VERSCHUER. Translated by MARY DANIELS. Numerous Illustrations and Map. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS: a Historical, Geographical, Ethnographical, Social, and Commercial Sketch of the Philippine Archipelago and its Political Dependencies. By JOHN FOREMAN, F.R.G.S., In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 500 pages, with Map and Frontispiece, cloth extra, One Guinea.The CRUISE of the "FALCON": a Voyage to South America in a Thirty-ton Yacht. By E. F. KNIGHT, Barrister-at-Law. With numerous Illustrations and Map. New Edition (Sixth). Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.MARY HARRISON'S GUIDE to MODERN COOKERY. By the Author of "The Skilful Cook," &c. With a Preface by the Right Hon. Sir THOMAS DYKE ACLAND, Bart. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.WOMEN and their WORK. By VEVA KARSLAND, Authoress of "Smitten and Slain," &c. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s. A Series of Articles on the Various Employments open to Women.SERMONS for DAILY LIFE. By the Rev. Canon DIGGLE, Author of "Bishop Frazer's Lancashire Life," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.THE TOMBS of the KINGS of ENGLAND. By J. CHARLES WALL. Dedicated by permission to H.M. the QUEEN. With 57 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, £1 1s.HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE. Volume for 1891. 4to in handsome cloth cover, 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. Containing numerous Original Stories, hundreds of Illustrations, and 12 Coloured Plates. "Turning over the pages of Harper's Young People we have come to this conclusion, that it must be a dull child who will not find materials in it for merry and happy hours."—*Graphic.NEW NOVELS AND STORIES
AT ALL LIBRARIES.*GODIVA DURLEIGH. By SARAH DOUDNEY, Author of "A Woman's Glory," "Where the Dew Falls in London," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.A RED SISTER: a Story of Three Days and Three Months. By C. L. PIRKIS. Author of "A Dateless Bargain," "At the Moment of Victory," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.THE SQUIRREL INN. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange," "The Late Mrs. Null," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.RUDDER GRANGERS ABROAD By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1891.

No. 1015, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Life's Handicap: Being Stories of Mine Own People. By Rudyard Kipling. (Macmillans.)

MR. KIPLING has gathered into a volume twenty-seven stories: the best of them have been already recognised by readers of the magazines as Mr. Kipling's finest work. The book is so characteristic, for good and bad, of its author, that it may be interesting to attempt a classification of these twenty-seven stories. Eight of them, with certain limitations, are excellent: "The Incarnation of Krishna Mulvaney," "The Courting of Dinah Shadd," "On Greenhow Hill," "The Man who Was," "Without Benefit of Clergy," "Through the Fire," "The Finances of the Gods," and "Little Tobrah." To these may be added the Preface. They deal with the famous triumvirate of privates, with the British army, and with the comedy and tragedy of native life and character. Two stories, "At the End of the Passage" and "The Mark of the Beast," are concerned with the grim and terrible possibilities and impossibilities of sickness, weariness, fear, superstition, climate, work, and, to put it plainly, the devil, as shown by the experiences of Englishmen in India. Three more, "The Return of Imray," "Bubbling Well Road," and "Bertran and Bimi," are powerful stories of the horrible, without any mixture of mystery and impossibility. Three, "The Mutiny of the Mavericks," "The Head of the District," and "Namgay Doola," have, more or less directly, a political moral wrapped up in them. Five more, "The Amir's Homily," "Jews in Shushan," "The Limitations of Pambe Serang," "The City of Dreadful Night," and "The Dream of Duncan Parreness," are mediocre examples of Mr. Kipling's various manners; and of these, the fourth is the most striking. The remaining six, in my sincere and humble opinion, do not deserve publication: "The Lang Men o' Larut," "Reingelder and the German Flag," "The Wandering Jew," "Moti Gul," "Georgie Porgie," and "Naboth." The volume ends with some of Mr. Kipling's best verses.

This is, of course, merely a classification made according to the mind of one particular reader, with his own tastes and prejudices. Among the stories which I think the worst, is one which many readers have ranked among the best. But, upon the whole, I think that most readers would accept the classification in its spirit and intention.

The one great fault in Mr. Kipling's work is, not its "brutality," nor its fondness for strong effects, but a certain taint of bad manners, from the literary point of view. He insists upon spicing his stories with an ill-flavoured kind of gossip, wholly irrelevant, and very offensive. For example: "The Man who Was," an admirable story, full of that indefinable spirit, military patriotism and regimental pride, is spoiled by this pointless passage:

"And indeed they were a regiment to be admired. When Lady Durgan, widow of the late Sir John Durgan, arrived in their station, and after a short time had been proposed to by every single man at mess, she put the public sentiment very neatly when she explained that they were all so nice that unless she could marry them all, including the colonel and some majors already married, she was not going to content herself with one hussar. Wherefore she wedded a little man in a Rifle Regiment, being by nature contradictory; and the White Hussars were going to wear crape on their arms, but compromised by attending the wedding in full force, and lining the aisle with unutterable reproach. She had jilted them all—from Basset-Holmer, the senior captain, to little Mildred, the junior subaltern, who could have given her four thousand a year and a title."

I hate to mutilate a book; but I hope to read this story often: and, rather than meet the offence and the annoyance of that silly stuff, in a story otherwise splendid, I have obliterated the passage. Too often, in reading Mr. Kipling, we are forced to say, "That would make a good special report," or "That's a telling bit of war correspondence"; yet special reports and war correspondence are good things of their kind. But the passage just quoted shows merely the contemptible smartness of a society journal; and of a very inferior specimen. I do not say that the thing did not, could not, or should not, happen: I do say that Mr. Kipling, as an artist, one careful to preserve the tone and the proportion of his work, commits a grave offence against his art by such a fall from the fine to the trivial, without just cause. And from the frequency of his offence, in every book that he has written, it would seem that he does not feel the common sentiments of natural good breeding and of artistic reticence. Two expressions in a stirring passage of the same story jar upon us in the same way:

"The talk rose higher and higher, and the regimental band played between the courses, as is the immemorial custom, till all tongues ceased for a moment with the removal of the dinner-slips, and the first toast of obligation, when an officer rising said, "Mr. Vice, the Queen," and little Mildred from the bottom of the table answered, "The Queen, God bless her," and the big spurs clanked as the big men heaved themselves up and drank the Queen, upon whose pay they were falsely supposed to settle their mess bills. That sacrament of the mess never grows old, and never ceases to bring a lump into the throat of the listener wherever he be by sea or by land."

What is the point here of dragging in the familiar fact that the Queen's pay is insufficient for a modern officer under modern circumstances? It sounds like the petty, ill-conditioned criticism of some cockney money-lender: it is a crying false note, coming just in that place. Again, "toast of obligation" and "sacrament of the mess" are phrases in which it is difficult not to see a flippant reference to two ecclesiastical and sacred terms. These things are fatal to the perfection of a story; and Mr. Kipling's taste for them is his worst enemy. But it may be observed, that they do not occur except when Mr. Kipling is dealing with English officers and civilians: his "common" soldiers and his Indian natives, under all circumstances and conditions, talk, and are treated by Mr. Kipling, without these petty offences against good taste. Ortheris and Mulvaney, Ameera and Khoda Dad Khan, in every mood or situation, are allowed by Mr. Kipling to live without those peculiar tricks and tones, which in his stories are the essential notes of the English gentleman in India. His officers and his civil servants, Orde, Tallantire, Hummil, Spurstow, Lowndes, Mottram, Strickland, and "I," one and all talk with a strained intensity, a bitter tone, a sharp conciseness, an abbreviation of epigram, a clever slang, which are meant to denote, partly their cultured intellects, and partly that sentiment of fatality and dogged endurance which Mr. Kipling would have us believe to be the invariable result of official work in India. The Empire, the Administration, the Government, become in Mr. Kipling's hands necessary and yet amusing powers, in whose service Englishmen are willing to toil and sweat, knowing that il n'y pas d'homme necessaire, but content to go on, relieved by making cynical epigrams about life and death, and everything before, between, or after them. The consciousness of duty becomes the consciousness of a mechanical necessity: the sentiment of loyalty is caricatured into a cynical perseverance. One thinks of Dalhousie and of the Lawrences. Mr. Kipling has had experience of English life and work in India: his readers, for the most part, have not. But I would ask any reader, who has known English officers and civilians, before, during, and after, their Indian service, whether he has found them quite so brilliant or quite so ill-bred, quite so epigrammatic or quite so self-conscious, as these creatures of Mr. Kipling. Is it, that before leaving home, or while home on leave, or when done with India, they are natural Englishmen; but that an Indian climate, and a share in Indian administration, turn them into machines: men, who seem to talk like telegrams, and to think in shorthand, and to pose, each as a modern Atlas, helping to uphold the Indian Empire, and swearing pessimist oaths at its weight? Mr. Kipling presents English rule in India for purposes of effective fiction, as a huge and ironical joke, or, to use one of his favourite words, as a "grim" comedy. In fact, whenever he gives us the views of life held by men of education and official responsibility, they are the views expressed by his title, Life's Handicap. You start with your chances, and make the best of the race, sure to be tripped up half way by the irony of the fates and powers, or baulked at the very finish. In the "Head of the District," a dying man sees his wife crossing the river to meet him, and knows that she will come too late; and his last words are: "That's Polly," he said simply, though his mouth was wried with agony. "Polly and—the grimmest practical joke ever played on a man. Dick—you'll—have—to—explain."

The one story in the book, admirable from first to last, is "The Courting of Dinah Shadd": the tragedy of his life, told by Mulvaney. The Irishman's story is told with perfect truth and pity: Mr. Kipling makes not one mistake in sentiment. But had Mulvaney's Colonel told the story of his life, Mr. Kipling would have filled it with cheap jests and cynicisms, gall and bitterness.

Years ago, Werther first, and Childe Harold afterwards, brought into fashion the philosophy of woe and want, and tragic heroics: a perverted sensibility, an affectation of misery and despair; its victims or devotees wept over their sorrows and shrieked at their gods. But the posture was tiring, and at last literature renounced it. Just now, a new philosophy is coming into fashion: it is required of a man that he be virile, robust, and bitter. Laugh at life, and jest with the world: waste no words, and spare no blushes: whatever you do, do it doggedly, and whatever you say, put a sting into it. In sentiment, let Voltaire talking Ibsen be your ideal: in life, rival the Flying Dutchman for recklessness, the Wandering Jew for restlessness, and the American rowdy for readiness to act. Life is short, so stuff it full: art is long, so cut it short. Various men have various methods: some writers cut art short by reducing it to impressions, some by reducing it to epigrams. Which-ever you do, care nothing for beauty and truth, but everything for brevity and effect. You may lead your readers to believe that you have stayed at home, and analysed yourself, till you were sick of yourself; or that you have raged round the world, and found all hollow, without you and within. You can make literature an affair of nerves or an affair of blood: you may paint life gray, or paint it red. But if you would be a modern man of letters, before all else, ignore the Ten Commandments and the Classics. Swear by the sciences, which you have not studied, and the foreign literature, which you read in translation: if you want to make a hit, bring the Iliad up to date: you need only double the bloodshed, and turn the long speeches into short, smart, snapping cynicisms.

Some of these follies, which many writers now take for virtues, are but the accidental vices of Mr. Kipling's work: and it is because he can write so well, that I have ventured to suggest that he often writes far too badly. A writer suddenly and deservedly welcomed with great praise is at once imitated by all sorts of incapable persons; and for one story which has something of his real charm and power, there are twenty with nothing but his casual levities and unfortunate mannerisms. For example, "The Mark of the Beast" is a story of an incident among the more unnecessary horrors of life in India, brought about by "the power of the Gods and Devils of Asia." An Englishman pays a drunken insult to Hanuman, the Monkey-god, in his temple at night: a leper, a "Silver Man," just drops his head upon the man's breast, and nothing more. And gradually, with dreadful warnings and signs, the man's nature is changed into a beast's, a wolf's. It is an uncanny, haunting story, told with a singular power: but Mr. Kipling does not seem to know wherein consist the real horror and fascination of his own work. A passage of pure and perfect excellence is often followed by one of simple bad taste and feebleness. For example: while Fleete, the werewolf, is lying bound in the house, with his two friends watching, the cry of the Silver Man is heard outside. They determine to capture him, and go into the garden: and "in the moonlight we could see the leper coming round the corner of the house. He was perfectly naked, and from time to time he mewed and stopped to dance with his shadow." That sentence gave me a literal shudder of sudden fear, like the fear of a child in the dark: for complete effectiveness, in the narration of a fearful story, it could not be beaten. It is horrible, but the horror is not strained and emphasised: the simple words do their work naturally. The two men succeed in capturing the leper: they resolve to torture him into removing the spell from their friend. "When we confronted him with the beast, the scene was beyond description. The beast doubled backwards into a bow as though he had been poisoned with strychnine, and moaned in the most pitiable fashion." Well, that is right enough in its way; but Mr. Kipling adds "several other things happened also, but they cannot be put down here." And "Strickland shaded his eyes with his hands for a moment, and we set to work. This part is not to be printed." A row of asterisks follows. Now this suggestion of unmentionable horror is a piece of the very worst possible art: Mr. Kipling means to thrill us with absolute horror, to fill us with shuddering apprehensions of absolute fearfulness. He fails: we feel nothing but wonder and contempt, to find so able a writer fall into so pitiable a device. And he is constantly leading us up to the doors of a sealed chamber of horrors, and expecting us to be smitten with dread. The fearful and the terrible are not necessarily loathsome to the senses, matters of blood and noisome pestilence: they are produced by appeals to the imagination and to the intellect. Running through Mr. Kipling's work, and spoiling its value, is this strain of bad taste: irritated by silly sentiment, he takes up silly cynicism; angry with foolish shamefacedness, he adopts a foolish shamelessness. Rather than let his work win its way by the subtle power of its ideas, he prefers to force our attention by the studied abruptness of his phrases. It is characteristic of the times: General Booth and Mr. Stanley, the German Emperor and General Boulanger, have done much the same thing in practical affairs. But Mr. Kipling, in his profession, is a greater man than they in theirs: and we continue to hope against hope for his ultimate purification and perfection. LIONEL JOHNSON.

Naval Warfare: Its Ruling Principles and Practices Historically Treated. By Rear-Admiral P. H. Colomb. (W. H. Allen & Co.)

This is an inartistic but a very instructive

book. Admiral Colomb is already known as an excellent writer on naval strategy; and he is generally believed to have been the author of some able papers in the Edinburgh Review on the general principles of war at sea, and on the illustrations of these in naval history. The volume before us may be described as a work on the philosophy of naval warfare, confined to its purely strategic aspect; and it has been written because our naval literature is almost a blank in this most important province, and because Admiral Colomb is not one of those sciolists who believe that the art of war, whether at sea or on land, has been wholly changed by the material inventions of the last sixty years. The author, in a word, seeks to do for the navy what General Hamley has done for the army—to illustrate the rules of the naval art by examples drawn from the warfare of the past, and to draw lessons from them for the present; and though his book is not equal to The Operations of War, it is, nevertheless, a valuable work.

Admiral Colomb compares his volume, with a modest assertion of inferiority, to the profound essay of Captain Mahan, on a cognate subject; and the two works, in fact, have some points in common. But the principal object of the British seaman is to explain to a power superior at sea its true position as a maritime state; the aim of the American is to demonstrate the fatal results to commerce and empire which follow the loss of power at sea; and they regard the questions before them from different aspects. Admiral Colomb, too, does not dwell on naval tactics; Captain Mahan gives us an excellent account of many of the great battles at sea; and this, again, marks a plain line of distinction. As for the volume before us, it is very able, full of thought, learning, correct induction, and well-weighed and judicious comments; and the sketches of several naval campaigns are admirable in their fulness and clearness. Admiral Colomb, however, is sometimes tedious; his illustrations are too copious; he is deficient in purely literary skill, and his language is occasionally involved and obscure.

Two conditions, Admiral Colomb remarks, are required to develop naval warfare, in the broad and legitimate sense of the word. In the middle ages fleets were only employed to transport armies for descents on the land—we pass by the splendid exception of Sluys; ships were not able to keep the sea in bad weather or to appear on the ocean, and the sea itself was a barren domain, not a highway of empire or a vast tract of commerce. Naval warfare was thus confined to "cross raiding," to make use of a happy phrase of the author, to invasions like those which led to Agincourt, though it deserves notice that even for these the command of the sea was of extreme importance. When ships of war became real cruisers, and when trade spread over the Atlantic waters and brought the wealth of many lands to Europe, naval warfare, properly so called, was born; and, as Admiral Colomb justly observes, its true requirements were understood by our great mariners of the Elizabethan era, and remained unknown to their Spanish adversaries. The command of the sea thenceforward became of supreme importance to maritime states; and it is very remarkable that the best contested struggle recorded by history for this object took place when its value had become manifest, about the middle of the seventeenth century. Admiral Colomb describes at length the strategy of the long naval conflicts between England and Holland; Captain Mahan admirably explains the tactics; and the two authors here supplement each other. Confining ourselves to the work before us, Admiral Colomb clearly shows how, in the first of these wars, the Dutch were too ambitious in aim; they tried to defend their commerce, and, at the same time, to fight the superior fleets of England; and, on the whole, they were plainly worsted. But in the wars that followed they took a better course; they keep their merchantmen within their ports, and concentrated their whole naval force to make head against their powerful enemy, and the issue was certainly not decisive. Admiral Colomb points out what immense results flowed from the temporary command of the sea in those bloody and protracted wars; and it is, indeed, surprising that the Dutch Republic was at once able to endure the terrible losses occasioned by the suspension of its trade and the ravages done by the victorious fleets of England, and yet to invade our shores and to insult our capital.

A student of Captain Mahan's work will hardly agree with Admiral Colomb that the naval tactics of this period were still quite immature and imperfect. Undoubtedly, however, the fleets of the time were very different from those of the days of Nelson: the ships were clumsy, feeble, and badly rigged; they sailed like haystacks, and went to leeward; and they were so unequal in power and size that they were ill-fitted to act in concert. Partly owing to this, naval battles as yet were ill-ordered and confused mêlées; and this gave opportunities to the deadly fireship, the precursor of the modern torpedo, to spread ruin through crowded groups of an enemy. Fleets gradually were formed in regular lines, which engaged each other in parallel order; from this period the fireship declined in value; and we come to the fleets of the eighteenth century. These armaments resembled those of Trafalgar, except that the ships were still inferior; but the "differentiation of naval force," in Admiral Colomb's phrase, became marked; that is, the line of battle was composed of large ships, with a tendency to become equal in size; these always required the support of frigates; and outside and apart from its regular squadrons, every maritime state had numerous cruisers, in order to attack or to defend commerce. Navies thus had acquired the type they retained until the middle of the present century; but there was no naval warfare for the command of the sea on so grand and complete a scale as that which was waged between England and Holland. France, however, was our recognised enemy for the greater part of this long period, and her efforts to contend with England at sea were incessant. Admiral Colomb describes at considerable length this naval struggle between the two powers; and his sketches of the expeditions of Tourville and Conflans, of the skilful strategy of Torrington and Hawke, and of Napoleon's project of a descent on our shores, covered by a fleet holding the Channel for a time, are excellent in execution and design. On the whole, he concurs with Captain Mahan, that the strategy of France, throughout these years, had one marked and essential defect: she did not boldly contend for the command of the sea, and aim at destroying the fleets of England; she relied too much on her military power, and sought to conquer us by descents on our coasts, employing her naval strength, as a secondary force, to baffle, divide, and deceive her enemy; and this strategy was long doomed to failure. This, no doubt, is confirmed by experience; but there is much to be said for the opposite view; and Napoleon's operations, in 1805, only just missed decided success, so far as landing an army in England. We do not agree with Admiral Colomb that the Emperor's project may have been only a feint: he no doubt hesitated; but his later letters to Villeneuve and Ganteaume seem to us decisive. In all other respects Admiral Colomb's account of this great game of strategy deserves the highest praise.

The command of the sea by a single state, great as its superiority in this respect may be, cannot, however, be really absolute, in the condition at least of the modern world. The navy of England, for two hundred years, has been the dominant power on the ocean, and twice, at least, has nearly "ruled the waves"; but there have always been navies more or less its rivals. Maritime wars, therefore, have been frequent; and these, in most instances, have been attended by invasions, or attempts to invade, hostile territory by belligerent fleets and troops. This opens an immense chapter of naval history, the largest, in fact, that can be examined; and Admiral Colomb has reviewed the subject of descents, or schemes of descent of this kind, with admirable discernment, but at somewhat excessive length. We cannot follow him in his careful narratives of expeditions of this description, from the days of the Armada to those of Sebastopol; it must be enough to say that they deserve attentive study, and display thorough knowledge and philosophic thought; but we would refer our readers to the excellent account of the great contest of 1588, drawn from a paper of Prof. J. K. Laughton, for it places the whole subject in a natural light, and corrects legends which have obscured the facts. We would infer from Admiral Colomb's pages that he lays down four principles, on this most important part of naval warfare, deduced by him from the general experience of the last two centuries. When a sea is open, or, as it may be called, "indifferent," descents of this class will often succeed, though the power that makes them is inferior at sea: this was seen repeatedly in the West Indies, during the maritime wars of the eighteenth century; but such attacks will be usually mere raids, and can scarcely have decisive results. When a sea is guarded by an effective force, though it may be, at the time, inferior, these enterprises, as a rule, will fail: the Armada is a notable instance; another is Torrington's baffling of Tourville; a third is the French invasion of Egypt, which ended in the destruction of the Nile, though Admiral Colomb has not remarked that Brueys probably could have escaped to Corfu had he not chosen to lie in Aboukir Bay, and that the descent was, in one sense, successful. Expeditions of this kind may have great results, in the case of a power superior at sea; the repeated harrings of the coasts of France in the naval wars of the last century, and the impotence of Spain, after the fight of Pessaro, are two out of a list of examples. But though a power may be greatly superior at sea, a descent ought not to be attempted in the proximity of a hostile fleet, unless this is "masked" and held in check; the neglect of this precaution, though in part to be justified, was an error in the strategy of the allies when they undertook to invade the Crimea.

Admiral Colomb, we have said, confines himself to naval strategy and avoids naval tactics; and he does not dwell on the great changes which certainly must take place in naval warfare, owing to the inventions of the second half of this century. The author has yet to be found who will attempt to tell us what steam, ironclads, huge rifled ordnance, electricity, torpedoes, and, in short, the material discoveries of the mechanism of war, will probably effect in conflicts at sea; experience aided by genius will alone, perhaps, solve this tremendous and difficult problem. But Admiral Colomb most truly remarks that certain principles of naval strategy exist, of general application in all circumstances, however material conditions may change; and it is of supreme importance that these should be recognised, if England is to retain her place in the world. He has really written on this great question only; and he has worked out his conclusions with marked ability, and with a richness of illustration even too lavish. One remark we offer as we close a notice, necessarily too short for a great subject: England owes her empire and her escape from vassalage in the great war with France to her ascendancy as a maritime power; this ascendancy is more than ever needful under the conditions of her present existence, and it must be maintained whatever the cost.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

Sir George Burns, Bart. By Edwin Hodder. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THAT the late George Burns was one of the founders of the Cunard line, and that he was made a baronet at the age of ninety-four, probably sums up all that the public know of the subject of this biography. He was, however, a noteworthy man in many respects, and not solely or indeed mainly as a successful merchant. But with every wish to be fair to Sir George Burns's memory, we cannot acquit his biographer of the literary crime of diffuseness. The work under notice runs to more than 500 pages. The story of Sir George Burns's life could have been amply told in a volume of half that size. Eulogy may not be biography, but it is a vice that savours of charity. Verbosity, however, is an unmixed evil, and in the record of a man of business padding seems strangely out of place. Having discharged a duty in making our protest against what appears to be the growing sin of biographers—prolixity, we cheerfully bear testimony to the merits of this book.

No man ever deserved more than George Burns the distinction conferred upon him by the crown, for no man ever did his work with more thoroughness and success. He was one of those rare men whom his friends could follow with safety in their investments. All that he touched turned to gold, not because he prayed for success, but because his judgment and his care insured it. He was born in the year of Warren Hastings's acquittal. He could remember the magistrates issuing a solemn proclamation against the eating of hot rolls and his mother smuggling hot dainty morsels into his mouth in spite of the injunction. He had heard from his own grandfather's lips the story of 1715, and he survived to read the report of the Parnell Commission. He lived through great changes, and he might truly have said that he played his part in making them. At the beginning of this century the Clyde at Glasgow was scarcely a navigable stream. George Burns remembered when it was possible to wade across it below the foot of the old Broomielaw Bridge, when the fishing nets stood upon its banks. John Fitch, an American engineer, had said in 1784, "Well, gentlemen, although I shall not live to see the time, you will, when steamboats will be preferred to all other means of conveyance, and specially for passengers." Need we add that a man so before his age was considered crazy, and died broken-hearted. Steam navigation from Great Britain to the States was not tried till 1838. Nearly all denounced the notion as nonsense, "as if anybody ever knew iron to float." "Don't talk to me about iron ships, its contrary to nature." This was not the remark of an ignoramus, but of the chief naval architect of one of our dockyards to Mr. Scott Russell.

The ninth and fifteenth chapters of this book are devoted to the story of the Cunard Company, and prove most interesting reading. It was Mark Twain who said "he felt himself rather safer on board a Cunard steamer than he did upon land." The success of the Cunard line was mainly due to the care of Mr. George Burns, "that each ship added to the fleet should be superior to those which had preceded it; at the same time, the greatest caution was observed never to adopt new inventions, or to be influenced by new theories, until they had been thoroughly tested."

Thus, the Cunard Company waited for years before they constructed the hulls of their ships of iron or adapted the screw propeller. It was always the principle of this great company to leave experiments to others, while they adopted an improvement only when it had been clearly proved so by others. The vastness and variety of the provisioning and coaling of the "floating hotels" of the Cunard line almost exceeds belief. To take coal alone, about 1000 tons are burnt per day. "This quantity of coal, if built as a wall four feet high and one foot thick, would reach from Land's End to John o' Groat's House."

The late Sir George Burns was a deeply religious man, and his letters bear evidence to this in every line. One of his earliest friends was Dr. Chalmers. It was a sermon of Dr. Chalmers on the text "I am not mad" that made a deep impression on his mind. Dr. Chalmers in one point, and in one only, resembled the infamous Titus Oates. He had a most extraordinary pronunciation. It was "not only broadly national, but broadly provincial, distorting almost every word he uttered with some barbarous novelty." There was nothing in his pale plain face to indicate the power and genius of the man, and yet it is doubtful whether any preacher ever wielded greater influence upon his hearers. When Dr. Chalmers preached his farewell sermon before taking the vacant chair of moral philosophy at the University of St. Andrews, so enormous was the crowd anxious to hear him that a party of the 73rd Regiment had to protect the entrance to the church! Mr. George Burns also knew Edward Irving, and his reminiscences of this large-hearted man are so interesting that we cannot refrain from quoting some of them.

"Irving was physically a powerful man; and, in the days when the road to Blackheath was infested with highwaymen, he was walking alone in the darkening of the evening to London when two men who were lurking about seemed inclined to join him. Irving at once penetrated their purpose of doing him some mischief, and determined to make his presence felt among them. He opened up a conversation by saying, 'I see we are all going the same way—to London, I suppose; let us shake hands and walk together.' One of the men responded, but he found that his hand was in that of one who held him like the grip of a vice; and, seeing that Irving was evidently not to be trifled with, the two men, after a little while, slunk off quietly behind.

"A favourite theme of conversation with Irving when talking with me, especially during his early days in Glasgow, was of the Spirit of God working among men more by the agency of the heart than of the head. Before he went to London, Irving said to Mr. Chalmers that, when he should enter his church in Regent-street, he was determined to open up a career for himself. This he certainly did, but great differences of opinion exist with regard to its value" (p. 109).

Sir George Burns was one of those Scotchmen who do not require a surgical operation to appreciate a joke. There are several indications of his humour throughout the book. The picture of Irving, the huge preacher, with his strange squint, covering his head with a large yellow handkerchief, before commencing his prayer in the pulpit, is certainly a quaint one. We have not space here to dwell on Macaulay's Montgomery, Lord Shaftesbury, Dean Close, and other friends of Sir George Burns. He read Drummond's Natural Law in the Spiritual World, but we are expressly told that he did not give the book his "unqualified approval." The death of the patriarch, full of years and honours, in the arms of his son is well described. It was to him a veritable home-going, and was—

"Not more than the sudden lifting of the latch,
Naught but a step into the open air out of a tent
Already luminous with light."

Although this biography is written with a strong evangelical bias, its perusal will interest all who wish to know more of a vanished generation.

J. G. COTTON MINCHIN.

TWO BOOKS ON THE CAUCASUS.

La Trans-Caucasie et la Péninsule d'Apchéron: Souvenirs de Voyage. Par Calouste S. Gulbenkian. (Paris: Hachette.)

Les Mœurs des Khevsoures, Peuplade Caucasiennne. Par M. V. Dingelstedt. (Geneva: Burkhardt.)

ALTHOUGH he writes in French, we are inclined, judging by his name, to believe M. Gulbenkian to be an Armenian. The main purpose of his journey to the Caucasus appears to have been to study the region of petroleum in a practical way. On this subject his book is full of minute details, and reminds us of the productions of the late Mr. Marvin, whom he frequently quotes.

To the narrative of his journey, which is written in a spirited manner, is prefixed a short sketch of Georgian history and travel. A great deal which he has there given us is unfortunately uncritical, e.g., the stories of Assyrian invasions of the Caucasus and of Chinese colonisation. He furnishes a fair list of earlier writers upon the country; but if the reader desires a more complete one, he will find an excellent account appended to Mr. Wardrop's book, The Kingdom of Georgia (1888), with much other valuable information. Important works were written on the ethnology of the country by the late A. Berger; and his successor at the museum at Tiflis, Dr. G. Radde, is well known for his series of splendid monographs, which are more accessible to Western readers, since they are written in German. The Transactions of the Caucasian section of the Russian Geographical Society are full of important papers on ethnology, folklore, and language. For philology, the best authorities are Brosset and Tsagarelli, at all events for the Georgian languages. The latter is now professor of Georgian at the University of St. Petersburg. For the non-Georgian languages, excellent work was done by Baron von Uslar, Sjögren, and Schiefner. A useful analysis of some of their labours will be found in the appendix to Mr. Abercromby's book, A Trip through the Eastern Caucasus. We are surprised that M. Gulbenkian makes no mention of R. von Erckert's excellent book, Der Kaukasus und seine Völker (Leipzig, 1887), which has a good ethnological map.

Our traveller sets out from Constantinople, giving us vigorous but gloomy pictures of the filth and discomfort of the Turkish ports which he passes, bearing witness to the universal decay of that moribund empire. We have a slight sketch of Batoum, which in 1878 had 2000 inhabitants, but now boasts of 18,000. Of course as yet it is not an inviting place; but when the present writer last saw it, he was struck with the progress it had made. Our author is clearly a good ornithologist; he carefully mentions by their scientific names the various birds which he finds on his route. He visits Kutais, Gelati, and all the well-known show-places. On page 57 he describes the tesghinka (not teskinka), the national Georgian dance; as regards the balalaika, a musical instrument, this is a Malo-Russian word, and not Caucasian, as he seems to fancy. On page 58 he writes as follows:

“Il est rare que le laboureur et le danseur ne fredonnent pas les vieux refrains d'Orbeliani, de Zereteli et du Djavdjavatz (sic), les poètes les plus populaires de la Géorgie. C'est le XII^e siècle qui fut l'âge d'or de la littérature Géorgienne; alors florissaient l'illustre romancier Rustaveli, dont le chef d'œuvre est la Peau du lion, et avec lui tous les poètes dont nous avons cité les noms, auteurs de ballades et de chants d'amour, si chers au peuple, et s'il faut l'ajouter, si fréquemment utilisés.”

As regards Rustaveli, this is in the main true; but instead of the other poets mentioned being contemporary with him, they belong to the nineteenth century. Orbeliani died in 1883; Zereteli is still living; and of the family Tchavtchavadze (disguised by our author under the form Djavdjavatz) Alexander died in 1846, while the talented poet and novelist Ilya is still alive.

The story told by M. Gulbenkian of his servant, who was a prince, can be easily paralleled; waiters are frequently pointed out in Georgian hotels who are kniazia. The same thing is found sometimes in Poland, where members of the nobility are occasionally seen in very humble positions. Finally, our author arrives at Tiflis, and witnesses its splendours when illuminated in honour of the visit of the Tsar. On p. 91 he comes to grief over the Russian word for (large) railway station, which is simply vauxhall, borrowed from the English, but it is metamorphosed by our author into vaagzaal, an impossible form with a quasi-Dutch appearance. This picturesque city is well described; but Thibilis is not the ancient spelling of its name, as stated by our author, who is never very happy in his transcription of foreign words; it should be Tphilisi or Tbilisi. On p. 118, where M. Gulbenkian speaks of the Byzantine architecture of the churches of Tiflis, he says nothing of the peculiar style exhibited by the Georgian or Armenian (see Bayet, L'Art Byzantin). On p. 124 his account of the connexion between the Georgian and Armenian alphabets is not correct.

After our author arrives at Baku he gives us very full accounts of the petroleum industry, and speaks of the quantity of the oil as far exceeding that of America—as, indeed, the present writer was told in the Caucasus by an American engineer in the service of the Russian government. He considered petroleum to be abundant in many parts of Georgia, which had not yet been thoroughly tested. All this part of the work is full of valuable information, and a good account of the “tank-ships” is given. Some of these are to be seen in the harbour of Batoum. On the whole, we may say of M. Gulbenkian's book that he gives us a great deal of information in an unpretending way, and that he is never dull.

The second work in our list is of a different character. It is the tirage à part, to borrow a convenient French phrase, of an article in Le Globe, a geographical journal published at Geneva, and the subject is the “customs of the Khevsoures.” It is an ethnological study, and not a narrative of travel. The Khevsoures, according to the statistics of our author (with whom R. von Erckert, previously mentioned, entirely agrees), number 7000, and are a rude mountain people dwelling north of Tiflis and belonging to the Georgian or Kartvelian race. They have already formed the subject of much discussion. Of books about them, it will be enough to mention the valuable monograph of Herr Radde, the director of the museum at Tiflis. Occasional notices will also be found in the Transactions of the Caucasian section of the Russian Geographical Society. It is from one of the papers contained in this valuable series, to judge from a note on p. 5 of M. Dingelstedt's brochure, that his remarks are mainly taken. Unfortunately the present writer does not possess a complete set of these Transactions, and is therefore unable to refer to the particular volume (xiv.).

Visitors to the Tiflis Museum must be familiar with the figures of these strange mountaineers, with their chain armour, like ancient crusaders, and elbow plates. The little work of M. Dingelstedt professes to give us a sketch of their peculiar customs. These are very interesting to the student of popular traditions and tribal laws. The author confesses that, before the Russians made their power felt in these regions, brigandage was the chief mode of livelihood of these picturesque mountaineers. The women have a rough time among them, and, in consequence of the rude circumstances of their daily existence, have lost much of their feminine charm. We get an account of the marriage rites, and the capture of the woman, who may be carried off voluntarily or involuntarily, but she must not be carried off by a man of the same community. The laws of purification are rigid, and remind us of Levitical institutions. Matriarchy prevails to a great extent; upon the maternal uncle fall the duties of the vendetta. The Khevsoures are divided into six communes, which group themselves round certain khati or sanctuaries. Each khati has its annual festival, which is the centre, as it were, of the national life. It is the chief of the commune (khevisseri) who presides over the festival, and keeps the flag of the sanctuary. St. George is to all appearance the favourite saint. Vast caves have been discovered in the north of the country used as burying-grounds. Here the dead are found placed in various positions, sitting or lying, clothed in their coats of mail, but without arms, and sometimes holding in their hands musical instruments. There are two kinds of priests among the Khevsoures; and we read of wise women (mkhithari), who are occupied in curing ailments or explaining their causes, and giving advice about coming misfortunes by watching the flow of water and other mysterious proceedings. The interesting pamphlet of M. Dingelstedt should not be neglected by our folk-lorists.

W. R. MORFILL.

NEW NOVELS.

- That Pretty Little Horsebreaker.* By Mrs. Edward Kennard. In 3 vols. (White.)
Kilcarra. By A. Innes Shand. In 3 vols. (Blackwood.)
Charlie is my Darling. By Anne Beale. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)
Some Emotions and a Moral. By John Oliver Hobbes. (Fisher Unwin.)
Folly and Fresh Air. By Eden Phillpotts. (Trischler.)
Lady Rosalind. By Louis H. Victory. (Digby & Long.)
The Romance of a Madhouse. By A. M. Meadows. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)
Among the Ruins, and other Stories. By Mary Cecil Hay. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

If Mrs. Edward Kennard cannot lay claim to the talent of the late Whyte-Melville, she has at any rate caught much of the master's spirit in her hunting stories. There is the same breezy atmosphere and the same healthful, invigorating tone about them. One cannot read such a story as That Pretty Little Horsebreaker without feeling that the author is a true lover of that noble animal the horse, and of sport in its best and truest sense. She takes us through many exciting episodes in the field, but these by no means exhaust the interest of her novel. It presents us, in addition, with some faithful pictures of English life as led in what is called “Society,” as well as outside that charmed circle. The heroine, Katherine Herrick, is the daughter of a well-known sportsman, Squire Herrick, whose reputation had spread far and wide. Unfortunately for himself the squire was not content with the pleasures of the country, but became bitten with the Stock Exchange mania. As the result of his speculations he not only squandered his estate, but dissipated the fortune of £25,000 settled upon his daughter. Then, hopelessly ruined, he put an end to his life. Kate was a girl of spirit; and, knowing that she understood the points of a horse better even than most men, she courageously became a horsebreaker rather than live upon the charity of friends. She had two lovers. One was a handsome Guardsman, Captain Mordaunt, to whom she had lost her own heart; and the other was Lord Algernon Loddington, a nobleman, plain of feature, but with a sterling heart, who had loved her from childhood. Mordaunt was a mean, despicable cur, who backed out of his engagement when he found that his betrothed was penniless. To Lord Algernon, on the contrary, Kate's sorrows and poverty only made her the dearer, and she learned before it was too late to distinguish between the selfishness of the one and the magnanimity of the other. Mordaunt's mother, the widow of a city knight, was as contemptible in character as her son. She scandalously neglected the poor parents to whom she owed her being, but, “by dint of going through a great deal of dirt and eating a very considerable number of humble pies, she had managed to attain the fringe of London Society.” But there was a fly in the ointment; Marlborough House was closed to her. Kate Herrick is a delightful contrast; and the reader cannot fail to be warmly drawn towards this wayward and impulsive child of nature.

Kilcarra is the story of an Irish vendetta. Many years before the narrative opens the owner of the Kilcarra estate in Western Galway had been brutally assassinated, and his successor devoted himself to the task of discovering the murderer. He died without having achieved the task, however, and committed it, as a sacred duty, to his heir, Martin Dering, a handsome young Englishman. The latter accepted the trust, from which afterwards he would willingly have been freed, and took the name of his predecessor—French. He goes through imminent danger in pursuit of his object, and, on one occasion, is nearly shot. At last, what manly strength and determination had long failed to do, womanly weakness, tenderness, and beauty are successful in accomplishing. French introduces his young wife to the tenantry, and she immediately captivates all hearts. Through her agency the murderer is discovered, and confesses his crime before dying in gaol, while the hatred of a generation is eradicated. Ida French makes a noble and courageous heroine, developing a moral strength in inverse ratio to her physical. Her power over the most desperate characters is like that of the Irish "whisperers," who could "tame the most unmanageable horse by the breath of some mysterious influence." Mr. Shand writes well and vigorously, and his sketches of Irish life are truthful and realistic. The narrative never lags, but is throughout full of spirit and energy.

Miss Anne Beale's Charlie is My Darling demonstrates the intense love and devotion of a sister for a brother. The story is based on a next-of-kin advertisement, the heirs of a Jacob Dauncey being wanted at Montreal to take up the handsome legacy of £100,000. The Daunceys, of Castle Farm, Hollyfield, in England, are convinced that they are the persons referred to, and one of them, the "Charlie" of the title, goes out to claim it. His father follows him, only to find a nearer heir turn up, and to witness his own son breathe his last. Meanwhile, the sister above referred to labours like a slave to maintain the family at home, while her heart is nearly breaking for her absent brother. In the end, matters are so far amicably arranged that the true heir to the property comes to England and marries one of old Dauncey's daughters, while the heart of Squire Weatherley, Charles Dauncey's father-in-law, is softened by his grandchildren. Old Dauncey, who, like many other people, had always been his own enemy, comes to the righteous conclusion that "one can't be one's own enemy without being other people's." The novel is simple and attractive, without being strong. Miss Beale has some rather indistinct geographical notions. Montreal is spoken of vaguely as being in America, and she makes the P. and O. steamers sail to New York.

The new volume in the Pseudonym Library, Some Emotions and a Moral, is undoubtedly very clever, but the straining after brilliant sayings almost palls upon the reader before the end is reached. The "emotions" are concerned with the love passion as variously developed in the several characters, and they give rise to very mixed feelings and incidents. A painful episode at the last enforces the "moral," which is one strongly condemnatory of unsuitable marriages. Godfrey Provence is a truly original hero, which is saying a good deal in these days, and Cynthia Heathcote matches him as the heroine. The course of true love by no means runs smooth. All the characters are well and firmly drawn, even to the most insignificant. There are some smart utterances which are wise, and some which are—otherwise. "Man is at best a learned pig," we are told, who "will root for truffles in Sahara or Paradise." Idealists "think very high, but act on the whole rather low." "Women have often noble impulses, but they fail in acting up to them. Suppose we put it in this way—that women want to be noble, and some men are." Says the beautiful but wayward heroine, "Love me for my faults and not my virtues, dearest, and then I shall never disappoint you. I can always live up to them." This is not the kind of book that can be read indifferently—the reader must of necessity become interested in it.

There is capital fun to be extracted from Folly and Fresh Air, albeit as a story it is "neither fish, flesh, fowl, nor good red herring." It is a record of the adventures of two brothers who went down to Dartmoor for a fortnight's holiday, and took up their quarters at Tavybridge. A series of laughable accidents introduced them to the society of the district, and they managed thoroughly to enjoy themselves. The tennis lawn, the penny readings, the church, &c., all entered into their experiences; while one of the two lost his heart to his lovely partner at tennis, Miss Lucy Lynn. The story of the pious station-master, Jinks, who lorded it over a little junction on the South Eastern railway is very good. Jinks had a strip of garden by the side of the line, and he used to try to convert profane travellers by growing—in onions and the like—virtuous maxims such as "Love one Another," "Watch and Pray." Being resolved to outdo himself in a certain annual effort, he set mustard and cress with the object of growing in gigantic letters "God is Love." But the enemy came while he slept, and there came up instead the legend in horseradish, "Jinks is a Idiot." The worst of it was that the horseradish secured such a grip of the soil that it would have almost taken an earthquake to unroot it. That our author can write something good is shown by his description of Dartmoor Forest in autumn.

Lady Rosalind is described as "a psychological romance," and it is all that with a vengeance. Never, in the space of 303 pages, have we ever met with such marvels. Earth, Heaven, and Hell our author lays under tribute, and seems to be equally at home in each. A man is murdered at sea, and having, like Jonah, spent some considerable time in the interior of a monster, he makes his appearance in his old familiar haunts. There is not a character that is not hypnotic or lunatic, except one Colonel Victor de Burg, and he gets murdered. There are two sisters, one of whom insists on eloping with a cheerful youth named Holzapfel; while the other gets shot by her lover. As for the wonderful experiences of Lady Rosalind and her husband, they must be read to be believed—I mean disbelieved. Rosalind "was a deep philosopher; law she had studied profoundly; astronomy's paths and theology's dreary deserts had she roved; nor were the mysteries of medicine unknown to her." Yet this intellectual luminary—before whom the learning of Girton pales into insignificance—perished miserably, after seeing the "astrals" of herself and her husband.

Miss Meadows has constructed a very taking story in The Romance of a Madhouse. A young barrister goes to a dance at a lunatic asylum, and there meets with a beautiful girl who has been unjustly convicted of murder, and confined for life on the ground of insanity. After a couple of conversations with her, he is firmly convinced of her innocence, though the case had seemed one of the clearest which could possibly be conceived on the trial. He sets himself to clear up the mystery, however, and in doing so becomes the hero of many exciting incidents. Ultimately he succeeds, a phonograph being the final means of identifying the real murderer. Of course the lovely prisoner and her courageous champion marry in the end. The story is full of go, and the interest is kept up to the close.

The short stories by Miss M. C. Hay are light and graceful. "Among the Ruins" is the longest but not the best. "Upon the Waters" is, perhaps, the most attractive, but all are readable.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

ROMAN CATHOLIC THEOLOGY.

A Manual of Catholic Theology. By Joseph Wilhelm and Thomas B. Scannell. Vol. I. (Kegan Paul & Co.) Those who are accustomed to study the catalogues of foreign and English publishers are probably aware that the literary activity which is so marked a characteristic of our time is shared also by Roman Catholic theology and philosophy. The fact is instructive, not only as manifesting the solicitude of the Church to bring the culture of her members on all expedient subject matters "up to date," but also as indicating a touching desire to imitate so far as possible the literary methods and products of the world without. For of most recent Roman Catholic works it may be affirmed that they copy assiduously, though not always successfully, current literary fashions. Thus, if the subject be philosophy, the author follows as closely as he can the ratiocination and methods of his fallible and secular, perhaps atheistic, predecessors. For example, in the Stonyhurst Manuals, the most important of which have been noticed in our columns, it is not uncommon to find Hume, Bain, Dr. Martineau, J. S. Mill, and H. Spencer in the hallowed society of Bonaventura and St. Thomas. We presume that the faithful are early taught to discriminate between thinkers so widely divided in their sympathies and objects, and that they are in no danger of confusing the permissible fruit with the baneful product of the tree "in the midst of the garden"; otherwise we should have thought the juxtaposition a little risky, and should have feared that the ratiocination of Bain and Mill would make sad havoc of the main principles of Bonaventura and his fellow-schoolmen. Nor is this the only marked characteristic of recent books of Romanist theology. A still more significant and ominous feature is their extreme Ultramontanism. They all bear the impress of the Vatican Decrees. Indeed, it would seem that this ecclesiastical brand is a sine qua non of all works now issued with the imprimatur of the Jesuits or their Ultramontane allies. It may be likened to the excise labels on bottles of spirituous liquors, testifying at once to their strength and their intoxicating quality. Thus, in the above-named translation of Scheeben's Manual, a work which has obtained some currency in Germany, we find the label affixed in a manner sufficiently noteworthy by Cardinal Manning. As our readers are aware, the Cardinal has committed himself at various times to some startling statements on the subject of the Vatican Council, but we do not remember even from him a more audacious perversion of history or a more striking exhibition of what we must deem deliberate self-obfuscation than is to be found in the following paragraph:

"Of all the superstitions and senseless mockeries, and they were many, with which the world wagged its head at the Vatican Council, none was more profoundly foolish than the jibe that in the nineteenth century a Council has been called to declare the existence of God. In fact, it is this truth that the nineteenth century needs most of all. For as Jerome says, 'Homo sine cognitione Dei, pecus.' But what the Council did eventually declare is, not the existence of God, but that the existence of God may be known with certitude by the reason of man through the works that he has created. This is the infallible light of the natural order, and the need of this definition is perceived by all who know the later philosophies of Germany and France, and the rationalism, scepticism, and naturalism which pervades the literature, the public opinion, and the political action of the modern world. This was the first dominant error of these days demanding the action of the Council. The second was the insidious undermining of the doctrinal authority of the Holy See, which for 200 years had embarrassed the teaching of the Church not only in controversy with adversaries without, but often in the guidance of some of its own members within the fold. The definition of the Infallible Magisterium of the Roman Pontiff has closed this period of contention. The Divine certitude of the supernatural order completes the twofold infallibility of the knowledge of God in the natural and supernatural relation of Himself. This was the work of the Vatican Council in its one memorable session, in which the Councils of the Church, and especially the Councils of Florence and of Trent, culminated in defining the certitude of faith."

The only parallels we can recall to this grotesque travesty of history, with its climax of grandiloquent rhodomontade—"The Infallible Magisterium of the Roman Pontiff"—is to be found where we do not at present intend to search for it, in the advertisements of vendors of popular medicines. Our readers will probably think that, after this outside label of Cardinal Manning's, little further evidence is needed of the prepotent quality of the spirit thus attested; and, in fact, the book itself is "in a concatenation accordingly." But as a further exemplification of the obscurantist teaching and the falsification of history, which has become the monopoly of Ultramontane Catholicism, we must place before our readers a few more extracts from the Manual itself. This, e.g., is Scheeben's account of that sacrificio dell' intelletto, which is the self-stultification of all human reason and enlightenment:

"Revelation is especially intended to be a principle of faith leading to an infallible knowledge of revealed truth, and also to be a law of faith by submitting to which all men may offer to God the most perfect homage of their intellect. Hence it follows that God should provide efficient means to enable mankind to acquire a complete certain and uniform knowledge of revealed truth, and to secure to himself a uniform and universal worship founded on faith. This exercise of God's Jus Majestatis on the mind of man is rightly insisted upon by the Vatican Council against the rationalistic tendencies of the day" (p. 17; cf. also p. 114).

Again, this is how the Manual treats the question of Galileo and his persecution by the Church. Our readers will perceive that Scheeben here employs the rationalistic expedient of "Twofold Truth," which the Freethinkers of the Italian Renaissance found so useful, but which various Popes and Councils interdicted in the most uncompromising terms. Like most of the modern Jesuits, however, Scheeben displays a suspicious ignorance of mediæval church history.

"Dogmas may be divided in the same way as the contents of Revelation, except that matters revealed per accidens are not properly dogmas. It is, however, a dogma that Holy Scripture in the genuine text contains undoubted truth throughout. And consequently the denial of matters revealed per accidens is a sin against faith, because it implies the assertion that Holy Scripture contains error. This principle accounts for the opposition to Galileo. The motions of the sun and the earth are not indeed matters of dogma, but the great astronomer's teaching was accompanied by, or at any rate involved, the assertion that Scripture was false in certain texts" (p. 89).

These extracts, which might be added to ad libitum, suffice to show the nature of the teaching which Ultramontanism thinks useful for its enthusiastic disciples. We do not propose to add a word either of criticism or reprobation. To do so would be to lay us open to the charge of extravagant superfluity, such as gilding refined gold or painting the lily.

Peter's Rock in Mohammed's Flood. By Thomas W. Allies. (Burns & Oates.) This is vol. vii. of a series which has occupied the author for thirty years, and which aspires to be, from the Romanist standpoint, an exhaustive account of the formation of Christendom. It thus covers the same ground as the works of Gibbon and Milman from the Protestant point of view. We should have been glad to have been able to speak favourably of an author who displays both industry and research, and who has not confined his authoritative sources to writers of his own communion; but we regret our inability to do so. Mr. Allies seems to us deficient in the historical insight, the insistence on veracity, the breadth of view, which are pre-requisites of his task. This book stands in the same relation to genuine history as a highly-coloured daub in an Italian country church stands to the work of an Old Master. In order to exemplify our meaning, we would ask our readers to compare his chapter li., "Christendom and Islam," in which he takes occasion to blacken Mohammed's character in the most approved fashion of orthodox Romanism—we do not say with Mr. Bosworth Smith's partisan work, but with the critical and impartial estimate of the Arabian prophet which Mr. Bury has recently given in his Later Roman Empire, or the late Dr. Badger in his elaborate article in Smith and Wace's Dictionary of Christian Biography. We need hardly add that, on the relation of the Eastern to the Western Church, Mr. Allies is as vehemently anti-Oriental as the most narrow and prejudiced Romanist could desire. He does not scruple to say (p. 489):

"The state of the Eastern Church from the Council of Chalcedon to the final assault of the Emperor Leo III. upon the whole fabric of church government is one continual descent."

He is compelled, it is true, to make large exceptions, but they do not avail more than a slight modification of this astounding dictum. In short, Peter's Rock in Mohammed's Flood may be described as an attempt to re-manufacture the history of the later Roman Church in the interests of a narrow Romanism.

The Christ the Son of God. By the Abbé Constant Fouard. Translated from the fifth edition by G. F. X. Griffith. (Longmans.) "This Life of Jesus," says the author, "is an Act of Faith"; that is, it eschews criticism and controversy of the most elementary kind. It takes the four Gospels in their traditional form and weaves their incidents into a picturesque narrative, just as Renan did in his Vie de Jésus, with the single difference that the Abbé Fouard's story suffers as much from surplussage and superfetation of picturesque incidents as Renan's history did from poverty and critical scantiness. The Abbé does not even attempt the most rudimentary requirement of his subject—viz., a reasonable sequence of the events narrated. Now it must be obvious to our readers that an "Act of Faith," or manifestation of pure, passive credulity in a subject on which criticism is at the present moment expending her utmost energies, is just as great an anachronism as an Auto de Fé of the Spanish Inquisition. However, a book which starts with such an open profession of pious imbecility renders the critic's labour superfluous. Being super criticam as Sigismund was super grammaticam, it was not intended for readers of the ACADEMY. We will content ourselves therefore with a few extracts, showing that "the critical and imaginative skill," by which Renan gave "a certain glitter to the inventions" of German Rationalists, has been adroitly borrowed by the author to give a fictitious brilliancy to the inventions of the Abbé Fouard. This, for example, is his method of embellishing the story of Christ's conversation with the Samaritan woman (vol. i. p. 194):

"The astonished disciples murmured to each other,

"'Has anyone brought Him food?'

"'My food,' Jesus replied, 'is to do the will of Him who sent me and to accomplish His work.'

"Thus then the work of God was the conversion of the Samaritans, who were now advancing toward Him. The swaying crowds with their white garments fluttering through the fields of the valley below, which in four months more would be ready for the reapers, now gave them somewhat of the appearance of a harvest ripe for the sickle. The Saviour with a glance pointed them out to His disciples."

Again we have the following enhanced picture of the feeding of the multitudes.

"'Make the men sit down,' He said to the apostles. They obeyed His behest; and the people sat down on the long grass in companies of hundreds and fifties. It was still spring-time. The fierce heats of the sun had not yet robbed the Galilaean hills of their soft garment of green; and thus the groups of friends and companions, ranged about in order, made a happy and charming scene which, together with the glowing tints of their oriental robes, left such a vivid picture upon the memory of Peter that in after years he described it to Mark, the Evangelist, as being like gorgeous beds of flowers (Mark vi. 40), extending along the rich green sward" (i. p. 338).

Certainly if Renan be held guilty of allowing his imagination to play too intensely on the Gospel narrative, it is a fault which more than one modern writer of the Life of Christ must be held to share with him, and among the rest must be enumerated the Abbé Fouard.

The Life of St. Thomas Aquinas, the Angelic Doctor, edited by Father Pius Cavanagh, O.P. (Burns & Oates.) The Church of Rome in her extensive and varied Calendar possesses a goodly number of saints, confessors, and martyrs, whose lives and reputations lend themselves readily to a legendary and pietistic treatment. In approaching such lives the ordinary reader, conscious that he is no longer treading mere terrestrial ground, is quite prepared to take the shoes of his reason and understanding from off his feet. Hence he is not surprised at any number of miracles his saintly heroes are said to have accomplished, or the supernatural events of which they were the objects. They may have raised the dead to life. This need not stagger his faith: it was an every-day performance of legendary saints. Or they may have performed astounding feats of asceticism and self-maceration. This, again, was in the ordinary course of things, and he must feel neither incredulity nor wonder. For the most part, however, these wonder-working saints are not remarkable for culture or intellectual power of any kind. Indeed, it is not a little curious that the thaumaturgic power in these holy personages should be in the inverse ratio of their acknowledged wisdom. But while the greater number of Romanist saints are of this kind, there are a few who owe their reputation primarily to their learning and intellectual attainments. Their fame has been won, not by the signs and wonders of legendary miracles, but by the achievements of erudition and learned industry. Chiefest among them must be placed Thomas Aquinas. Now, the faintest sense of congruity would seem enough to suggest that these intellectual heroes should be treated with a proper sense of their specific and genuine character. For this reason we protest in the strongest manner against the purely legendary and pietistic life which Father Cavanagh, following in the wake of R. P. Joyau's Saint Thomas d'Aquin, has compiled in this volume. If any Romanist wishes to do honour to the great Schoolman, he cannot do better than make a summary of Jourdain's two volumes of his philosophy, or still better, compile a catena of passages from the Summa and his other principal works, such as his Contra Gentiles. In either case, we should have the thinker in his true intellectual character, instead of a biography made up altogether of such puerilities as the following:

"It happened soon after his return to the convent that the saint was attacked with fever, and obliged to remain in bed. Brother Buonfiglio, of Naples, who attended to him, being one night absent, his brother, a young man named John Copa, was charged to watch in the sick room. Suddenly he perceived a brilliant star which entered through the window, rested for some time on the head of the saint, and vanished in the same manner."

That the greatest name of mediæval Catholicism should have been reserved for this treatment—dragged through the mire of a spurious and puerile hagiology—fills us with an indignation which, we confess, we find ourselves unable to put into words.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE long expected new edition of Mr. Ruskin's Poems will be published on Wednesday next.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish immediately the elaborate Dictionary of Hymnology, upon which the Rev. John Julian has been engaged for many years past, forming a volume of about 1600 pages. Its object is to set forth the origin and history of the Christian hymns of all ages and nations, with special reference to those contained in the hymn-books of English-speaking countries and now in common use. It will contain biographical notices of the authors and translators, and also historical articles on national and denominational hymnody, breviaries, missals, primers, psalters, sequences, &c.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. have in the press a work by Mr. Theodore Andrea Cook, entitled Old Touraine: the Life and History of the Famous Châteaux of France. The object of the author has been to present, so far as possible, an accurate picture of the old life in the châteaux along the valley of the Loire, the most famous in the history of France, and the most beautiful examples of her art. Illustrations and portraits will be inserted, reproduced from the original paintings, and views and architectural drawings given of the buildings. There will be also an itinerary for the tourist, a map, genealogical tables, lists of pictures, MSS., &c. and an index.

MR. J. M. BARRIE'S new novel, The Little Minister, will be published next week.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will immediately publish A Week's Tramp in Dickens-Land, together with personal reminiscences of the "Inimitable Boz" therein collected by Mr. William R. Hughes, of Birmingham. The book will form a handsome volume of 450 pages, printed on toned paper, containing nearly 120 illustrations. Of these upwards of fifty are original drawings by Mr. F. G. Kitton, from sketches specially made by him for the work. The remainder are by D. Maclise, Luke Fildes, "Phiz" (Hablot K. Browne), Herbert Railton, Robert Langton, William Hull, E. Hull, J. Grego, and C. A. Vanderhoof. The book will include many interesting facsimiles, original letters, and other documents relating to the novelist. Nearly sixty persons in various ranks of life have rendered information or assistance to Mr. Hughes in the preparation of his work.

A MEMORIAL biography of the late Canon Carus, by the Rev. Charles Bullock, will be published at the Home Words office in a few days, under the title of Speaking Years. The volume will include a selection from the late Canon's writings, and a portrait from the painting by Mr. George Richmond.

MESSRS. WARD, LOCK, BOWDEN & Co. have in the press an illustrated novel, by Mr. J. E. Muddock, entitled Stormlight. The scene is laid in Switzerland and in Russia, and, under the guise of fiction, some remarkable phases of Nihilism are described. The author has studied the subject both in Russia and Switzerland, in which latter country he was for some years the Daily News correspondent.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN will publish next week a book by Mr. W. Kingsland, entitled The Mystic Quest, a Tale of Two Incarnations.

THE second volume of the Rev. E. A. Litton's Dogmatic Theology on the Basis of the Thirty-Nine Articles, is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for early publication.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE are bringing out a second edition of Canon Dixon's poem Mano.

MESSRS. WILLIAM PATERSON & Co. announce a re-issue of their illustrated library edition of the Works of Robert Burns, edited by the late W. Scott Douglas. This edition will consist of 500 copies, numbered and signed. It will contain all the original steel plates and facsimiles, and will be issued at a cheap price.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made for the publication in popular form, simultaneously in England and America, on November 9, of a revised edition of Jesus, the Carpenter of Nazareth, which has been out of print for some time. The London publishers are Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will publish, next week, as the new volume in their standard novels, Lord Lytton's Cartons, uniform with their recent issues of Shirley and Jane Eyre.

MISS AMELIA B. EDWARDS has so far recovered from her recent illness, that she will lecture for the Bristol Literary and Philosophic Club on October 22, upon "The Origin of Portrait Painting"; at Gloucester, on the same subject, on November 2; at Clifton College, on November 5; and in the theatre of the Bristol Museum (for the Ladies' Preventive Mission) upon "The Literature and Religion of the Ancient Egyptians," on November 7. Miss Edwards is also announced to lecture upon "The Origin of Portrait Painting" at Southport, on November 13; and at Leicester upon "The Art of the Novelist," on December 14.

THE Aristotelian Society opens its thirteenth session on Saturday, November 2, when the president, Dr. Shadworth Hodgson, will give the inaugural address on "Matter." It has been arranged to hold one meeting during the session at Oxford and one at Cambridge, for the convenience of members resident at the universities. The meeting at Oxford will be held on November 16, in the common room of Jesus College, when papers will be read by the president and Messrs. B. Bosanquet and D. G. Ritchie on "The Origin of the Perception of an External World." The meeting at Cambridge, the arrangements for which are not yet fixed, will take place in the Easter term.

THE first series of lectures given by the Sunday Lecture Society begins on Sunday next, October 18, in St. George's Hall, at 4 p.m., when Sir James Crichton Browne will lecture on "Brain Rust." Lectures will subsequently be given by Mr. Frank Kerslake, Mr. Walter L. Bicknell, Mr. W. E. Church, Prof. H. Marshall Ward, Mr. A. W. Clayden, and Sir Robert Ball.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE first number of the Welsh Review, edited by Mr. Ernest Bowen-Rowlands, is to appear on October 20. Among the contents will be: a poem by Mr. Lewis Morris; the opening chapters of a Welsh story, entitled "Owain Seithenyn"; and articles by Lord Carmarthen, Sir Thomas Esmonde, the Hon. Stephen Coleridge, Mr. Thomas Ellis, the Rev. Elvet Lewis, and Mr. Tudor Evans. The publishers are Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co.

THE forthcoming number of the Economic Review will contain the following articles:—"Encyclical Letter of Pope Leo XIII. on the Condition of Labour," by Canon H. Scott Holland; "What is Justice?" by the Rev. H. Rashdall; "The Incidence of Urban Rates," by Mr. G. H. Blunden; "The Socialism of Lassalle," by Mr. G. Binney Dibblee; "The Impediment to Production," by the Rev. Francis Minton; "Darwinism and Socialism," by Mr. T. Kirkup; "The Co-operative Movement," by Mr. W. A. S. Hewins.

DR. HENRY M. FIELD will contribute to the November number of Harper's Magazine an illustrated article containing new information about Stonewall Jackson, based upon the materials furnished by Mrs. Jackson's forthcoming memoir of her husband. Mr. Du Maurier's novel, "Peter Ibbetson," will be concluded in the same number.

THE November number of the Newbery House Magazine will contain an article on "Sacrament and Confession," by the Rev. Father Black; "The Paris Press and the Paris Poor," by E. R. Spearman; "Wells and Well-Worship," by Thomas Anderson; and the continuation of the monthly review of Newnham's "Alresford Essays for the Times," by Rev. Dr. R. Linklater.

DR. ALLAN, Dr. Hugh Macmillan, the Rev. W. Murdoch Johnston, the Rev. J. G. Kitchin, Miss Payne Smith, and the Rev. A. Boyd

Carpenter will contribute papers for Sunday reading to the November part of the Quiver, which commences a new volume. The other contents of the part will include a poem by the Bishop of Derry; papers by Prof. Blaikie, the Rev. John R. Vernon, and Mr. J. F. Rowbotham; three complete stories illustrated; a parable by Lady Laura Hampton; and the first instalments of two new serial stories, viz., "The Heiress of Aberstone" and "Through Devious Ways."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE opening of term at Oxford has been saddened by the serious illness of Prof. Jowett, the master of Balliol. According to the latest accounts, there has been some improvement in the most unfavourable symptoms; but we fear that his condition is still critical.

THE ceremony of unveiling the stone of dedication of the new building of Manchester New College, in Mansfield-road, Oxford, will take place on Tuesday next, October 20, at 3.15 p.m. Later in the afternoon the session will be opened with an inaugural address by the Rev. John Owen, rector of East Anstey, who has taken for his subject "The Modification of Religious Beliefs regarded as a Condition of Human Progress." In the evening there will be a soirée at the Randolph Hotel.

PROF. SAYCE proposes to deliver a public lecture at Oxford on Wednesday next, October 21, upon "The Bearing of Recent Assyriological Discoveries on the Study of Ancient History," with special reference to the Tel el-Amarna Tablets. He will then immediately leave for Egypt, where his address, for the next six months, will be the Post-office, Cairo.

PROF. GWATKIN will deliver his inaugural lecture, as Dixie professor of ecclesiastical history at Cambridge, on Tuesday next, October 20. He is giving two courses of lectures this term upon "Early Church History."

MESSRS. PERCIVAL announce A Guide to Greek Tragedy, by the Rev. Prof. Lewis Campbell, of St. Andrews. The writer's hope has been that, by recording impressions made on himself by somewhat close and long-continued study of the originals, he might assist the reader of Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, whether in Greek or English, to enter more completely into the spirit and intention of their works.

MR. JAMES SULLY will deliver a course of ten lectures this term at Cambridge, in connexion with the Teachers' Training Syndicate, upon "The Theory of Education."

THE board for oriental studies at Cambridge have added to their list of lectures for this term a course on Assyrian, to be given by Mr. S. Arthur Strong, of St. John's College.

THE Hon. Lionel Walter Rothschild has been elected treasurer of University College, in succession to the late Sir Robert Fowler.

TWO courses of popular lectures will be given at Bedford College, London, during the present term by Dr. H. Frank Heath, the professor of English, upon "The Modern Masters of English Fictions"—Dickens, Thackeray, George Eliot, and Mr. George Meredith; and by Mr. Holland Crompton, the professor of chemistry, upon "Passages in the History of a Raindrop," illustrated with experiments.

MR. WILFRED GILL, fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge, will open a course of lectures at 13, Kensington-square (King's College Department for Ladies) on "The Ethics of Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Emerson," with a free introductory address on Tuesday next, October 25, at 11.15 a.m.

IN view of the proposal, which will shortly come up for discussion, to appoint a syndicate to consider the question of allowing alternatives for Greek in the Previous Examination, Prof. E. C. Clark has issued a pamphlet entitled Greek and Other Studies at Cambridge (Macmillan & Bowes). His arguments are not quite the usual ones. While yielding to none in recognising the value of Greek in a liberal education, he protests that the knowledge of Greek required at present is only a sham. If this sham cannot be changed into a reality—and he evidently doubts whether it can—he declares that he will vote for any alternative that substitutes a real knowledge of some modern language other than English. It is not the subject so much as the method of examination which he wishes to see reformed.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

HARVEST THOUGHTS.

CAN the crushed grape foresee the wine,
Or grain between the millstones tell
All it will be, a food divine,
A daily bread? And we, ah well!
May we not be like them at least,
A portion of the Master's feast?

BEATRIX L. TOLLEMACHE.

OBITUARY.

JOHN WILLIAMS.

A LARGE circle of friends will have heard with much regret of the death of Mr. John Williams, the principal editor in the publishing house of Cassell & Co.

He was born in September, 1839, being the only son of the Rev. John Williams, for many years rector of Thornbury, in Herefordshire. He was educated at Marlborough, where he was one of the head-boys in the early days of Dr. Cotton's rule. Having been elected to an exhibition at Trinity College, Oxford, he gained a first class in moderations, and a second class in the final schools (1862), together with Mr. Walter Pater. At one time he edited a musical review, and he was always passionately devoted to music. Twenty-three years ago he became connected with Cassell & Co.; and henceforth all his labour was given to promoting the interests of that firm. It was, we believe, to his fine literary judgment that we owe the "Treasure Island" series, which is now being published in a cheap illustrated form. It was certainly a subject of pride to him that he was thus able to introduce to the reading world an alumnus of his old college, under the disguise of "Q." In addition to a general supervision over all the publications issued by Cassell & Co., Mr. Williams was personally responsible for the editing of the Encyclopaedic Dictionary (in fourteen parts or half-volumes); and from this he condensed himself the handy volume known as Cassell's English Dictionary: an Index of the Words and Phrases used in the English of the Present Day (1891).

Hard work did not seem to affect Mr. Williams until the winter of 1889-90, when he was one of the victims of the first epidemic of influenza. From this attack he never really recovered. In the early part of the present summer it became evident that his health was failing. A happy summer holiday in Switzerland seemed to do him good; but immediately on his return home he had a relapse, and he died, very suddenly at the last, on Wednesday, October 7. On Monday, he was buried in the West Brompton Cemetery, after a musical service at St. Philip's Church, Kensington. He leaves a widow and four children.

THE REV. PERCY MYLES.

ON the same day (October 7) died the Rev. Percy W. Myles, who, at a yet younger age, was cut short in a career of high promise by a wasting illness, also connected with influenza. Best known as a member of the Selborne Society, and editor of its monthly magazine Nature Notes, his energies overflowed in many directions. Perhaps his speciality was botany, his attainments in which won for him the fellowship of the Linnean Society. But he was equally a student of literature, and an admirable critic. In January of last year he was chosen to deliver a lecture (in English) before the Rudy Institute at Paris, upon "Contemporary English Literature: its Sources, Characteristics, and Tendencies." This was afterwards printed as a pamphlet, and noticed in the ACADEMY of March 15, 1890:

"It covers the whole of the present century, and every department of literature, within some twenty-four pages; but it is written with such brightness and with so much knowledge, that we have found it neither tedious nor impertinent. The author inclines to the conclusion that science is crushing out poetry."

Before his health broke down, Mr. Myles wrote two or three reviews for the ACADEMY, each of which, we have reason to know, attracted attention in the quarters best capable of estimating them.

Mr. Percy Myles was born in February, 1849, at Kilmoe, county Cork, of which parish his father was rector. He was educated at Tipperary Grammar School, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated as senior moderator and gold medallist in English language and literature. Though he left his native country early, he always retained the patriotic feelings of a true Irishman. Since 1878, he held a succession of clerical appointments in Middlesex, and he was also an agent of the Additional Curates' Aid Society. Ever ready to preach or lecture, he wore out a powerful frame by over-exertion, and never found time to write any book by which his name should be preserved. But he will always be remembered by those who knew him, however slightly, as the warmest of friends, the most thorough of students, and the most modest of critics. A visit from him was as exhilarating as the draught of a sea-breeze. He has left a widow, who shared his literary sympathies, and often helped him in his work. We understand that Mr. James Britten, of the Natural History Museum, has kindly undertaken to bring out the October number of Nature Notes.

THE REV. J. HOSKYN'S ABRAHALL.

WE also regret to record the death of the Rev. John Hoskyns Abrahall, whose name will be familiar to readers of the ACADEMY from his frequent contributions on very various subjects.

He was descended from a family that had long been settled in Southern Somerset, and his uncle was well known to a former generation as a Commissioner of Bankruptcy. He was born in 1829, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained the Chancellor's prize for Latin verse in 1850, the year before the more famous Charles Stuart Blayds (Calverley). He took his degree in Michaelmas term 1852, where his name appears in the second class, with that of the present Speaker of the House of Commons. In the following year he was elected to a fellowship at Lincoln College, which was then confined by statute to persons born in the diocese of Wells. On Mark Pattison's election to the Rectorship in 1861, he was instituted to the living of Combe Longa, near Woodstock, which had previously been held together with the headship of the college. Dr. Tatham, a notorious Rector in the beginning of the century, used regularly to live at Combe, and devote more attention to farming his glebe than to academical affairs. Under a later Rector (Radford), Archdeacon Hannah was for some time curate of Combe.

Mr. Hoskyns Abrahall was an old-fashioned scholar, devoted to his books, and fond to the last of turning Latin epigrams. His published works include Versiculi: or, Varieties Latin and English; and Western Woods and Waters. Within a fortnight his son followed him to the grave. J. S. C.

By the death of Sir Charles Anderson, of Lea Hall, which occurred last week, Lincolnshire has lost one of her most prominent sons. The deceased baronet was born in 1804, and during the greater portion of a long life devoted much attention to the history and architectural remains of his native county. There was probably not an old building in the shire which he had not examined. His Guide to the County of Lincoln is far superior to the common run of works of that kind. Sir Charles took great interest in Scandinavian antiquities, and visited Denmark and Norway at a time when they were a terra incognita to the ordinary Englishman. His account of a tour in Iceland, which he made many years ago, will even yet repay perusal.

We have also to record the death of Mr. Robert Cooke, who was known to several generations of literary by his position in the publishing house of Mr. John Murray, of Albemarle-street, with which he had been actively connected for no less than fifty-four years.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for October is in two respects noticeable. First, it contains articles by two new contributors—Prof. Gwatkin and the Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies. The former contributes a short essay on the "Fourfold Revelation of God," which, though not in the least original, we welcome as a personal "confidence." The latter gives a note on λογισμοί in 2 Cor. v., which suggests the hope that the distinguished writer is resuming his Pauline studies. Secondly, it lays three more stones in the building which is so slowly and so surely going forward—a reconstructed, popular, but critical view of the Old Testament. Prof. Duff, of Airedale College, gives a study of the development of Jeremiah the man; and the late Prof. Elmslie, a bright study of the Book of Zechariah. Both papers (or addresses) are thoroughly popular, but the first is more directly practical than the second. Prof. Elmslie, in fact, had developed such an intense sympathy with his audience as to be for the moment absolutely untrue to the fundamental principles of the literary criticism of the old Hebrew records. For all that, his sermon-study is still striking, though one needs to imagine preacher and congregation to pardon the otherwise startling concessions made to the Philistines. The other contributors are Dr. Cox, Prof. Marcus Dods, and Prof. Candlish, who continues his discussion of the moral character of pseudonymous books. Let us frankly say that we are disappointed with this second paper. It is very well that the author admits the locus standi of the critic and the exegete in the Christian Church. But what is to be said of this sentence: "The conclusion would seem to be that books in which a false authorship is claimed, merely in order to gain the more acceptance for their contents, cannot be divinely inspired, or any part of the canon of Scripture." Surely there is some crude thinking here. Would it not be best to drop these confusing words, "inspired" and "inspiration," altogether in speaking of written historical documents?

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BARRIER, V. Monographie des directions des Douanes de France. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 16 fr.
LANGON, Th. Die Sprache d. jungen Herder in ihrem Verhältniss zur Schriftsprache. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
MANDELKERN, S. Historische Chrestomathie der russischen Literatur von ihren Anfängen bis auf die neueste Zeit. Hannover: Hahn. 6 M.
RÉGAMÉY, F. Le Japon pratique. Paris: Hetzel. 4 fr.
WINTER, J., u. A. WENSCHKE. Die jüdische Literatur seit Abschluss d. Kanons. 1. Lfg. Trier: Mayer. 1 M. 50 Pf.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- DIETRICH, A. Abraxas. Studien zur Religionsgeschichte d. spätern Altertums. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M. 40 Pf.
LAGARDE, P. de. Altes u. neues üb. das Weihnachtsfest. Göttingen: Dieterich. 2 M.
LOISY, A. Histoire du Canon du Nouveau Testament. Paris: Maisonneuve. 15 fr.
PFLEIDERER, O. Die Entwicklung der protestantischen Theologie in Deutschland seit Kant u. in Grossbritannien seit 1825. Freiburg-i-Br.: Mohr. 10 M.
WRENDAU, P. Neu entdeckte Fragmente Philos. nebst e. Untersuchung, ob die ursprüngliche Gestalt der Schrift des sacrificis Abelis et Caini. Berlin: Reimer. 5 M.
WENSCHKE, A. Midrasch Tehillim od. hagad. Erklärung der Psalmen. Zum ersten Male ins Deutsche übers. 1. Lfg. Trier: Mayer. 2 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- ABU'U-HASAN, J. M. E. Das Mu'mil et Tarih-i Bad'nadirije. (Fasc. I: Geschichte Persiens in den J. 1747-1750.) Hrg. v. O. Mann. Leiden: Brill. 3 M.
CARO, G. Studien zur Geschichte v. Genua. I. Die Verfassung Genua's zur Zeit d. Podestat's (1190-1257). Strassburg: Heitz. 4 M.
HINZ, C. H. Zur Beurtheilung Appians u. Plutarchs in der Darstellung der Ereignisse v. der Ermordung Cæsars bis zum Tode d. M. Brutus. Ottensen: Christiansen. 1 M. 60 Pf.
HUBNER, R. Gerichtsurkunden der fränkischen Zeit. 1. Abth. Bis zum J. 1000. Weimar: Böhlau. 3 M.
KUHN, A. Beiträge zur Geschichte der Seleukiden vom Tode Antiochos' VII. Sidetes bis auf Antiochos XIII. Asiatikos 129-64 v. C. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
LÉMAN, Joseph. La Prépondérance juive: ses origines (1789-1791). Paris: Lecoffre. 4 fr.
ROTH v. SCHRECKENSTEIN, K. H. P. C. F. Graf v. Normann-Ehrenfels. k. Württemberg. Staatsminister (1756-1817). Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 6 M.
SCHUSTER v. BONSTORF, R. u. A. WEINER. Die Rechtsurkunden der österreichischen Eisenbahnen. 1. Bd. Wien: Hartleben. 18 M.
ZIMMERMANN, F. Acta Karoli IV. imperatoris inedita. Innsbruck: Wagner. 10 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERTHOLD, A. Lexique de philosophie. Paris: Delaplane. 3 fr. 50 c.
CZUBER, E. Theorie der Beobachtungsfehler. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
DIPPEL, L. Handbuch der Laubholzkunde. 2. Th. Dicotyle, Choripetalae. Urticinae bis. Frangulinae. Berlin: Parey. 20 M.
KIRCHHOFF, G. Vorlesungen üb. mathematische Physik. 3. Bd. Hrg. v. M. Planck. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M.
MEUNIER, S. Les méthodes de synthèse en minéralogie. Paris: Baudry. 12 fr. 50 c.
MOLENBROEK, P. Theorie der Quaternionen. Leiden: Brill. 7 M.
SCHÖNFLIESS, A. Krystallsysteme u. Krystallstructur. Leipzig: Teubner. 12 M.
VOLKMANN, P. Vorlesungen üb. die Theorie d. Lichtes. Unter Rücksicht auf die elast. u. die elektromagnet. Anschauung. Leipzig: Teubner. 11 M. 20 Pf.
WALLERANT, F. Traité de minéralogie. Paris: Baudry. 12 fr. 60 c.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ADAM, Lucien. Langue Moequito. Paris: Maisonneuve. 12 fr.
BASTIN, J. Etude sur les principaux adverb. Paris: Bouillon. 3 fr.
BELJAMR, A. De la Prononciation du Nom de Jean Law, le Financier. Paris: Bouillon. 1 fr. 25 c.
BLÜNKER, H. Studien zur Geschichte der Metapher im Griechischen. 1. Hft. Ueber Gleichniss u. Metapher in der att. Komödie. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
CARSEL, D. Le Dialecte flamand de France. Paris: Bouillon. 2 fr. 50 c.
COMMENTARIA in Aristotelem graeca. Vol. IV. pars III. Ammonius in Porphyrii isagogen sive V voces, ed. A. Busse. Berlin: Reimer. 7 M.
DICTIONNAIRE Français-Wagap-Anglais et Wagap-Français, par les Missionnaires Maristes. Paris: Chadenat. 10 fr.
IMMERHAU, W. Die Kulte u. Mythen Arkadiens. 1. Bd. Die arkad. Kulte. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M.
LEFMANN, S. Franz Bopp, sein Leben u. seine Wissenschaft. 1. Hälfte. Berlin: Reimer. 8 M.
MÜLLER, H. C. Historische Grammatik der hellenischen Sprache. 1. Bd. Leiden: Brill. 4 M.
NEUBAUER, A. Petite grammaire hébraïque provenant de Yemen. Texte arabe publié d'après les manuscrits conuus. Leipzig: Harrassowitz. 4 M. 50 Pf.
SALLUSTI CRISP, C. Historiarum reliquiae. Ed. F. Maurenbröcher. Fasc. I. Prolegomena. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M.
SONTAG, M. Vergil als bukolischer Dichter. Leipzig: Teubner. 5 M.
SPICHT, F. Das Verbum reflexivum u. die Superlative im Westnordischen. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 80 Pf.
TALQVIST, H. L. Babylonische Schenkungsbriefe. Transcribiert, übers. u. commentiert. Leipzig: Pfeiffer. 2 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON HERO[N]DAS.

The University, Durham: Oct. 3, 1891.

III. 8. R(utherford): κοῦ, and in his note: "If the reading is sound, this must mean," it becomes of greater importance where etc." Read κοῦ. Cottalus is bent on something worse, and the door is not closed—i.e., there is no stopping him.

III. 10. R. assigns κην τα—καστρον to Cottalus without support from the MS., and reads in 11, τήν γ' ἐμην. Read τήν γε μην, and restore the passage to Metrotime.

III. 19. K(enyon): γαι παρωτερα πολλων, which R. corrects into γαι ΠΑΡΩ τε και ΑΠΟΛΛΩΝ. The uncials apparently indicate that R. regards the words as desperate; at any rate, his remark is that "the words will give trouble." Why not, without further trouble, read και παρωτερα πολλων? Cottalus has thrown his slate between the pallet and the wall, while his knucklebones lie far away in front of the jar, which is used for all sorts of things, among the bellows and nets.

III. 21. K. της ληκυθου. R. corrects: και τη κύθη, and says, "The correction rests upon the belief that ληκυθω—an adscript explaining κύθη—was wrongly substituted for it in the text." But what evidence is there that ληκυθω is an adscript? and how did it come to be in the genitive, if we adopt R.'s reading of line 19? Read της ληκυθου, and take it after παρωτερα in l. 19 (cf. for the gen. Ap. Rh. IV. 982, II. 686).

III. 35. K. τάλης, R. τάλας. Perhaps αι λητ.

III. 43. R. gives κων—τουθε to Lampriscus, without the support of the MS., and reads κοῦ. Read κοῦ, and restore the words to Metrotime.

III. 48. K., καληθῶ ὡστε μηδ ὀδοντα κινησαι. R. corrects thus: ἀληθῶ ὡστε μηδ ὀδοντα κινησαι. The absence of accents on the last two words is, according to R.'s Preface, "intentional." It is meant to suggest either uncertainty or corruption." But κινειν ὀδοντας, "to use one's teeth," occurs in the Epistolar of Timocles (Meineke, Fr. Com. Med. iii. p. 596), and R.'s correction does not seem needed. Metrotime says her son's exploits are the talk of the place, "and they are true, so I can't use my teeth"—though whether this means that she can't eat a morsel because of her son's behaviour, or that she can't fly at his accusers, because the accusations are true, may be uncertain.

III. 50. K. ραίν, R. ράχιν. R. translates thus: "And see how he has peeled all the bridge of his nose in a wood, as if he were a creel-man of Delos, &c." But was "having the bridge of his nose peeled" peculiar to or specially characteristic of a Delian fisherman's occupation? Might we not read ράφιν (a heteroclit accusative of ραφίς - ὑπόδημα Hes.) and translate ὕλην "mud" (cf. Ar. Fr. 697)? In that case λελέθηρκε would not mean "peeled," but "made mouldy" (Ar. Fr. 511), and would appropriately express the action of mud on the leather shoes, while the comparison of the boy with the fisherman (who naturally does stand about in water a good deal) would also be appropriate.

III. 64. K. ἀστράβδ ὀκωσπεροιδε. R. gives these words to Cottalus, without MS. authority, and reads: ΑΣΤΡΑΒΔΟΚΩΣΠΕΡ ὀδα, and says in the notes: "Another crux. Perhaps the initial letters conceal the reading Ἀστράβδος or Ἀστράβδος, when the name would be that of some famous player with the δοράδες." But Cottalus has thrown aside the δοράδες as too childish (this is plain both from the passage which R. misunderstands, 19-21, and from ll. 6, 7), and would not plume himself on being an expert with them. I would suggest that the words belong to Lampriscus, and that they conceal the name of some game with the δοράδες, which it was lawful and innocent enough for a schoolmaster to have heard of and even to be able to name. Read, perhaps, στρατιδ' ὀκωσπεροιδε, "you are not satisfied to play streptid-like your schoolfellows."

III. 67. K. κινευντα μηδε καρφοσι το γ ηδιστον. R. corrects: κινευντα μηδε καρφοσι το γ ηκιστον. But the proverb appears in Ar. Lys. 474, in precisely the same form as in the MS of Hero[n]das. Read: κινευντα μηδε καρφος, εἰ το γ ηδιστον, "I'll make you as still as a mouse, if that's what you want." Of course it is not what the boy wants, but it is schoolmaster humour on such occasions to affect that it is.

V. 29. R. πρὸς Ἀμφυταινὴν ταῖτα, μὴ μὲ πληκτίζου. But it does not seem possible to construe the last three words by themselves. Remove the comma and read μὴ for μὲ: "no more of these toyings with A., if you please."

V. 59-62. K. indicates that ll. 62 and 63 are not spoken by the same person; and it is certain that 63 is spoken by Bitinna. Line 62, therefore, is not spoken by Bitinna; and the indication of the MS. to this effect is confirmed by the fact that εἴθικας (62) is in the second person. I., however, assigns 62 and preceding lines (from 56) to Bitinna, corrects εἴθικας into εἴθικα, and says: "the passage will remain obscure until we have discovered the meaning of ἀχαϊκὰς or etc." The passage as K. gives it is as follows:

(59) εμα τουτοις
τους δυο Κυδιλλ εποψεθ ημερων πεντε παρ Αντιδωροι τας αχαϊκας κινας ας πρων εθικας τοις σφυροισι τριβοντα.

R. alters εμα in 59 to μα, μά, changes τουτοις into τούτους, prints εποψεθ without accents to indicate uncertainty, and reads τριβοντας. Now, so long as the meaning of ἀχαϊκὰς is not authoritatively settled, the presumption raised by the words τοις σφυροισι τριβοντα is, I submit, that they are a special make of leg-iron or fetter. If so, there is only one person in danger of having to wear them, not two, and K.'s τριβοντα is right, and R.'s τριβοντας wrong. We must, therefore, separate τουτοις τους δυο from τριβοντα, find some construction for the words τουτοις τους δυο, and something for τριβοντα to go with. Read ελα τούτους | τους δυο, κύδιλλ, "send off this pair," i.e., Pyrrias and Gastron (for ελα, see Pind. Isth. v. (iv.) 48). At this point Gastron breaks in. Read εμ' ὕψαι. Gastron has worn the "Achaean" before, and appeals to Bitinna not to put him into them again so soon.

V. 89. K. και Γερνη εις πεμπτην. Read, perhaps, και γενεσια δ'. The γενεσια was a domestic festival in honour of the dead (cf. v. 84, ἐπήν δὲ τοῖς καλοῖσιν ἐγχευτλάσωμεν) held on the fifth of Boedromion (Mommson, Hecrotologie, p. 209 ff.).

V. 85. K. ἀξίς τὸτ ἀμ[ε]λι τ[η]ν εορτην ἐξ εορτης. R. translates, "You will then wed her . . . the one feast following on the other." But is it likely that the jealous woman would allow Gastron to marry anyone? Translate, "after our offerings to the dead, of course you will have a fine time."

VI. 15-17. K.:
αλλ ουνεκεν π[ρ]ος σ[η]ληθον εκποδων ημιν φθιρεσθε ιω βυστρα ω[τα] μουνον και γλασσαι τα δ αλλ εορτη.

R. gives these lines to a δούλη, and says "a passage which will give trouble." May not the first five words be given to Metro, who is just beginning to explain the object of her visit, when Coritto, noticing that the maidservant is pricking her ears, turns on her, bids her be off (for ἐκποδῶν absolute see L. and S.), curses her (id., for φθιρεσθε), says she is all ears and tongue; but, as for her hands, &c., with which she ought to work, they are good for nothing but a holiday?

F. B. JEVONS.

Campb^ltown: Oct. 10, 1891.

Mr. Nicholson has laid down one of the principles which must regulate the restoration of the text of Herondas—that the indications given by the papyrus must be closely followed, or at all events must be treated with more respect than has been shown towards them by Mr. Rutherford. There are at least two other principles which it is worth while to state explicitly.

(1) Herondas is not an incorrect or ungraceful writer. His Greek is fluent, simple, and idiomatic. Inelegent or unusual expressions are not to be attributed to him without necessity.

For instance, in I. 82, τῆ, Γύλλι, πῖθι· δὲῖξον οὐ βαρυνθεῖσα, is more likely than οὐ δ' ὀργισθεῖσαν. (I suggest βαρυνθεῖσα, because Mr. Kenyon marks ten letters as missing. In this portion of the text the scribe writes ει, not ι, so that βαρυνθεῖσα has ten. But no doubt there are other words which would satisfy the condition).

Again, in I. 49, the text runs—

ἀ σοι χρ . . . ζουσι' ὠδ' ἔβην ἀπαγγέλλαι

R. prints χρονίζουσι'. But would Herondas say ἔβην ἀπαγγέλλαι when he meant ἔβην ἀπαγγελοῦσα? The missing participle may have been "desiring" or "wishing"—perhaps χρονίζουσα. The shortening of the η is not an insuperable difficulty, or there may have been a form χρονίζουσα.

In I. 68 Mr. Kenyon decipheres

μάτην γὰρ Μάνδριος κατακλαίεις

For this R. reads κατακλαίεις. But κ is not very like π; and the meaning of κατακλαίω with the genitive is apparent from v. 59, ἀλλά μεν κατακλαίεις, and could not mean "to deplore Mandris." κατακλαίσεις would be nearer the letters—"you scheme against Mandris, or weave fictions to his detriment"—but it is not altogether satisfactory.

Further, Herondas must be assumed to use words in their current and familiar senses.

In II. 65. τὰ ὑπέρθυρ' ὄπτιά means that the lintel is roasted or blackened with fire (compare l. 35), not "all that lies inside the door is exposed to view."

In III. 30 f., ῥῆσιν οἶα παιδίσκων | ἢ ἐγὼ μιν εἰπέην ἢ δ πατήρ ἀνώγωμεν means "when we tell him to recite a piece or passage, which a small boy may be expected to do," not "the boy is asked to explain the meaning of παιδίσκος" (R.).

L. 33—ἐνταῖθ' ὄκως νιν ἐκ τετραμήνης ἦθεῖ means that he dribbles out the words or ῥῆσις as from a leaking pitcher (ὕδριος or προχοῦ), so that his aged and infirm father is unable to follow. Towards the end of the piece hopes seem to be expressed that chastigation will improve his delivery.

Perhaps in the last line but one we should read σὺμποδ' ὠδ' ἔπη χεῦντα,

"pouring out his verses fluently." (Herondas himself would write ἔπαι, but there is a good deal of Atticisation in the text. σὺμποδα is, I think, right, after the mention of fetters in the preceding line. In the last line, read οἶσαι θεαί.)

The normal usage of verbs again must be assumed, not uses of which there are only a few dubious instances. In IV. 44, R. reads καρκί', οὐ με ζεις:

and translates, "you snail, how you make my blood boil." I do not know whether καρκίνος ever meant a snail, but ζῶ is commonly an intransitive verb. But did Herondas write ζεις at all? The text is intelligible—θρεῖσα καρκίνου μεζορ, staring with wider and more vacant eyes than those of a crab.

In III. 10-11 R. reads

κῆν τὰ Ναυιάκου κλαῖσω οὐκ ἂν ταχέως λήξει τήν γ' ἔμην παίστην.

But λήρω is an intransitive verb. L. and S. give one or two instances of an acc. following it; but it is the χείρας or μένος of the subject of the verb—a very different thing from real transitiveness.

By assigning the words κῆν . . . παίστην to the boy Kottalos, Mr. Rutherford raises a question involving the second principle which I wish to formulate.

(2) The dramatic propriety of what is said must always be very carefully considered. Herondas is by no means deficient in subtlety of characterisation and delicacy of touch. To begin with the passage just referred to. The words quoted are much more effective as part of Métrotimé's speech; and there is the further objection that if κῆν τὰ Ναυιάκου κλαῖσω be given to Kottalos, the words must mean "if I receive such a thrashing as N. got," which is not what the origin of the phrase indicates. Until some explanation or better emendation of ἢ ὑρῆ κείται is forthcoming, I take it that Métrotimé said something like this:

καὶ (= καὶ οὐ) μεν ἐς θύρην φοιτᾷ τοῦ γραμματίστου καὶ τριηκὰς ἢ μικρῆ τὸν μισθοναίτεῖ

The last day of the month comes, and the fee has to be paid before Kottalos has put in an attendance; and if I weep my eyes out, he wont stop playing the truant. τήν γε μὴν παίστην ὄκουπε κ.τ.λ., and he has found the way to the "gambling hell," where low characters congregate, παίστην being a place where games are played, not "play" or παιδί (compare l. 64).

Mr. Rutherford has sinned more than once against the canon of dramatic poetry in this piece. In l. 34, only the words Ἄπολλον ἀγρεῦ belong to Lampriscus; they are an exclamation of surprise—surprise that so much excellent teaching should have produced so little result. What follows is spoken by Métrotimé. How would Lampriscus know about the grandmother of any one pupil? Métrotimé proceeds: τοῖ-το, φημί, χῆ μαμῆ τάληθῆ (?) εἶρε σοι κ.τ.λ. It is quite true; it is so conspicuous that his grandmother will testify to it, little as she knows of letters. Again, in l. 43, καὶ (= καὶ οὐ) τόσος λόγος τοῦδε belongs also to Métrotimé. According to R., Lampriscus makes the pointless and inappropriate remark, καὶ τόσος λόγος τοῦδε (καὶ Ionic for καὶ). Métrotimé says—it is one of Herondas's happy touches—"And he doesn't matter so much—we should be well rid of the little wretch—but when winter comes I have to pay for the broken tiles."

In 59-60 I take Euthias, &c., to be schoolfellows of Kottalos, not slaves. In l. 61 it would be safer to assume that ὄκασπερ ὄδε (like your schoolfellows) belongs to Lampriscus's speech, and to look for some adverb descriptive of a game, and to be construed with παίζειν (l. 63) in the letters ἀπτροβδ. In l. 70, πρὶν χολῆ βῆξαι seems to be right (reading χολῆ, a slight change), before I cough or choke with anger. R. writes—πρὶν χολῆν λῆξαι, making Lampriscus speak of his own anger as a transitory outburst! In the next line, μὴ μ' (= μὴ) ἰκετεύω, Ἀδμπρισκε is not very difficult. Πρίσκε is at least unnecessary. Mr. Rutherford would be surprised if a pupil, awaiting chastigation, addressed him as "Ruther" or "Therford"; and even a Greek γραμματιστής, whose social position and dignity were not very great, might be supposed to feel some astonishment. If it is suggested that Κόττιδος in the next line stands for Κότταλος, we should have the unusual phenomenon of a boy Francis calling himself "Fanny."

There are several passages in the Μεστροπός (I.) where dramatic propriety comes into play. In l. 7 I fail to see how καλεῖ τις can be said either by the servant or by Métriché. Métriché already knows that there is somebody at the door (l. 1). The servant says καλεῖ (sc. δέσποινα, compare V. 56), "my mistress is calling." Then Métriché's voice is heard, τίς ἐστιν; but, before Threïsea has time to answer, Gullis herself presses forward and answers the question (it's Gullis, dear old Gullis), bidding the servant stand aside (στρέψον τι, δούλη—the slightly contemptuous and unfamiliar δούλη belongs to the visitor).

In l. 42, κείνος ἦν ἔλεθρ belongs to Gullis, whose speech is uninterrupted. Métriché does not treat the proposal as a practical one, of which the details are worth considering. She lets Gullis say her say, and then refuses in the strongest terms. In ll. 43-47 there is scarcely enough evidence to justify a serious attempt at restoration; but Gullis perhaps said something like this:

κεῖνος ἦν ἔλεθρ,
οὔτοι τὸ πραχθὶν μῆδὲ εἰς ἀναστροφή.
(not a soul will bring up the past against you) μένει δ' ἴσως—τὸ δέημα δ' ἄγριος χεῖμῶν ἴσως ἂν ἀφέλοι τοῦτο—κούδὲ εἰς ὄδων τὸ μέλλον ἡμέων· ἄπτατος γὰρ ἀνθρώποις τύχη πλανητῆ τ'· ἀλλὰ μὴ τις ἔστηκε σύνεργος ἡμέων (οὐ ἡμῶν)

Μητρ· οὐδὲ εἰς κ.τ.λ.

(I had arrived at σύνεργος before seeing Mr. Nicholson's notes. It is practically traceable in the text.)

L. 87 is probably to be assigned to Gullis. She speaks of herself in the third person—ἥδιον' οἶνον Γύλλις οὐ πέπωκε. Métriché has more tact than to praise her own wine as the best obtainable.

In l. 89, Μυρτάλη and the other, whatever her name was, are not daughters of Métriché, but young women under the control of Gullis (compare γυναι ταῖς νέους in l. 75, tell such tales to your own young women). Gullis hopes that they may remain young—i.e., manageable, or, perhaps, not insensible to passion while she lives.

In the Ἀσκληπιᾶ ἀνατιθεῖσαι there is a passage where Mr. Rutherford has violated three principles at once—that of dramatic propriety, normal grammar, and unreasonable adherence to the tradita scriptura. It is ll. 82-84:

ευμενης ης
καλοῖς ἐπ' ἰροῖς ταῦδε κῖ τινες τῶνδε εἰας σκηνηται τε και γενης ασσον

Here he reads

καὶ τις' ἐκ τῶνδε
ἔψ, ὀπνίηται τε καὶ γενῆ' ὄσσοε.

"May she not only find a husband, but fill thou her with offspring." Is the subjunctive ever so used in Greek? Would not nubal be represented by ὀπιέσθω or ὀπιούτο? and γενῆ σάσσε would most naturally mean "inflict upon them the encumbrance of lineage," or "saddle them with inconvenient relatives"! (It is due to Mr. Rutherford to say that this unhappy phrase is not his own, but suggested to him by a coadjutor). But is the text unsatisfactory as it stands? "Be propitious to them and to their husbands and relations," καὶ εἴ τινας τᾶνδε ἔασ' ὀπιηται τε—not an unlikely substantive from ὀπιώω, though it does not seem to be otherwise known—καὶ γενῆς ἄσσον, near them in race or descent, γένει προσήκοντες.

I add a few miscellaneous suggestions towards the establishment of the text.

I. 3. τίς τὴν θύρην; (sc. ἀρρόσει); ἔσῶδε! (come in!)

37. κατ' οὖν λήσεις γηῶσα = λήσεις οὖν καταγηῶσα κ.τ.λ.

This is best taken as a question: "will you then . . . ?"

In 53 and 56 I should prefer to read ἄνδρας δὲ Πισῶ κ.τ.λ.

and ἰδὼν σε καθόδῳ τῆ' κ Πισῆς, unless some satisfactory account of Μισή can be given. This would provide a more illustrious career for the redoubtable Gryllos, and it is graphically not very difficult. Both quantities, Pisa and Pisa, are well known. The following words were, perhaps, ἐκύμνη | τὰ σπλαγχν' ἔρῳ σε κ.τ.λ.

II. 71 f. ὦ γῆρας
σοὶ θυέτω· ἐπεὶ σπλῆν' ἂν ἐξεφύσησεν, ἄσπερ (Φιλίππος?) ἐν Σάμῳ κοθ' ὁ [βρέθος?]
γελᾷς; κίναϊδός εἰμι . . . ἄλλ' ἔκη' ἀλκῆς βαρτέων λεηλατοῖμ' ἂν, εἰ Θαλῆς εἴη.

σπλῆνα and λεηλατοῖμι have been suggested to me by my friend, Mr. E. J. Palmer. Battaros says: Let him thank my old age for his escape. His audacity would have been knocked out of him otherwise, which happened to that overbearing Philippos in Samos. You smile, Thales? My position in society may be a humble one, but in the matter of personal courage I should be able to despoil a Thales any day.

He proceeds (l. 79):

ἔρῳ σὺ μὲν ἴσως Μυρτάλης· οὐδὲν δεῖνόν.
ἐγὼ δὲ (πυρᾶν?)—ταῦτα σοὺς ἐκεῖν' ἔξεις κ.τ.λ.

You are in love with Myrtale. Well and good. I have an affection for my bread and butter (πυρᾶ, in the sense of τὰ ἄλφια, or the money which buys them—compare ll. 19-20). Give me the one and you shall have the other; or, if your passion is so very ardent, purchase her outright, and use your own property as you please.

III. 7. αὶ δορκάδες. How did Mr. Rutherford fail to see that ἀσπράγαλοι was an intrusive "adscript"? The fem. article belongs to the missing word, and the line is unmetrical as it stands.

75. Perhaps οὐδ' ἔκου χάρις (or ἔκοι) οἱ μύες ὁμοίως τὸν σίδηρον τρώγουσι not even selling him for export to a country where the lash is hard enough to bite into steel—not even there would there be punishment severe enough to keep him straight.

97. Read αὶ σαὶ θεαὶ βλεποῖεν

IV. 86. ὅπως βέβηκεν, how it stands, its attitude.

None of these readings involves much deviation from the text. For instance, Mr. Kenyon's specimen page suffices to show that τασ γρα might be almost indistinguishable from τα σπλ (l. 77), in a handwriting not very dissimilar from that of the scribe whose copy we have. It is to be hoped that a certain number of conjectures will be either decisively confirmed or finally put out of court by further examination of the papyrus—examination directed upon the particular letters involved.

W. R. HARDIE.

"MEASURE FOR MEASURE" (ACT I., SC. I.)

London: Sept. 17, 1891.

"Of government the properties to unfold, Would seem in me to affect speech and discourse, Since I am put to know that your own science Exceeds, in that, the lists of all advice My strength can give you: then no more remains But that to your sufficiency as your worth is able And let them work."

This passage has always been a stumbling-block to editors of Shakspeare. Various suggestions have been made with a view to removing its acknowledged obscurity; but no proposed reading has obtained general acceptance. I venture to think that the difficulty may be fully met by the following slight changes:—(1) After "strength" insert "I." (2) After "remains" place a colon. (3) For the succeeding "But" read "Put."

The Duke first avows his inability to instruct Escalus, whose knowledge "exceeds the lists of all advice"; but he continues, "My strength [authority] I can give you, then no more remains." Having knowledge, and invested with power, nothing more is required to constitute him an effective ruler. "Put that [my deputed authority] to your sufficiency [knowledge and ability] as your worth is able [as your virtues fit you to do], and let them work." After a few more words he gives Escalus his commission.

Dr. Johnson devotes a long note to this passage, and paraphrases it in accordance with the meaning which he seeks to give it by some verbal changes of no value; while he misses the point that Escalus only received power with the gift of his commission, and makes the Duke say, "Your virtue is now invested with power equal to your knowledge," when as yet it was not.

The slight change I propose is consistent with the probability that the Duke's speech would express his intention to invest Escalus with authority, of which the actual text gives no indication. Moreover, if my reading may be accepted, it disposes of the rather extravagant conjecture of Theobald and Malone: that two half-lines are missing after "sufficiency"—half-lines which Sir T. Hanmer boldly ventured to supply "ex hypothesi." The peculiar expression, "I am put to know," has been objected to, but parallels the modern expression sanctioned by such a master of English as Mr. Ruskin, "To be by way of knowing." In his article on "The Black Arts" Mr. Ruskin says, "Though I am by way of knowing as much geography as most people."

S. T. WHITEFORD.

GUILLAUME DE DIGULLEVILLE.

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: Oct. 7, 1891.

A somewhat lengthy discussion took place in the ACADEMY two years ago (March, 1889) as to the correct spelling of the name of the author of the Trois Pèlerinages. In view of the recent announcement that an edition of the French text of these poems is in preparation for the Roxburghe Club, it may be as well to point out that M. Gaston Paris (La Littérature Française au Moyen Age, 2^e éd.; p. 311, l. 23, p. 313, l. 39, p. 314, l. 15) has now definitively adopted Guillaume de Digulleville as the correct form of the name, Digulleville being apparently a place in Normandy in the modern Department of Manche. It may be added that this particular form of the name was not mentioned in the discussion referred to above.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

PAPAL INFALLIBILITY.

Louvain: Oct. 10, 1891.

In his remarkable review of Miss Brane's Life of St. Dominic (ACADEMY, October 10), Mr.

Arthur Galton says: "The difficulty is to believe that the same authority should be at once semi-barbarous and infallible." He is in the right, and no one will ever contradict him. But these words show that the reviewer, like many thousands of others, has no true idea of Papal Infallibility. This has nothing to do with impeccability; and no Catholic has ever believed that the Pope is impeccable. Infallibility is concerned only with the teaching of dogmas, and, in this respect also, it has very narrow limits in the minds of Catholics. It consists only in this assumption, "that the Pope is a true witness of the Christian Faith": that when, after a long and minute study of the matter, and accurate historical researches, he declares, in the name of the whole Church, that this or that dogma has been always believed by Christians, his testimony is assumed to be true and free from error. Papal Infallibility is only that and nothing more.

C. DE HARLEZ.

"THE SCAPEGOAT."

Hawthorns, near Keswick: Oct. 10, 1891.

In acknowledging the justice of Mr. Budgett Meakin's criticisms of what is called the local colour of The Scapegoat, and in telling you that I have asked the printers to correct such of the minor errors as relate to the spelling of Moorish words and proper names, will you permit me to say how much my book owes to the graphic and accurate sketches of travel which that brilliant young Tangier journalist has contributed during the past six or seven years to the pages of the Times of Morocco?

HALL CAINE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 13, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture Society: "Brain Rust," by Sir James Crichton-Browne, illustrated with Drawings and Diagrams.

4 p.m. South Place Institute: "Africa: its Past and Future," by Mr. J. Scott Keltie.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Luxury and Refinement," by Mr. B. Bosanquet.

MONDAY, Oct. 13, 5 p.m. Hellenic: "The Old Hecatompedon," by Mr. Penrose; "The Vitruvian Account of the Greek Stage," by Mr. Louis Dyer.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Head and Face," III., by Prof. W. Anderson.

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 21, 8 p.m. Microscopical: "The Foraminifera from the Gault of Folkestone," by Mr. F. Chapman; "New Infusoria from the Freshwaters of the United States," by Dr. A. C. Stokes; "Leach's Lantern Microscope," Demonstration, by Messrs. W. J. Chadwick and W. Leach.

THURSDAY, Oct. 22, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Upper Extremity," I., by Prof. W. Anderson.

FRIDAY, Oct. 23, 8 p.m. New Shakspeare: "The Analogues of the Story of Marina, and the Origins of the Story of Lear," by Mr. P. Z. Round.

SCIENCE.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE CHALDAEAN EPIC.

Edubar—Nimrod. Eine altbabylonische Heldensage. By Alfred Jeremias. (Leipzig: Teubner.)

It was unfortunate for Dr. Jeremias that his interesting little book on the Chaldean Epic was in type before Mr. Pinches announced his discovery of the true name of its hero. At the same time, it says but little for the critical judgment of the German scholar that he should not have accepted the correct reading of the name at once, and have seen that it represents the Gilgames of Aelian. Dr. Jeremias, indeed, is evidently a philologist, rather than an historian or a critic. In his Appendices on the relation of Istar to Semiramis and of Gilgames to Heraklès, though his instincts lead him in the right direction, he adopts a hesitating tone, which indicates that he is treading on unfamiliar ground. The Appendices in question should either not have been written or else have been worked out in fuller detail.

The bulk of the book consists of an introduction to the ancient Chaldean Epic, which recounts the Twelve Labours of Gilgames, and a translation or paraphrase of its contents so far as they have been preserved to us. The admirable edition of the text by Prof. Haupt has been made the basis of the new translation. Since the publication of George Smith's Chaldean Genesis in 1875, our knowledge of the Assyrian vocabulary has made great strides; nevertheless, it is striking how little substantial difference there is between the latest rendering of the Epic and that given for the first time by the English Assyriologist, in spite of the patronising tone adopted by Dr. Jeremias towards the latter. The difference lies in the meaning attached to individual words rather than in the general sense of the passages in which they occur.

It is needless to say that Dr. Jeremias's work as a translator has been well and carefully done, and that everyone who wants to see the translation of the Epic brought up to the present level of knowledge ought to procure a copy of the book, the price of which, moreover, places it within the reach of the poorest scholar. Let him remember, however, that the title of the book has already become obsolete. The provisional name of Izdubar applied to the hero of the Epic in default of anything better has vanished into thin air, and the identification with the Biblical Nimrod has met with the fate which it deserved. The identification, in fact, proved how much the Assyriologists had to learn in the way of historical and Biblical criticism.

Dr. Jeremias has added some well-chosen illustrations to his work, among which it may be noticed that the divine figure falsely identified with Merodach by George Smith is rightly described by him as a figure of Istar. But why does he call Ubara-Tutu, the father of the Chaldean Noah, Kidin-Marduk, and Xisuthros, the Chaldean Noah himself, Sit-napishtim? They happen to be two of the very few Babylonian names whose real pronunciation has been certified to us by Greek tradition. It augurs badly for the historical sense of the Assyriologists if they prefer their own readings to those of Bérossos. Nor can Dr. Jeremias be right in identifying the "twin" mountains of Mäsu, through which the sun passes at rising and setting, with the desert plain of Mas in Northern Arabia.

It is the privilege of a reviewer to pick out the flaws in the book he criticises, and to say but little about the rest of the work. In a progressive science like Assyriology errors of detail and differences of opinion are inevitable, and do not detract from the value of a good piece of work. And Dr. Jeremias's book is not only a good piece of work, but a useful piece of work as well.

A. H. SAYCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CELTIC ETYMOLOGIES IN FICK'S COMPARATIVE DICTIONARY, VOL. I.

Alum Bay, Isle of Wight: Sept. 7, 1891.

The first volume of the new edition of Dr. Fick's Comparative Dictionary of the Indo-Germanic Languages contains a large number of Celtic etymologies; and the reviews of that volume by Prof. Sayce in the ACADEMY for September 5, 1891, and by Prof. Victor Henry in the Revue Critique for August 17, 1891, are so worded as to convey the impression that all or some of these etymologies are due to me. I wish to state distinctly that this is not the case. My share of the new edition—the Wortschatz der Keltischen Spracheinheit—is confined to the second volume, and the MS. is still in the hands of the translator, Prof. Bezzenberger, by whom alone it has been utilised.*

My object in making this statement is partly to disclaim the credit of many excellent combinations which are Dr. Fick's, not mine, and partly to relieve myself from responsibility for some etymologies which seem to me erroneous. Such are the following:

P. 3, l. 24, The Ir. ind, inn "end," Old-Welsh hin, may be cognate with Goth. andais, but cannot come from ántos*, which would yield ét in Irish.

P. 17, l. 2, p. 167, l. 28, and p. 352, l. 21, in Old-Ir. om "raw," which Dr. Fick writes óm, and compares with óμως, Skr. áma, the o is short.

P. 21, l. 23, camb. páp "jeder." Read pavp.

P. 35, l. 28, p. 403, l. 32, the Old-Ir. gloss ad-gaur "I address," "I entreat," should be connected with γᾶρος, and not with ἀγορά, &c. Dr. Fick was misled by the lemma convenio, which here means "I accost," not "I assemble."

P. 43, l. 32, for cedidit, read cecidit. Here and elsewhere I correct an obvious misprint.

P. 46, l. 19, "altirisch cu can m. Hund" should be cú, m. gen. con.

P. 47, last line, p. 427, l. 22, Clotri (= O.H.G. Hloterich) is Cymric, not Irish.

P. 49, l. 9, p. 420, l. 10. As kv becomes p in Gaulish, the Gaulish vindos "white," cannot possibly be connected with Skr. √çvind or Goth. hveit-s. Rather compare (with Kluge) Goth. vinrus, Eng. winter, as the white season.

P. 49, penult. line, the Old-Ir. toqu "eligo," is from "to-gusó," not "to-gusu."

P. 50, l. 12, ro-genair should be ro-génair = pro-gegn-*.

P. 53, ll. 9, 10, p. 433, l. 4 from bottom, dele "ghai, Kymr. gwaew, Corn. gew."

P. 53, l. 18, p. 434, l. 31, dele "altir. gaim."

P. 53, l. 22, for gaim, camb. gaem, read gem, gam.

P. 70, l. 23, dan Gabe, Talent. Read dán.

P. 71, l. 6, p. 460, l. 4. As d is the Old-Ir. consonant which corresponds with Latin d, the Old-Ir. tenge "tongue," can have nothing to do with Latin lingua, later lingua. It may perhaps be connected with Latin ta-n-go.

P. 80, l. 6, p. 474, penult. line, Ir. cóica, "fifty," now caoga, is not from cóic-ca(t), but from cóiccont-*, a primeval Celtic qongekont. See Richard Schmidt in Brugmann and Streitberg's Indogermanische Forschungen, i. 45.

P. 87, l. 30, p. 487, l. 31, for ambactes, read ambactos.

P. 90, l. 20, The Ir. co-beden, "conjugation" (from con-vedná*), and co-bodlas (not "con-bodlas"!), "communion," belong to the root 2. vedh (p. 125), not to √bhendh.

P. 92, l. 29, for Kym. bothar, bozar, read Kymr. byddar.

P. 98, l. 8, p. 502, last line, for neart read nert.

P. 99, l. 35, p. 505, l. 11, "irisch inga

* See his paper, entitled "Die indogermanischen gutturalreihen" (Bezz. Beitr., xvi. 236, note 3).

Nagel." The Old-Ir. form is ingen. See Ascoli, Glossarium palaeo-hibernicum, p. lxxxvii.

P. 102, l. 24, "irisch mín exilis." Ir. mín is exilis, and belongs to minus, p. 509; Ir. mín (= W. mwyn) is mollis, tener, tenellus.

P. 112, l. 1, "camb. ieu jung." Ieu is the comparative of ieuanc, and means "younger."

P. 112, l. 10, p. 521, l. 25, for altir. iodhna read altir. idna.

P. 116, ll. 8, 12, for altirisch ruadh read altir. rúad.

P. 119, l. 29. The assumed development of t from j (y) is impossible in Irish, and also (I venture to say) in Greek.

P. 126, l. 9, p. 308, l. 2, p. 544, l. 12, "altir. finnaim ich finde." So, also, Windisch. But finnaim (= W. gwn) means "I know."

P. 128, l. 5. Here Ir. fáith "prophet," is put doubtfully with Skr. vātmi, Gr. αἰθίοθα. But fáith (with Latin vātes) rather belongs to the West-European group represented by Goth. vāts, N.H.G. Wuth, Old-Norse ōðr. See Kluge, s.v. Wut. See, also, Dr. Fick himself at p. 542.

P. 144, l. 19. Here "altir. tain Diebstahl" is referred to the root stā "bergen, stehlen." The word meant is táin "a driving," from to-agni*, root ag, whence ájūmi, ἄγω, ago. See azó, p. 2.

P. 217, l. 14, "altir. gen Mund." The word meant is gin, which comes from genu* = γένυς, just as bir "spit," il "many," mid "mead," and smír "marrow," come respectively from beru* (= Latin veru), *(p)elu (= Goth. filu), medu* (= Gr. μέθυ), and smero* = O.H.G. smēro, now Schmeer.

P. 218, l. 8, for "altir. gaim" read altcymr. gaem.

P. 254, l. 9, "ir. una reinigen." The word meant is úna, which has lost initial p, and is cognate with Latin pūrus, &c.

P. 260, l. 24, p. 486, last line, p. 487, l. 2, "altir. lin voll" is compared with Skr. prāná. The word meant is lán = W. llawn.

P. 296, l. 1, "altir. léic sinere." Read léic "sine," Sg. 222^b, 4.

P. 304, l. 10, for adhaereo read adhaereo.

P. 330, l. 2, "altir. súth fetus." Read suth, which is cognate with vós, √su, just as súth "rainy weather," is cognate with √w, √sū.

P. 349, l. 4, "altirisch aual, pl. aualen Apfel." This should be "Mittelkymrisch aual, pl. aualeu," now afal, pl. afalau.

P. 350, l. 25. Here the Old-Ir. "ám Schaar" is compared with Latin agmen. But in the only MS. in which a subst. ám has been found it always means "hand." See Ascoli, Glossarium palaeo-hibernicum, p. xl. No reliance can, of course, be placed on O'Reilly's "am s. a people, go ám sea-faring people."

P. 353, l. 26, should be cancelled. To compare the Gaulish prefix ande- and the Old-Ir. ind- with Gr. ἀντ, Latin ante is to break one of the best established phonetic laws. The Irish cognate of ante is étan "forehead."

P. 360, last line. The "britisch ep" horse, is found only in derivatives, such as Welsh ebawl "colt," Corn. ebol, ebel.

P. 362, l. 18, for omn read omun.

P. 364, l. 6, for altir. (iom) raim read altir. (imm)ráimm; and for im-rad "sie umruderten" read imraset (rectius immráset), L. U. 26^a, 6.

P. 364, l. 28, for heirpp read heirp.

P. 365, l. 14, for elerhe read elerhe (rectius elerch).

P. 369, l. 23, for com-arpi Miterbe read com-arbe Erbe, Nachfolger. In Wb. 19, c. 20, comarpi renders the "heredes" of the text (Ep. ad Galatas, iii. 29).

P. 372, l. 24. As ail "rock" is a stem in k (or q?), for aljaka read aljak (or aljaq?).

P. 378, l. 4 from bottom, for cá-c, pá-p read cá-ch, pá-p.

P. 394, l. 10, for prenn read prenu.

P. 403, l. 4, dele "altir. gen. grúin," which seems a loan-word, connected with Eng. griffin, Germ. greif.

P. 405, l. 23, for blacht read blicht. The Irish blicht (from mleg-ti*) and mlacht "milk," here connected with γάλατος and lac, really belong to ἀ-μέλας, mulgeo, &c., p. 517.

P. 408, l. 28. If the nasal in γγγί, gingvire, is radical, the Ir. giugraun "barnacle-goose," cannot be connected.

P. 412, l. 27, dele "altir. g'á Gans (aus gend-?)" From gend only genu could come.

P. 415, l. 6, for ro-gad read ro-gád.

P. 418, l. 24, for ad-grenniu read in-grenniu.

P. 422, l. 4. The "gallisch Centrónes" is here connected with κέντρον. But the true reading seems Centrónes. See Glück, Der deutsche Name Brachio, München, 1864, p. 13.

P. 425, l. 4, "altir. cobh." Read cob.

P. 428, l. 14, "irisch cun hoch." Perhaps Ir. con, in names like Con-chobar, Con-gus, is meant, or Welsh cyn-, posttonic -cwn.

P. 434, l. 2, for "altir. goss Gans" read altir. géis Schwan.

P. 444, l. 6. The Old-Ir. torbe "gain, profit," now tarbha, is here connected with Goth. thaurban. But the aspiration of the b shows that this is impossible. Torbe seems = to-ro-be, as forbe "perfecting, completion," now forba, is = for-be.

P. 444, l. 33. The Old-Ir. tol "desire," seems from to-láa*, root lê, p. 539. It cannot, at all events, be connected with Latin tollo or Goth. thullan.

P. 445, l. 31. The Old-Ir. tir is a stem in s, not in i.

P. 446, l. 23. The Irish stem tiprat- "a well," is here equated with Latin Tiburt-. But tiprat- comes from to-aith-bhurant- (compare the cognate verb do-epprannat affluant), and is cognate with Goth. bruuna, Gr. φρέαρ.

P. 451, l. 9. The stem of Ir. dám (cognate with δῆμος, Dor. δᾶμος) is dámā, not dámo.

P. 454, l. 28, for altir. derna Hand read altir. derna Handfläche.

P. 455, l. 6. The Gaulish druida is here, as usual, connected with δρῦς. This seems mere volks-etymologie. Connect it rather with the Pruss. druwi-s, "belief," the Goth. triggys, the Germ. trou, and compare for the meaning sooth-sayer, Wahr-sager.

P. 456, l. 28. Here the Old-Ir. dilgud "remissio," is connected with δόλιχος, indulgeo, &c. But it is the verbal noun of do-lugim, and stands for dē-logetu.

P. 457, l. 5 from bottom, p. 458, l. 7. The d of the Irish proclitic prep. do is a t which has been medialised owing to the absence of accent. Do (from to-) cannot therefore be connected with the -de in οἰκάν-δε, the -do in en-do, &c. Unless Goth. du stands for "thou, I know of no cognate.

P. 462, l. 6. Dele "gälisch dag, brit. dag, dager," which are modern loans from English.

P. 473, penult. line, dele cambr. edil, &c. The dd in the modern eiddil proves that it cannot possibly be cognate with Latin petilus.

P. 485, l. 15, for unad read unad.

P. 499, ll. 21, 30, for ni read ní.

P. 502, ll. 6, 7. Old-Ir. nem "heaven," and Corn. nef cannot be connected with νέφος, nabhas, as the Breton env proves that the Old-Celtic form was nemos, not nebos.

P. 506, l. 19, for ambe- read ambi-.

P. 507, l. 16, for more read mori.

P. 514, l. 18, for mébol read mebol.

P. 522, last line, for jag read jagi.

P. 532, l. 22. Here Dr. Fick, following Curtius, connects the Old-Ir. at-luchur "I say," with Latin loquor, Gr. λαλέω, &c. The Mid.-Ir. to-thluigim shows that the root of atluchur begins with t, and that at-luchur is the right spelling. Whether Latin loquor stands for lloquor* (as lātus for lātus* = τλητός), and, if so, whether the Old-Slav. tlŭkŭ "erklärang, übersetzung," or the Lith. tuikas "interp...r," is cognate must leave philologists to decide. If lloquor is the prehistoric form, loquor cannot be cognate with λαλέω.

P. 536, l. 8. The Old-Ir. lige is a stem in io, not in s.

P. 529, l. 4. Lutetia. Is not this a scribe's error for Lucetia? The forms in the MSS. of Ptolemy and Strabo begin with Λουκο-.

P. 557, l. 13, for saileach read gen. sailech.

P. 559, l. 8, for sucknam read sucnam. But the only quotable Old-Welsh form of this verb is the compound dissuncnetic (gl. exhausta).

P. 578, l. 26, for chwegrwyn read chwegrwn.

I trust that some good Iranian scholar will do for the Zend comparisons what I have here tried to do for the Celtic. Dr. Fick loves his science too well to be offended by honest criticism; and his book is so useful, and, on the whole, so excellent, that it is the duty of every specialist to help in making it as perfect as possible.

WHITLEY STOKES.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. will issue shortly a work by Dr. G. Thin on Leprosy, dealing with its history, geographical distribution, symptoms, course, pathology, and treatment, and with the legislative enactments which have been put in force in different countries where the disease has prevailed.

FINE ART.

A Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. Edited by Dr. G. Smith, W. Wayte, and G. E. Marindin. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. In 2 vols. (Murray.)

THERE are few subjects upon which the modern reader of ancient texts is more liable to be puzzled than upon the processes of antiquity—the processes of art, manufacture, or occasional works. There are many descriptions extant of the way in which things were done, but they are not clear to us. Sometimes the cause of this is with ourselves. What does an ordinary scholar know of weaving, or of making a road? Few readers have near them an institute like the Pitt-Rivers collection at Oxford, in which the simpler and older methods of weaving or spinning or the like may be studied. Sometimes the process to be described was unfamiliar to the writer himself. Not all authors had built their own bridges, like Caesar, or actually seen the laying-out of a camp, like Polybius. Sometimes, again, no doubt, the writer left out many little touches, as too well known or too trivial, and we suffer from their suppression. Pliny, for instance, leaves many matters only half described. But with this obscurity the editors and writers of the new Dictionary of Antiquities have set themselves to cope; and their descriptions of work, careful, but not over-technical, should be of the greatest service. (By an unhappy oversight, however, the two bridges of Xerxes are run into one by the author of the article "Pons.")

Not only in this department, however, is the new edition fuller and clearer than the old. The increase in bulk, giving about eight hundred pages more, is easily understood when we see how the old articles have been remodelled, rewritten, or enlarged, according to need, and lavishly illustrated. So many new topics have claimed a place, so many old ones have grown in importance and demand more space, that we are surprised not to find the complete work even bigger than it is. Ancient art, for instance, now calls for lengthy articles on gems, on painting, on architecture, on sculpture, and needs many illustrations to bring out its points. The article on "Terra-cottas" (by Mr. A. S. Murray) is full and well up-to-date, but it seems oddly named among a series of articles bearing classical titles. The illustrations of the article on "Statuaria Ars" (by Mr. E. A. Gardner) are not all equally good. The face is a not unimportant part of statuary; yet here we find that the faces of the later statues or reliefs are made to look tame and spiritless, while the stony smile of the archaic ones is not very well caught. Indeed, we think that some of the pictures throughout the work are hardly worthy of their place. There is one which should never have been inserted at all, and those on p. 597 of vol. i. and p. 566 of vol. ii. are total failures. Some of the others, perhaps, suffer from not being printed on better paper. There are, of course, many good ones, and many which (as those on hairdressing, "Coma") will, with all their plainness, be found very helpful. But, speaking generally, the designs are less happy than the diagrams, some of which are wonderfully clear—e.g., that of the various optical corrections used in the Parthenon ("Templum").

It is impossible to turn over the pages of these volumes, however cursorily, without seeing how enormously the knowledge of antiquity has been extended since the time of the first and second editions (1842, 1848; earlier than the completion of Grote's History). As Dr. Smith says, the last forty years "have been a period of quite exceptional activity both in classical research and exploration"; and the views held on many of the subjects treated "have been greatly altered by newly discovered inscriptions, by additions to museums, and by the labours of recent scholarship bestowed upon such collections." It is the inscriptions chiefly which have increased our knowledge of constitutional antiquities. On this and on other sides the editors have aimed at completeness in their list of subjects, and we do not suppose that they are far from having attained it; the only topic on which we have consulted the index in vain is that of the winds. It was natural to think that Boreas had as much claim to insertion as Boëtes. We have read with particular interest the articles on "Exercitus" (by Mr. Purser), "Fictile" (Mr. Cecil Smith), "Princeps" (Prof. Pelham), "Vas" (Mr. Tubbs), and "Via" (Mr. Perry). That on "Agricoltura" (by Prof. Wilkins), though rather dry, shows that it was possible to add something both new and true to Prof. W. Ramsay's original excellent article. But for the moment, at least, nothing will be consulted more often or more eagerly than the analysis at the end of vol. ii. of what the new Ἀθηναίων πολίτεια has to tell us on various subjects treated of earlier in the Dictionary. It was published too late to be used by the writers of the articles, but by a happy thought it has been thus turned to account by Dr. Hager, Mr. Wayte, and Mr. Marindin.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MENTION OF AN IONIAN GREEK IN THE TABLETS OF TEL EL-AMARNA.

Queen's College, Oxford: Oct. 10, 1891.

There seems to be no end to the surprises which the Tel el-Amarna tablets have in store for us. I have just found in one of them (Mittheilungen aus den orientalischen Sammlungen, ii., No. 42, l. 16) the mention of an "Ionian" who was connected in some way with "the country of Tyre." The passage is as follows:

"amil Yivna ana mat Zuri ina-luqi ina yume samani abes ipsu aná ina-su yiyabu amatu sorittu ina pani sarri."

"The Ionian marched (?) against the country of Tyre; doing this deed in it for eight days, he speaks seditious words before the king."

Unfortunately I do not know the signification of the word ina-luqi. The name of the "Ionian" is identical with the Biblical Javan, since the Hebrew syllable yav would necessarily be represented in Assyrian by yiv.

A. H. SAYCE.

"THE STORY OF THE SEKHTI."

London: Sept. 30, 1891.

Have you space to note a little discovery which shows in what unexpected fashion additions may be made to the fragmentary records of Egypt?

Mr. Percy E. Newberry (who is now devoting himself to the Archaeological Survey of Egypt), while turning over a box-full of fragments of papyri in the great collection belonging to Mr. Tyssen-Amherst at Didlington, Norfolk, observed among them a number of small pieces with writing in the ancient style of the Middle Kingdom c. B.C. 2500. Some of these he strongly suspected to be from the Story of the Sekhti, the main part of which is contained in two copies at Berlin. Mr. Newberry carefully traced them all, and I have since examined these tracings with him. Not only portions of the commencement of the Story of the Sekhti, but also a few small chips from the beginning of Sanehat are among them, together with others that I could not immediately identify. There can be no doubt but that these fragments are the "rubbish" of the great papyri purchased by Lepsius in London about 1840. Such rubbish is very precious. The beginning of the Story of Sanehat is missing from the Berlin Papyrus, but most fortunately Prof. Maspero discovered some years ago a very late and corrupt copy of it in a tomb at Thebes. The Amherst fragments, of a few words each, are enough to prove the genuine antiquity of the text as well as the corruptness of the copy.

Mr. Newberry very kindly promised me all his copies; and I hope to publish them, along with a still more important fragment from the British Museum collection, in the December number of the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology.

F. L. GRIFFITH.

THE AMORITES AND HEBREWS IN EARLY CUNEIFORM INSCRIPTIONS.

Weston-super-Mare: Oct. 10, 1891.

Prof. Sayce's letter in the ACADEMY of October 3 (p. 291) raises several curious questions, on which allow me to make a few notes.

1. It has seemed to me that the name Mamortha or Mabortha applied to Shekem contained Martu, and showed its identity with Brathu, and indicated that the name had travelled southwards like Usu.

2. "The land of the Amorites," as shown in the Tel el-Amarna tablets, corresponds with the information to be drawn from the Old Testament, and from Egyptian records, which also concurrently show us an Amorite and Hittite offset of very early date in the South, naturally to be connected with the Hyksós domination in Egypt and settlement of Zoan.

3. I have long ago conjectured and noted that the bow-bearing Sati of the Egyptian monuments might be the Suti of whom Friedrich Delitsch writes in Wo lag das Paradies? but the data seemed to put them off in too remote a region. Now, however, that difficulty is removed. In an Egyptian relief, Set, Sut, Sutekh, the great god of Hyksós and Hittites, is teaching Thothmes III. to use the bow. Had this name any original connexion with Sutu, Sütü? (Woodcut, Wilkinson ed. Birch. III. 137.)

4. Khubur = כּוּבּוּר. I have noticed in Rey's Map of Syria Kheber-keui to the north of the plain of Saruj (Serug), and identified it as a probable memorial of the patriarchal Eber, כּוּבּוּר, on the ground of equivalence which Prof. Sayce mentions (Life and Times of Joseph, p. 12), and earlier, but I forget where. I see it was in MS. notes on the name Khibur in the list of Rameses III. at Medinet Habu, which had been taken for Hebron. I suggested Khabür, or Kheber-Keui between Urfah and Birejik, or Tel Mibr, near Kinnesrin (Sachau, 113). Possibly all of these may be involved in reality. Lenormant (Les Origines de l'Histoire, iii. 59), on Balaam's prophecy, Numb. xxiv. 24 ("vex Eber") points out that this refers to the 'Eber han-nahar (Jos. xxiv. 2, 3, 14, 15; 2 Sam. x. 16; 1 Chron. xix. 16; 1 Reg. [III. Reg. in Vulg.]). Jerome translates "vastabuntque Hebræcos." Lenormant says "not the Hebrews, but," what we have quoted. But Prof. Sayce makes us look deeper; and the very learned and sagacious D. H. Haigh here, as in other points, proved more right than could twenty years ago have been believed in identifying the Khubur with the Biblical Eber. I have often pondered on this ancient list (Wo lag, &c., p. 101) and this Khabur, with the same designation as Amanus, and next to it. The next name (also a place for cedars) is Khasur (Khashur). Now there is a Tel Khazar in the mountain country north-west of Birejik, and very near the east bank of the Euphrates, marked in Rey's map. These things, with the very early date of the name, chime remarkably with the name 'Eber in the patriarchal list in Gen. x. Any light on the Amorite language will be welcome.

HENRY GEORGE TOMKINS.

P.S.—It is a very curious thing that as Khashur occurs next to Khabür (both as cedar-mountains) in the old geographical list to which Prof. Sayce refers, so do the equivalent names come together in the list of Rameses III. at Medinet Habu—viz., Az-r and Khibur.

I wish to add to my remarks on Suti and Suti, that a proper name of a man Suti (A. V. Sotai) occurs in Ezra ii. 55: Neh. vii. 57, among the Nethinim. Perhaps it is an ethnic name. I have before conjectured that it came from the god Sut, or Sutekh, like Seti in Egypt.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MRS. ANNA LEA MERRITT has added a leaflet to the re-issue of The Life and Literary Remains of her late husband, Henry Merritt, which Mr. Quaritch has now in hand. The purpose of the new leaflet is to take notice of some not very serious and certainly not ill-intended reflections which have quite recently been cast both upon Mrs. Merritt's book and upon the subject of it. It is the subject that Mrs. Merritt is naturally especially concerned to defend from even the slightest aspersions upon his character. Without proposing to become embroiled with anybody upon the matter, and without pronouncing upon the question in any detail, we may yet say that we think Mrs. Merritt—whose regrets for one mistake of her own are ample and sufficient—has succeeded in her aim, while she will find that the many who have cherished an affectionate regard for her late husband feel no cause whatever to withdraw from his memory any part of their esteem.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co., have ready for early publication The Art Teaching of John Ruskin, by Mr. W. G. Collingwood. This volume is offered as a contribution to the better understanding of Mr. Ruskin's work, by doing for his complex and multitudinous writings what other disciples have done for other masters—systematising where he scorns system, condensing into curt abstract what he has detailed in charming redundancy of diction and illustration, collecting and comparing his scattered utterances on the various branches of his widespread subject, &c.

THE committee of the Egypt Exploration Fund will shortly issue a special extra Report, entitled The Season's work at Ahnas and Beni Hasan, with illustrations.

MESSRS. WILLIAM HODGE & Co., of Glasgow, in conjunction with Messrs. Williams & Norgate, announce as on the point of publication a booklet entitled Per Lineam Valli: a New Argument, from the pen of Mr. George Neilson, author of "Trial by Combat." It is a thorough-going criticism of the received doctrine of the original purpose and essential meaning of the Vallum of Hadrian's Wall. Overlooked data and new arguments have led to conclusions materially at variance with those sanctioned by the weighty name of Dr. Bruce.

THE Christmas number of the Art Journal, known as the "Art Annual," will this year be devoted to an illustrated account of the life and work of Mr. Briton Riviere, R.A., special permission having been obtained to reproduce all the artist's principal pictures. Etchings have been prepared of "Circe" and "The Last Spoonful," and the well-known "Persepolis" has lent itself to an excellent representation by photogravure. Among the illustrations in the text will be found "Daniel," "The Herd of Swine," "Vae Victis," "Treasure Trove," &c. In addition to representations of finished pictures, the work will also contain several charcoal drawings of animals. The text is from the pen of Mr. Walter Armstrong.

THE first exhibition to open this season, apart from those of the photographers, will be a collection of modern British water-colours, at the Japanese Gallery, in New Bond-street.

ON Wednesday next, October 21, the corporation of Derby will hold a special meeting, in honour of Mr. Felix Joseph, who recently gave to the art gallery of that town his unique collection of Old Crown Derby. In recognition of that gift he will then be presented with an album, illuminated with views of the county, &c., similar to that which the Queen accepted the other day, and also with some examples of modern Derby china, specially made for the purpose.

THE first general meeting of the Hellenic Society for the present session will take place on Monday next, October 19, at 22 Albemarle-street, at 5 p.m. Prof. Jebb will preside; and the following papers will be read: "The Old Hecatompodon," by Mr. Penrose; and "The Vitruvian Account of the Greek Stage," by Mr. Louis Dyer.

By the death of Bosboom, the Dutch water-colour painter—which occurred quite lately—we lose one of the most individual and restrained, one of the most exquisite and reticent, artists of our period. Bosboom was an old man, if to be only a few years past seventy is indeed nowadays to be old. He had produced much, and over a long period; and, though he had never been exactly popular, he had long ago gained the suffrages of the instructed critic—a being quite other, be it observed, than the merely gushing advocate of one particular method in painting. Bosboom had nothing less than a genius for dealing with church interiors; and he proved this not so much by an elaborate treatment of their architectural features as by an admirable warmth and breadth, a singular sensitiveness to the refinements of shadow and light. Looking at a drawing of his is to enter the church he has depicted—the sober place with the great spaces, the plain columns, the dark Dutch wooden pulpit. His was the peculiar gift of transporting you, with a curious simplicity and economy of means, to the sober scene to which his art invariably addressed itself.

M. MUNKACZY has taken up his residence in Budapest, in order to paint a great picture which is to adorn the great hall of the new Parliament-house, now in course of erection. The painter is to receive 220,000fl. for this work, which will represent the Magyars taking possession of Hungary.

THE STAGE.

MR. FREDERICK WEDMORE writes:

"Had I come back to town early enough, I should very likely have had something more to say by this time of the performance of that translation of Zola's, "Thérèse Raquin," which, in accordance with a hope expressed in the ACADEMY on the occasion of his unhappy experiment with Ibsen, Mr. Grein, of the Independent Theatre, produced the other night. "Ghosts" has its strong points. It suggests here and there thoughts that may give us pause; but it is quite impossible on the stage: as a spectacle, it is admittedly loathsome. Zola, on the other hand, though in all conscience as bold or bolder than the Norseman, has not exchanged serious art for cheap physiology. Hence one is in a position to congratulate all those concerned in the venture upon the circumstance that "Thérèse Raquin" will enjoy not only the single performance, but at all events some brief run, at the Royalty Theatre."

MUSIC.

THE BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

THE performance of the "Messiah" on Thursday morning attracted a large audience, and the choir sang with great energy. Miss Macintyre was unable to appear as announced, and her place was creditably taken by Miss Anna Williams. The other vocalists were Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Brereton. Mr. Stockley, the well-known chorus master, to whose efforts so much of the fine singing of the choir during the week is due, conducted. In the evening a long miscellaneous programme was given, the most important items being Dr. Hubert Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," part of Act III., of "Tannhäuser" with Messrs. Lloyd and Henschel, and Dr. Joachim's "Hungarian" Concerto, of which the composer gave a masterly interpretation. The enthusiastic reception given to Dr. Parry and to his fine composition deserves special mention.

On Friday morning Dr. Antonin Dvorák's "Requiem" Mass was produced, and great was the curiosity to hear the composer's new work. In the opening "Requiem aeternam," a short but characteristic phrase is given out, which afterwards plays so important a part that it may be looked upon as the germ from which much of the music is evolved. The first number is slow and solemn, and full of admirable contrasts. A mournful chant-like entry of the voices with low tones and sombre colouring is followed by majestic phrases for the "Te decet hymnus" lines. The working up just before the coda is another point worthy of mention. As the voices close with their "Christe eleison," loud chords are heard in the orchestra; these are not heard again until the second part of the work, and then we find them associated with the words "Rex gloriae." This in itself may not be remarkable, but it is interesting to see how the composer has sought to give point and meaning to his music; and this is only one of many passages which might be given by way of illustration. In No. 2 the device of repeating a passage a semitone higher is not new, but still it is effective. Of the wonderful "Dies Irae" chorus it is difficult to say anything which will give an idea of its overwhelming effect. The massive theme for the voices seems to crush the listener with its weight, the panic-stricken ejaculations interwoven with it are startling in their reality, and the stillness which precedes the sounding of the last trump inspires terror. But what renders the picture still more vivid is the wild weird orchestral accompaniment; a restless figure runs through it, and the colouring could scarcely have been surpassed by Berlioz, that great master of instrumentation. It is sometimes said that certain subjects are not suitable for musical representation; but it only needs a man of genius, and then the greater the difficulties against which he has to contend, the more do they seem to enable him to develop his powers.

The "Quid sum miser" section has points of interest, but is not specially striking. The following Quartet "Recordare Jesu pie" attracts by its quaint and beautiful themes, its delicate harmonisation, and its simplicity of structure. The "Confutatis Maledictis" and the "Lacrymosa" are in their way effective; but somehow or other, the earlier part of the work seems to have absorbed the better share of the composer's inspiration.

Part II. opens with an offertory. The "Domine Jesu Christe" phrase is original and striking, and the chant-like utterances of the chorus against the solis voices produce excellent contrast. A pause on the dominant leads to a fugue. "Quam olim Abrahae," a clever, lively piece of writing. There is no special contrapuntal display, but an attempt is made to modernise an old art-form of which Bach, long ago, exhausted the possibilities. The "Hostia," its many quaint touches notwithstanding, seems to drag somewhat; the peculiar bass against the opening theme is, however, one particularly characteristic of Dvorák. The "Sanctus" is again an exceedingly fine movement. The opening bass solo phrase has dignity, and the few quiet accompaniment chords, as if merely to support the voice, add to its impressiveness. A few alto voices take up the strain, which now forms the bass to a harmonised passage for wood-wind solo; and chorus thus alternate, until a grand tutti "Sanctus" phrase is reached. The principal theme serves for an energetic "Hosanna" section, and then, after a sudden modulation from the key of B flat to that of B major, the "Benedictus" is sung by solis voices, while an accompaniment in soft tones works out the "Sanctus" theme, which recalls Wagner, not only in its method, but even in some of its strains. Later on, when the chorus joins in, the "Requiem" theme is a prominent feature; after a bold modulation back to B flat, a short and brilliant coda brings the movement to a close. The "Pie Jesu," for solis and chorus, has rather an artificial character; a peculiar harmonic progression smells of the lamp, and it is certainly not grateful to the singers. The concluding "Agnus Dei" is full of fine effects, though there are moments in it when the interest flags.

It is difficult after a single hearing to sum up a work of this kind, and yet first impressions are not without use. It is now nearly ten years since the composer's "Stabat Mater" was first produced in London, and one is almost instinctively led to form a comparison. Setting aside for a moment the "Dies Irae," I cannot see any marked advance in the "Requiem" over the earlier work. But there seems to me one point of difference which renders comparison somewhat unfair. The "Stabat Mater," though breathing a true religious spirit, appeared to be a work written to appeal to musicians; the "Requiem" strikes one as music written for a sacred service, and to be performed in some stately cathedral. And if this really be so, then the very passages where the musical interest tends to flag would enable the sympathetic listener to reflect on the sacred words, be impressed by the solemn scene, and thus receive the work in its true light.

The solo singers were Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. Iver McKay and Watkin Mills. The composer conducted his own work, but there was a general feeling that it would have received fuller justice had Dr. Richter wielded the baton. Dr. Dvorák received an ovation at the close of the performance.

The Festival concluded in the evening with a brilliant rendering of Berlioz's "Faust." Dr. Richter has now for the third time proved himself an admirable conductor, and it is impossible to exaggerate the pains which he took at the rehearsals to ensure success. Mr. C. W. Perkins deserves a word of mention for his efficient services at the organ during the week. The total receipts show a large increase over those of 1888.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

HERR DAVID POPPER, a cello player of considerable renown, appeared at the first Crystal Palace Saturday Concert (October 10), and performed with marked skill a Concerto and some Solos of his own composition. The programme included Beethoven's C minor Symphony, splendidly played by the band under Mr. Mann's direction. There was a very large audience.

MAX BRUCH'S new Violin Concerto in D minor No. 3 (Op. 58), was performed for the first time in England by Mr. Hans Wessely at the South-place Popular Concert on Sunday evening. It is a clever and showy work. Some of the themes remind one of Brahms, while much of the passage-writing recalls Mendelssohn. The Adagio is extremely graceful. Mr. Wessely, who gave an excellent rendering of the work, had only a pianoforte accompaniment, but one prepared by the composer.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	15	0 7 7	0 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17	0 8 8	0 4 4

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.

AUTHOR'S EDITIONS

With all SCOTT'S latest Introductions and Notes.

COMPLETE SETS:

1. Price £1 1s. SIXPENNY EDITION in 4 vols., 8vo, half-French morocco.
2. Price £1 17s. POCKET EDITION, Illustrated with 125 Wood Engravings, in 25 vols., 12mo, cloth. The same in limp Cape morocco, price £3 3s.
3. Price £2 8s. TWELVE VOLUME EDITION, printed from the plates of the Centenary Edition, Illustrated with Steel Frontispieces and Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, cloth.
4. Price £2 10s. TWO SHILLING EDITION, printed from the plates of the Centenary Edition, Illustrated with Frontispieces and Vignettes. 25 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.
5. Price £3 3s. HALF-CROWN EDITION, printed from the plates of the Centenary Edition. Illustrated with Steel Frontispieces and Vignettes. 25 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top. The same may be had in half-ruby Persian calf, or in half-blue morocco.
5. Price £4 4s. CENTENARY EDITION, with Additional Notes, Illustrated with 158 Steel Plates, in 25 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth. The same may be had in half calf.
7. Price £6. ROXBURGHE EDITION, Illustrated with 1,600 Woodcuts and 96 Steel Plates, in 48 vols. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label; or in half-French morocco, price £8 8s.

DE QUINCEY'S WORKS.

Edited by Professor MASSON.

With Portraits and other Illustrations.

Complete Copyright Edition.

14 vols., Crown 8vo, cloth,

Price 50s.;

Or in half-calf.

NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS.

COPYRIGHT, PATENTS, TRADE MARKS, &c. A Manual of Practical Law. By WYNDHAM ANSTIS BEWES, LL.B. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 5s.

OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY; or, the History of Hebrew Religion from the Year 800 B.C. By Dr. ARCHIBALD DUFF, M.A., LL.D. Demy 8vo, cloth. Price 10s. 6d.

FOOD, PHYSIOLOGY, &c. "Science in Plain Language" Series. By WILLIAM DURHAM, F.R.S.E. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 1s. 6d.

PAGANISM and CHRISTIANITY. By J. A. Farrer, Author of "Military Manners and Customs." Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 6s.

THE CHURCH of SCOTLAND. A Sketch of its History. New and Revised Edition, with Notes and Index. By the Rev. P. M'ADAM MUIR. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 3s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION to CHEMICAL THEORY. By Dr. Alex. Scott, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S.E. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 5s.

THE POETICAL WORKS of Sir WALTER SCOTT, Bart. New 2s. 6d. Edition. To be completed in 2 vols. Illustrated with Frontispieces and Vignettes. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d. each; or half-bound, 3s. 6d. each.

WAVERLEY NOVELS. By Sir Walter Scott. New Popular Edition. With Introductory Vignettes and Special Glossaries. In 25 vols. Now ready, Vols. 1 to 12. Price 6d. each; or 1s. each in cloth. The first 10 Novels may be obtained bound in 2 volumes, price 3s. 6d. each.

THE LADY of the LAKE. By Sir Walter Scott. With numerous Illustrations by Birket Foster and Sir John Gilbert. With Steel Frontispiece and Vignette by Turner. Demy 8vo, cloth. Price 7s. 6d.

NATURAL THEOLOGY. The Gifford Lectures, 1891. By Prof. Sir G. G. STOKES, Bart., M.P. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 3s. 6d.

BANKING and NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS. A Manual of Practical Law. By FRANK TILLYARD, B.A. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 5s.

SKETCH of the HISTORY of ISRAEL and JUDAH. Third Edition. By Prof. J. WELLHAUSEN. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 5s.

PARTNERSHIP and COMPANIES. A Manual of Practical Law. By PERCY F. WHEELER, B.C.L. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 5s.

MEMORIALS of EDINBURGH in the OLDEN TIME. By Sir DANIEL WILSON, LL.D., F.R.S.E. 2 vols., medium 4to, cloth. Price 25s. A few copies of the Work will also be issued on hand-made paper, royal 4to. Price £3 3s.

LONDON AND EDINBURGH:

ADAM & CHARLES BLACK.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

W. R. HUGHES, F.L.S.

A WEEK'S TRAMP in DICKENS-LAND.

Together with Personal Reminiscences of the "Inimitable Boz" therein collected. By W. R. HUGHES, F.L.S. With upwards of 100 Illustrations by F. G. Kitton, Herbert Railton, and others. Demy 8vo. [Shortly.]

TRAVELS in AFRICA during the YEARS 1879 to 1883. By Dr. WILLIAM JUNKER. Second Volume. With numerous Full-page Plates, and Illustrations in the Text. Translated from the German by Professor KEANE. Demy 8vo. [Shortly.]

THE TAROT of the BOHEMIANS. The most ancient book in the world. For the exclusive use of the Initiates. An Absolute Key to Occult Science. By PAPUS. Crown 8vo. [Shortly.]

MY THOUGHTS on MUSIC and

MUSICIANS. By H. H. STATHAM. Demy 8vo. [Shortly.]

PROFESSOR J. LE CONTE.

EVOLUTION, its NATURE, its

EVIDENCES, and its RELATION to RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By Professor JOSEPH LE CONTE. Second and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s. [This day.]

A. A. ANDERSON AND A. WALL.

A ROMANCE of N'SHABE: being a Record of Startling Adventures in South Central Africa. By A. A. ANDERSON, Author of "Twenty-five Years in a Waggon," and A. WALL. With Illustrations by Irving Montague. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Now ready.]

CHARLES DIXON.

THE BIRDS of our RAMBLES: a Companion for the Country. By CHARLES DIXON, Author of "Annals of Bird Life," "Idle Hours with Nature," &c., &c. With Illustrations by A. T. ELWES. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [This day.]

G. MASPERO.

LIFE in ANCIENT EGYPT and

ASSYRIA. From the French of G. MASPERO. With 189 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. [Next week.]

THIRD AND REVISED EDITION.

HILDA'S "WHERE IS IT?" of

RECIPES. Containing many old Cape, Indian, and Malay Dishes and Preserves; and a Collection of Home Remedies in Case of Sickness. By H. J. DUCKITT. Interleaved with White Paper for adding Recipes. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. [Now ready.]

MARY A. DICKENS.

CROSS CURRENTS: a Novel. By

MARY A. DICKENS. 3 vols. [This day.]

A. P. SINNETT.

KARMA. By A. P. Sinnett. A New

Edition, in 1 vol. Crown 8vo, 3s. [This day.]

Now ready, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

FRESH LIGHT on the DYNAMIC

ACTION, and PONDEROSITY of MATTER. By "WATERDALE." A System of Dynamics based on the Inertia of the Etherial Fluid, being identical with that of other matter, evolving therefrom its automatic cause of gravity.

MANCHESTER COURIER.—"An excellent text-book for students, written in a very lucid and masterly style. The writer deals with the constitution of the etherial fluid, primary cause of gravity, transplacement, specific ponderosities of elementary atoms, &c."

OBSERVER.—"The volume will hardly fail to interest all who are conversant with the prevailing methods of dealing with scientific subjects."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"In these days it is somewhat unusual to find a scientific book written by an anonymous author, and in this case the nature of the subject and the method of treatment only whet one's curiosity all the more to know who the writer is. To thus summarily knock away the bases upon which some of the most universally acknowledged beliefs of the physical scientists are founded by a clever process of reasoning, which seek also to build up new ideas, is a proceeding daring and audacious, and it remains to be seen whether the views advanced will meet with acceptance."

NOW READY.

SIXPENNY COPYRIGHT EDITION OF

DAVID COPPERFIELD.

By CHARLES DICKENS.

With 18 Illustrations by Fred Barnard. Medium 8vo, 6d.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

THE ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY EDITION.

Complete in 30 vols., with the Original Illustrations, demy 8vo, 10s. each; or 8s. 6d.

LIBRARY EDITION.

Complete in 30 vols., with the Original Illustrations, post 8vo, 8s. each; or Sets, £12.

THE POPULAR LIBRARY EDITION.

In 30 vols., large crown 8vo, £6; separate volumes, 4s. each.

THE "CHARLES DICKENS EDITION."

In crown 8vo, in 21 vols., cloth, with Illustrations, £3 16s.

THE CABINET EDITION.

In 32 vols., small fcap. 8vo, marble paper sides, cloth backs, with uncut edges, 1s. 6d. each. Each Volume contains 8 Illustrations reproduced from the Originals.

THE CROWN EDITION.

Complete in 17 vols., with the Original Illustrations, crown 8vo, 5s. each. THE LIFE will be added to this Edition next month.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S WORKS.

THE ASHBURTON EDITION.

An entirely New Edition, handsomely printed, containing all the Portraits and Illustrations. In 17 vols., demy 8vo, 8s. each.

CHEAP AND UNIFORM EDITION.

23 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, £7 5s.

LIBRARY EDITION.

Handsomely printed in 31 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, £15 3s.

PEOPLE'S EDITION.

37 vols., small crown 8vo, 37s.; separate vols., 1s. each.

GEORGE MEREDITH'S WORKS.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

The 6s. Edition is still to be had.

ONE OF OUR CONQUERORS will be added to the editions in October.

DIANA of the CROSSWAYS.

EVAN HARRINGTON.

THE ORDEAL of RICHARD

FEVEREL.

THE ADVENTURES of HARRY

RICHMOND.

SANDRA BELLONI.

VITTORIA.

RHODA FLEMING.

BEAUCHAMP'S CAREER.

THE EGOIST.

THE SHAVING of SHAGPAT and FARINA.

SAMUEL LAING'S WORKS.

PROBLEMS of the FUTURE, and ESSAYS. Seventh Thousand. Demy 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MODERN SCIENCE and MODERN THOUGHT. With a Supplementary Chapter on Gladstone's "Dawn of Creation" and Dr. Huxley's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World." Eleventh Thousand. Demy 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A MODERN ZOROASTRIAN. Fifth Thousand. Demy 8vo, 3s. 6d.

W. S. LILLY'S WORKS.

ON RIGHT and WRONG. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, 12s.

A CENTURY of REVOLUTION. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, 12s.

CHAPTERS on EUROPEAN HISTORY. With an Introductory Dialogue on the Philosophy of History. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s.

ANCIENT RELIGION and MODERN THOUGHT. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, 12s.

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1016.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

THE ROMANCE OF SCIENCE.

THE MAKING OF FLOWERS. By the Rev. Professor GEORGE HENSLOW, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COLOUR. By Captain Abney, F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COAL. By Professor R. Meldola. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DISEASES OF PLANTS. By Professor Marshall Ward. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S., Royal Astronomer of Ireland. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY of a TINDER-BOX. By Charles Meymott TIDY, M.B.M.S., F.C.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIRTH and GROWTH OF WORLDS. A Lecture by Professor GREEN, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

SOAP BUBBLES, and the FORCES which MOULD THEM. Being a Course of Three Lectures delivered at the London Institution in December, 1887, and January, 1890, before a Juvenile Audience. By C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SPINNING TOPS. The Operatives' Lecture of the British Association Meeting at Leeds, September, 1890. By Professor J. PERRY, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE DAWN OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE.

[A Set of Works designed to present the Chief Races of Europe as they emerge out of pre-historic darkness into the light furnished by their earliest recorded words. The Literature dealt with covers a period stretching from its beginning until the Middle Ages.]

FRENCH LITERATURE. By the late Gustave Masson, B.A., Assistant Master and Librarian of Harrow School. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON LITERATURE. By the Rev. Prof. Earle. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SLAVONIC LITERATURE. By W. R. Morfill, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.
"His book will supply an admirable introduction to a systematic study of Slavonic literature."—Scotsman. * Others in preparation.

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS.

[A Series of Manuals which furnish in a brief and popular form an Accurate Account of the Great Non-Christian Religious Systems of the World.]

CHRISTIANITY and BUDDHISM: a Comparison and a Contrast. Being the Donnellan Lectures for the year 1889-90. By the Rev. T. STERLING BERRY, D.D. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

* Seven other Volumes have already appeared in this Series.

CHIEF ANCIENT PHILOSOPHIES.

[This Series of Books will deal with the Chief Systems of Ancient Thought, not merely as dry matters of History, but as having a bearing on Modern Speculation.]

ARISTOTELIANISM. Part I. THE ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. By the Rev. I. GREGORY SMITH, M.A., Hon. LL.D. Part II. THE LOGICAL TREATISES, the METAPHYSICS, the PSYCHOLOGY, the POLITICS. By the Rev. W. GRUNDY, M.A. The Two Parts in 1 vol. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards 2s. 6d.

EPICUREANISM. By Wm. Wallace, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Merton College, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, satcen cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

STOICISM. By the Rev. W. W. Capes, Fellow of Hertford College. Fcap. 8vo, satcen cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EARLY BRITAIN.

NORMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. W. Hunt. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ROMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. Prebendary Scarth, Rector of Wrington, Somerset. Fcap. 8vo, with Maps, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON BRITAIN. By Grant Allen, Esq., B.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"If any reader wishes to obtain, in a small compass, a general view of our Anglo-Saxon language, literature, and laws, he cannot do better than study this careful and conscientious epitome of those subjects."—Spectator.

CELTIC BRITAIN. By Professor Rhys. Fcap. 8vo, with Two Maps, cloth boards, 3s.

"Much instruction will be found in a small compass."—Daily Chronicle.

POST-NORMAN BRITAIN. Foreign Influences upon the History of England from the Accession of Henry III. to the Revolution of 1688. By HENRY G. HEWLETT. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

EARLY CHRONICLERS OF EUROPE.

[The object of this Series is to bring readers face to face with the Sources of Early European History, and thus enable them to obtain a more intelligent grasp of the subject than can be had from second-hand compilations.]

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, each 4s.

ITALY. By Ugo Balzani.

"Its literary merits are very considerable."—Scotsman.

ENGLAND. By James Gairdner, Author of "The Life and Reign of Richard III."

"The book is well and thoroughly done, and makes a very valuable addition to the stock of historic manuals."—Athenaeum.

FRANCE. By the late Gustave Masson, M.A., Univ. Gallic, Assistant Master and Librarian of Harrow School, &c.

"Full of exceedingly interesting and valuable matter."—Guardian.

* Others in preparation.

THE OUSE. By the Rev. A. J. Foster, M.A. With Map and several Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

CAPITAL, LABOUR, and TRADE, and the OUTLOOK. Plain Papers by MARGARET BENSON. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

MORGAN, LIFE and TIMES of BISHOP WILLIAM. The Translator of the Bible into the Welsh Language. By the Rev. WILLIAM HUGHES. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

WITHIN the VEIL. Studies in the Epistle to the Hebrews. By the Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

OF the IMITATION of CHRIST. Four Books. By THOMAS A. KEMPIS. Fcap. 8vo, printed in red and black, half-bound, 2s. 6d.; limp Persian, 4s.; limp German calf, 5s.; vellum circuit, 6s. 8d.

A new Edition based on the best text, and without curtailment or modification.

A DICTIONARY of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Rev. E. L. CUTTS, Author of "Turning Points of Church History," &c. With numerous Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

HERBERT'S POEMS. New Edition, in Red and Black. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

MONUMENTAL HISTORY of the EARLY BRITISH CHURCH. By ROMILLY ALLEN, Esq. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

CHURCH of ENGLAND (The Title Deeds of the). By the Rev. T. P. GARNIER. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THE PARABLES of the OLD TESTAMENT. By the Right Rev. ALFRED BARRY, D.D., D.C.L. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

THE PETRINE CLAIMS: a Critical Enquiry. By the late Rev. RICHARD F. LITTLEDALE, LL.D., D.C.L., Author of "Plain Reasons against joining the Church of Rome," &c. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

Especial attention is drawn to a large selection of BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, and COMMUNION SERVICES, &c., in the very finest leather bindings, by ZAEHNSDORF & RIVIERE & SONS. These are now ready at the Society's London Depot. They are eminently suitable for Birthday and Christmas Presents, &c.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, CHARING CROSS, W.C.: 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 135, NORTH STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

RECORDS OF AN ESSEX HOUSE AND ITS PROPRIETORS, by JAMES GAIBNER	351
FREDERICK TENNYSON'S POEMS, by G. GREGORY SMITH	352
HEDDERWICK'S BACKWARD GLANCES, by W. WALLACE	353
FINCK'S SPAIN AND MOROCCO, by J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN	353
LADY WILDE'S NOTES ON MEN AND BOOKS, by WALTER LEWIN	354
DR. HARTMANN'S JACOB BOEHME, by the Rev. WENTWORTH WEBSTER	355
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	356
CURRENT LITERATURE	357
NOTES AND NEWS	358
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	359
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	359
ORIGINAL VERSE: "Autumn's Tale," by T. GORDON HAKE	359
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	359
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	360
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Notes on Herodotus , by E. W. B. NICHOLSON, HERBERT RICHARDS, PROF. A. PALMER, WALTER HEADLAM, and L. L. SHADWELL	360
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	362
PROF. LEO'S EDITION OF THE CULEX, by ROBINSON ELLIS	362
SCIENCE NOTES	363
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	363
ART BOOKS	364
THE EXCAVATIONS AT CHESTER	364
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Trojan Inscriptions: A Rectification , by Prof. SAYCE	364
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	364
"THIRÈSE RAQUIN" by F. WEDMORE	365
STAGE NOTES	365
THE WINTER OPERA SEASON, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	366
MUSIC NOTES	366
OBITUARY	366

A YOUNG MAN of literary tastes and good education seeks EMPLOYMENT in a LIBRARY.—M. RICHARDSON, 40, Lamb Conduit Street, W.C.

LITERARY ASSISTANT.—A Lady of much experience seeks an ENGAGEMENT as above. Excellent testimonials.—K. H., 16, Drayton Gardens, S.W.

SCULPTURE STUDENTS instructed, and prepared for the Schools of the Royal Academy, by a Gold Medalist and Experienced Teacher, all of whose Pupils have passed first sending up. The majority have been awarded medals and other distinctions.—Write in first instance Sculptor, 87, Chelsea Gardens, S.W.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for letter-plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

GLADWELL BROTHERS' FINE ART GALLERY, 20 and 21, Gracechurch Street, E.C.—A dissolution of partnership being in progress, the remaining STOCK, accumulated during the past half century, is now being SOLD for cash, without regard to publication prices.

GLADWELL'S important SALE OF FINE ART STOCK is now in progress, and will be continued for a short time only, as the partnership heretofore subsisting will be dissolved on Dec. 31 next. A large portion of the Stock will be sold for cash at less than half price.—GLADWELL BROTHERS, 20 and 21 Gracechurch Street.

FRENCH CONVERSATIONAL LESSONS.—A LADY, who has been engaged for eight years in conducting large public English Classes for la Ville de Paris, and also for the Association Polytechnique in that city, is now desirous of finding PUPILS who wish to continue their dexterity of speech in the French language.—Address F. T. M. (French), 16, Breakspear Road, St. John's, S.E.

CATALOGUES. FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel Poetry, &c.) are invited to forward them for Consideration MSS. read within 14 days of receipt, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. Rejected MSS. promptly returned.

DIGBY, LONG, & CO., Publishers, 18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON. Just published, crown 8vo, price 5s.

FIAT LUX! or Rays of Light from Practical Philosophy. Humbly dedicated to all Searchers after Truth. By "Philosophus." London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

FURTHER RELIQUES OF CONSTANCE NADEN: being Essays and Tracts for our Times. Edited, with an Analytical and Critical Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE M. MCCOY. With Portrait and Facsimile of her last Letter. Demy 8vo, cloth, top edge gilt, 7s. 6d. Bickers & Son, 1, Leicester Square, London, W.C.

RUDYARD KIPLING and WOLCOTT BALESTIER'S New Novel, "THE NAULAHKA: a Tale of West and East," begins in THE CENTURY MAGAZINE for NOVEMBER. This PART commences the NEW VOLUME. Price 1s. 4d.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Books can be exchanged at the residences of Subscribers in London by the Library Messengers.

SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

MUDIE'S FOREIGN LIBRARY.

All the best Works in French, German, Italian, and Spanish are in circulation. Catalogue of English Books for 1891, 1s. 6d. Catalogue of Foreign Books, 1s. Prospectuses and Clearance Lists of Books on Sale, postpaid free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED, 30 to 34, New Oxford Street, London.

Branch Offices: 24, Brompton Road; and 2, King Street, Cheapside.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

THE WOMEN'S COLLEGE within the UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY.

Applications are invited for the Post of LADY PRINCIPAL of the above College. Salary, £500 per Annum, with Board and Residence in the College.

Particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, accompanied by four copies of Testimonials, must be sent not later than the 16th NOVEMBER, 1891. Candidates must state their Tutorial qualifications and experience, and age.

SARL SAMUILL, Agent-General for New South Wales, 2, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W.

9th October, 1891.

EPPS'S (BREAKFAST) COCOA GRATEFUL, COMFORTING. MADE SIMPLY WITH BOILING WATER OR MILK.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE, SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also, ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA, TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS. SOLE ADDRESS: 11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S NEW LIST.

"What a perfect boon such a firm as Arrowsmith's is!" Illustrated Herald.

ARROWSMITH'S 3s. 6d. SERIES.

A FRENCHMAN in AMERICA. By MAX O'RELL, Author of "John Bull and his Island," "Friend MacDonald," "Jonathan and his Continent," &c. With 130 Illustrations by E. W. Kemble.

ARROWSMITH'S 3s. 6d. SERIES.

RECALLED to LIFE. By GRANT ALLEN, Author of "What's Bred in the Bone," "Kalec's Shrine," &c. "A story which is alike mysterious and novel."—Daily Press. "Suffice it to say that her recall to life is but slow and gradual until the grand denouement, when the barrier wall of forgetfulness breaks down before another awful horror, which is to the reader quite as unexpected a shock as it is to Una."—Bradford Observer.

ARROWSMITH'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL, ONE SHILLING.

THE SHIELD OF LOVE. By B. J. FARJEON, Author of "Devlin the Barber," "Grip," "Great Porter Square," &c.

THE ROMANCE of a MADHOUSE. By A. M. MEADOWS. Price One Shilling. "Miss Meadows is to be congratulated on the dramatic interest with which she has invested her story."—Leeds Times. "The book is smartly written."—Publishers' Circular.

SOLO: a Handbook to the Ways and Wickedness of Solo Whist. By EDWARD ROSE, Author of "V.R." &c. Price One Shilling.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & Co., Ltd. And Railway Bookstalls

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free. THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free. THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; And all Booksellers.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SON'S
Recent and Forthcoming Publications.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.

Edited by EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A.,
Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

Illustrated, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.; Roxburgh, 6s.

4. THEODORIC the GOTH, the Barbarian Champion of Civilisation. By THOMAS HODGKIN, Author of "Italy and Her Invaders," &c.

5. SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, and the CHIVALRY of ENGLAND. By H. R. FOX BOURNE, Author of "The Life of John Locke," &c.
(Ready in November.)

*. * FULL PROSPECTUS ON APPLICATION.

CHARLES DARWIN, His Life and Work. By CHARLES FREDERICK HOLDER, Author of "Elements of Zoology," "Living Lights," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.
(Leaders in Science Series.)

CALIFORNIA and ALASKA, and OVER the CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY. By DR. WILLIAM SEWARD WEBB. Popular Edition. 8vo, Illustrated, 10s. 6d.

"Dr. Webb affords a vivacious description of the country traversed, as well as of the personal experiences of the travelling party. His chronicle is ample, entertaining, and valuable."—Sun.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. An Essay by CARL SCHURZ. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, top edge gilt, 2s. 6d.

CHECKLEY (E).—A NATURAL METHOD of PHYSICAL TRAINING: being a Practical Description of the Checkley System of Physiculture. Illustrated from Photographs taken specially for this Treatise. 12mo, cloth, about 2s. 6d.

THE DARRO EDITION.

THE ALHAMBRA: a Residence in the Celebrated Moorish Palace the "Alhambra," with the Historical and Romantic Legends connected with its History. By WASHINGTON IRVING. This Edition is printed from entirely new Electrotypes Plates; Illustrated with 30 Photogravures from Photographs, many of which were taken specially for this Edition by R. H. Lawrence, Esq. Each page is surrounded by a Moorish border in red and gold, the designs, sixteen in number, being carefully copied from the decorations of the Palace. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth extra, gilt tops, and with slip covers, binding decorated with handsome Moorish designs, 25s.
(In November.)

THE NEW THEOLOGY. By Professor JOHN BASCOM, Author of "Natural Theology," "Science, Philosophy, and Religion," &c. 8vo, 6s.
CONTENTS:—Introduction—Naturalism—The Supernatural—Dogmatism—Pietism—Spiritualism.

HISTORY of the UNITED STATES.

From the First Administration of Thomas Jefferson, 1801-1805, to the end of the Second Administration of James Madison, 1813-1817.

By HENRY ADAMS,

Illustrated with Maps.

9 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 9s. per volume.

NOW READY.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION of THOMAS JEFFERSON. 1801-1805. 2 vols., 18s.

SECOND ADMINISTRATION of THOMAS JEFFERSON. 1805-1809. 2 vols., 18s.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION of JAMES MADISON. 1809-1813. 2 vols., 18s.

CATALOGUE POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.; AND NEW YORK.

James R. Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.'s
NEW BOOKS.

A SELECTION from the SONNETS of WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. With numerous Illustrations by Alfred Parsons. 4to, half-leather ornamental, gilt, 25s.

The WARWICKSHIRE AVON. Notes by A. T. QUILLER-COUCH. Illustrations by Alfred Parsons. Crown 8vo, half-leather, ornamental, gilt, 12s. 6d.

The FRANCO-GERMAN WAR of 1870-71. By Field-Marshal Count HELMUTH VON MOLTKE. Translated by CLARA BELL and HENRY W. FISCHER. With a Map, 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 24s. (Second Edition.)

STUDIES in the WAGNERIAN DRAMA. By HENRY EDWARD KREHBIEL. 16mo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

The COUNT of MONTE CRISTO. By ALEXANDRE DUMAS. New and thoroughly Revised Library Edition. Illustrated with 8 Photogravure Plates from Designs made especially for this Edition by Edmund H. Garrett. 4 vols., 12mo, cloth extra, gilt tops, 24s.

LITERARY LANDMARKS of EDINBURGH. By LAURENCE HUTTON, Author of "Literary Landmarks of London." Illustrated from Drawings by Joseph Pennell, and Portraits. 8vo, cloth ornamental, 5s.

DELICATE DINING. By Theodore Child. Crown 8vo, paper boards ornamental, 3s. 6d.

NEW FICTION.

DALLY. By Maria Louise Pool. Crown 8vo, cloth, ornamental, 6s.

A KING of TYRE: a Tale of the Times of Ezra and Nehemiah. By JAMES M. LUDLOW, D.D. 16mo, cloth ornamental, 5s.

TALES of TWO COUNTRIES. By ALEXANDER L. KIELLAND. The Translations and Introduction by Wm. ARCHER. Crown 8vo, paper, 2s. 6d.; cloth extra, 3s. 6d. [RED LETTER STORIES.]

The ODD NUMBERS. Thirteen Tales by GUY DE MAUPASSANT. Translated by Jonathan Sturges. With an Introduction by HENRY JAMES. Crown 8vo, paper, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. 6d. [RED LETTER STORIES.]

IDUNA, and other Stories. By George A. HIBBARD. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

The BARD of the DIMBOVITZA. Rumanian Folk Songs, collected from the peasants by HELENE VACARESCO. Translated by CARMEN SYLVA and ALMA STRETTELL. With an Introduction by CARMEN SYLVA. Crown 8vo, cloth ornamental, 10s. 6d. [October 27.]

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

The GREAT SHOW IN KOBOL-LAND. By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Illustrated. 8vo, paper boards ornamental, 3s. 6d. [October 27.]

LADY JANE. By Mrs. C. V. JAMISON. Fully Illustrated. 8vo, cloth ornamental, 7s. 6d. [October 27.]

BOUND VOLUME OF "HARPER'S MAGAZINE."
HARPER'S MAGAZINE. June-November, 1891. (Including in its rich and varied contents: Walter Besant's "London Papers"; George du Maurier's novel, "Peter Ibbetson"; W. D. Howells' novel, "An Imperative Duty"; Edwin A. Abbey's Illustration of "Comedies of Shakespeare," with Comments by ANDREW LANG; "Letters of Charles Dickens to Wilkie Collins"; "Cairo in 1890," by Constance Fenimore Woolson, &c.) Profusely Illustrated. 8vo, cloth extra, 5s. 6d. Cases supplied separately, 2s. [October 27.]

HARPER'S MAGAZINE FOR NOVEMBER, Now Ready. Price 1s.

Catalogues sent post free on application.

JAMES R. OSGOOD, McILVAINE, & Co.,
45, ALBEMARLE ST., LONDON, W.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

THE CAMDEN LIBRARY.

Edited by G. L. GOMME, F.S.A., and T. FAIRMAN ORDSHILL, F.S.A.

In post 8vo, tastefully printed and bound, price 6s.; Roxburgh, 7s. 6d. net; Large Paper, Roxburgh, £1 1s. net.

The First Volume is now ready, entitled

The Antiquities and Curiosities of the Exchequer.

By HUBERT HALL, F.S.A.,
Of H.M. Public Record Office.

With Illustrations by Ralph Nevill, F.S.A.

And an Introduction by Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart.

A Prospectus, giving full particulars of the Series, sent post free on application.

THE LATE WILLIAM BLADES' LAST WORK.

Now ready, tastefully printed and handsomely bound, with many Illustrations, price 15s.; Roxburgh, 21s. net; Large Paper (Whitman), Roxburgh, £2 2s. net.

The Pentateuch of Printing.

With a Chapter on Judges.

By the late WILLIAM BLADES.

With a Memoir of the Author, and a List of his Works.

By TALBOT BAINES REED.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE LIBRARY.

Tastefully printed on antique paper, and bound in cloth, price 7s. 6d.; Hand-made Paper, Roxburgh, 10s. 6d. net; Large Paper (50 only), 21s. net. The Roxburgh and Large-Paper Editions of this work are only sold in sets.

NEW VOLUME JUST READY

English Topography, Vol. I.

Edited by GEORGE LAWRENCE GOMME, F.S.A.

POPULAR COUNTY HISTORIES.

"We may look forward to many entertaining hours spent in reading this series of County Histories."—Land and Water.
Demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.; Roxburgh 10s. 6d. net.

NEW VOLUME JUST READY.

A History of Nottinghamshire.

By CORNELIUS BROWN,
Author of "Annals of Newark."

Fcap. 8vo, olive cloth, price 4s. 6d.

With Poet and Player:

Essays on Literature and the Stage.

By WM. DAVENPORT ADAMS,
Author of "Rambles in Bookland," "A Book of Burlesque," &c.
"Interesting, amusing, and instructive."—Ref. rec.

In crown 8vo, price 1s. 6d. post free.

Acting and the Art of Speech at the Paris Conservatoire:

Hints on Reading, Reciting, Acting, and the Cure of Stammering.

By T. RAYMAN SOLLY.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION, UNIFORM WITH THE FIRST SERIES.

Fcap. 8vo, olive cloth, price 5s.

Obiter Dicta.

SECOND SERIES. By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL.

"A most charming little volume. Mr. Birrell's lively pages will quite repay a second perusal."—Graphic.

No. I. now ready, price 1s.

An Account of British Flies.

(Diptera.)

By F. V. THEOBALD, B.A., F.E.S.,
Of St. John's College, Cambridge.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE TRUMPET CALL. Mr. Leonard Boyne, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, L. Rignold, C. Dalton, Douglass, East, Russell, Leigh, Keith, Drew, J. and W. Northcote, &c.; Miss E. Robins, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Leigh, and Miss Clara Jecks.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, GODPAPA. Mr. C. H. Hawtrey, Mr. James Nelson, Mr. William Wyes, Mr. W. F. Hawtrey, and Mr. Charles Brookfield; Miss Annie Irish, Miss Vane Featherston, Miss V. Armbruster, and Miss Lottie Venne. At 8.15, ROSABEL.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
THIS EVENING, at 8.45, MISS DECIMA. Mr. David James, Messrs. Chas. Conyers, Chauncey (Scott, Templar Saxe, Welton Dale; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Josephine Findlay, Lucy Buckstone, and J. Nesville. At 8, LISCIEN and FRITZCHEN.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
THIS EVENING, at 8, A SAILOR'S KNOT. Messrs. C. Warner, C. Glenney, E. Gurney, J. Cross, W. Lugg, F. Damer, A. Phillips, F. Dobell, T. Terriss, E. Power, W. Staunton, and H. Nicholls; Mesdames J. Millward and Kate James.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, JOAN OF ARC. M. Marius, Messrs. F. Emney, E. Bantock, W. Warde, and Arthur Roberts; Mesdames Florence Dysart, Alma Stanley, Agnes Hewitt, Linda Verner, Louisa Goulay, Alice Lethbridge, K. Scymour, Day Ford, V. Moncton, and Marion Hood. Preceded, at 7.25, by FIRST MATE.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, SCHOOL. Mr. Mackintosh, Mr. Vincent, Mr. Garthorne, Mr. Gilbert Hare, Mr. H. B. Irving; Miss Annie Hughes, Miss Fanny Robertson, and Miss Kate Rorke.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE DANCING GIRL. Mr. Tree, Mr. Fernandez, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. F. Kerr, Mr. Allan, Mr. Robb Harwood, Mr. Batson, Mr. Leith, Mr. Hudson, Mr. Worden; Miss Julia Neilson, Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Horlock, Miss Ayrton, Mrs. E. H. Brooke, Miss Gunn, Miss Hethcote, and Miss Norreys.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Augustin Daly's Company, in THE LAST WORD. Miss Ada Rohan, Mr. Drew, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Wheatleigh, Miss Irving, Miss Cheatham.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, LA CIGALE. Misses Geraldine Ulmar, E. Clements, A. Rose, A. Newton, F. Melville, St. Cyr, E. Jeffreys; Messrs. Harry Monkhouse, E. Lewis, G. Mudie, J. Peachy, Porteous, and C. Hayden Coffin. At 7.30, LOVE AND LAW.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs. Murray Carson, G. W. Cockburn, Eardley Turner, T. W. Percyval, J. A. Welch, De Solla, Victor, Alker, Dwyer, Ludlow, &c.; Mesdames Leslie Bell, Bertie Willis, L. Seccombe, L. Wilmot, L. Wyatt, M. Herrick, and Miss Grace Hawthorne.

OPERA COMIQUE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.20, THE AMERICAN. Mr. Edward Compton, Messrs. Lewis Ball, C. Blakiston, Y. Stewart, S. Paxton, C. M. Hallard, H. Hunter, F. W. Fernman; Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crow), Misses Louise Moodie, Adrienne Dairrolles, Evelyn McNay, C. Lindsay, and Miss Elizabeth Robins. At 8, A DEAD LETTER.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT-BASTING.
THIS EVENING, at 7.45, ARRAH-NA-POGUE. Miss Julia Warden, Mrs. John Carter, and Ella Terriss; Messrs. Henry Neville, Wilfred E. Shine, Basset Roe, Chas. Ashford, Henry Bedford, John Carter, T. Verner, T. Kingston, and Arthur Deere.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, THE IDLER. Followed by MOLIÈRE. Mr. George Alexander, Mr. Nuteombe Gould, Mr. Ben Webster, Mr. Wilton Lackaye, Mr. Alfred Holles, Mr. V. Sansbury, and Mr. Herbert Waring; Lady Monckton, Miss Gertrude Kingston, Miss Lily Hanbury, Miss Laura Graves, and Miss Marion Terry.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL. Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, Lemaistre, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, Louise Rowe, A. Cole, C. Timble, Saumarez, and Kate James. At 7.30, CAPTAIN BILLY. Messrs. Lemaistre, &c.; Mesdames Moore and R. Brandram.

STRAND THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDGOUIN.
THIS EVENING, at 8.45, THE LATE LAMENTED. Messrs. Willie Edgouin, H. Standing, H. Eversfield, G. P. Hawtrey, F. Cape, S. Barracough, and A. May; Mesdames Cicely Richards, E. Moore, E. Phelps, and V. Bennett. At 8, BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, PRINCE AND PAUPER. Messrs. Forbes Dawson, Mark Kinghorne, Bisset Roe, Chas. Fulton, Cecil Crofton, A. T. Hendon, and H. H. Howe; Misses L. Linden, M. Linden, Mrs. Macklin, and Miss B. Hatton. At 8, PALMISTRY.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

Ready this day, at all Libraries.

By the Author of "Man Proposes," &c.

A RUDE AWAKENING. 3 vols. By Mrs. A. Phillips,
 Author of "Benedicta," &c.

By the Author of "Husband and Wife."

THE LADY of BALMERINO. 3 vols. By
 MARIE CONNOR LEIGHTON, Author of "A Morganatic Marriage," "The Triumph of Manhood," "Sweet Magdalen," &c.

TRISCHLER & COMPANY, 18, NEW BRIDGE STREET, E.C.

The Railway and General Automatic Library, Limited.

The first issue of Books by the above Company will be ready early next week at all Booksellers, Bookstalls, and Libraries.

Price 1s.; post free 1s. 2d.

It comprises the following works by eminent and distinguished authors:—

THE HIGHLAND NURSE: a Tale. By the Duke of ARGYLL, K.G.

IN HUMAN SHAPE. By Alice M. Diehl.

THE BACHELOR'S DILEMMA, and other Tales. By PERCY FITZGERALD.

JOHN PAS-PLUS: an Indian Story. By the MARQUIS of LORNE, K.T.

RUSSIAN TALES. By Pushkin, Gregorovitch, and LERMONTOFF.

THIRTY YEARS at the PLAY, and DRAMATIC TABLE TALK. By CLEMENT SCOTT.

HIGHEST REFERENCES. By Florence Warden.

BEYOND ESCAPE. By the Author of "Within Sound of the Weir."

Publishers for the Company, EDEN, REMINGTON, & CO., KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, to whom all applications should be made.

The Railway and General Automatic Library, Limited.

NOTICE.

The Anti-Jacobin,

A Weekly Review.

EDITED BY FREDERICK GREENWOOD.

Next Saturday, October 31st, the ANTI-JACOBIN will be enlarged by an addition to the number of its pages. Both as a Review of Affairs and as a Literary Journal, its scope will be widened; measures will be taken to make it yet more interesting and authoritative; it will be "got up" more carefully, and be printed on finer paper; and the price of it will be raised to that of all similar publications—namely, SIXPENCE.

The present subscribers to the paper will continue to receive it without additional charge till the term of their subscription runs out.

OFFICE: 8, DUKE STREET, ADELPHI.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S
RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

I.
By Hawley Smart.

BEATRICE and BENEDICK:
a Romance of the Crimea. By the Author of "Breezie Langton," "The Outsider," "The Master of Rathkelly," "The Plunger," "Long Odds," &c. 2 vols. [At all Libraries.

II.
By B. M. Croker.

INTERFERENCE.

By the Author of "Pretty Miss Neville," "Proper Pride," "Two Masters," &c. 3 vols. [At all Libraries.

"Interference" is a delightful story, fresh and unflagging.... The plot, which strikes us as being thoroughly original, is well worked out, and the Indian scenes are very naturally done.... It is not, however, for its ingenious plot only, that Mrs. Croker's book is to be recommended, but for its excellent sketches of character, especially of Irish upper middle-class life, and its humorous observation and description. —Standard.

"...an interesting and well-written novel. There are funny stories and strange incidents.... 'Interference' is a capital story, written in a spirited and attractive style." —Scotsman.

"It is quite refreshing to come across a three-volume novel which would not be improved by condensation into two, or even into one. This exceptional merit is possessed by 'Interference,' which, even the most exacting reader will not find a line too long. The scene of the story is laid in South Ireland, and we can answer for it that the local colouring is as faithful as graphic. But the strongest point of this really excellent literary performance is characterisation; there is not a single dummy throughout the book. Mrs. Croker has turned out cool work previously, but this racy novel is certainly her chef d'œuvre so far." —The People.

III.
By Mrs. Edward Kennard.

THAT PRETTY LITTLE HORSEBREAKER.

By the Author of "The Girl in the Brown Habit," "Killed in the Open," "A Homburg Beauty," &c. 3 vols. [At all Libraries.

"Mrs. Kennard is thoroughly at home in the hunting field; she knows all about horses, and people who ride them—that is, who ride them well.... In the book before us she has a good story, and she tells it in a downright fashion that gives it a pleasant vividness.... The story is told with a good deal of spirit, and the characters are drawn with individuality. The heroine is a plucky girl, not destitute of many charming ways.... 'That Pretty Little Horsebreaker' has a certain dash and go in it that make it lively reading." —Standard.

"It is an easy-running tale.... The charm of the volumes lies in Mrs. Kennard's admirable description of hunting.... 'That Pretty Little Horsebreaker' ought to find a home at all hunting-houses." —Whithall Review.

IV.
By Albert Kevill-Davies.

MARRIAGE UP TO DATE.

By the Author of "An American Widow," &c. 3 vols. [Oct. 26.

V.
By Mrs. Campbell Praed.

The ROMANCE of a CHALET

By the Author of "Policy and Passion," "Nadine," &c. 2 vols. [Immediately.

VI.
WINTER'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL (Seventh Year of Publication).

At all Booksellers and Bookstalls, in picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE THIRD EDITION OF LUMLEY the PAINTER.

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER,
Author of "Bootles' Baby," "Bootles' Children," "Army Society," "Beautiful Jim," "Mrs. Bob," "Good-bye," &c.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

DAVID NUTT,
270-271, Strand.

To be published on Wednesday, the 28th.

LYRA HEROICA: an Anthology
selected from the best English Verse of the 16th, 17th, 18th, and 19th Centuries. By WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY, Author of "A Book of Verse," "Views and Reviews," &c.

The speciality of this collection is that all the poems chosen are commemorative of heroic action or illustrative of heroic sentiment.

"Lyra Heroica" is printed by CONSTABLE, on laid paper, and forms a handsome volume, crown 8vo, of xviii.-362 pp., bound in stamped gilt buckram, gilt top, edges uncut, 6s.

20 copies will be printed on Japanese hand paper, at £2 2s. net, and 100 copies on Dutch hand paper, at 18s. net for the first 50 copies. Early application is essential to secure copies.

* * Messrs. CH. SCRIBNER'S SONS have acquired the Copyright of "Lyra Heroica" for the United States of America, and will Publish the work simultaneously with D. NUTT.

THE JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

EDITED BY

I. ABRAHAMS and C. G. MONTEFIORE.

Vol. IV. No. 1. OCTOBER, 1891.

CONTENTS.

ISAIAH XXXIV. and XXXV. By Prof. H. GRAETZ.
ON NON-HEBREW LANGUAGES USED BY JEWS. By Dr. A. NEUBAUER.

The PRAYER-BOOK ACCORDING to the RITUAL of ENGLAND before 1290. By Prof. DAVID KAUFMANN.

IMMANUEL DI ROMI, a THIRTEENTH CENTURY HEBREW POET and NOVELIST. By J. CHOTZNER.

NOTES on HEBREW MSS. in the UNIVERSITY of CAMBRIDGE. By Prof. S. SCHECHTER.

CRITICAL PROBLEMS of the SECOND PART of ISAIAH II. By the Rev. Prof. T. K. CHEYNE.

CRITICAL NOTICES.

NOTES and DISCUSSIONS.

Price Three Shillings. Annual Subscription, post free, Ten Shillings, payable in advance.

Vol. III. of THE JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW is now ready. Demy 8vo, iv.-790 pp., cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. V. No. 8. OCTOBER. 1s. 6d. net.

Yearly Subscription (Ten Numbers), 13s. 6d., post free payable in advance.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL.
E. L. HICKS, H. JACKSON, R. ELLIS. — On Herodas.

L. CAMPBELL.—On the Papyrus Fragment of the Phædo.

A. C. CLARKE.—The Library of J. G. Graevius.

W. M. LINDSAY.—Latin Accentuation.

J. STRACHAN.—Ambulare.

F. W. THOMAS.—Non, Norium, Νόδιμος. Ellis's Noctes Manilianæ. E. A. SONNENSCHNEIN.

Paul's History of Language. H. D. DARBISHIRE.

Shorter Notices.—Notes.—Archæology.—Periodicals.—Bibliography.

Now ready, at all Booksellers and Libraries.

Vol. II. of THE WOMEN of TURKEY and their FOLK-LORE. By LUCY M. J. GARNETT. Comprising the Jewish and Moslem Women. With an Essay on the ORIGINS of MATRIARCHY, by J. S. STUART-GLENNIE 8vo, xvi.-616 pp., cloth, 16s.

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons'
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NEW WORK BY "A SON OF THE MARSHES."
ON SURREY HILLS. By "A Son of the MARSHES," Author of "Annals of a Fishing Village," "Woodland, Moor, and Stream." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A volume by that delightful writer, 'A Son of the Marshes,' will be heartily received by naturalists and lovers of animal life. Even Richard Jeffreys himself could not surpass the faithful minuteness with which the writer notes the habits of bird, beast, and fish." —Times.

"A Son of the Marshes" is probably the ablest portrayer of nature in its varied phases that we have among us. His observation is in every case keen, and the style always unpretentious and agreeable." —Globe.

"One of the most delightful of those nature books which of late years have been provided.... It is a masterpiece of literary draughtsmanship; there is not a page in which the reader is not made to see all that the writer has seen before him." —Anti-Jacobin.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION, REVISED.
HINDU-KOJ: Wanderings and Wild Sport on and beyond the Himalayas. By Major-General DONALD MACINTYRE, V.C., late Prince of Wales's Own Goorkhas, Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. Dedicated to H. R. H. the Prince of Wales. Post 8vo, with numerous illustrations, 7s. 6d.

"We have read many books on Himalayan, Cashmerian, and Thibetan sport, but none more pleasant, more modest, more amusing, or more instructive." —Saturday Review.

"We have never read a more entertaining book about Himalayan sport. Every chapter has amused us keenly." —Road and Grain.

MR. INNES SHAND'S NEW NOVEL.

KILCARRA. By Alex. Innes Shand, Author of "Half-a-Century or, Changes in Men and Manners," "Fortune's Wheel," &c. 3 vols, crown 8vo, 25s. 6d.

"A very well written novel.... Few novels of the year have a brighter style or a fresher plot than 'Kilcarrar.' —Daily Telegraph.

"The incidents are strung together with great skill; and the result is a delightful novel.... The interest of the reader will be arrested chiefly by the clever, spirited descriptions of incidents, particularly incidents of Irish life." —Scotsman.

"A true picture of Ireland under the tyranny of the Land League.... The story could not be better told, and it is an admirable picture of the times and the country." —St. James's Gazette.

NEW EDITION, ENLARGED.

ON SOME OF SHAKESPEARE'S FEMALE CHARACTERS.
By HELENA FAUCIT, Lady MARTIN. Dedicated by permission to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen. With Portrait by Lane. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

NEW ONE-VOLUME NOVEL.

"UNLESS!" a Romance. By Randolph HAINES. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A thoroughly enjoyable romance, written with power and skill." —Manchester Courier.

"A clever, naturally told story, with a well-sustained plot.... The plot so rapidly laid, that the reader is hurried on to the close with ever-increasing interest.... A really fresh, original, and well-told story." —N. B. Daily Mail.

"A thoroughly readable book." —Scotsman.

THE WORISHOFEN WATER-CURE.

ONLY AUTHORIZED ENGLISH TRANSLATION.
MY WATER-CURE. As Tested through more than Thirty Years, and Described for the Healing of Diseases and the Preservation of Health. By SEBASTIAN KNEIPP, Parish Priest of Worishofen (Bavaria). With a Portrait and other Illustrations. Translated from the Thirtieth German Edition by A. de F. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"Undoubtedly a 'quaint book.' There is something restorative in its very unconventional simplicity and earnestness." —Saturday Review.

"A truly wonderful account of the achievements of water." —Observer.

"Father Kneipp, whose name and labours have long been known, has carried the water-cure to great perfection. Everything about his method is original.... Some of his cures are extraordinary." —Daily News.

"The water-cure is marvellous in its effect, but entirely natural, and legitimately reasonable." —Birmingham Gazette.

"The book is extremely interesting, and will convey to many sufferers hints for which they may hereafter be thankful." —Yorkshire Post.

SEVENTH EDITION.

MEMOIR OF THE LIFE OF LAURENCE OLIPHANT,
And of ALICE OLIPHANT, his Wife.
By MARGARET OLIPHANT W. OLIPHANT, Author of "Life of Edward Irving," "Life of Principal Tulloch," &c. 2 vols, post 8vo, with Portraits, 21s.

"This is the book of the season." —Daily Chronicle.

"A delightful and sympathetic memoir." —Times.

This day is published, SEVENTH EDITION.
THE ORIGIN of EVIL, and other Sermons.
By ALFRED WILLIAMS MOMERIE, M.A., D.Sc., LL.D. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Complete in 3 vols.
STEPHENS' BOOK of the FARM. Fourth Edition, Revised and in great part Rewritten by JAMES MACDONALD, of the "Farming World," &c. Illustrated with numerous Portraits of Animals, Plans of Farm Buildings, and Engravings. Handsomely bound, with leather back and gilt top, £3 3s.

* * Also in 6 Divisional Volumes, strongly bound in cloth, 10s. 6d. each.

"The most comprehensive work on practical farming ever written." —Standard.

"The standard work on everything relating to the farm." —Scotsman.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

Digitized by Google

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

JUST READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.
THE

TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR NOVEMBER, 1891.

- I. MR. CHAINE'S SONS. CHAPS. XLII.—XLIV.
- II. PARIS SPARROWS.
- III. DICKENS AS AN ART CRITIC.
- IV. SEPARATION.
- V. EIGHT WEEKS' SERVICE IN THE GERMAN ARMY.
- VI. THE BARON'S QUARRY.
- VII. TURENNE.
- VIII. IN A DIM LIGHT.
- IX. SOME FAMOUS BORDER FIGHTS.
- X. DISILLUSION.
- XI. THE STRANGE CASE OF MURIEL GREY.
- XII. TOWARDS ARCADE.
- XIII. A MODERN MYSTIC.
- XIV. LOVE OR MONEY. CHAPS. XXXIX.—XL.

New Works Now Ready.

BY THE HON. MRS. RICHARD MONCK.

MY CANADIAN LEAVES: an Account of a Visit to Canada. By FRANCES E. O. MONCK. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

NEW VOLUME OF ROAD TRAVEL.

ACROSS ENGLAND in a DOGCART: from London to St. David's and back. By JAMES JOHN HESSEY. Author of "A Drive through England," &c. With 20 Illustrations from Sketches by the Author, and a Plan of the Route. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

BY M. LAVISSE.

THE YOUTH OF FREDERICK the GREAT. From the French of ERNEST LAVISSE. By STEPHEN LOUIS SIMEON. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

BY THE REV. C. H. COPE.

CHARLES WEST COPE R.A., a LIFE RECORD. By his Son, the Rev. CHARLES HENRY COPE, M.A. With Portrait and Facsimile Reproductions. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

New Novels Now Ready.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A WESTERN WILD FLOWER."

LOVE or MONEY. By KATHARINE LEE, Author of "In London Town." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER."

MR. CHAINE'S SONS.

By W. E. NORRIS,
Author of "Thirlby Hall," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER A CHARM."

BEACON FIRES. By E. Werner,
Author of "Success," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GODFREY HELSTONE."

PATIENCE HOLT. By GEORGIANA M. CRAIK, Author of "Diana," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A pretty and decidedly piquant story."—The Times.
"Has real power, real pathos, and real cleverness."—Queen.

THIS DAY.

NEW ADDITIONS TO BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

THE DEWY MORN. By RICHARD JEFFRIES.

MARY ST. JOHN. By Rosa N. CAREY. Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST

NOW READY.

The Poems of John Ruskin.

Written between the ages of seven and twenty-six.

WITH an APPENDIX of LATER POEMS.

NOW FIRST COLLECTED FROM ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT AND PRINTED SOURCES; AND EDITED, IN CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER, WITH NOTES BIOGRAPHICAL AND CRITICAL.

By W. G. COLLINGWOOD, M.A.

In TWO VOLUMES, of 324 and 370 pages, with 23 Plates, never before Published, from Drawings by the Author, Illustrative of some Places mentioned in the Text, and Facsimiles of Two Poems and an Early Letter to his Father.

The Subjects of the Illustrations are:—Facsimile of Letter and Poem—Abbeville—Haddon Hall—Ruin near Ambleside—Watch Tower at Andermach—The Jungfrau from Interlaken—Rouen—Gate of the Ancient Palace, Nancy—Mont Velan—Fortress in the Val d'Aosta—Hospital Pass of St. Gothard—Ancienne Maison, Lucerne—Chamouni—Facsimile of Poem "The Fairies"—Mont Blanc de St. Gervais, from St. Martin—At Dulwich—Rydal Water—Sunset at Baveno—Amboise—Mill at Baveno—At Carrara—The Coast of Genoa—The Glacier de Bois—The Valley of Cluse—Glacier de Bossons.

A SPECIAL EDITION (limited to 750 Copies) on Arnold's Unbleached Hand-made Paper, and the Plates on India Paper, large post 4to, 3 Guineas, Half-Parchment, extra.

THE ORDINARY EDITION, with all the Plates, 4to, 30s., cloth.

A SMALL EDITION, with Facsimiles only, uniform with Small Editions recently published, small post 8vo, 10s., cloth.

Extract from the Preface by the Editor, showing upon what the value of this Work depends.

"They give, in the simple and direct terms to which lyrical or elegiac verse is limited, the ground-plan of his character—the bias of his mental development. They bring before us, from year to year, his home and surroundings, his studies and travels, authentic memoirs of a curiously observant childhood; in themselves valuable as records of bygone times and old-world personages. They hint the models upon which he formed his style...It would be a mistake unduly to depreciate these volumes of juvenile verses."

ALSO BY JOHN RUSKIN.

Uniform with Small Edition of "The Seven Lamps of Architecture," &c., small post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.; roan, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

LECTURES ON ARCHITECTURE AND PAINTING.

Delivered at Edinburgh in November, 1853.

With 15 Full-page Illustrations Drawn by the Author.

CONTENTS:—1 and 2. Architecture.—3. Turner and his Works.—4. Pre-Raphaelitism.—Index.

300 Large-Paper Copies have been printed, on Arnold's Unbleached Hand-Made Paper, large post 8vo, 15s.

N.B.—The last edition of this book was published in 1855.

A NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF

THE STORY of IDA. By

FRANCESCA ALEXANDER. Edited, with Preface, by JOHN RUSKIN. With Full-page Steel Engraving. Crown 8vo, parchment, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.; or in roan, gilt edges, 4s.

WILL BE PUBLISHED NOVEMBER 2nd.

By WILLIAM KINGSLAND.

THE MYSTIC QUEST: a Tale of Two Incarnations. An Occult and Philosophical Novel. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; cover specially designed and printed in Colours.

GEORGE ALLEN, Orpington; and 8, Bell Yard, Temple Bar, London.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

READY NEXT WEDNESDAY.

EDMOND SCHERER'S Essays on English Literature

Translated, with a Critical Introduction, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

Crown 8vo, with Photogravure Portrait, buckram, gilt, 6s.

RANDOLPH CALDECOTT: a

Personal Memoir of his Early Art Career. By HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Academy Notes," and Author of "Dreton Folk," &c. With 172 Illustrations. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

LIFE of an ARTIST: an Autobiography. By JULES BRETON. Translated by MARY J. SERRANO. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. This book abounds in vivid glimpses of a group of clever painters in whom the art world is interested.

COOMASSIE and MAGDALA:

the Story of Two British Campaigns in Africa. By HENRY M. STANLEY. Entirely New and Abridged Edition, with all the Original Illustrations. Crown 8vo, with Map, cloth, 3s. 6d.

AT THE ANTIPODES; Travels

in Australia, New Zealand, Fiji Islands, the New Hebrides, New Caledonia, and South America, 1888-89. By G. VERSCHUUR. Translated by MARY DANIELS. Numerous Illustrations and Map. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

The CRUISE of the "FALCON":

a Voyage to South America in a Thirty-ton Yacht. By E. F. KNIGHT, Barrister-at-Law. With numerous Illustrations and Map. New Edition (Sixth). Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

MARY HARRISON'S GUIDE

to MODERN COOKERY. By the Author of "The Skilful Cook," &c. With a Preface by the Right Hon. Sir THOMAS DYKE ACLAND, Bart. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

WOMEN and their WORK. By

VEVA KARSLAND, Authoress of "Smitten and Slain," &c. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s. A Series of Articles on the Various Employments open to Women.

HOW MARTIN DRAKE FOUND

his FATHER; or, Wanderings in the West. By G. NORWAY, Author of "The Adventures of Johnny Pascoe," &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, 5s.

AN INCA QUEEN; or, Lost in Peru. By J. EVELYN. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, 5s.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

GODIVA DURLEIGH. By

SARAH DOUDNEY, Author of "A Woman's Glory," "Where the Dew Falls in London," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

A RED SISTER: a Story of

Three Days and Three Months. By C. L. PIRKIS. Author of "A Dateless Bargain," "At the Moment of Victory," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

THE SQUIRREL INN. By

FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange," "The Late Mrs. Null," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

RUDDER GRANGERS ABROAD

By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1891.

No. 1016, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscripts.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Hall of Lawford Hall. Records of an Essex House and of its Proprietors from the Saxon Times to the Reign of Henry VIII. (Printed for the Author by Ellis and Elvey.)

THIS book seems not to have been written originally with any view to publication; but the short description of his own hall, which the author says he prepared many years ago, apparently for the benefit of his children, and afterwards put in type for the use of visitors to the house, kept growing under his hand as he pursued investigations further and further regarding past owners of the manor, till now it has become a thick quarto of over 500 pages of print. Even now, however, the writer modestly avoids, or seeks to avoid, unnecessary publicity, as he has abstained from putting his name upon the title-page; but he neither can nor ought to indulge in the hope of remaining unknown, seeing that we have only to turn to the list of owners of the hall at the beginning of his book, in which the last name is that of the present owner, Mr. Francis Morgan Nichols, a gentleman whose family have been distinguished in antiquarian literature for no less than three generations, and who is himself not unknown to the public as the author of a work on the Roman Forum.

It would be too much to hope that many owners of ancient manor houses throughout the country would devote anything like the same zeal and assiduity which Mr. Nichols has here shown, in inquiring into the past history of their property; and perhaps there are not many manor houses that could yield such a fruitful history as Lawford Hall. But a few such monographs might be expected to have a perceptible influence on the history of England at large. For even where the landowners have not been distinguished men, it is only from local history that we can learn the real state of the country in past ages; and if we only knew as much about a few particular places, say in Hampshire, Warwickshire, or Yorkshire, as Mr. Nichols tells us here about a manor in Essex, the general historian could fill up many deficiencies in his narrative, and add to it some warmth of colour very different from the artificial colouring to which we have been accustomed in the too attractive pages of Macaulay.

To us of the nineteenth century, Essex is by no means such an interesting county as it was to our forefathers several ages ago. In respect of wealth and population, England has shifted its centre of gravity; and Essex, notwithstanding its neighbourhood to London, is, on the whole, rather a backward county. Four or five centuries ago it was almost, if not quite, the wealthiest county in England, and one of the most populous. It is amusing, in these days, to hear of the Earl of Oxford calling on the gentlemen of Essex to meet him at Chelmsford, when the king (Henry VII.) was to be there with a number of Northern followers, "and that they be well-appointed, that the Lancashire men may see that there be gentlemen of as great substance that they be able to buy all Lancashire." Imagine some Essex men proposing "to buy all Lancashire" nowadays! Why, a score or two of Manchester mill-owners and Liverpool merchants could, if they were so disposed, pretty nearly buy all Essex. But in days before factories existed, and when the commerce of England depended entirely on natural harbours and navigable rivers, a county blessed with a fertile soil, washed by the Thames on one side and the sea on another, with easy water carriage from many parts to the London market for cargoes of grain and farm produce, could not but be one of the wealthiest in the whole kingdom.

The manor of Lawford is situated in the furthest corner of the county, overlooking the Stour above its estuary. Its earliest owners, of whom we are informed, were the Breton or Le Breton family, whose head, Radulfus Brito, one of the justices itinerant of Henry II., probably had a grant of it from the Crown. Under them we meet with some characteristic incidents of feudalism. The wardship of one of the heirs is purchased by John de Grey, bishop of Norwich, who marries him to his niece, Eve, daughter of Sir John de Grey, of Rotherfield. After the death of another owner, a writ is sent to the Sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk to inquire who they were who carried off his widow by night, apparently from Lawford Hall into the neighbouring county of Suffolk. The inheritance of the Bretons is ultimately divided among co-heirs. The manor, also, is no longer held directly of the Crown, but partly of the Lacys, of Castle Frome, in Herefordshire, partly of the Bouchiers, afterwards earls of Essex. Sir Benet de Cokefeld, however, a man of considerable importance in the days of Edward I., managed to get the whole manor into his hands by purchase from Sir Alexander of Hilton, but not without having to endure some litigation afterwards, both as to the advowson and other reserved rights, which afford a curious picture of the intricacies of the law in those days.

Under Henry VI. the manor was acquired by "the good duke Humphrey" of Gloucester, on whose suspicious death and the story of the Bury Parliament Mr. Nichols has something to say that deserves attention. It then came to the Crown, and was immediately granted to John Say, gentleman usher of the chamber, for life. John Say had sat in the Bury Parliament for the borough of Cambridge. In the next he represented the county of Cambridge, and was elected Speaker. This was doubtless due to favour at court, no less than his appointment as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which immediately followed. But it was a perilous time for court favourites; for the Duke of Suffolk had already been called upon for explanations touching the cession of Maine and Anjou, and was next year attainted in Parliament, and after being banished by the king was murdered at sea. John Say shared the duke's unpopularity, and was pointed at in the political ballads of the time (which by poetical license changed his christian name and called him Tom of Say) as one of a set of greedy courtiers who had impoverished the Crown. He, however, managed to live through a good deal of rough weather, and by the patronage of Viscount Bouchier and the Yorkist party was made under treasurer of England, retained his offices apparently, or at least the chancellorship of the duchy, when his old master, Henry VI., was restored in 1470, obtained a pardon next year on the return of Edward IV., was appointed five years later to the high office of keeper of the great wardrobe, and died in 1478, leaving a handsome fortune to his son William.

From this time there is a domestic interest in Mr. Nichols's narrative which is absent in the earlier part. John, or Sir John, Say (it does not appear when he was knighted), was twice married, and his family connections are of no less interest than his political career; but we have not time to dwell upon them. His son William, afterwards Sir William, when a widower, married a widow named Lady Waldegrave, on whom John Paston had set his eyes in vain. John Paston, indeed, was early enough in the field, and, if Mr. Nichols rightly interprets an expression in his brother's letter, had anticipated her husband's decease as a great opportunity for himself. But he hardly deserved success for letting his brother do the wooing for him; and though the lady consented to his keeping her musk-ball which the deputy wooer managed artfully to steal for him, she refused to accept his ring or give him any comfort in his suit.

The next owner of Lawford was William Blount, Lord Mountjoy, Sir William Say's son-in-law, under a settlement made during Sir William's lifetime. This young nobleman was a pupil of Erasmus, and in the course of his studies obtained from his master a scholastic dissertation on the advantages of the married state, which, he said, he liked so well that he had quite determined to act accordingly. "Nay," said Erasmus, "you must first read what I have to say on the other side;" but the young man was perfectly satisfied with the arguments on the first side, and desired Erasmus to keep the other to himself. He evidently remained of the same mind through life, for he married no less than four times. Throughout life also he was a great lover of learning and steadfast friend of his teacher, and it was in his company that the latter first visited England. Mr. Nichols has made a mistake, which he corrects in his preface, about the date of this last event. He supposed, as the older biographers of Erasmus did, that the great scholar came to England in 1497, and took for granted that he must have been at his pupil's wedding in Easter of that year. But Mountjoy must have gone back to Paris in 1498, and returned to England with Erasmus in 1499. The latter seems to have meditated only a very brief stay indeed, returning before the winter; but he was unable to leave the kingdom—first in consequence of the orders issued after the flight of Edmund De la Pole, Earl of Suffolk, and then, winter coming on, his return was delayed till January.

Dates in connexion with the life and letters of Erasmus are so confusing that any patient student who will take the pains to make a few of them clear does a real service to literature and perhaps to history. If Mr. Nichols has been entangled in one error he has been successful in correcting the dates of other letters in the correspondence, and also those of some state papers connected with Lord Mountjoy when he was Governor of Tournay, as given in the Kalendar of Henry VIII. Lord Mountjoy's biography, which is very interesting, fills no less than 158 pages of Mr. Nichols's book, while that of his son-in-law, the Marquis of Exeter, and his wife occupy about as many. With these and the story of the fall of the Courtenays the book is brought to a close, and I regret that space forbids me now to do justice to the most interesting part of the whole volume. I can but glance at a few scenes and occurrences which no reader will forget. How Lord Mountjoy, as Chamberlain to Katherine of Arragon, had the unpleasant duty laid upon him to endeavour to persuade his mistress to forbear to call herself Queen and be content with the title Princess of Wales; how his daughter Gertrude, Marchioness of Exeter, though she stood godmother to the Princess, afterwards Queen, Elizabeth, was imprisoned for her attachment to Katherine and for believing to some extent, as many did who were not altogether fools, in the Nun of Kent; how she was liberated at Thomas Cromwell's intercession, on writing a very submissive letter, acknowledging her indiscretion; how her husband, the marquis, also was arrested from some suspicion of his loyalty, and secret inquiries made about him among his tenants in Cornwall many years before the accusation of treason on which he was condemned; and, finally, how he and his wife were involved, with Lord Montague and others, in the fatal charge of aiding the designs of Cardinal Pole, who would have brought back England into subjection to Rome: these are among the more prominent facts of a family history that is full of interest. Mr. Nichols, moreover, has gone to original sources for most of his facts; those relating to the final charge of treason he confesses not to have been able to investigate very minutely. But he has done something to make matters clearer even upon this point, by pointing out a hitherto unnoticed error of Mr. Froude, who connects the inquiry among Exeter's tenants in Cornwall with the causes which brought about his fall. It really took place seven years earlier, and seems to have been due mainly to his sympathy with Katherine of Arragon and his dislike of Anne Boleyn.

Altogether, this book is one of real value for much more than local history.

JAMES GAIRDNER.

Daphne and Other Poems. By Frederick Tennyson. (Macmillans).

MR. FREDERICK TENNYSON reminds us of the poet in Mrs. Browning's "Vision," who, with sweet rhymes ringing in his head, "walked calmly onward evermore." We have hardly had time to relax after The Isles of Greece, when a second volume calls us from our sweet half-hours with the amiable minstrels of the day to nights of dignified solace. Daphne and Other Poems, though not openly confessing itself a continuation, has so much in common with its predecessor in spirit, construction, and cadence, that the critic finds himself half-unconsciously repeating the opinions which he formed last autumn.

We naturally, though with little reason, set up a comparison between the poet and his brother, and frequently find ourselves searching for parallelisms in thought and method. Mr. Frederick Tennyson cannot, however, be grouped among the professed exponents of the Laureate's art. He cannot live altogether outside the influences which have acted and interacted on the three brothers, but he has nevertheless a strong individuality. Indeed, during the long period between the publication of Days and Hours and his recent volumes he has strayed further from the Tennysonian fold. He has developed the philosophic bent of mind which has always predominated, and which has dulled in some degree his artistic sense and poetic fervour.

His Greek subjects are treated in a diffuse way, unrecognisable in his early work, and hardly to be expected from a scholar-poet. Herein is the radical difference between him and the singer of the "Lotos Eaters" or the author of "Empedocles." There is no restraint, and consequently little artistic coherence; the tears of Niobe are an overflowing stream of introspective grief, and the miles in Atlantis are wearily long. The reader's attention is taxed over-much, to the hurt of many fine passages of emotion and natural description which lie embedded in the verse. Mr. Tennyson has kinship rather with Wordsworth in his longer poems, where the "poetry" is strewn like oases in a weary land of philosophical theory. True, we enjoy the greenery after our long stages; but at each starting-out we think of that "pleasant place to wander in" which we should have, were all these happy spots gathered together this side of the Great Plain. This diffuseness not only mars the pleasure-giving power of the poems, but seriously affects the claim to be considered as Greek art. We have tantalising peeps into the palace-gardens of Hellas, but we have none of the old spirit. His Æsons and Pygmalions are distraught with nineteenth-century perplexities. When he answers the cry "My life is empty" in the splendid passage, concluding

"Oh! what a mighty host
Is there, whose hearts, and heads, and hands
Are smit with palsy, and they know it not," he epitomises the soul-stirrings of Mrs. Ward's hero. Psyche herself might be Catherine: the self-analysis of Hesperia never troubled maidens, poetic or otherwise, till Altiora Peto was written. In the latter portion of the volume there is a strange admixture of Christian symbol—seven-branched candlesticks, rich vestments, and the wreath of thorns—and also of Christian thought, as when Niobe is comforted by a voice, "Daughter, be of good cheer, for none are lost," or when the bereaved mother cries—"but I shall see them yet." The reader will not be long in finding out how the poet has wandered from his original artistic motif, and he will not be willing to find an analogy between "Daphne" and such as the "Shepherdess Calender," where contemporary life lives reasonably under the mantle of Thenot and Hobbinoll. He will call to mind the Laureate's lines—

"Nay, nay," said Hall.
"Why take the style of these heroic times? . . .
These twelve books of mine
Were faint Homeric echoes, nothing-worth."

Mr. Tennyson has, as already hinted, become even more of a metaphysician than he was in the story of Sappho and Alcaeus. He does not confine himself to his cherished doctrine of patience or of the continuing power of evil after death, but launches with energy into the more scholastic problems of "the infinite dual of the Highest One," gives us a disquisition by Cupid on the doctrine of sex, and descants like a university professor on freedom and immortality. We should be loath to lose these vigorous and stimulating passages, but they do not fit in with settings such as this:—

"And lo! on one hand
The pillar'd front of dread Latona's shrine;
The marble stair throug'd with the votaries
Bearing their offerings: and the long-robed priests
Enter'd before, hymning a sacred song,
And vanish'd in the temple's dim retreats,
Shaking their thuribles, amid the fumes
Of odours, and the breath of orisons.
And, while they passed, and the last note was heard
Dying amid the incense, the great doors
Closed with a brazen clang: and, when it hush'd,
A thunder spoke beyond the purple hills."

So, too, we should not care to go without the dantesque pictures in "King Athamas" or the scene in the winding stair of the mediæval castle in "Hesperia," though we feel that they are artistically out of place.

The poet's power of transcribing natural effects is still true, and his sense of colour has lost none of its freshness or delicacy.

"They heard the big plum tumble from its perch,
And hide itself amid the turf and bells,
That, bending o'er it, kept intact and fresh
Its bloom, pure dew of tenderest pearly clouds
Shed down ere sunrise: till the blackbird's eye,
Piercing the woof of wavering herbage, saw
A thirsty sunbeam light upon his prize,
And ceased his song to pierce its ruby heart."

"Æson" is the most stimulating piece in the volume; "Atlantis" contains the least of the unpoetical. "Hesperia" proves Mr. Tennyson a good story-teller, for few recent writers have excelled the tale of the soldier or of the merchant,

"spinning from his face
A dizzying mist of fable and of truth,
And with a hovering mystery on his tongue,
As one who could pour forth a hundred tales
In one brief afternoon: his memory
A vase, that gush'd forth water mix'd with wine,
And sometimes water only, though it took
A golden lustre from his sunny looks."

As a character-sketch this poem is his best; in its directness it is the counterpart of the mystic verses on "Psyche."

The blank verse flows unceasingly onwards with its wonted calm and melody, with here and there a jaggedness or a rhyme as if to rouse the reader from "falling asleep in a half-dream." The poet, too, has not forgotten his mannerisms, his love of quaint words as "pleached," of doubtful forms as "viny," and of the too-handy dissyllable, "selfsame." He still delights in "maymorn," "fullsoon," and other hyphenless compounds, which even Dr. Murray, we fear, may refuse to place in his collection of eccentricities. Nevertheless, despite all artistic shortcomings, great or small, we take leave of the venerable poet, acknowledging that he has both pleased and stimulated, and that, if at times we have grown weary and would have turned aside, a lurking hope of some pleasure to come has bid us stay, and has never failed of its reward.

G. GREGORY SMITH.

Backward Glances. By James Hedderwick. (Blackwood.)

MR. HEDDERWICK, who appears, from what he hints rather than says directly, to be some three years or so younger than Mr. Gladstone, has evidently intended this volume of personal recollections for the delectation mainly of his Scotch friends. They, it may safely be assumed, will find thoroughly readable what he has to say of the Glasgow and Edinburgh of what now appears a remote past. He does not attempt to be impressive, elaborately realistic, epigrammatic, or even vivid, after the manner of most contributors to literature of the "Reminiscences" order. He writes naturally—or, at least, what used to be considered as naturally in his younger days. There is what seems old-fashioned courtliness in his eulogiums on the distinguished men with whom he happens to have personally or professionally come in contact. But it sits easily upon him. Moreover, Mr. Hedderwick does not, like so many men who have reached, or are verging on, eighty, take a pessimistic or ultra-conservative view of present day progress. He is no laudatur temporis acti, at all events to an offensive extent, or in a controversial way. As a matter of fact, however, he does not deal much in personal or other contrasts, or even comparisons. He merely takes note of the changes that have taken place in the course of a busy journalist's life, spent chiefly in Edinburgh and Glasgow. Of Glasgow in particular, which is his native place, and in which since 1864 he has conducted with success the Evening Citizen, the first halfpenny evening newspaper published in any large city in the United Kingdom, he writes gracefully and sympathetically:

"On all sides I behold busy and eager thoroughfares where I rambled erewhile among verdant fields. I pause at the head of Queen-street and hear the shriek of steam whistles instead of the cawing of rooks. Have the innocent sheep that were wont peacefully to graze in St. Enoch-square been frightened away by the continual clatter of cabs? Jamaica-street is all day in a roar with traffic, and I muse on the disappearance of the grass which grew between the stones. I stare at St. George's Church as a leading business centre—the Stock Exchange is close to it—and think of a friend lately deceased who gathered blackberries at the digging of its foundation. . . . In no part of Glasgow was there a cab-stand; city omnibuses or cars were non-existent; the private carriages of the gentry and the doctors might be counted on the ten fingers. When darkness closed over the town it became feebly illumined with blinking oil lamps; the night-watchmen or 'Charlies' dozed in wooden boxes at certain street corners, sounded their clappers along their beats and underneath our windows on the occasion of a fire or a row, and bawled out at intervals the hour and the state of the weather—such as 'Half-past three and a fine morning!'—until the day-star rose in the heavens and the cocks began to crow on neighbouring farms."

It is in this spirit—in a sense these sentences are an epitome of his book—that Mr. Hedderwick writes his reminiscences; and it is on account of this spirit that they will be enjoyed by that Scotch public for which, in the first instance at all events, they have been published.

This volume, which is arranged in short easily read chapters, is also notable for the number of anecdotes of more than average excellence which it contains. Mr. Hedderwick is old enough to have seen Sir Walter Scott limping down the High Street of Edinburgh and yawning over his work as one of the clerks of the Court of Session, to have dined with W. J. Fox, the ex-preacher and member for Oldham, and to have been subjected to an excruciating course of puns by Douglas Jerrold. In Glasgow he saw Thackeray and Dickens when they were in their prime, Edmund and Charles Kean, Miss Helen Faucit, Professor Wilson, Lord Cockburn—the Lord Cockburn, who declared "I would as soon cut down a burghess without a fair trial and a verdict as cut down a burgh tree." Francis Jeffrey, Macaulay, Charles Maclaren (geologist and editor), Sir Daniel Macnee (portrait-painter and table-wit), Norman Macleod (cleric and humourist), Disraeli, and Mr. Gladstone, are a few among the many that Mr. Hedderwick has something fresh and, as a rule, personal to tell. His stories must be sought for in his book, however. They are no more to be criticised than blanc-mange.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

Spain and Morocco: Studies in Local Colour. By Henry T. Finck. (Percival.)

THE author of these studies is, on the face of them, no artist, so that their title is unfortunate. They are rather a collection of well cut slips from photographs, neatly arranged, with the interstices filled in with pen and ink. Whatever talent the author may possess, would, from internal evidence, appear to be musical, for his epithets are eked out by "marks of expression."

It is a pity that Morocco should have been included in the title, for we are expressly told, what we might have observed, that "the subject of this book is Spain." Likewise, on the principle of inoculation, it would seem, to justify the assertion, "I am not writing a guide-book," the author has evidently taken copious doses of the incomparable Forde, of Borrow, Gautier, Irving, Hare, de Amicis, &c., to prevent worse evils.

He has, however, mistaken the exotic for the native, and has recorded his impressions before shaking off the borrowed hues. A good word is nevertheless due to Mr. Finck for his general acknowledgment of indebtedness, while he is sharp enough to detect plagiarisms on the part of Augustus Hare and others. Let me, however, absolve them from one of his charges. He fancies they all derived the comparison of the Mosque of Córdoba to a marble forest from Gautier. Before I had read a line from any of these worthies, writing on "The Footprints of the Moors in Spain" in The Times of Morocco, I had asked who but a nation dwelling among groves of palms could have devised such a style of architecture, the very reproduction in cold stone of nature's temples. Mr. Finck, however, thinks the comparison uncalled for.

As a rough sketch of Spain, as seen by the passing traveller, touched in with no descriptive force, this volume is above the average. The preface opens with an able apology—the only one possible—for "a tourist . . . writing a book on two vast countries like Spain and Morocco, after a flying visit of barely two months"—viz., that "What is most novel, characteristic, and romantic in a foreign country strikes us most vividly at the beginning, and gradually loses its fascination as daily repetition makes it seem normal." Of the true artist, keen for everything artistic or betraying character, this is not the fate. Forde, who added to the artist's eye the student's mind, has left a "Hand-book" to become a classic. It is a matter of deep regret that, ever since the publication of the first two-volume edition of that work, Mr. Murray has yielded to the exigencies of the superficial tourist, hacking and mutilating—or rather allowing others to do so—till its present condition is little more than a caricature of the original. It is a comfort to know that at the hands of Mr. Houghton, a well-known Madrid journalist, some justice is being attempted for the next issue.

Mr. Finck saw a good deal of Spain, but nothing extraordinary; and he actually omitted Valladolid, and Saragossa—that modern Ephesus with its worship of the Pilar. And he even forgot to visit the world-famed Escorial, with its lovely marble mausolea; and when in Madrid he had no word of praise for the Prado. For width and shade I know nothing to surpass this promenade in Paris, Berlin, or Vienna. It is well that its picture gallery is noticed, though comparatively little known; for Murillo, Velasquez, and even Titian may there be studied better than in Dresden, Munich, or Brussels, so far as I have been able to judge. The streets of Madrid are neither so rough, nor are the Spanish railways so bad, as they have been painted; the fault of the one being the hardness of the excellent paving, and that of the other the lack of speed. To appreciate duly the Giralda of Seville one must have seen the complete sister tower at Marrakesh,* or at least the third at Rabat. In discussing the Moorish remains, the writer is quite at sea, preferring the tawdry modern finery of the Seville palace, and the gaudy "restorations" at Granada, to the genuine Mauresques by their side. The present "coro" of the Córdoba Cathedral stands in the inner courtyard of the Mosque, so it is not likely that many pillars have been removed.

* Often misnamed Morocco City.

The description of English influence on the fashions of Madrid is true; but the writer does not seem to be aware that to keep up that semblance of wealth which he observes outside much pinching goes on within, and that many who drive in a carriage and pair dine at home on boiled pork and chick-peas. But he is right in describing the Spaniards as being little addicted to drunkenness; they have a saying, when they mean to indulge in a bout, "I won't leave my share to the English." One of the most entertaining articles I ever read in the Epoca was an account of the English temperance movement, treated much as some strange custom of the Cannibal Islands might have been by The Times. The idea of curing Spaniards of bull-baiting by representing that sport in its true light, as cowardly and unsportsmanlike, is good, for no other argument would carry weight. The democratic cafés are indeed a striking sight in Spain; but Mr. Finck need not have depreciated their coffee, as it rivals that of France, Italy, or Switzerland, for the simple reason that the same cosmopolitan caterers brew it. The introduction of French cookery in the hotels is lamentable, but may be avoided by choosing cheaper places more frequented by natives; and Spanish cooking is good when the initial repugnance to garlic and rancid oil are overcome. Experientia me docuit. But the Spanish postal service! No name can be too bad for that, as to which I have a similar authority, and would that I could make that maw disgorge! The Leranter, as its name implies, is an Eastern wind, and not an African; but it does blow.

Such portion of this book as deals with Morocco deserves scant notice, for the writer only peeped at Tangier and Tetuan. He was greatly mistaken about the heat there in summer, which, unlike that of Algeria, seldom rises above 75° F. in the shade; but he did well to notice the extensive Flora. I once counted over sixty varieties from the saddle between those two towns. The guide-book vaccine growing weaker here, descriptions improve, though errors increase, and this is noticeable on the whole of the return journey. Most who visit Morocco do so in blissful ignorance, and, imagining no one to be so wise as they, forthwith publish another "work" at their own expense. This has brought the number of books on that country to between twelve and thirteen hundred, of which nearly three hundred are in English. The task of reviewing nearly fifty of these, in various languages, has rendered me rather cynical as to the powers of these passing travellers. Yet there is no country more in need of a standard description than that Empire of the Shercefs.

Spain and Morocco is another of these American printed volumes in English type, with its "gayly," "labor," "row-boats," "stoops," "back-side of the house," &c. Its saving clause is an index. There are several attempts at witticism; but the best literary portion is the account of the ride by coach and tartana on the Eastern coast, which vividly recalls to me a similar experience in Central Spain.

J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

Notes on Men, Women, and Books. By Lady Wilde. (Ward & Downey.)

LADY WILDE presents here her "first series" of "selected essays." Into how many series the selection is to run she does not tell us, nor does it appear what regions of human and literary interest she means us hereafter to explore or re-explore under her guidance. These now offered are sufficiently varied. At the beginning of the volume Jean Paul Richter is discussed; at the end Charles Kean as King Richard. Here is an essay on George Eliot, and next to it one on Daniel O'Connell. Fiction is further treated in papers on Lord Lytton and Disraeli, and poetry in discourses on Tennyson, Wordsworth, Philip James Bailey, and Thomas Moore. No information is furnished as to the date or place of original publication of these papers: an omission occasionally inconvenient, as it might explain and partly excuse certain peculiarities which occur here and there—for example, why Middlemarch is considered only up to the end of the second volume, the review breaking off suddenly with the words, "We leave the reader to study the concluding volume, that will give an answer as to the final result." The re-publication of magazine articles, as such, is not necessarily to be condemned; and the issue in volume-form on their own merits of essays which have been printed in magazines is also proper enough. But magazine articles should hardly be made to do service as essays in the comparatively permanent form of a volume without being duly amended to suit their new rank and bring them up to date. Even calling them "notes" does not suffice.

Many of the papers in Lady Wilde's volume would have been well worth the trouble; but the process would have proved fatal to two or three—to the essays on Wordsworth and Tennyson, for example. For these are no more than book-reviews of that primitive and simple kind which consists of many quotations and a running commentary, with no serious attempt at either analysis or criticism. The essay on Leigh Hunt is fuller, but hardly satisfying—is a study of Leigh Hunt, in some measure worthy of the man, never to be written? Lady Wilde is good at narrative. She chooses and arranges her incidents to great advantage. The paper on Jean Paul Richter and that on Lady Blessington are of this description, and are among the best in the book. Of the two, the former is the more serious and careful study, and it is supplemented by well-selected passages from Richter's writings. The story of Vanessa and Stella, also, is told cleverly. That the version adopted by Lady Wilde of that mysterious passage in Swift's history has not been proved correct goes without the saying, for no version has yet been proved or even generally adopted. Doubts, however, are not permitted to mar her narrative, which is given with all the force of unquestioned fact in Lady Wilde's picturesque style. Here, again, a footnote to the effect that "this must be read as romance, not as verified history," might have been useful, to save some unsophisticated readers from going astray, and possibly wasting their tears and sympathy on the wrong persons.

Picturesque narrative rather than criticism is, indeed, Lady Wilde's strong point. Nevertheless, there is some clever, if one-sided, criticism in the paper on George Eliot, or rather on George Eliot as seen in Middlemarch. Lady Wilde does not admire George Eliot. She says of her that she "abounds in commonplaces, delivered in language of oracular obscurity, as if they were deep truths brought to the surface for the first time." "Often in the effort to seem wise, she attained only to being dull." "She is determined on teaching, and will interrupt a love scene with a disquisition on the return of the Jews or the appearance of infusoria under the microscope" (p. 171). The most favourable opinion Lady Wilde can offer about George Eliot is that she has "a keen insight into ordinary human life and commonplace natures; some humour, a strong trenchant way of describing what lies on a certain low social level, and a sharp, rough power of sarcasm." But she is "vulgar," and this is fatal. It is "coarse" for the rector's wife in Middlemarch to describe Mr. Casaubon as "a great bladder for dried peas to rattle in," and to say "some people never know vinegar from wine till they have swallowed it and got the colic." It is "vulgar" to make a fox-hunter say "By God" when he might have been made to say "By Jove," which is, Lady Wilde thinks, "at least harmless." That writers of fiction should before all else be true to the human nature they profess to depict is a consideration not entertained by Lady Wilde. If fox-hunters are in the habit of saying "By God," and not "By Jove"—and it is likely they prefer strong Saxon to "classic allusions" however "harmless"—George Eliot was right in thus presenting the case, even at the risk of being charged with coarseness.

Lady Wilde's ideal novelist is a very different person in all respects from George Eliot—namely, Lord Lytton. According to Lady Wilde, Kenelm Chillingley, the work of which she specially speaks, is "filled to overflowing with epigram, genial humour, and polished sarcasm; profound reflections over life and lofty aspirations towards the highest good, with mocking aphorisms that show the hollowness of modern social life, and satire keen and flashing as the spear of Ithuriel, where shams and falsehood are to be unmasked. Every thought is philosophy, every word is gold" (p. 205).

This is saying a good deal, but it is not all. Wonderful also is the form in which Lord Lytton's wonderful thoughts are clothed:

"All the graces of classical style, the riches of modern culture, and the glowing passion which genius alone possesses and radiates, are found united in the wonderful golden flow of Lord Lytton's eloquence" (p. 205).

In phrase equally rapturous the man himself is celebrated :

"This man knew all life, was versed in all knowledge, dowered with every gift, crowned with all the splendour of fame" (p. 212).

If Lord Lytton had ever been privileged to read these words, he should surely have reassured us, after the manner attributed variously to Louis XIV. and to a Scottish Baillie : "You must remember that I, too, am mortal."

Next to Lytton, in Lady Wilde's estimation, comes Disraeli, for she declares that among the male novelists of the day "this age crowns two at least with immortality—Bulwer and Disraeli." Thackeray, whom she mentions incidentally in her paper on Lady Blessington, is no favourite. She describes him as "the caustic satirist of women, the harsh denouncer of their follies, the author whose name above all others is hateful to the sex." Obviously she does not understand him; but her remark is the more curious because her own opinion of women is far from elevated. Like Jean Paul Richter's Lenette, she decries learning in her sex. If it were true, which of course it is not, that Thackeray's theory of women is expressed in the formula—"all clever women are wicked and all good women are fools," the sentiment would not be worse than that expressed by Lady Wilde herself in this manner :—

"Women are very pretty story-tellers, but they are only good writers through sympathy and love. They should know the range of their limited mental powers and keep within it if they wish to interest. An affectation of learning spoils them, because it is never more than an affectation; no woman is really learned. . . . The great charm of the sex is in that light superficiality which gives sympathy so readily, believes everything through love, and seeks no grounds for belief beyond faith in the one beloved" (p. 175).

The outlook for literary women is, on Lady Wilde's showing, far from bright; for while "men are continually adding names to literature that will last for all time—women never." The best that can be hoped is that "the fragrance distilled from the glowing feelings, crushed lives, and perhaps broken hearts of literary women, may refresh a few idle hours of man's more earnest life. It is enough: the world asks no more from them than to amuse or soften through sympathy the powerful ruling race for whom woman was created only to be the helpmeet" (p. 176).

Here, again, a note of the date when these words were first written would be useful. In view of recent achievements of women in things learned the sentiments seem a little antiquated. But whenever written, they are an exaggeration. The "great charm" of Mr. Somerville, for example, was assuredly not "light superficiality"; and she is a refutation of the assertion that "no woman is really learned." As to literary immortality, we do not presume to speak for time and for the present age with the confidence of Lady Wilde; but there is not much risk in saying that the chances of permanent fame are quite as great for, say, Charlotte Brontë as they are for Lord Lytton, while if Disraeli, the novelist, is to be remembered, it will surely be because he was Disraeli the statesman as well.

Notwithstanding this and other crude judgments to which we have called attention, we are of opinion Lady Wilde's own work is better than her theory, and in some degree refutes it. The quotations we have had occasion to give, if treated as specimens, do it less than justice. They must be taken with others, such as :

"Stong nations fight, oppressed nations sing; and thus, not with armies and fleets, but with the passionate storm of lyric words, have the Irish people kept up for centuries their ceaseless war against alien rule" (p. 221).

"Leigh Hunt, though accepting the necessity of the age and content to write for the passing hour, yet threw vitality into all he touched, incarnated some portion of his nature, and sent forth nothing to the public that did not tend to make it wiser and better" (p. 244).

"Amongst the wits came Charles Lamb—he who met you with laughter and so often left you weeping; the strangest compound nature ever formed out of genius and a tragic destiny" (p. 236).

"What have we that is not bought with suffering? by lives that toil on in darkness and gloom to hew out for others the elements of heat and life. World-saviours and light-bringers are all doomed, like the workers at the Gobelins tapestry, to work a life-long ever at the bright threads, but at the back of the picture, never seeing the result, never hearing the praise" (p. 343).

Passages like these, of which there are many, are well calculated to "charm," though they cannot be fairly described as lightly superficial.

WALTER LEWIN.

The Life and Doctrines of Jacob Boehme. By Franz Hartmann. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

ENGLISH works on Jacob Boehme, or translations of his writings, have lately followed one another in quick succession. Not to mention articles that have appeared in periodicals, and periodicals almost wholly devoted to his writings or to those of his fellow mystics, we have before us five volumes published since 1885, and there are probably others that we have not seen. Nor is this movement confined to England alone; it is evident also in Denmark, Germany, and France.

The composition of this present volume irresistibly reminds us of a favourite recipe for writing essays at Oxford. The plan was to take any huge folio de omni scibili which nobody ever reads, such as Puffendorf On the Law of Nature and Nations, which gives full references and quotations from the Classics in the notes; a wordy paraphrase, or gloss of the text, was next made; and the original note, which in Greek letters or between marks of quotation took up a large space on the MS., was then adduced in confirmation of our reasoning, "with this agrees Aristotle" or "so saith Cicero." There were few themes given for college essays which could not thus be treated. In the same fashion Dr. Hartmann here treats Boehme's writings. He throughout gives his own paraphrase. He first dilutes Boehme's text with the water of Buddhistic theosophy and the ocean science, and then quotes him as the authority for what he has said. In this way poor Boehme is made responsible for doctrines which his soul would have abhorred—e.g., "Whether we call them [the angels] by those names, or whether we adopt the names by which they are called in other theologies, will be of no consequence, and not alter the fact that such powers exist." Boehme! who believed in the magic power of names and letters; and that the true name and the thing were identical!

If we consider only those parts of his writings which Boehme has in common with other Christian mystics, it is easy to form a catena of passages of singular beauty and truth. No other mystic, neither St. Bernard, nor Thomas à Kempis, nor Luis de Granada, nor Santa Theresa, has written passages of greater nobility than he has done. We may find, too, in his works much that is common to a wider range, such as Philo, the Christian mystics of Alexandria, the Buddhists, and even some of the Mahomedan mystics. He is, so to speak, far more catholic than Bunyan, the only writer who in genius and circumstances can be compared with him. Bunyan never freed himself from the trammels of his Calvinistic theology; and yet we must deem his works, both as a whole, and especially The Pilgrim's Progress, by the consent of all, incomparably beyond anything that Boehme has achieved.

The reason is evident. Bunyan wrote only of what he knew; he attempted merely to put into allegorical narrative what had taken place in his own experience, moulded by the views he had been taught, and enriched with facts within his own observation. He did not aim at a building up of a theology, but only to set forth in allegory the history of the salvation of a human soul. Boehme, with little more real knowledge, with only the very faintest smattering of false science, attempted far more. He tried to build up not only a theology, but a cosmogony, out of his own experiences or dreams. In his method of doing it he shows that he was not in advance of his age, but behind it. Of his genius, of his exalted piety, and of the purity of his life and motives, there can be no doubt. But his astronomy was the astronomy of the astrologers and of the vulgar. His natural philosophy and his chemistry were the natural philosophy and the chemistry of the alchemists. To him the sun was the centre of the universe, the stars far inferior in importance and deriving their light from it, the moon far higher than the planets; every man had an astral soul, and was governed by astral influences. There were to him only four elements. Salt, sulphur, mercury have occult and spiritual as well as natural qualities, and are direct emanations from, if indeed they do not exist in, the essence of the divinity. He believed in the power and virtue of certain names and signs as in witchcraft. The signs of the seven properties or qualities of eternal nature, which head cap iii., are taken from the Almanacs, and arranged after the manner of such formulæ in witchcraft (cf., the Sator-Arepe formula); the first three to be read forwards, the fourth between them, a circle, which can be read either way, and the last three identical with the first, but to be read backwards (cf., p. 71). His main doctrine is that man, the microcosm, contains within himself the macrocosm of the universe. The duality which he sees in man he sees also in the divine essence, but he is not consistent in his explanation of it. The system too, if system it can be called, is full of contradictions, and Boehme acknowledges this; he often says that in his earlier writings he did not understand the truths revealed to him, nor explain them as he did in his later works. Yet his followers compound and mix them all together. Dr. Hartmann, however, we must confess, is far more consistent than many others who adopt only what agrees with their religious views, or with their metaphysics. He apparently (we beg his pardon if we misinterpret his obscure hints) does believe in the occult doctrine, in astral and other influences; he holds strongly the doctrine of the microcosm and macrocosm, and that the only way to truth is for man to recognise the macrocosm, i.e., God within himself, and his own vast powers. As we said before, all this is mixed up with thoughts of singular beauty, with some of which religious men of all schools, with others the most orthodox Christians will agree; and these we may appreciate at their full worth. But our author, like the adepts of many another mystical school, will have us swallow the whole, or none at all.

"It is perfectly useless," he says (p. 101), "to attempt to enter into theoretical speculations for the purpose of trying to find out whether or not the doctrines of Jacob Boehme in regard to that which transcends the reasoning power of man are true."

We either perceive it or we do not, there is no middle course.

We cannot ourselves read like this. There may be some students who can digest everything; we seek to choose the best and what we can understand, and are content if we can assimilate that.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

NEW NOVELS.

Patience Holt. By Georgina M. Craik. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Miss Wentworth's Idea. By W. E. Norris. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Amethyst. By Christabel R. Coleridge. In 2 vols. (Innes & Co.)

Recalled to Life. By Grant Allen. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

The Redemption of Edward Strahan. By W. J. Dawson. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

Scarlet Fortune. By Henry Herman. (Trischler.)

A Great Gulf Fixed. By H. L. Havell. (Reading: William Smith.)

If Patience Holt were Miss Craik's first venture in fiction, it would be exposed to some criticism that, as circumstances now stand, would be valueless. The writer has long ago taken a line of her own, which has found a certain degree of favour among readers; and the question whether it is the best that could have been chosen is no longer open to discussion. Miss Craik's merits are, in the first place, a marvellous directness and simplicity of style; and, secondly, a singular aptitude for study of character. Her chief fault is a tendency to dwell too long and too elaborately over her portraits. Patience Holt has some decidedly good points. The father of Patience, a Quaker by birth, is a man of eminent worth and respectability, with a mind cast in the narrowest and most conventional of moulds, to whom the possession of a daughter exhibiting a number of fantastic and even impish elements in her character is humorously described as being the source of continual shocks almost amounting to horror. When Patience has developed into an imaginative and highly strung, but rather petulant, young woman, the family make the acquaintance of a charming old country gentleman named Wharton, whose only son Ralph is a young man of imperfect education and hopelessly boorish manners. Much credit must be given to the writer for the aptness with which these characters are sketched; at the same time it is possible to have too much of a good thing. The same situations recur with wearisome frequency; and after Patience has for about the twentieth time exhibited her skill in snubbing and mortifying the loutish creature who is first her lover and afterwards her husband, the most devoted admirer of Miss Craik's writings will hardly be able to deny that things get a trifle monotonous. It is scarcely necessary to remark that the tale will be more enjoyed by women than by men; being, in fact, constructed on lines which have become exceedingly popular of late among lady novelists. The weak-minded, or immoral, or stupid hero, whose business it is to serve as a foil for the superior virtue or intelligence of the girl who marries him, has become quite a common feature in latter-day fiction, though we do not remember to have anywhere encountered such a specimen of unqualified stupidity and ignorance as the creature who finally becomes Patience Holt's husband.

Only a small portion of Miss Wentworth's Idea is occupied with the actual idea entertained by Miss Wentworth herself, which is the familiar one—in novels—of devoting life and fortune to the service of humanity and religion, under the guidance, in this case, of that popular preacher and eminent Christian Socialist, the Hon. and Rev. Ernest Compton, founder of the guild of St. Francis. The bulk of the narrative has reference to Miss Wentworth's niece, Sylvia, who creates a tremendous flutter in the family circle by insisting on falling in love with Sir Harry Brewster, whose wife has lately divorced him under circumstances exceptionally nauseous and disreputable. The book may be briefly described as a society novel, of the kind which, in regard to scene, fluctuates between Mayfair, country mansions, and Monte Carlo, as, in style, epigrammatic and mildly cynical, and as plentifully stocked with the badinage of the clubs and gossip of the boudoir. Mr. Norris is well enough provided with the qualities requisite for writing of this kind. He is scarcely ever either deep or pathetic; but he can draw sharply defined characters, and can enliven his writing with plenty of good-humoured satire. And it may be added that his book is throughout unexceptionable in tone—not a compliment which can often be paid to fiction of this class.

Amethyst is also a society novel, at least in so far as no characters in its pages are below the rank of "county people"; and if an impoverished family does figure prominently throughout, it is at all events a titled one. However, the writer can tell a story well; and her descriptions, if transferred to middle-class life, would be quite as interesting. Amethyst is the daughter of Lord Haredale, who has made ducks and drakes of the family property and reduced his wife and daughters to a state of genteel beggary, involving the usual embarrassments and humiliating shifts. Some rather realistic descriptions of the ways and doings of fast society might perhaps with advantage have been omitted; but the tale has many compensating merits. The struggles of Amethyst and her sister Una towards a higher life amid a multitude of grosser temptations are told with a high degree of nervous power, and remarkable temperateness as regards expression of religious views. Amethyst's four proposals, and two love affairs in which Una is the principal figure, contribute sufficiency of the romantic element; while the intrepid cheerfulness and ingenious candour of Lady Haredale in her struggle to maintain decent appearances are an amusing feature throughout. The end of the book is in many respects deeply pathetic.

Those who are familiar with Mr. Grant Allen's writings can hardly fail to have noticed the versatility of his genius. It was but the other day that we saw him successful in fiction of an essentially superficial and popular type; he can delight us when he chooses with highly finished character studies and descriptive matter of rare excellence; and now we find him taking for his subject a psychological problem and dealing with it in a manner which, if not exactly perfect as an artistic effort, is at all events precisely in keeping with the general tenor of the series to which it is a contribution. Whether the sight of a father lying dead before her eyes, shot through the heart, could possibly deprive a woman of all memory of past events and leave her mind a complete blank, except for the ever-present image of the dead man lying before her and the supposed murderer escaping through the window, is a problem which need scarcely be discussed. It is the starting-point of the present novel; and the successive developments, which culminate in the patient's mental restoration, together with her discovery of the real circumstances of the murder, are related with considerable ingenuity. At the same time, although the interest is sustained throughout, the book leaves something to be desired in respect of treatment. Mr. Allen is adopting the style which was handled so successfully by Wilkie Collins, and he must submit to a comparison with the latter. The plot is exactly of the sort that Wilkie Collins would have delighted in; but he would have described to us much more fully and completely than Mr. Allen has done the mechanism of the automatic photographing apparatus which recorded the various stages of the murder. Nor, however great the necessity for mystification might have been, would he have resorted to such a burlesque device as the incident of an elderly lady scrambling over a garden wall, with broken bottle-glass stuck along the top, in order that the scratches on her hands might direct suspicion of the murder towards her.

In The Redemption of Edward Strahan we have a book of more than ordinary merit dealing with the social question. The writer's previous efforts seem to have been chiefly in the direction of essay writing, and the hand of the essayist is discernible throughout the present work; nevertheless, the personal element claims a fair share of interest. Starting in life in the humble capacity of grocer's assistant in a country town, where the monotony of existence gives his better nature no scope for action, Edward Strahan finds his way to London, where his character, impressionable and impulsive, but capable of great intensity, finds at last its truest expression in a life of devotion to humanity. The influences that affect his career—especially the influences exercised by women—are described with skill. The writer treats familiar topics with lively freshness; and his book is thoughtful and stimulating throughout, even though, as is inevitable, the problem is almost as far from being solved at the end as at the beginning. Many of the other characters in the book are creditably executed, especially Mary Messenger, who finally becomes Strahan's wife, and Alice Tight, an "intellectual Ishmaelite," of whose subsequent history one would have liked to hear a little more than the author has told us.

"A Yankee yarn" is perhaps as suitable a phrase as any for describing Mr. Herman's book. Two murderous ruffians prospecting for gold in the Rocky Mountains, a backwoods beauty, daughter of the elder ruffian, and an English Earl—at least he becomes an Earl before the end of the story—appear in the opening scene. Lucy (the beauty), falling in love with the Earl at sight, saves him from being murdered at the hands of her father, whom, together with his villainous partner, she abjures, and forthwith engages herself as nurse to the Earl, whose injuries have resulted in total loss of memory. Several years afterwards the ruffians, having amassed fabulous quantities of gold, appear in London and become the lions of the season. The Earl also appears, and puts up with Lucy at Claridge's Hotel. They have been living together now for some years; but as it is explained that they are only living as brother and sister, the circumstance seems to have provoked little or no remark. The ruffians plot to blow up the Earl, and for this purpose construct a tunnel under his residence, but are unfortunately blown up themselves. Then the Earl, having recovered his memory, marries Lucy, and the yarn is complete. It is entitled Scarlet Fortune, but no particular reason seems to exist for the name, and any other would have done as well.

Mr. Havell need scarcely have been at the trouble to preface his book with an elaborate apology for sending it forth upon the world. A Great Gulf Fixed is neither better nor worse than the average run of shockers, and the fact that its aim is to expose the iniquity of sending rotten ships to sea is no particular objection to it. The most distinctive feature of the story is its extreme brevity, which excludes it from any claim to an extended notice.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

The Little Manx Nation. By Hall Caine. (Heinemann.) The contents of this pleasant little volume consist of the three lectures delivered by Mr. Hall Caine at the Royal Institution in the spring of the present year. It has been so often remarked that success upon the platform is incompatible with success in the study—that the speech, address, or lecture which is admirable when delivered cannot possibly be admirable when read—that people in general have lazily accepted the repeated criticism without caring to ask whether it has any justification in common experience. As a matter of fact such justification is altogether wanting. Even such entirely extemporaneous utterances as the speeches of Mr. Gladstone, the sermons of Mr. Spurgeon, and the lectures of the late George Dawson, make admirable literature of its kind; while the platform discourses of Carlyle, Emerson, and Thackeray, which were written to be heard, are not one whit inferior to their other work which was written to be read. Mr. Hall Caine's talks about the scenery, the history, the celebrities, and the superstitions of his "tight little island" must have been very pleasant to listen to, but they will hardly be found less pleasant by those who make their acquaintance for the first time in these pages. Here and there the rhetoric may be a little too garish for the fierce light that beats upon type. Had Mr. Hall Caine been writing for the printer simply, he would probably have toned down the exuberant passage in which he thanks God that he did not witness the triumphal return of the Duke of Athol to the island he had misgoverned, because, had he been alive to see it he would have "shrieked with laughter"; nor would he have indulged in that very Tupperian contribution to proverbial philosophy, "a woman's good name is the silver thread that runs through the pearl chain of her virtues." Such things as these are, however, of infrequent occurrence; and it is probable that on the whole the book would have gained little and lost much had Mr. Caine gone over its pages with the revising pen in hand and the image of the critical purist in his mind's eye. If we are to accept Sydney Smith's dictum that all styles are good except the tiresome, we must pronounce the style of The Little Manx Nation to be very good indeed, for tiresomeness is a vice into which the writer never deviates. The three lectures deal nominally with the stories of the Manx kings, the Manx bishops, and the Manx people; but without any appearance of irrelevance Mr. Hall Caine manages to range under one or other of his three heads every characteristic item of information likely to interest an alien audience. And such items are numerous; for the little island nation has an individuality of its own which lends itself very readily to literary treatment, especially to the treatment of one who has mastered the great art of telling a story. Of course Manxmen have much in common with other Celtic races, but they have various picturesque customs which are all their own. One of them, now a thing of the past, was specially curious.

"When a man died intestate, leaving no record of his debts, a creditor might establish a claim by going with the bishop to the grave of the dead man at midnight, stretching himself on it with face to heaven and a Bible on his breast, and then saying solemnly, 'I swear that So-and-so, who lies buried here, died in my debt by so much.' After that the debt was allowed.

Mr. Caine has some capital stories of the old wrecking and smuggling days, and not a few really fine descriptive passages, notably a very vivid and beautiful sketch of a night with the herring fishers, which is quite equal to the best things of its kind in The Deemster or The Bondman. The preparation of these lectures was a happy thought, and their publication was another; for the book will not only interest its readers, but will tempt many of them to explore for themselves some of the loveliest spots to be found in British isles. Those who know Manxland know that Mr. Hall Caine's enthusiasm is not without abundant justification.

Sports and Pastimes of Scotland, Historically Illustrated. By R. S. Fittis. (Alexander Gardner.) This is the kind of book which demands a lifetime of labour. To bring together in chronological arrangement an exhaustive list of notices of national sports, to trace each game or sport to its origin, comparing it with other popular sports, and clearing away the clouds of folk-lore and legend which, among such a people as the Scotch, surround it, were a Herculean feat. Strutt has performed it fairly well for England; but Mr. Fittis, following confessedly in his steps, has put together a good deal of compilation and much miscellaneous learning in these essays, while the conviction remains with the reader that a good deal more remains to be said by some painstaking antiquary on the sports and pastimes of Scotland. Some of the matter which Mr. Fittis has collected has already seen the light, and is of such a miscellaneous nature that it resembles Jack Horner's pie. It is pleasant to pick out a plum here and there, but the result is by no means satisfactory when the book is viewed as a history of sport. There is too much natural history in the author's chapters on wolves, wild cattle, and deer. Mr. Harting has made the history of our extinct quadrupeds his own. Wild sports proper, the chase and capture of wild animals, should have been discriminated from such merely conventional sports as golf and curling. There was no need in treating of racing as a Scotch sport to begin with the Olympic games and Hiero of Syracuse. On the other hand, Scotch sports par excellence—archery, the Highland games, and, of course, golf—are carefully handled. These chapters will please votaries of amusements never more popular, perhaps, than at present; and the book, so far as it goes, is a pleasant addition to the class of lounging literature so well represented in all Scotch country houses. Mr. Fittis ascribes the fabulous waterbulls, kelpies, and the "famh," mysterious quadrupeds which terrify the superstitious, to the wild cattle and wolves which once were common in Scotland. It is a marvellous argument for the existence, scarcely in prehistoric days, of the reindeer in Britain to say "it should be remembered that the reindeer moss is still common in Scotland." That grouse disease existed so early as 1817 will be a surprise to many sportsmen, and yet Mr. Fittis establishes it. Scotch housewives will be glad to know how to preserve their fowls from foxes, and he extracts a memorable recipe for this purpose from Hector Boece. Antiquaries may care to remember that a duel once took place in the Meadows at Edinburgh between two archers, who shot at each other with the long bow so lately as 1791. It was remarked that the general adoption of the bow as a weapon for duellists would probably injure the seconds as much, if not more, than the principals. A good many scraps of curious learning of this kind may be found in Mr. Fittis's pages. We notice that in his essay on curling he does not attempt to trace the origin of the fare traditionally eaten at dinner after a curling match—boiled beef and greens. He asserts, too, that cricket was known on the North Inch, Perth, so early as 1812. We can testify that the game was somewhat unfamiliar there even in 1845.

"THE ALL ENGLAND SERIES."—Riding, and Riding for Ladies. By W. Kerr. (Bell.) This is the best practical treatise on the subject we have come across, the author, Capt. Kerr, having thorough experience of horses in all parts of the world. He is wonderfully free from any prejudice; and though riding can never be taught in print, there are hints in the chapter on teaching the young rider which everyone who wishes to bring up his children in the right way as horsemen and horsewomen will find invaluable. On the subject of Riding for Ladies, Capt. Kerr is equally at home, and his readers will find every useful instruction down to the minutiae of the best dress and saddlery. His freedom from prejudice is shown by his standing out for the recent craze that a woman should adopt the man's seat, though he admits that the seat on the side saddle with a third crutch is the most secure. A sketch of a man riding out a buck-jumper on a side saddle, described as the last resource, cuts away the only argument that can be brought forward for a needless change, by showing that none is wanted. These little books—for they are issued in two separate volumes—are a marvel of cheapness; and the illustrations are as spirited and correct as the letter press.

Life in the Royal Navy. By a Ranker. (Portsmouth: Chamberlain.) Among the many books to which the Naval Exhibition has given rise, we are disposed to give a high place to this modest shillingworth. Forecasts of the sea-fights of the future fail to attract us, however vividly described; though, like Robert Browning, we yield to none in veneration for the slightest relic of the hero of Trafalgar. But here we have a book which could not have been written in the time of Nelson. Conceive the boatswain or gunner whom Marryat has immortalised sitting down to impress sailors by means of his pen! Yet this is what a warrant officer of the present day has here boldly attempted to do, and with no small measure of success. The name of "ranker," to our mind, rather suggests the sister service; and even there it implies the obtaining of a commission, not a warrant. But this apart, none who reads can doubt the genuineness of this artless narrative, which tells how a country lad rose to warrant rank at the age of twenty-six, after eleven years' service. No doubt, the rapidity of his promotion was somewhat exceptional, but only because of his own exceptional steadiness and intelligence. He was certainly no prig, and he thoroughly enjoyed the vicissitudes of service on nearly every foreign station except the dreaded West Coast of Africa. His book may be strongly recommended for village libraries, and as a present for adventurous boys.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. WILLIAM MORRIS'S press has finished one-third of his very handsome reprint of Caxton's Golden Legend. The transcript of the original copy in the Cambridge University Library was made by Mr. F. S. Ellis and his daughter Phillis, and is just completed. Mr. Morris has designed a charming border for the first page of the book, and beautiful capitals all through, which have been cut by Mr. H. H. Hooper.

The sheets are a pleasure to look at and handle. The hand-made paper is from Kent, and is made by an old apprentice of the Balstons at their Whatman factory.

MR. MORRIS'S next Caxton reprint will be the Recuyell of the Historie of Troie (1472), the first English book printed in England; and the poet has already planned work to last his press for many years to come.

AN early publication will be an edition of Chaucer in a double-column folio and a new black-letter type designed by Mr. William Morris, and already complete, which those who have seen it consider a great success. The text of each poem will be taken from its best MS.—the Canterbury Tales of course from the Ellesmere—with only such alterations as sense and metre make imperative. We earnestly hope that Mr. Morris will confine the volume to Chaucer's genuine works, and put such of the spurious poems attributed to Chaucer as he thinks are true poetry into a separate volume. He, above all men, should not adulterate his Chaucer, even by an Appendix of later and inferior work.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces an illustrated volume, by Mr. H. Villiers-Stuart, of Dromana, entitled Jamaica Revisited, to which are added Personal Adventures in the Equatorial Forests North of the Amazon, and in other little-known regions of South America, as also in the wilds of Florida.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. have in the press a new work, in two volumes, by Miss M. Betham-Edwards, editor of Arthur Young's "Tour in France," which will be entitled A Survey of France One Hundred Years after the Revolution.

M. WADDINGTON, in forwarding to Miss Betham-Edwards the brevet of Officier de l'Instruction Publique de France, expressed in graceful terms the pleasure this acknowledgment of her literary services had afforded him. Lord Lytton, Her Majesty's ambassador at Paris, has also written to the author of The Roof of France, warmly congratulating her upon the great honour she has lately received at the hands of the French Government.

WE are informed that the German Emperor has expressed himself deeply interested in Lieut. John Bigelow's book on The Principles of Strategy.

MR. FISHER UNWIN is about to publish a History of Playing Cards, by Mr. John King Rennsler, who calls it "The Devil's Picture Book." This work is based upon much research, and will be profusely illustrated.

THE first eight volumes issued by the Railway and General Automatic Library, Limited, will be published early next week by Messrs. Eden, Remington, & Co. for the trade. Among the authors are the Duke of Argyll, the Marquis of Lorne, Miss Florence Warden, Mr. Clement Scott, and Mr. Percy Fitzgerald.

MESSRS. EDEN, REMINGTON & Co. will issue in a few days a novel, entitled Priests and People, by a well-known author, treating of Irish life and character, and describing the social conditions of Ireland at the present day; also a novel, by Miss Annabel Gray, entitled Through Rifted Clouds.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co. have ready for immediate publication a romance by Mr. Hume Nisbet, entitled The Jolly Roger, a Tale of Sea Heroes and Pirates, illustrated by the author.

AN illustrated novel by Mr. Cuthbert Rigby, entitled From Midsummer to Martinmas, will be published by Mr. George Allen about the middle of November.

MISS MARY C. ROWSELL'S volume of stories, entitled Petronella—which has previously been announced—will be published by Messrs. Skeffington & Son. A play dramatised from the principal story by Mr. Edwin Gilbert was produced last August at Ladbroke Hall.

A Cyclopaedia of Nature Teachings, consisting of classified extracts from the best writers and speakers, illustrative of religious, moral, and social truths from Nature, is announced for early publication by Mr. Elliot Stock. The work will have an introduction by the Rev. Dr. Hugh Macmillan, the author of "Bible Teachings in Nature."

WE understand that the publishing house of Messrs. Griffith, Farran, Okeden, & Welsh has been converted into a limited company, and that the style of the firm will in future be Griffith, Farran, & Co., Limited. The whole of the issued share capital has been taken up by the existing members of the firm, Messrs. Okeden and Welsh, who have been joined by Mr. W. Moxon Browne on the board of direction of the new company. This change has been made consequent upon rearrangements in connexion with the estate of the late Mr. Robert Farran.

THE English Goethe Society is awaking, it seems, from a period of somewhat painful stagnation. It held a meeting lately at the residence of its vice-president, Dr. Garnett, at the British Museum, where papers were read on the poet Rosegarten by Dr. Lange (original letters of Goethe to him and to his family being exhibited), and on Goethe's connexion with Jena by Mrs. Coupland; the proceedings were interspersed with music, vocal and instrumental. The next meeting is to take place on Monday, October 26, at the rooms of the Royal Society of British Artists, Suffolk-street, when a paper will be read by Mr. R. G. Alford on "English Critics of Goethe." The scope of the society has been enlarged, so that, while always keeping Goethe as the central figure, the attention of the members may be directed also to other fields of German literature, art, and science. An efficient executive committee has been formed, and many new members have joined. Dr. Eugene Oswald, 16, St. Mark's-crescent, N.W., is the new secretary.

THE Browning Society commences its new session on Thursday next, October 29, when Prof. Hall Griffin will exhibit, by means of the magic lantern, a series of views in Italy, illustrating The Ring and the Book, and other of Browning's poems. The meeting will be held at University College, Gower-street, at 8 p.m.

MESSRS. SOTHEY will open their season next Wednesday with the sale of the library of Mr. C. H. Cooper, town clerk of Cambridge, well known as the author of Athenae Cantabrigienses. The collection is of a miscellaneous character, consisting mainly of local histories, antiquarian works, and serial publications. But it also includes several first editions of Dickens, in the original covers, unbound; and a copy of Carlyle's Oliver Cromwell, together with eight autograph letters from the author.

READERS of Hatch's Hibbert Lectures and Wright's Lectures on Semitic Comparative Grammar will be glad to know of the hearty recognition given to them by A. Müller and Schürer respectively in the Theologische Literaturzeitung for October 17. Of the former work Prof. Schürer says: "What the author offers us is not mere pale theories; everywhere he has at his disposal concrete views of things, arising out of the most comprehensive knowledge of details in both departments of history—that of the Greek ideas and that of the Christian Church."

WITH reference to the obituary notice of the Rev. Percy Myles, in the ACADEMY of last week, we are asked to state that a committee has been formed to raise a memorial fund on behalf of his widow. Contributions may be sent to the Rev. Prof. G. Henslow, Drayton House, Ealing.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE first chapters of "The Naulahka," as has already been announced, will appear in the November Century. The story would seem to be one of a woman's mission running contrary to her affections. It begins in a typical pioneer town of the United States of America—"Topaz" to wit—but will speedily be brought into "Rhatore, in the province of Gokral Seetarun, Rajputana, India." The hero's description characterises it as "a land on the nether brim of the world, named out of the 'Arabian Nights,' and probably populated out of them." Mr. Wolcott Balestier, the coadjutor of Mr. Rudyard Kipling, is an American resident in London; hence "The Naulahka" is a story of West as well as East. A piece of his called "A Spring Romance" appeared in the Century a short while since.

AMONG the other contents of the new volume of the Century will be—an illustrated Life of Christopher Columbus, specially written by Señor Castelar; two papers on "The Fall of the Paris Commune," by Mr. Archibald Forbes; an account of the life, thoughts, customs, &c., of the Red Indians, from their own point of view, by Miss Alice M. Fletcher, of the Peabody Museum, who has lived among them for a long course of years; and a series of biographical articles by and about famous musical composers.

A NEW volume of the Magazine of Art will be begun with the November number. The frontispiece will consist of a picture in colours ("A Breezy Day," by Mr. H. Detmold), forming the first of a series which will appear at intervals in the magazine. This number will also contain the first instalment of "Our Illustrated Note-Book," in which the latest art movements of the day, pictorial, architectural, sculptural, &c., will be kept up to date by pictorial as well as descriptive illustration; also the following:—Mr. Dickes's "Mystery of Holbein's Ambassadors, a Solution"; "Where to draw the Line, a Word to Students," by Mr. Thomas Woolner; an article by Mr. Shaw Sparrow on Mr. Alexander Henderson's Collection of Pictures, with six illustrations; "Political Cartoons," by Mr. Linley Sambourne; and an in memoriam article on the late Richard Redgrave, by Mr. F. G. Stephens.

THE November number of the Leisure Hour, which commences a new volume, will contain the opening chapters of a serial story by Miss Elsa D'Estere Keeling, entitled "The Lindens." Among the other contents will be—"The Romance of Ancient Literature," by Mr. W. Flinders Petrie, with illustrations; "The Land of the Corsairs," by Mr. Stanley J. Weyman; and "The Horse World of London," by Mr. W. J. Gordon, illustrated by Mr. A. C. Corbould.

THE Christmas number of Good Words—to be published with the November magazines—will consist of a story by Mr. A. Conan Doyle, entitled "Beyond the City: an Idyll of the Suburbs," with illustrations by Mr. Paul Hardy.

THE forthcoming number of Literary Opinion will contain a special article on the literature of the Morte Darthur, by Sir Edward Strachey, and also a signed article by the Bishop of Derry.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

DR. LIDDELL has announced his intention of resigning the Deanery of Christ Church after the end of the present term.

THE Grace appointing a syndicate "to consider whether it be expedient to allow alternatives, and if so, what alternatives, for one of the two classical languages in the Previous Examination, whether to all students or to any classes of students other than those already exempted"—in plain words, for the abolition of compulsory Greek—will be offered to the Senate at a special meeting of Congregation at Cambridge on Thursday next, October 29.

MEANWHILE, the supporters of Greek have not been idle. In addition to an eloquent essay from Mr. J. K. Stephen, under the characteristic title The Living Languages (Macmillan & Bowes), a committee appointed last August at a meeting of resident graduates have issued an appeal to non-resident members of the Senate, "to come up to Cambridge and record their votes against the Grace in numbers which may not only secure its rejection now, but save the University from similar proposals for many years to come." Among the names on this committee, we notice three which also appear in the proposed syndicate, which at least proves that there is no desire to prevent fair discussion, if only the syndicate is allowed to come into being.

MR. F. DARWIN, reader in botany at Cambridge, has been compelled to apply for leave of absence during the winter, on the ground of his wife's health. It is proposed that Mr. Harold Wager, of the Yorkshire College, Leeds, should be appointed his deputy.

MR. F. Y. EDGEWORTH, the new Drummond professor of political economy at Oxford, was to deliver his inaugural lecture on Friday, October 23.

MESSRS. DEIGHTON, BELL, & Co., of Cambridge, and Messrs. George Bell & Sons, of London, will shortly publish a work on the history and contents of the library of Trinity College, Cambridge, by the Rev. Dr. Sinker, the librarian. The book will contain various illustrations and facsimiles from MSS.; and a few copies printed on hand-made paper will be offered to subscribers before publication.

MR. ADAM's treatise on The Number of Plato; its Solution and Significance, will shortly be published by the Cambridge University Press. The author claims to have for the first time completely solved the Nuptial Number, and to have shown its extreme importance for the understanding of the Platonic philosophy.

THE Rev. Dr. W. Sanday, Dean Ireland's professor of the exegesis of Holy Scripture at Oxford, is delivering a course of six public lectures on "The Johannean Question."

MR. J. H. MIDDLETON, the Slade professor of fine art at Cambridge, announces a special course of four lectures on "Michael Angelo," in addition to his regular lectures on classical archaeology.

DR. E. B. TYLOR, reader in anthropology at Oxford, is lecturing this term upon "The Origin and Development of Language and Writing."

MAGDALEN COLLEGE, Oxford, has promulgated a scheme for founding senior demyships, of the value of £100, tenable for four years, and to be awarded to graduates without examination.

THE new engineering laboratory at Cambridge has been opened this term, under the charge of Prof. Ewing. Two courses of laboratory demonstrations are being given—in applied mechanics, and in applied electricity, besides instruction in workshop practice.

MANSFIELD COLLEGE, at Oxford, now contains 36 students, of whom 29 are theological, while 7 are following the ordinary Arts course. One of the lecturers has lately been elected to an open fellowship in theology at Merton College. In this connexion, we may mention that one of the two new fellows at Corpus happens to be a Roman Catholic.

ACCORDING to the list of freshmen published in the Oxford Magazine, Christ Church and New College stand first, each with 58, closely followed by Keble with 53; then come Balliol (43), Trinity (41), Magdalen (35), St. John's (34), Exeter (33), Queen's (30), and Brasenose (29). Non-collegiate students are apparently omitted; but of the halls we may mention that St. Edmund has 9 freshmen and St. Mary 5.

MRS. THIRARD is about to give a course of six lectures at 13, Kensington-square (King's College Department for Ladies), on "The Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians," followed by demonstrations at the British Museum. The introductory lecture will be given on Wednesday next, October 28, at 3 p.m.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

AUTUMN'S TALE.

TELL us your grievance, meek autumnal Day,
That breathed erewhile the scented, bloomy air!
Doth not the Summer still beside you stay,
To nurse you with a sister's homely care?
If sunshine pour on you a fainter smile
A sky fills up your empty boughs in masses;
Is it to further bronze the verdurous pile
And scatter new death-tokens as it passes?
The lingering Summer that, with childlike daring,
Returns to play, the insidious poison breathes,
Unconsciously the day of danger sharing,
The leaves wind-tossed in mortuary wreaths!
So is your tale but little given to cheer—
Memorial of another dying year.

THOS. GORDON HAKE.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE most important paper in the Antiquary is one by the late Mr. Lines on ancient remains in the neighbourhood of Contway. Probably it did not receive the last corrections of its learned author, but as we have it, it is of considerable value for the student of Celtic history. The Rev. Dr. Charles Cox has contributed a series of notes on the visit of the Royal Archaeological Institute to Edinburgh. Much that he tells has already appeared elsewhere, but it is useful to have these things in a permanent form, and described by one who knows their relative importance. The heraldic exhibition was by far the most important display which the meeting brought forth. English antiquaries are commonly by no means learned in the heraldic antiquities of the sister kingdom. English heraldry is of home growth, though of course much influenced by the heraldry of Flanders, Italy, and France, and to a less degree by that of the Empire. The heraldry of Scotland was mainly a daughter of France. Sir Walter Scott does not seem to have realised this, and made errors in consequence. The Rev. J. Brownhill's notice of John de Athona, a canon of Lincoln, and an old English canonist, is important as drawing attention to an English man of letters of whom most of us have never heard. If we put aside the chroniclers, a dark night of forgetfulness has settled down on nearly every English writer of the middle ages who had not the good fortune to say his say in the vulgar tongue. We are grateful to anyone who will revive the memories of our forgotten worthies, even when they wrote in what was then the universal language of Western Christendom. Mr. R. C. Hope continues his useful annotated catalogue of Holy Wells; and Mr. Ward his interesting notes on Local Museums—dealing on this occasion with Lichfield, where the collections seem to suffer from faulty arrangement.

THERE is nothing particularly to note in the October number of the Journal of the Ex Libris Society (A. & C. Black), beyond the fact that seventy new members have already been attracted to the society by its publication.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DELOIR, Amédée. Journal d'un sous-officier, 1870. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
 GRAND-CARRÉ, J. Richard Wagner en caricatures. Paris: Larousse. 3 fr. 50 c.
 GÜLBERKIAN, C. S. La Transcaucasie et la péninsule d'Asie-Mineure. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
 LOCKROY, E. M. de Moltke, ses Mémoires et la Guerre future. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
 STEFFENS, G. Rotrou-Studien. I. Jean de Rotrou als Nachahmer Lope de Vega's. Oppeln: Franck. 3 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- CARRÉ, H. La France sous Louis XV. (1723—1774). Paris: May & Motteroz. 4 fr.
 FIGDOR, S. Parlamentswissenschaft. II. Die Partei-Taktik. Berlin: Puttkammer. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 FLERS, le Marquis de. Le Roi Louis-Philippe. Vie anecdotique, 1773—1850. Paris: Dentu. 10 fr.
 HORNIG, F. 24 Stunden Moltkescher Strategie, entwickelt u. erläutert an den Schlachten von Gravelotte u. St. Privat am 18. Aug. 1870. Berlin: Luckhardt. 7 M. 50 Pf.
 LÖHNER, F. v. Kulturgeschichte der Deutschen im Mittelalter. I. Bd. München: Mehrlich. 10 M.
 MARIOT, Mémoires du Général de T. III. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
 PICHLEK, F. Boleslaw II. v. Polen. Budapest: Kilián. 2 M.
 PINGAUD, L. Les Français en Russie et les Russes en France. Paris: Didier. 7 fr. 50 c.
 PRUAL, L. Le Crime et la Peine. Paris: Alcan. 10 fr.
 SAUVIS, E. Les deux Révolutions d'Angleterre (1603—1689). Paris: May & Motteroz. 4 fr.
 SERVOIS, G. État sommaire par séries des documents conservés aux Archives Nationales. Paris: Delagrave. 25 fr.
 STOFFEL, le Colonel. Guerre de César et d'Arrioviste, et premières opérations de César en l'an 702. Paris: Bouillon. 30 fr.
 WESSELY, C. Studien üb. das Verhältniss d. griechischen zum ägyptischen Recht im Lagedenwiche. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 40 Pf.
 ZELLER, J. Entretiens sur l'histoire du moyen âge. 2^e Partie. T. II. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BRUN, J. Diatomées. Espèces nouvelles marines, fossiles et pélagiques. Basel: Georg. 20 fr.
 BRIQUET, J. Les Labies des Alpes maritimes. 1^{re} Partie. Basel: Georg. 5 fr.
 CHUN, C. Die Canarischen Syphonophoren in monographischen Darstellungen. I. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Diesterweg. 10 M.
 ENGELHARDT, H. Ueb. Tertiärrpflanzen v. Chile. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Diesterweg. 10 M.
 ETTINGSHAUSEN, C. Frh., v. Die fossile Flora v. Schoenegg bei Wies in Steiermark. 2. Thl. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M. 90 Pf.
 LEFFVRE, André. La Religion. Paris: Reinwald. 5 fr.
 PALACKY, J. Die Verbreitung der Fische. Prag: Calve. 8 M.
 PERMTER, J. M. Die Windverhältnisse auf d. Sonnblick u. einigen anderen Gipfelstationen. Leipzig: Freytag. 5 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- CROISSET, M. Histoire de la littérature grecque. T. III. Période attique: la tragédie; la comédie; les genres secondaires. Paris: Thorin. 8 fr.
 UPAMIYANANAPRANSAK KATHIAE specimen, ab H. G. Jacobi editum. Kiel: Haeseler. 1 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON HERO[N]DAS.

IV.

Oxford: Oct. 11, 1891.

Textual criticism seems to have a comic side. In I. 57 K. gives τας γρα . . χ ιρας . ., and does not say that any of the letters are doubtful. Mr. Hicks, in the Classical Review, says: "I have again looked at the MS. . . and read τα σπλάγγυ' ξρωτι," and last week Mr. Headlam tells us that K.'s text is the relics of TACHPAΓXN—he also reading as Mr. Hicks. If this is so, then my restoration and construing of ἐκόμενε τὰς γραῖς χιέρασεν is one of the very funniest things I have ever seen. I did think ἐκόμενε τὰς γραῖς extremely odd, but the restoration as such was not only perfect, it was, assuming K.'s correctness, the only possible one: while, given the restoration, the construing was equally inevitable. And I have had no opportunity of seeing the MS. for myself.

The probabilities in favour of the Hicks-Headlam reading are enormous; and then it becomes a question whether in the previous line καθίδω της μίσης refers to a procession of Misc or to a sloping street in which a temple to her was situated. But to change it there exists not the smallest reason, grammatical or other.

Permit me these few further "retractions." In commenting on I. 74 I did not observe (what Mr. Richards has pointed out to me) that μετρηταις is both unmetrical and a vox nihili: but my remarks are not affected—read τε (or γε) μετρηταις(v). In I. 80 I now restore not Ἰταλικού χέ', but εἰτα χεουον (χῦσον?), suggested by Mr. Hicks's εἰτα δεούσον?

I find that the continuation of these notes requires more time than I can possibly give, so this must be my last letter, at any rate for an indefinite period. I propose in it to discuss a few more passages in the third poem, and then to give expression to certain plain truths which very much need to be spoken.

- (12) III. 19. αι δορκαλιδες δε ναι παρωτεραι πολλων
 20. εν τῆσι φουσις τοις τε δικτυοις κειραια
 21. της ληκουου ημεων τη επι παντι χωρ-μεσθα.

So the MS. in 19 R. substitutes δορκαδες. (One would think that the writer of comic choliambics for the stage would have allowed himself the same liberty as was taken by the writer of comic iambs for the stage; but there seems no undoubted instance of an anapaest in the second foot in Hero(n)dis. For IV. 71 can be disposed of by cutting off the last letter of ούτος, and in III. 7 αι αστραγαλαι (despite the possibility of interpolating a γ) is rendered suspicious by the hiatus.)

It is noticeable, too, that in 63 the MS. gives δορκασιον, where the longer form would have suited the metre equally—and that three names instead of one are given to knucklebones, two by the same speaker. And I suggest that in all three places one name, δορκαδες, was really used. It was a very unusual name, for Liddell and Scott do not know it in this sense. Hence in III. 7 αστραγαλαι was written above it as a gloss, and so got into the text, causing an hiatus. After that had happened, III. 19 was the first appearance of the word: there in turn it was glossed, and there, too, the gloss got into the text. It was not glossed in III. 63 because the meaning would be obvious to anyone who had already read 19.

The conjecture ΔΙΠΑΡΩΤΕΡΑΙ, which seems to belong to Messrs. Hicks, Jackson, and Richards independently, looks right, whether we read δὲ ναι λ with Mr. Hicks, or δὲ γε λ with Mr. Richards (or δὲ τ. λ., as I prefer).

But how did the corruption arise? Mr. Hicks supposes that the λ of λικαρωτεραι got transposed backwards (!) into δορκαλιδες. If he will write out the line and try to imagine himself making the transposition he will give up that idea. If his reading is right, the corruption arose from the similarity between AI and AI, which led to the last two letters being omitted altogether. If Mr. Richards's reading is right, the same similarity caused AI to be miswritten AI, after which naturally came chaos, the first hand of the present MS. writing δαι, while the corrector inserted εν above.

Do Mr. Hicks and Mr. Richards, however, see the right syntax? Each construes λ της ληκουου. It is most improbable that the comparative should be separated by eight words from the genitive it governs, and I take it to refer to the δελτος mentioned in the preceding lines. The mother says she waxes her son's slate every month, but he won't use it, or if he does use it he doesn't write a bit nicely, but will scrape all the wax away (εκ δ'ελλην ξισει—so Mr. Richards rightly [MS. ξυσι] against R. [ξυει]). Then she goes on to say that if the slate isn't shiny the knucklebones are: "But the knucklebones, forsooth, much more shiny," lie (all over the house) in the nozzle of the bellows (so that one can't blow the fire), and in the network strainers fixed into the neck of the ληκουος (so that, when you pour some oil out of that universal seasoner to flavour a dish, out tumbles a knucklebone).

And, if anyone who reads these lines will come to me in the Bodleian, I will show him a Greek child's slate which exactly answers to the description given by the mother of the naughty boy in the text.

- (43) III. 22. ἐπισταται δ' οὐδ' ἄλφα συλλαβῆν γνῶναι
 23. ην μή τις αὐτῷ ταῦτ' πεντάκις βῶσῃ.

In 23 the MS. has ταυτα (= ταυτὰ); and there is no need to change this, for the proposition may be taken to cover all syllables, as well as the syllable a.

(44) The mother complains that she has to pay for all the tiles broken.

- III. 47. ἐν γὰρ στόμ' ἐστὶ τῆς συνοικίης πάσης
 48. τοῦ Μητροτίμη ἔργα Κοττάλου ταῖτα
 49. ἀληθιν' ὥστε μηδ' ἰδοντα κινήσαι.

The MS. gives καληθιν' and οδοτα and they should be kept: "For the entire tenement cries with one voice, This is the work of Mētrotimē's boy Kottalos; and true work of his it is, so that one's mouth is quite shut (lit., so that one doesn't move even a tooth!)"

- (45) III. 54. κοδδ' ὕπνος μιν αἰρείται
 55. νοεῦνθ' ὄθ' ὀρείς παιγνίην ἀγινείτε.

Mr. Headlam and Dr. Ellis have anticipated me in defending ὄτ' ἦμος (= ἦμος ὄτε); but neither has noticed that when this is done αγινητε, which is also read by the MS., becomes quite right, for ἦμος can take the subjunctive without ἄν.

- (46) III. 56. ἀλλ' εἴ τι θεοί, Λαμπρίσκε, καὶ βίου
πρῆξι
 57. ἐσθλὴν τελοῖεν εἰ δὲ κἀγαθῶν κύρσαι,
 58. μὴ ἔλασσον αὐτὰ Μητροτίμη ἐπέυχοι.

But, in 58, the MS. has αὐται, so read αὐταν, which is much nearer to it; and, by the way, would μὴ ἔλασσον = "nevertheless," be Greek?

Messrs. Hicks, Jackson, and Ellis have all noticed what escaped me, that ἐπέυχοι is unmetrical. Mr. Hicks's ἐπευχοῖο (he accents ἐπευχοῖο) is certainly right.

- (47) III. 59. εἴε γὰρ οὐδὲν μείζον.

The MS. has μιον (= μέιον), and the sense is perfect: "If you meet with blessings, do not pray for less than these for me Mētrotimē: for you will have not a whit the less for yourself," i.e., your own good luck will not suffer from your wishing me good luck. What can be said of an editor who changes μιον to μείζον? What sense he gets out of his own alteration he does not tell us. Yet, strange to say, Mr. Hicks accepts it.

- (48) III. 63. οὐ σοι εἴτ' ἀπαρκεῖ τῆσι δορκασίον παιζίεις;
Κοττάλος
 64. ΑΤΡΑΒΔΟΚΩΝΣΠΕΡ οἶδα.
Λαμπρίσκο
πρὸς δὲ τὴν παίστην
 65. ἐν τοῖσι προνύκιοις χαλκίζεις φοι-τέων.

But, in 64, K. gives ἀστράβδ οκωσπερ οἶδε; and Mr. Headlam is beyond question right in taking the words as part of Lampriskos's speech, and construing "Aren't you content to play with dice like these (other boys), but . . .?" The other boys are, of course, Euthicus, Kokkalos, and Phillos, whom he had called only three or four lines earlier.

ἀστράβδ is still unconstrued. It looks to be one of those adverbs in -δα which express modes of playing games, and might conceivably mean "like lightning," from the stem of ἀστράπτω. Mr. Hicks ingeniously proposes αστραβδωκ' ωππερ, making the former word a vocative of a supposed contracted form of a supposed αστραβδοκωος, from ἀστράβη, "a mule's saddle": it would then be a term of abuse, "You mule." The weak point of both these suggestions is that they do not explain the double accent in the MS. I suggest that the two accents mean that the word is a compound of the negative a and the stem στραβ- or a word στράβδα, and that it means some form of the game, perhaps one in which the player did not turn his hand to catch the knucklebones on the back of it, or better, in which they were tossed so as to fall without turning over (as Prof. Gardner suggests to me).

The meaning "play-place" or "gaming-table" for παίστην is probably correct (I had other notions about it): but, if Messrs. Hicks, Jackson, and Richards be right in their punctuation of III. 12, it is still quite needless to change λήσεις, which would mean simply "leave off," i.e., leave off gambling. γέ μὴν can be construed quite consistently with this—it does not necessarily mean "nevertheless."

I have now gone over only two poems and two-thirds of another. I have not commented on by any means all that needs it, and hope not to be taken as approving every alteration made by R. which I have not mentioned. But, looking back over these four letters, and making full allowance for all doubtful and minor points, I claim to have proved up to the hilt that this "first recension" is a thoroughly vicious hash of the poet's text. I say, moreover, that it is a grave discredit to the state of Greek scholarship in the West that after all these centuries it should be possible to issue such an edition without the instantaneous protest of the learned world.

No reasonable man would refuse to admit that great allowances ought to be made for this "first recension." No really satisfactory edition was to be hoped for until a working text had been published, and if the editor of this working text had spent an unlimited time over every difficulty it would never have been published at all. But what are we to say to the continual inability to construe, and the continual adaptation of the text to suit that inability? Inability, do I say? Surely the editor must have been able to see the sense in almost every case if he had allowed himself a minute to think over it, and had not disclaimed the help of Liddell and Scott. Or what are we to say to a case like that of φιλεω σε in I. 66, of which the construing is simplicity itself and the sense perfect, but which is nevertheless changed to φιλεῖ σε, apparently because the editor thinks that this would be still better? Or what are we to say to the almost total disregard of every rule of sound textual emendation?

And, still more unfortunately, he does not stand alone, or nearly alone, in these methods of treating a text. I have suspicions about some Latin texts, and some texts in Greek prose, but they are only suspicions: what I know is that in Greek verse the number of bad emendations that have been put forward in modern times by scholars of repute is simply appalling.

It may be said, "Who are you to pass such judgments?" I ought not indeed to be able to pass them, for in the last eight years I have read no Greek author except a few pages of the Alkestis, and in the eleven years before that no classical Greek author except Homer. But I do know my own ignorance of Greek, and consequently, when I do not understand a passage, assume that it is I who am at fault and not the text—until at least I have exhausted the apparent possibilities of rational interpretation. And, if a change seems really necessary, I believe that the change must be consistent with palaeographical and other probabilities, and that I must be able to show how the reading supposed to be true came to be corrupted into the reading assumed to be false. The class of editors whom I have condemned appear to be aware neither of the limitations of their own knowledge nor of the fact that the principles of sound textual emendation (so far as the nature of the case will admit—and it admits a great deal) should be those of an exact science. Happily, they seldom convince even each other, and in the end each bad emendation meets from someone its coup de grâce, perhaps in such terms as are used on p. 89 of a certain editor's edition of Babrius, "Nauckius θηρευθεῖσα male in φλωθεῖσα mutavit, Gracitatis certe ignarus."

Happily, also, there are other Greek scholars of repute who have proved by their printed work that their caution is not inferior to their linguistic knowledge; and I trust that, if any such treasure as the poems of Hero(n)das should yet be discovered, to one of these men the task may be offered, and by one of these the responsibility undertaken, of producing the first edition for general use.

And to any very young man who reads this letter let me say three things: (1) Do not imagine it clerical to be able to make conjectures—it is quite absurdly easy. (2) Do not imagine it is an easy thing to make good emendations; an emendation may give perfect sense, and have a certain proportion of letters coincident with the corrupt reading, and yet it may be morally impossible—you can only learn to emend rightly by palaeographical study and an intelligent appreciation of certain "canons of criticism." (3) Every time you change a correct text into an incorrect conjecture you not only hinder knowledge and set a bad example to other critics, but you mutilate the works of a man who, being dead, cannot defend them. If nothing else will save you from yourself, chivalry may save both him and you.

EDWARD W. B. NICHOLSON.

Wadham College, Oxford: Oct. 12, 1891.

I continue from last week (ACADEMY, October 10) my suggestions for the text of Herodas; some are tentative only.

I. 17 foll. One woman complaining of age to another.

M. [θάρσυν]ε καὶ μὴ τοῦ χρόνου καταψεύσῃ·
[γῆρας φιλεῖ] γὰρ, Γάλλι, χητέρος ἄχχην.
Γ. σίλλαινε ταῦτα· τῆς νεωτέρας ὕμιν πρόσεστιν ἄλλ', οὐ τοῦτο· μὴ σε θερμήρησ.

So writes and supplements Dr. Rutherford (henceforth R., and Mr. Kenyon K.). But then 18 is no banter, and is inconsistent with τοῦ χρόνου K. Read ἐτι σθένει γὰρ Γ. χητέρας ἄχχην, or something with fewer letters. Join ταῦτα with πρόσσεστιν, and read ἄλλ' οὐ τοῦτο μὴ με θερμήρησ, "but I won't be provoked." 32 foll. I would read as follows. My supplements are in brackets.

γυναῖκες δέσπους οὐ μὰ τὴν Αἰδωοὺς κούρη ἀστέρας ἐνεγκεῖν οὐρανὸς κεκαύχηται, τὴν δ' ὕψιν οἶαι πρὸς Πάριον ποῦ' ὄρησσαν [ἴσαι θείαι]ναὶ καλλονήν· (λάθοιμ' αὐτάς [αὐθάσα·]) κούρη οὖν, τάλαινα, οὐ ψυχρὴν ἐχουσα θάλπει τὸν δῖον; κἀτ' οὐ λήσεις γηράσα, καὶ σευ τὸ ὄριμον τέφρη κῆψι; ἐκκλινοῦ ἄλλη χημέρας μετάλλαζον
[πρὸς γοῖν δὲ ἢ τρεῖς χίλαρῃ κατάσθηθι
[βλέπουσ' ἐς] ἄλλον· νῆος μῆτις ἐπ' ἀγκύρης οὐκ ἀσφαλῆς ὄρευσσα. κείνος ἦν ἔλθῃ, [οὐ γνάσσει· ἄλλ' οὐ] μῆδὲ εἰς μιν ἀνάσθησ.

But I very much doubt if the last words give the real meaning. I have written οὐ in 37 for οὖν, making it a question, and μιν ἀνάσθησ for ἀνάσθησ. 71. χαλῆν δ' αἰεὶ δεῖν χαλὸν ἐξεπαίδευσσα. II. may have written something like μαρῆ δ' αἰεῖδεν μαρ' ἂν ἐξεπαίδευσσα. 74. Write, perhaps, μῦθον δὲ γε μετρησῖν (MS. οὐ μετρησῖν) πρέπει γυναῖξ τῆς νῆος ἀπάγγελαι, if a tribach is right in fifth foot: or δὲ γε μὴ ἔταίρης (suggested by Mr. Ellis's note). 82. τῆ, Γάλλι, πῶ· δέξον οὐ [θυμαίνουσα] or [χολαίνουσα].

II. 3. οὐδ' εἰ Θαλῆς μὲν οὐτος ἀξίησ τ. . . νυν ἔχει ταλάντων πέντ'. Read ἀξί' ἐν τῷ νυν. ἐν τῷ νυν may be found in [Plato] Erp. 13, 361 E. (Since thinking of this I have seen Mr. Headlam's τῶ νυν. But τῷ νυν needs ἐν, and men are not said ἀξίαν ἔχειν.) 26. κῆφ' ὄψα σεμνύεσθε, τὴν αὐτονομίην ὑμέων Θαλῆς λύσει. ὑμέων is a dissyllable. Read perhaps λῆσει for λύσει, and for ὑμέων a participle to mean "taking away." 43. μέχρησ οὐ εἴρη. R. does not notice the hiatus any more than that in III. 7; but from 42 it is as easily remedied as seen. Read μέχρησ οὐ ἀνείρη. 53. ἡ ὄρουσ ὑπερβῆ. But has a house θροῖ? οὐδοῦσ is obvious, if the plural can stand, which I doubt.

II. 77. ἄλλ' ἔκρητ' ἀλκῆσ θαρσέων λε . . . [λέγ]οιμ' ἂν εἰ Θαλῆσ εἴη ἐρᾶσ οὐ μὲν ἴσασ Μυρτάλησ· οὐδὲν δεῖνόν ἐγὼ δ' ἐπύρεον· ταῦτα δοῦσ ἐκέῖν' ἔξεισ.

Read εἴρη and ἐρᾶσ οὐ μὲν . . . ἐγὼ δὲ πυρᾶν. Unlikely at first sight, this is proved by the occurrence of the same antithesis in the mutilated lines 19, 20: οὐθ' οὐτος πυροῦσ . . . οὐτ' ἐγὼ πάλιν κείνην, and by ἄρτουσ in 4, λίμουσ in 17. It explains ταῦτα δοῦσ, and gives full force to the order ἐρᾶσ οὐ μὲν. The meaning of 71 foll. is: He may congratulate himself on my age (cf. θύε μοι ταύτη. ἐπέ. κ.τ.λ., in 6. 10), for, if I were in years a Thales, I would boldly say 'you want M., I want bread. Pay for her in kind or in money, or else stand off.' In 78 read θαρσέων ἐγὼ with R., or θ. λίρη, or θ. γε δῆ.

III. 7. καὶ γὰρ οὐδ' ἀπαρκέουσιν αἱ ἀσπραγάλαι, Λάμπρισκε. As ἀσπραγάλαι could never come into a choliambic, I think it must be a gloss which has taken the place of δορκάδες. This explains the hiatus, and is supported by 63, οὐ σοι ἐτ' ἀπαρκεῖ τῆσι δορκάσιν παίζειν. 9. καί. Possibly καί "and whether." Contrast 53. 12. δοκίτερ for δοκίπερ. 22. Perhaps συλλαβῶν for συλλαβῶν. 29. δοκίπερ ἀρωγὸν τῆσ ἀωρίησ ἐξείν (γραμματῶν παιδείη). τῆσιν ἀπορήσ; 48. The lodging-house calls out with one voice τῆσ Μητροπόλησ ἔργα Κοττάλου ταῦτα καληθῖν ὥστε μὴδ κινῆσαι. Read ἀληθῖν, ὥστε μὴδ' ἰδόντα (so R.) γινώσκειν. You know his handiwork without having seen him do it. 53-5 hardly refers to school-holidays, for the boy played truant, and his life was a long vacation. But perhaps he was so excited by public high-days and holidays that sleep forsook him νοεῦντα δῆμον παγινῆν ἀγινεῦντα (? K. from the MS. κοῦδ ἵπποσ νιν ἀπειται νοεῦνσ στ ἡμοσ παγινῆν ἀγινῆτε). 60. Perhaps οὐ ταχέουσ ταῦτον ἀρεῖτ' ἐπ' ὄμου. τῆ 'Ακίσεω σεληνῆναι λήζοντεσ (MS. διζόντεσ). He is to be hoisted at once and held there till the Greek Kalends. I do not think λήζοντεσ is right: it may suggest something better. 67. κινεῦντα μῆδὲ κάρφοσ ἰτο γῆδιστον. Read εἰ τὸ μήκιστον. 71. μῆ, μῆ, κετεῦσ, Λάμπρισκε, πρὸσ σε τῶν Μουσέων καί τοῦ γεγέουσ τῆσ τε κοττίδοσ ψυχῆσ, μῆ τῷ με δριμεῖ τῷ ἑτέρῳ δὲ λώβησιν (-σῆ). με cannot separate τῷ με δριμεῖ. Read μῆ τῷ με δριμεῖ, "not with the biting one, but with the other." It follows that a place must be found in 71 for με. Read μῆ μ', or μῆ μ' μ', with either a by-form of ικετεῦσ or another word (ἐντομαῖ?) on which it was a gloss (cf. note on 7). I take Κόττισ to be the child or wife of Lampriscus (cf. 5. 69 foll.). R.'s Πρίσκει (though it has been called "a brilliant piece of criticism") is nothing less than an outrage. 79. εἰ ἐτι κτλ. belongs to Lampriscus. 85. πρὸσ σοι βαλέωσ τὸν μὴν τάχ' ἦν πλέον γρύζησ. I suspect μὴν should be βοῖον, i.e., the βοδὸσ κέρκοσ, the δριμύ, of 68 (cf. Plaut. Asin. 1. 1. 20, "ubi vivos homines mortui incurstant boves"). 90. Lampriscus is giving advice for the future. Should τὸ μῆθεν be ἐντεῦθεν, or τοῦντεῦθεν?

IV. 12. A cock is called οἰκίησ τοίχωσ κήρυκα. Perhaps τορηχὸν κήρυκα. 21. πρα. Surely αρα here and in 5.14. 30 foll. (of sculpture) κείνον δὲ Κυνοῦ τὸν γέροντα ποδὸσ Μοῖριων τὴν χηναλώπεχ' ὡσ τὸ παιδίον πνίγει πρὸ τῶν ποδῶν γούν εἰ τι μῆ λίθοσ τούργου ἐρεῖσ λαλῆσει. γούν is unmeaning, and πρὸσ M. calls for an imperative or a question. Read κ δ. K. τ. γ., πρὸσ Μοῖριων, . . . οὐκ, εἰ τι μῆ λίθοσ τούργου, ἐρεῖσ λαλῆσει: 57. Perhaps ο' ἔργ' ἐκεῖ ἐνήν, or κεί, as in 1. 26. 62. τῶργαρον δὲ πύραρον. For quantity's sake, read τὸ π. δέ τ. (cf. note on V. 73). 68. οὐκί ὄν Βλέπουσι ἡμέρησ πάντεσ (of painted figures). Is βλέπουσι νημερέτεσ or νημερέτεια (trissyllable) possible? Probably not. 80. ἐσ λῶστον for ἐσ λῶσν?

V. 1. ἦσθ' for ἦ δ. 21. Is the omission by R. of a full stop after γινώσκειν accidental? "Remember you are my slave. Evil befall the day you crossed my threshold!" 55. αὐτοῖσ. 73. μῆ λυπεῖτὲ με. R. seems not to notice the metrical fault here and in III. 58. Read, of course, μῆ με λυπεῖται. A quite certain inversion of order occurs in VI. 48—Κέρδων ἔρραψε (cf. notes on IV. 62 and VI. 41). 77. ο . . ην τύραννον. Perhaps οὐδ' ἦν τύραννοσ, "and I was no tyrant either."

VI. 5. My κείσ' for εἰσ is supported by κείσαι in IV. 47. 5. foll. are spoken by the mistress. The girl scamps her work, but looks after her food. μετρησ or μετρωσ? 9. εἴν κτλ. is a question. 10. οὐε κτλ. (cf. note on II. 72). 15 foll. should be written ἄλλ' οὐ ἔνεκεν πρὸσ σ' ἦλθον—ἐκποδῶν ἡμῖν φθείρεσθε (φθέρουσ;) . . . ὅτα μούνον καὶ γλᾶσσα (γλᾶσσα;) τὰ δ' ἄλλ' ἐκέρθη—λίσσομαι σε μῆ ψεύσῃ. Here ἐκποδῶν κτλ. is addressed to the girl (or girls) who uses only her ears and tongue, no other part of her, and is now sent out of earshot. The construction is μῆ ψ. οὐ ἔνεκεν. I have not fathomed the letters νωβουστρα before ὅτα. 21. καλὸν τὸ δῶρημα, not τι. 22. Νόσσισ; κόθεν λαβούσα; 33. foll. should probably run τάλλα Νοσσίδι χρήσθω, μῆ μοι. [MS. χρησθαῖ τῆι μῆ. Is this certain? R. writing ἦν χρησθῶ τῆμῃ has, perhaps, forgotten that χρησθῶ can only be passive. For μῆ μοι cf. III. 78 and V. 29, where write 'μέ, not με] δοκείσ, μέζον μὲν ἢ γυνῆ [λέ]ξω· λάθοιμι δ', Ἀδρσταια· χιλίων ἐντων ἐν' οὐκ ἂν ὄστισ σακρὸσ ἐσσι προσδοίη, "She (Eubule) may be N.'s friend now; not mine. It's a presumptuous thing to say; but, if I had a thousand of these things I would not give her another, no, not if it were rotten." R. takes χιλίων κ.τ.λ., of friends! 41. τὴν μεν γλᾶσσα, Read, probably, μὲν τὴν γλᾶσσα. 47. μα η μοι εν ευχη. Read μη μοι ἐπέυχο, "You need not adjure me." Cf. II. 58, where μοι should perhaps be inserted to correct the metre. 50-56 is all spoken by Metro, and Coritto answers οὐδέτερος αὐτῶν ἔστιν ὧν (MS. ως) λέγεις, Μητροί, ἀλλ' οὗτος οὐκ οἶδ' εἰ ἐκ Χίου τις ἢ Ἐρυθρέων ἦκει (MS. οἶδ' η Χίου. 65. "He is not much to look at, and he works in his own house": ἀλλ' ἐργαίοι ἐστ' ἐργα τῆς Ἀθηναίης αὐτῆς ὁραν τὰς χεῖρας οὐχι κερδανος δοξεῖς (so K., who says—"οἰκοῖ ἐστ' the reading is doubtful, especially the letters οἰ ε.") Read, perhaps, ἀλλ' ἐργάτης ἔστ', ἐργάτης. "He is a workman, worthy of the name." 90. οὐχί should be οὐκ εἰ.

The language of the poems is semi-poetical usually, not always. The second is plain prose. The rules as to hiatus, and as to anapaests, dactyls, and tribrachs, are very strict, and many suggestions may be ruled out at once on that ground.

HERBERT RICHARDS.

Trinity College, Dublin: Oct. 12, 1891.

- I. 64 καὶ οἶα πρήξεις. Read κἀλ' οἶα πρήξεις.
- Cf. Thuc. 6. 16. This hiatus is doubtful.
- II. 73. Φιλήμων would fill up the gap.
- II. 78. θαρώεων λέ[ων εἴ]σιμ' ἄν.
- "I would be as brave as a lion and say."
- III. 17. κῆν μήκοτ'. Read ἦν μήκοτ'.
- "Unless, perhaps, he, scowling at it like Hades, scribbles some naughty stuff, and then rubs it all out."
- III. 19. αἱ δορκάδες δὲ ναὶ παρω τεραὶ πολλοῦν.

Accepting Dr. Rutherford's καὶ Ἄπολλον, Mr. Purser writes—ναὶ Πατρώε καὶ Ἄπολλον.

πατρώος = Ζεύς, who protected the rights of parents. See Aristoph. Νηδ. 1468, with the scholiast, for his connexion with Apollo. ναὶ may, perhaps, be used parenthetically, like μᾶ.

III. 30. οἶα παιδίσκον. The reply of Lampriscus (l. 34) shows that a particular speech was indicated. Can παιδίσκον be a corruption containing παῖς δίσκον, which might be the opening words of some fable about a boy and a quoit, just as we might ask a boy to say "How doth," meaning Dr. Watts's hymn about the busy bee.

- III. 59. ἔξεις γὰρ οὐδὲν μείον.
- "You will be none the worse off."
- III. 87. οὐκ ἐὼ λήξει.
- IV. 38. μὴ ζώσης δέσθω.
- IV. 50. μαρτήρομαι φημ', ἐς σε τιμέρηι κείνη. I should not hesitate to read the Ionic—ἔσσετ' (ἔσσεθ') ἡμέρη κείνη.
- "The day will come."
- IV. 57. κῶινην Κῶην. "A Coan Athene."
- V. 1. ἦρ' (ἄρ) ὑπερκορῆς οὕτω;
- V. 77. An oxymoron is probable like δοῦλην τύραννον, or δουρὴν τύραννον, "a slave-queen."

The whole second idyll seems a parody on the Midias of Demosthenes. The three authors in whom Herodas seems steeped are Demosthenes, Theocritus, Aristophanes.

A. PALMER.

King's College, Cambridge: Oct. 13, 1891.

- II. 44. μηπροστεκουσσοφσι χῶ τάπης ἡμῖν τὸ τοῦ λόγου δὴ τοῦτο λήϊης κύρη.
- Mr. Nicholson, commenting upon this passage, remarks:
- "As for λήϊης . . . it is governed by κυρησι. 'obtain a prize,' and το του λογου δη τουτο, probably = 'as regards this part of the speech forsooth.' Mr. Headlam, indeed, says that the latter words 'of course' mean 'as the saying is.' It is true that τὸ τοῦ λόγου is found in that sense; but the τοῦτο makes a world of odds, and it would be necessary to construe τοῦτο λήϊης κυρησι, 'obtain this much of 'spoil.'"

It is true that no form of this idiom is recorded in the Paris Thesaurus, and that the only reference for it given by Liddell and Scott is to Lys. 115. 29, where τὸ τοῦ λόγου is an erroneous reading. But the phrase is so common that I have easily been able to gather instances enough to show why I said that the meaning is, of course, "as the saying is":

- Lucian ii. 645. ἐν ἐσχάτοις τὰ θεῶν πράγματα καὶ, τοῦτο δὴ τὸ τοῦ λόγου, ἐπι ξυροῦ νῦν ἔστηκεν.
- Lucian iii. 168. ὁ δὲ, τοῦτο δὴ τὸ τοῦ λόγου, ὄνον κισθαρίειν περῶμενον ἰδῶν.
- Lucian i. 767. οὐδὲ τοῦτο δὴ τὸ τοῦ λόγου ποιήσομεν, ἔνθα ἂν ἡμᾶς οἱ πόδες φέρωσιν ἐκείσε ἄπμεν.
- Lucian ii. 586. ἔκρινα τοῦτο δὴ τὸ τοῦ λόγου, παλινδρομήσαι μᾶλλον ἢ κακῶς δραμεῖν.
- Alciph. Ep. iii. 56. καὶ τύφου πλήρης εἰ, τοῦτο δὴ τὸ τοῦ λόγου.
- Firmus, Ep. vi. ἀδελφὸς ἐνδρὶ παρήη, φησὶ τοῦτο δὴ τὸ τοῦ λόγου.

Niceph. Hist. Byz. xxii. 4, p. 676. τοῦτο δὲ τὸ τῆς παροιμίας, κατὰ σαυτοῦ Βελλεροφόντης.

So Lucian i. 39, 44, ii. 854, iii. 58, 189, 256, Plut. Lycurg. 10, Mor. 784 C, 1090 F, Aristid. Rhodiac., p. 802 Dind., Alciph. Ep. ii. 3, Aristænet. Ep. i. 10, 11, Auct. ap. Suid. s.v. Πάγας.

I. 25. The text is explained by a proverb in Suidas and the Paroemiographi, ἐκ τετραμῆνης κύλικος πεινῶν. The adscript, therefore, is ΚΥΤΑΙΚΟΣ, and this, not πηγῆς, is to be understood.

- I. 64. καὶ δοῖα πρήξεις ἦδε [ἐκπαίσει καὶ σοί].
- I. 85. ὅς σου γ' ὄναιτο (or ὄνοῖτο)?
- III. 19. Mr. Richards's reading and interpretation is strongly supported by a proverb (Diogen. vi. 31), λιπαρώτερος ἄλκυον, καὶ λιπαρώτερος ληκυθίου: ἐπὶ τῶν ὑπερβολικῶν. Nevertheless the rhythm is strange.

VII. 43. ἦρ' θ' ὑπὸ χελιδόνων?

WALTER HEADLAM.

Lincoln's Inn: Oct. 19, 1891.

- IV. 67. χω γρυπος οὗτος κω ανασίλλος ανθρωπος. For ανασίλλος read ανασίμος.

This is, I think, the word given in the MS. (see facsimile facing p. 1 of Mr. Kenyon's edition), and the juxtaposition of γρυπος marks it as appropriate, γρυπος and σιμὸς being commonly opposed to one another.

L. L. SHADWELL.

[WE may mention here that papers on "Herondas VII." were to be read before the Cambridge Philological Society on Thursday, October 22, by Dr. Jackson and Mr. W. G. Headlam.—ED. ACADEMY.]

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, Oct. 25, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture Society: "Rabies in Animals and Hydrophobia in Man," with Oxygen-hydrogen Lantern Illustrations, by Mr. Frank Kerslake.
- 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "The Position of Woman throughout the World," by Miss Frances Lord.
- 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Honest Thinking: a Lesson from Socrates," by Mr. G. C. Moore Smith.
- MONDAY, Oct. 26, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Upper Extremity," II., by Prof. W. Anderson.
- 8 p.m. Goethe: "English Critics of Goethe," by Mr. R. G. Alford.
- THURSDAY, Oct. 29, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Upper Extremity," III., by Prof. W. Anderson.
- 8 p.m. Browning: Exhibition, by the Magic Lantern, of a Series of Views in Italy illustrating Browning's Poems, by Prof. Hall Griffin.

SCIENCE.

A NEW REVISION OF THE CULEX.

Culex Carmen Vergilio Ascriptum. Recensuit et enarravit Fridericus Leo. Accedit Copa Elegia. (Berlin: Weidmann.)

PROF. LEO was led to his task of editing and commenting on the Culex, not by its goodness as a poem, but by its difficulty, in which it is not surpassed even by Propertius. He describes its author as poor in words, laborious in choosing them, audacious and artificial in his combinations and metaphors, far removed from the great masters of Roman speech, and not less faulty as a writer of verse than Varro as a writer of prose. All this is true; but it hardly brings out the peculiar quality of the poem, which has, unless I am mistaken, some true touches of genius, distinguishable in the memory of the careful reader from any similar short composition in Latin. It alludes more particularly to the description of scenery and of animals and plants, which the poet of the Culex loves to dwell upon. They have a rare minuteness which I have found highly pleasing.

Taking the Bembo MS. in the Vatican which is the earliest known, and ascribed to the ninth century, as the single adequate basis of the text, Prof. Leo proceeds to reconstruct the poem, or rather to reedit it on a new plan. Most of the conjectures which have been advanced by four centuries of critics he rejects as trivial, except, indeed, those of Cardinal Bembo, who if not the earliest, was one of the earliest who employed their critical faculty on the Culex.

In reverence for Bembo, the present writer at least equals Prof. Leo; but I cannot believe that most of the many errors in the corrupt tradition of the MSS. which Bembo could not deal with remain as unsettled as Bembo left them. Why should we believe here what we do not believe in other cases? The same criticism which refuses to accept the grammatical or metrical errors of a play of Sophocles or Aeschylus, accepted by the critics of the sixteenth, seventeenth, or even eighteenth centuries, and having the support of the earliest MS., refuses also to accept the monstrosities of language or metre of the Culex. Perception of what a writer was likely to say, and what he could hardly say, what he could not possibly say, is a thing which grows with the progress of centuries, though in each century individual critics may be in advance of their contemporaries, or see so much that they are believed, like Scaliger, to see everything. As training becomes more exact, it naturally becomes more fastidious, and tends to reject arbitrarily; hence, so many corrections of classical texts, so many ill-founded refinements of grammar or metre. Yet the progress of criticism is steady and persistent as a whole; and it remains true that what continuous generations of scholars have rejected as impossible will not, under any circumstances, become possible. Now in this edition of the Culex, the critical faculty, so far as it is represented by the general verdict of scholars, is set aside almost entirely. It is an attempt to return, in plain English, to what is familiarly known as "construing through brick walls." Let me give an instance. It is the beginning of the digression, obviously framed on the end of Vergil's second Georgic, on the happiness of a country life.

"O bona pastoris, si quis non pauperis usum Mente prius docta fastidiat, et probet illis (omnia luxuria pretiis incognita curis Quae lacerant avidas inimico pectore mentes."

Pretiis the Bembo and Cambridge MSS. (B and C), prauiis the Parisian excerpts, spretis a Vossian MS. of the fourteenth century.

Most students of Latin poetry, I suppose, would at once be arrested by the words et probet illis omnia luxuriae pretiis incognita curis. If they have a meaning, it is very hard to see. He would, on examining the MSS., find his suspicions confirmed by the fact that for pretiis two variants existed, prauis, spretis. Prauis, as found only in excerpts and as widely removed from pretiis, he would reject; spretis, which is palaeographically very near pretiis, and found in a MS. of respectable age, he would incline to accept, possibly with some doubt as to whether it was a survival in a late MS. of a word corrupted in the earlier MSS., or the felicitous conjecture of a copyist. He might or might not go on to conclude, with Haupt and myself, that illis omnia should be illi somnia. Now take Leo's explanation:

"Hoc dicit: pastorum bona agnoscit quicumque non propter doctrinam quam adeptus est antequam vitam agrestem cognoverit, eam contemnat et illo pretio, doctrina scilicet, quae ab agricolarum cultu abhorreat, uno igitur vero divitiarum pretio omnia quae cum illis coniuncta sunt, τὰ πάντα τῆς τρυφῆς, etiam mala curasque probet."

I confess my entire inability even to understand the meaning of this explanation.

In a lengthy description of trees occur the following verses (137-142), thus given in B:

"Hic magnum Argos navi decus edita pinus
 Proceras decorat silvas hirsuta per artus
 Appetit aeris contingere montibus astra
 Illicis et nigrae species et leta cupressus
 Umbrosaeque manent fagus hederasque ligantes
 Brachia fraternos plangunt ne populus ictus."

Here decorat after decus in 137, appetit as an extraordinary asyndeton, et leta, manent, are all of them almost certainly wrong; montibus must be. I say nothing of proceras, which I believe all other editors since Heinsius change to proceros. Prof. Leo retains all these curious readings, except et leta, for which he gives, after Heinsius, nec lacta, making no mention of my own et flata. Nay, he goes much further, and declares that the clause appetit—astra is necessarily in this asyndetic form, unless a nimirum or uidelicet were added. Manent he explains of the order observed in mentioning the trees, the trees of mourning being left to complete the list. Every part of his defence here is a veritable tour de force. The one point in which I can imagine it right is in retaining edita against Heinsius' correction addita.

233. Quem circum tristes densentur in omnia poenae.

Prof. Leo has a discussion on omnia in passages of kindred meaning (pp. 59-60). Every student of the Vergilian Opuscula knows that in omnia, ad omnia is one of the recurring difficulties of these poems. 168: of a serpent moving, Tollebant auras venientis a domnia uisus. 242: of Tantalus Gutturis arenti revolutus in omnia sensu. Cir. 478: of Scylla dragged at the stern of Minos' ship through the sea, Fertur et incertis iactatur ad omnia uentis. He believes the MSS. to be right in each instance, consistently indeed; will any say convincingly? At least, none of his examples show in what sense the serpent "comes at everything." Prof. Leo explains "ready for any outrage," and changes aurae into irae. I should have preferred to explain of the snake snapping at everything that encountered him as he moved on. Again, even if Tantalus could rightly be said revolutus in omnia, could Scylla be said iactari ad omnia? The winds, it is true, swing her body fitfully: is then ad omnia a mere expansion of the idea of incertis? It may be so: but it has still to be proved.

I come to one of the most difficult passages, vv. 213 sqq.:

"Quid saxum procul aduerso qui monte renouit
 Contempsisse dolor quem uumina uincit acerbas.
 Otia quaerentem frustra sibilite puellae
 Ite quibus taedas accendit tristic Erinnyes
 Sicut Hymen praefata dedit conubia mortis."

The poet is speaking of Sisyphus. Ten years ago I dealt with this passage in the American Journal of Philology (vol. iii., p. 281). Starting from sibilite, in which Bembo rightly said that ite was concealed, I suggested that in sibil we have the much corrupted remains of the dative plural of frustratus; further, that acerbas, as often, represents acerbans. Then, as the general sense of the two last verses can only be that the Danaid's wedding-torch was a veritable torch of the Furies, and that at their marriage an Erinnyes played the part of Hymen, I accepted with some hesitation Haupt's conjecture accendens. The passage thus becomes:

"Quid, saxum procul aduerso qui monte renouit,
 Contempsisse dolor quem uumina uincit acerbans
 Otia quaerentem frustratibus? ite puellae,
 Ite quibus taedas accendens tristic Erinnyes,
 Sicut Hymen praefata dedit conubia mortis."

Prof. Leo returns to the older correction acerbus, and, declaring that the word governing quaerentem ought to be an imperative, and that no imperative exists to suit this passage except sinite, confidently edits:

"Otia quaerentem frustra sinite, ite puellae
 Ite quibus taedas accendit tristic Erinnyes:
 Sicut Hymen, praefata dedit conubia mortis," adding "quid hic non sanum et probum nisi forte asyndeton durius uideatur?"

I have selected some of the more violent instances in which the wish to reduce criticism to a single MS. has led an eminent scholar into the (to me) inconceivable. But I am far from denying that this new edition of the Culex contains much that is interesting, and some things that are new. Yet it might be wished that Prof. Leo had made himself more completely master of all that has been written on this fascinating and difficult poem, e.g., of what I venture to call my discovery of the right reading in 366, printed in the Cambridge Journal of Philology for 1887.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MR. J. G. MILLAIS has issued the prospectus of a handsome work, intended both for ornithologists and for sportsmen, entitled Game Birds and Shooting-Sketches. It will consist of forty-eight plates, some coloured and some autotypes, besides woodcuts, illustrating the British Tetraonidae—capercaille, grouse, ptarmigan, and blackgame—in their several stages of plumage, with special reference to the hybrids and varieties that occur among them. There will also be a number of sketches showing the habits of the birds, and other sporting pictures. Sir J. E. Millais has drawn a frontispiece for the volume, which will be handsomely printed in imperial quarto. The publishers are Messrs. Henry Sotheran & Co.

DR. A. R. FORSYTH and Dr. M. J. M. Hill have been nominated to fill up the vacancies in the council of the London Mathematical Society, caused by the retirement of Dr. Hirst and Mr. R. Lachlan.

WE regret to record the sudden death of Mr. Philip Herbert Carpenter, F.R.S., science master at Eton, best known for his work in connexion with marine biology. He was the fourth son of the late Dr. W. B. Carpenter, and had not quite completed his fortieth year.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKSPERE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, Oct. 3.)

MISS FLORENCE HERAPATH, president, who was in the chair, read an address entitled "Shakspeare's Three Mirrors." The secret of Shakspeare's abiding influence on the human race is to be found in the fact that not only are his characters natural, but that at times their hearts are bared for us, and thoughts unexpressed, perhaps by us unexpressible, arise which influence both our character and our judgment. Artists must feel before they can create. Poet, painter, actor, dramatist, each conceives an ideal: each strives in some way to portray that ideal so that it may be born anew in the minds of others. All great writers possess this faculty, and by it they people the world. But the enchanter of enchanters is Shakspeare. All the creations of his magic spell are our companions, our intimates, our friends, nearer to us, may be, than even our dearest, for often these, from sheer incomprehension, fail to sound the depths of our inner selves. Friendship binding heart and soul is rare: rarer still is the self-knowledge necessary before such an intercommunion of spirits is even possible. But, difficult as such things are, they are not impossible. Shakspeare had high views about friendship.

"To mingle friendship far is mingling bloods."

And to W. H., the friend in the Sonnets, we owe much, for this perfect friendship colours the whole of Shakspeare's life-work. Next to the Bible, we turn to Shakspeare, the great searcher of souls, for help in our efforts to know and to aid the struggling souls around us: for, by an inlook into the seething hearts of our fellow-men, he gives us lessons of encouragement, love, and sympathy, and teaches us a spirit of tenderness towards the faults and follies of humanity. Our greatest thinker becomes our greatest teacher. To him, as to no other, God has given the power of stripping off the accidents of flesh and blood, and of showing in their glory and in their hideousness the awful workings of the human heart. Anyone who aspires to lead his fellows must himself have passed through the deep waters. Of Him who did no sin it is written, "He was tempted in all points like as we are." And we know that Shakspeare was no saint. On every page we realise that he had stumbled and fallen and risen again "on stepping stones of his dead self to higher things."

"O benefit of ill? now I find true

That better is by evil still made better;

And ruin'd love, when it is built anew,

Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.

So I return rebuked to my content

And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent."
 (Sonnet cxix.)

The "hell of time" through which Shakspeare had passed, and of which we have his experience in Sonnets lxi., lxxii.-lxxiv. came, however, to an end, and we see him restored to a higher sanity, the subject of painful humiliation and bitter remorse. Without such an experience he would not have mirrored every phase of human nature. By the power of his genius Shakspeare stands, as it were, an embodied representative of the whole race of man. We see him in the threefold mirror of his characters, his sonnets, and our own hearts; and we turn away with a deeper sense of the danger of self-confidence, of the duty of trust, of the power of purity, and of the gospel of penitence, and with a whispered remembrance of that all-mourning cry of a sorrowful soul, the fifty-first Psalm. And the lessons which he teaches us are all-powerful from their truth, their intensity, and their eternity.—Mr. Walter Strachan was elected president for this (the seventeenth) session, when the following plays are to be considered: "Cymbeline," "The Duke of Milan," "The Winter's Tale," "The Tempest," "The Birth of Merlin," "Henry VIII.," "The Two Noble Kinsmen," and "A New Way to Pay Old Debts."—The hon. sec. (9, Gordon Road, Bristol) will gratefully acknowledge the receipt of anything for the society's library, which now consists of 531 volumes.

FINE ART.

ART BOOKS.

Letters to Living Artists. (Elkin Mathews.) These letters, which are now republished, are at least honest and vigorous, and not even those artists whom the anonymous writer most favours can accuse him of paying too much regard to their personal feelings. To adopt a familiar style in order to say disagreeable things may be open to objection on the score of taste, in literature as well as in conversation; but the writer does so with effect. He writes as the friend, the candid friend—the friend from whom we most need protection—and he knows excellently well how to make his praise quite as offensive as his blame. Indeed, we scarcely know whether Sir Frederick Leighton, whom he praises (with reservation), or Mr. Frith, whom he abuses (without reservation), will read the letter addressed to him (if he ever does) with the less gratification. It will be scarcely consolatory to these and other artists whom he has favoured with these public-private letters that the writer has much reason for what he says, though not always sufficient reason for saying it—a distinction of which he appears to be ignorant. Some of his utterances about Sir John Millais, for instance, would be unjustifiable even if he were certain of their truth, which he cannot be. But, as a rule, there is not much fault to be found with his opinions, and he drives them home with wit and vivacity. He takes a broad and sound view of pictorial art and its present transitional condition; and if his sympathies are strong (though not one whit stronger than they should be) with the aims of the young generation, he is no partisan or mouthpiece of a clique. If he extols the genius of Mr. John Sargent he is not blind to that of Mr. Burne Jones; and if he thinks that Mr. Whistler may be one of the immortals, he would like, if he dared, to inscribe the name of Watts upon the roll. In fact, though we should be sorry for critics to adopt his tone, which is frequently offensive, or his style, which, though lively and telling, is also laboured and artificial, we should be glad if there were more of them who were at once as competent and as fearless. He has evidently the makings of a powerful writer and an excellent critic.

Lessons in Art. By Hume Nisbet. (Chatto & Windus.) We are willing to accept, upon the authority of Prof. Ruskin, that Mr. Hume Nisbet has "a real faculty for colour and sensibility to beauty"; but we are not told that the great critic ever said that Mr. Hume Nisbet could draw, or that he could write a good elementary book upon art. Even if he had said so, we, after reading this book and looking at its illustrations, should have been reluctantly obliged to disagree with the professor.

The Application of Ornament. By Lewis F. Day. Second Edition, revised. (Batsford.) We are glad to see that this admirable little book has reached a second edition, and to learn that Mr. Day's new text-book, "Nature in Ornament," will shortly follow.

THE EXCAVATIONS AT CHESTER.

We quote the following from the Times:—

"I have been in charge of the excavations at Chester for the last five weeks, and during that time we turned up a quantity of tombstones that give rise to a perfectly new factor in the history of the Roman occupation of Chester, and, indeed, of England generally.

"These tombstones belonged, as the inscriptions show, to the supplementary 2d Legion, or, as it appears on the monuments, 'Leg. II. ADFF,' or 'Legio secunda Adjutrix Pia Fidelis.' Up to the time that I made this discovery of them at Chester, only three had been found in Britain—two at Lincoln and one at Bath. Bath of course was a health resort; and we cannot argue anything from the tombstone found there, except that a soldier of the 2d Legion went there, but did not apparently get any better under the treatment, so that on the whole the balance of evidence lay in favour of its having been quartered in Lincoln.

"But during September I found six tombstones at Chester, built up into the north wall, belonging to soldiers of this legion. The legion came to Britain under Vespasian probably about the year A.D. 75, and left Britain for good under Domitian—that is to say, before the end of the first century. It seems, then, beyond a doubt that it was quartered at Chester, as we have already discovered there twice as many records of its presence as are to be found in the rest of Britain put together. Now we know that Agricola took the 20th Legion, whose home was at Chester, into Scotland, where it took part in the wars against Galgacus and other remote monarchs, and it would seem very probable that he left the 2d to garrison Chester in the absence of the 20th. It would clearly be most ungeneral-like to leave so important a place undefended. He had just concluded a war against the tribes of North Wales. He had attacked British independence in its stronghold at Anglesey, while to the north the Brigantes were ever a turbulent folk; and for commercial reasons it would be highly undesirable to leave Chester without a garrison, for it commanded the valuable lead trade from Flintshire.

"For these reasons I venture to suggest that the above is the explanation of the presence of this legion where it was so little looked for. These tombstones had in all cases a rounded top, which seems, at Chester at least, to be peculiar to them: it is certainly not found on monuments of the 20th. This I take to be not so much a speciality of the legion as a mark of date, and I should be glad to know if other evidence confirms this.

"In other respects also the excavations have been highly successful; among which I may mention the discovery of a piece of distinctly Roman wall on the east side of the town, similar in all points of style to that on the north, and thus tending to show that the two were built at the same time.

"E. F. BENSON."

CORRESPONDENCE.

TROJAN INSCRIPTIONS: A RECTIFICATION.

Queen's College, Oxford: Oct. 17, 1891.

Dr. Schuchardt's work on Schliemann's Excavations, recently translated into English, contains so extraordinary a misstatement in regard to myself that I cannot refrain from correcting it. Dr. Schuchardt throws doubt on the inscriptions discovered in the prehistoric strata of Hissarlik, on the ground that I have explained them to be Hittite, and that one which I have read rentae (not rente as it is printed by Dr. Schuchardt) is covered only with ornamental marks. Had Dr. Schuchardt taken the trouble to read the Appendix which I contributed to Dr. Schliemann's Ilios, he would have found that I have not read Hittite but Kypriote characters on the Trojan relics, in common with other students of the Kypriote syllabary. His own volume contains a new inscription from Hissarlik, which is admitted to be Kypriote. He would further have found that the seal on which I have deciphered the word rentae is not the one the face of which is covered only with ornamental marks.

Perhaps it is too much to expect accuracy in such matters from a German author when he is dealing with the work of an Englishman; but we might have expected a little more care on the part of an English translator.

A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. DOWDESWELL will re-open their newly decorated galleries to-day (Saturday) with a series of drawings, "English Pastoral Landscape," by Mr. Thorne Waite, who has been engaged upon them for the last two seasons. A fortnight later, Mr. Herbert Schmalz's religious picture, "The Return from Calvary," which the artist has just carried to completion after many months' sojourn in Jerusalem, will be shown in a separate room, especially draped and illuminated. Messrs. Dowdeswell and Mr. Arthur Lucas, the proprietors of the copyright, will take the picture through the provinces at the close of the London exhibition. A number of smaller pictures of the Holy Land by the same artist will also be on view.

THE other exhibitions to open next Monday are the Royal Society of British Artists, in Suffolk-street; and the annual winter shows of cabinet pictures by Mr. Thomas McLean and Messrs. Arthur Tooth & Son, side by side in the Haymarket. The last mentioned specially announce Señor Villegas's new work, "Palm Sunday at San Pietro, Venice, Fifteenth Century." The private view of the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours is fixed for Friday next, October 30.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. have issued the prospectus of an important work, to be called English Pen Artists of To-day: Examples of their Work, with some Criticisms and Appreciations, by Mr. Charles G. Harper. There will be more than 150 illustrations, reproduced by different engravers and different processes. Of these six are photogravures, and more than fifty others are full-page plates. The edition will be strictly limited to 775 copies, of which 250 are reserved for sale in America.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish next month a handsome volume, in both folio and quarto, entitled Henriette Romer: the Painter of Cat-Life and Cat-Characters. The illustrations include a portrait, twelve full-page photogravures, and sixteen typogravures in the text—all reproduced by Messrs. Goupil. The accompanying letterpress has been written by Mr. M. H. Spielmann.

MR. C. PURDON CLARKE has been appointed to succeed Mr. George Wallis as senior keeper of the art collections at South Kensington. He will retain his special post as curator of the India Museum.

THE wonderful perfection which has been attained by modern methods of reproduction is nowhere more manifest than in a plate just issued by F. Appel, of Paris. It is a specimen of the illustrations which are to constitute a volume of Old Wedgwood, to be published by Mr. Quaritch, and excels anything that we have yet seen in its achievement of the semblance of high relief upon a flat surface. The example we refer to is a design of Hercules between Virtue and Pleasure; and the figures and landscape look exactly like sculptured marble on a background of russet-tinted sky. They stand out with such an extraordinary effect that actual touch is necessary to convince the spectator that he is looking at a flat surface. The specimen may be seen at Mr. Quaritch's house in Piccadilly.

THE STAGE.

"THÉRÈSE RAQUIN."

ON Saturday afternoon I was able to witness the performance of "Thérèse Raquin" at the Royalty Theatre; and while I found the piece itself—as indeed I expected to find it—far less of a melodrama than certain of its critics had said, I discovered that the performance, though good and creditable, was not quite so noteworthy as it had been pronounced in several quarters. The thing is worth seeing, though—would indeed in any case be worth seeing. It is but the second piece of M. Zola's which has found hospitality among us: nay, in a certain sense, it is the first, for "L'Assommoir" was hardly seen in its nakedness and truth, though it was seen with fulness of horror, in Charles Reade's version "Drink." The version of "Thérèse Raquin"—executed mainly, as I suppose, by Mr. De Mattos, but overlooked by Mr. George Moore—does not depart widely from the original. It is not a bad translation, though it might, with advantage, have been a little more colloquial. It suggests to me, nowhere, that it has been subjected to the process which I believe to be the only satisfactory one, in translation, to a writer who is ambitious, as he ought to be, to write the English that we talk: the process of wholly discarding the original at a certain point—when the bare but real equivalent of that original has once been secured—of forgetting, from that moment, the existence of the original, and of setting one's self solely to say well and naturally what the translation, which is still beside one, says with a measure of awkwardness. The translation of "Thérèse Raquin" is good enough, it may be, for most people's requirements on the stage; but it is not good enough to be counted as literature. The thing—that is—has not become Mr. De Mattos's own: he has remained its somewhat mechanical interpreter.

Passing from the manner of the translation to the thing translated, "Thérèse Raquin" occupies a middle place in M. Zola's work. In point of date, it is somewhat early; but I mean "a middle place," in that it displays neither the exaggerated and sterile realism of the uglier of this writer's books nor the abounding poetry of the finer of them. A problem in itself less interesting than the problem of the Page d'Amour, is, in "Thérèse Raquin," treated with hardly a trace of the poetic tragedy which gives that volume so much of its value. "Thérèse Raquin" contains only one or two sentences—the sentences in which the wicked little bourgeoise expresses her desire to live for ever in the sunshine—which permit one to realise that its author is the author of the passionate idyl, La Faute de l'Abbé Mouret. But, on the other hand, in "Thérèse Raquin" we are not face to face with the superfluous and unceremonious hideousness of La Terre: and the view of humanity is not so wholly prosaic and materialistic—not to say bestial—as that which is taken in Nana. No; in these respects we may rank "Thérèse Raquin" rather with "L'Assommoir" itself: in both a sad and ugly and degraded world, but a glimpse of the skies. In both—as in everything for the matter of that that M. Zola writes—an austere moral: the assured march of evil-doing to its own punishment.

If "Thérèse Raquin" were simply the melodrama some of its opponents have pronounced it to be, the murder which is the cause of the two lovers' remorse and collapse would have been done, not in the interval between two acts—the first of which ends and the second of which begins with a very quiet game of dominoes in a Parisian parlour—but in sight of the audience, with an abundance of water in the middle of the stage, and at the back a panorama of the Seine by Asnières or Meudon. As it is, with the material circumstances of the murder we are not for one moment invited to be concerned: we are shown in one act the state of mind and feeling in which, to two people who were perhaps not born to be villains, such a solution as murder becomes possible; we are shown in another the state of mind and feeling which, in two such people, may presumably succeed to that deed of violence of which they have been guilty. The interest of these two acts—different slightly from the interest of the later ones—is the interest of mental analysis; and, if these acts are melodrama, then the Ring and the Book is a shilling shocker.

The intelligent, unprejudiced person who goes to see "Thérèse Raquin" comes away with the knowledge that he has witnessed an exposition of several bitter truths—an exposition made by M. Zola with power, and with singleness of aim, but here and there accompanied by a purposeless, or at the least an unsuccessful, diffuseness, which is one of the most characteristic and abiding defects of this great writer's method. This diffuseness, this fulness of detail which is not actually illustrative and explanatory, Balzac, who was M. Zola's master, had in a measure; but he had it far less than M. Zola. This profuse employment of the commonplace, in order that one may be "natural"—this avoidance of selection and rejection, when selection and rejection are of the very essence of art—commends itself, as I understand, to a little school of criticism, or of dogmatism, which has now found voice among us; and that it does so is an entertaining evidence of the capacity of its professors for critical preachment. May I, as to this matter, be suffered only to remind these gifted brethren, who would make all things new—morality as well as method: nay, perhaps, morality first of all—of the extreme improbability that, to even the youngest and least instructed of them, there has been vouchsafed an inspiration more overwhelming and potent than the accumulated wisdom of the world.

The cast of "Thérèse Raquin" is indeed, as one of its admirers observed to me, "not a cast of names." I am bound to add that in some respects the performance would have gained if it had been; for "names" are not often got without some talent at the back of them. All question of personal notoriety apart, the cast is a fairly, but not a startlingly, good one. The actor who is best known—Mr. W. L. Abingdon, who has played villains' parts so ably at the Princess's and Adelphi—is perhaps the actor whose grip of his part is firmest and whose impersonation is most complete. He plays the lover of Thérèse, and he marks well the phases of a not very simple character. He shows the passionate attachment as well as the remorse. He makes us believe in both. What he does not so thoroughly convince us of—but the mistake is on the right side, and on the side, be it noted, leaning least of all to melodrama—is of Monsieur Laurent's capacity for planning a murder days before it can be executed—of sleeping with it, remember; of working with it; of eating and drinking, and of making love, with the knowledge that it is coming. Mr. Herbert-Basing plays neatly and skilfully the husband, Camille—in the single act in which that encumbrance appears, before there is provided for him a watery grave. Had the drama been Scandinavian instead of French, the husband could hardly have been drawn as more hopelessly foolish and irritating. In the one case, however, one would have recognised a parti pris—the characteristic of a school rather stupidly dogmatic in the first place, and artistic only in the second—while with M. Zola one can accept the creation willingly enough, not as a type which one must meet everywhere, but as an individual who is perfectly possible. Mr. John Gibson plays Michaud—a friend of the family, singularly unsuspecting, though an ex-commissaire de police; while Mr. De Lange bestows real local colour, the true touch of the little French bourgeois, in feature and in character, upon his sketch of a more ancient friend, one M. Grivet. The elderly Mme. Raquin, the mother of the man who is murdered, is acted with much understanding by Mrs. Theodore Wright. To say that her performance is very French—as has been said somewhere—would be a mistake; but it has at all events the advantage of being sufficiently human. Miss Laura Johnson, a clever young woman, wanting evidently in experience and probably in range—with a good deal of strong feeling, much intelligence, and a voice and accent which are often far from being what one could desire—plays the heroine, Thérèse. I had read of her somewhere or other, that she was a revelation, a later Rachel. Why these exaggerations? She interested me distinctly, because she believed in her part: more than once she had the strength to carry the piece upon her shoulders. So far, so good. Judged by a modest standard, Miss Johnson was indeed satisfactory. But she was not a revelation, by any means, and the stage has still to wait for Rachel's successor.

To end—a play not very great, but at all events original and fearless; a performance not exactly memorable, but doing credit to the cast engaged in it.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. HENRY ARTHUR JONES opens the Avenue with his new play, "The Crusaders," about the end of the month. Mr. Kemble, Mr. Arthur Cecil, Miss Emery, Miss Olga Brandon, and Lady Monckton, promise a strong cast.

TO-NIGHT is appointed for the first performance of Mr. Pinero's new comedy at Terry's Theatre—an event which has been looked forward to for some time—while Wednesday was fixed for what may be termed a minor function: that is, the production at the Court of a play which probably derives its chief interest from the appearance of Mrs. John Wood. It is written by Mr. C. Fitch, whose name has yet to become known.

THE "triple bill" as it is called, not very elegantly, at the Shaftesbury, has been this week transferred to Toole's. It began at Terry's, in the summer; but "A Commission," "The Lancashire Sailor," and "A Pantomime Rehearsal," are still found attractive.

WE have received Mr. Raymond Solly's Acting and the Art of Speech at the Paris Conservatoire (Elliot Stock). It is a pleasantly produced booklet of about sixty pages. To those who are instructed in these matters, it has little new to tell; but the amateur and the beginner—the very large class, we fear, who, in the matter of reading aloud, remain amateurs and beginners to the very end—it will convey many a useful hint, and always in an intelligible way. The writer, we believe, has had much personal experience of the Conservatoire and of some of its professors. He quotes not only Samson, who taught Rachel, and M. Regnier, who taught usefully fifty people less famous, but likewise living men like Got and Dupont-Vernon, who have either said or written many sensible things on l'art de la diction. Nor is Mr. Solly unmindful of what has been said by that most highly qualified littérateur, M. Legouvé, in his charming little volume, L'Art de la Lecture. From this admirable writer, indeed, Mr. Solly might have quoted with greater liberality. We thank him, in any case, for a booklet very excellent in its own way.

MUSIC.

THE AUTUMN OPERA SEASON.

SIGNOR LAGO commenced his season at the Shaftesbury Theatre on Monday last. After wasting the principal part of the evening with Ricci's "Crispino e la Comare," the novelty, Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana," commenced at a quarter past ten. Why was it not put first? And again it may be asked, Why was Ricci's opera given at all? Mascagni's clever and promising work was recently noticed in these columns in connexion with a performance at the Dresden theatre, and so it will only be necessary to speak of the manner in which it was presented at the Shaftesbury. Signor Francesco Vignas (Turiddu) is an excellent artist, and his impersonation of the lover produced a marked effect. But with his encore and double encore, and bows to the audience, he broke the spell of the village drama. There are Italian operas to which encores can do but little harm, but Mascagni's work is not of such a kind; it was as unfair to the composer thus to destroy the effect of his tone-picture, as it certainly was annoying to many of the audience. Signorina Adelaide Musiani, as Santuzza, acted with much feeling, though her voice was not at all times pleasant. Miss Grace Damian gave a quiet rendering of the part of Lucia, and Signor Brombara was a fairly good Alfio. The chorus was hard, and the orchestral playing not first-rate. Signor Arditi was the conductor. Of course certain allowances must be made for an opening night, and it is to be hoped that Signor Lago will use his best efforts to present the work to the best advantage. The "Cavalleria Rusticana" has obtained a brilliant success on the continent, and it ought also to make its mark here. The applause and encores mentioned above show that the first performance was outwardly a success, but first nights are no real test.

Sir Augustus Harris commenced his autumn opera season at Covent Garden, on Tuesday evening, with Gounod's "Roméo et Juliette" in French. The performance of operas in that language is evidently, from the programme of the first week, to be a special feature. It is a great advantage to hear works sung in their original form; and, perhaps, some day we shall not only have Gounod and Bizet in French, but Wagner in German. The part of Juliette was undertaken by Mlle. Simmonet, from the Paris Opéra Comique. She has a flexible voice, and one of considerable compass, and it has evidently been well trained. In the first act she was nervous, and the valse, if skilfully sung, was not given with all due brilliancy. However, she soon got used to her audience, and in the balcony scene appeared to considerable advantage. Mlle. Simmonet is a clever actress. So much for the present: there will be another opportunity to judge of her powers as an artist on Saturday, when she will sing in Gounod's "Philemon et Baucis," the first novelty of the season. M. Cossira, from the Paris Grand Opéra was the Romeo: he too, is a good actor, and sings with taste, but the notes in the upper register of his voice are not telling. The clear enunciation of words by these two vocalists deserves praise: the same may be said of that clever artist M. Dufriche (Mercutio). Mmc. Laurent as Gertrude, Mlle. Janson as Stephano, and Signor Abramoff (Frère Laurent), added to the success of the evening. As a new conductor, M. Léon Jehin is skilful; but why was he so restless?

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

SEÑOR SARASATE gave the first of a series of orchestral concerts at St. James's Hall on Saturday afternoon, and, as usual, the hall was crowded. He played the new Max Bruch Concerto in D minor (No. 3). This work, as mentioned last week, had already been given in London with pianoforte accompaniment; but the orchestra adds much to its effect. The writing is skilful, and the Adagio attractive; but the composer has certainly not surpassed his first Concerto. The difficulties for the solo instrument are great, though for Señor Sarasate they can scarcely be reckoned as such. His tone, however, sounded somewhat weak; but later on, in Raff's feeble "Fée d'amour," with its showy cadenza, he was at his best. The programme also included Mozart's G minor Symphony, given under the direction of Mr. Cusins. The Max Bruch Concerto will be repeated on November 13.

ON Monday last, Dr. Hodgkin unveiled a monument to William Shield, musician and composer, which has been erected by public subscription in Whickham Churchyard, near Newcastle. Shield was a pupil of Avison, and was buried in Westminster Abbey in 1829.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to announce the sudden death of Mr. W. A. Barrett, for many years musical critic of the Morning Post. He was inspector of music for the Education Department, and likewise vicar choral at St. Paul's Cathedral. He was the author of "Balfe—his Life and Work" and of the interesting work "English Glee and Madrigal Writers." He did much for the encouragement of native art, and the monument to Balfe in Westminster Abbey was erected through his exertions. He also wrote (with Dr. Stainer) the "Dictionary of Musical Terms." As a lecturer he was well known, and his genial manner secured for him many friends.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S LIST.

Now Ready, New Work by the Author of "By Leafy Ways," "Idylls of the Field," &c.

RAMBLES OF A DOMINIE.

By FRANCIS A. KNIGHT.
Illustrated by E. T. Compton.

Large crown 8vo cloth, bevelled boards, 5s.

Also on Large Paper, with Illustrations printed on Japanese Paper, and mounted, bound in vellum, 21s. net.

This Edition is limited to 100. Each copy signed and numbered.

"Of striking excellence. Both in style and matter they are honourably distinguished from the crowd of similar articles....All will hope Mr. Knight may live to write many more such 'Rambles.' They give information even to those who have long lived in and loved the country. It should be added that several good steel-engravings illustrate the book. No pleasanter companion for an autumnal holiday can easily be found than this unpretentious little book."—Athenaeum.

THE CHILD AND HIS BOOK.

Some Account of the History and Progress of Children's Literature in England.

By Mrs. E. M. FIELD.
Author of "Ethel," "Mixed Pickles," &c.

Illustrated, large crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"It is a series of studies, well worth careful reading, of a subject of the greatest importance and interest; and the studies are made more valuable by being the work of a very thoughtful and accomplished writer."—Spectator.

EIGHT YEARS IN KAFFRARIA, 1882-90.

By the Ven. Archdeacon GIBSON.

With Illustrations, and Map of the Diocese of Kaffraria, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

"One of the most complete and minute records of the kind we have read for many a year."—Saturday Review.

"We strongly recommend this very instructive narrative to all who wish to know the real character, prospects, and difficulties of Mission Work in South Africa. Archdeacon Gibson is a cultivated scholar and a man of cool judgment as well as an earnest missionary, and he writes with singular point and clearness."—Guardian.

A MANUAL for SUNDAYS. A Few

Thoughts for each Sunday of the Church's Year. By the Rev. F. C. WOODHOUSE, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

"The Rev. F. C. Woodhouse is a popular writer, whose popularity is of the most enviable kind. His 'Manual for Sundays' deserves to take a place beside his 'Manual for Lent.' There is the same freshness about it and the same evident determination to keep close to the facts of life. Hence there arises a demand for books like Mr. Woodhouse's, in which an effort is made to illustrate the old Gospel by the occurrences of yesterday—books which will not be laid aside by disappointed readers as utterly unsuited to their wants."—Guardian.

UNIFORM, by the SAME AUTHOR.

A MANUAL for ADVENT. 3s. 6d. 4th Edition.

A MANUAL for LENT. 3s. 6d. 6th Edition.

A MANUAL for HOLY-DAYS. 3s. 6d.

A CLOUD of WITNESSES to

CHRISTIAN LIFE and DOCTRINE. By the Rev. WILLIAM F. FRASER, M.A., Rector of Westbere, Kent. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

"The facts are related in a clear and instructive manner."—Church Bells.

WORK, and HOW TO DO IT. By

Mrs. JEROME MERCIER. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

A Guide for Women in their choice of an occupation in life.

RICHARD DE LACY. A Tale of the Later Lollards. By C. EDMUND MAURICE. With Etched Title and Frontispiece. Large crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"The picture of Oxford in its most turbulent days is wonderfully vivid and brilliant, and the personages, many of them historical, are worth knowing."—Literary World.

SIDELIGHTS on REVELATION. By the Rev. J. C. BLISSARD, M.A., Vicar of St. Augustine's, Edgbaston. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Deals with many important and burning questions in an able and impartial way."—Church Bells.

2, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, LONDON, E.C.; and 44, VICTORIA ST., WESTMINSTER, S.W.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

THE NUMBER of PLATO: its Solution and Significance. By JAMES ADAM, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. [Nearly ready.]

GRADUATED PASSAGES from GREEK and LATIN AUTHORS for First Sight Translation, selected and supplied with Short Notes for beginners, by H. BENDALL, M.A., Head Master, and C. E. LAURENCE, B.A., Assistant Master of Blackheath Proprietary School. Part I. Easy. Crown 8vo. [Nearly ready.]

THE CODEX SANGALLENSIS (Δ). A Study in the Text of the Old Latin Gospels, by J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A. Royal 8vo. 3s.

SOME INTERESTING SYRIAN and PALESTINIAN INSCRIPTIONS, by J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A. Royal 8vo. 4s.

DIGEST XIX. 2, LOCATI CONDUCTI. Translated, with Notes, by C. H. MONRO, M.A., Fellow of Gonville and Caius College. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE ORIGIN of METALLIC CURRENCY and WEIGHT STANDARDS. By W. RIDGEWAY, M.A., Professor of Greek, Queen's College, Cork, and late Fellow of Gonville and Caius College. [In the press.]

A HISTORY of EPIDEMICS in BRITAIN. Vol. I. From A.D. 661 to the Extinction of the Plague in 1666. By CHARLES CREIGHTON, M.D., M.A., formerly Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo. [In the press.]

ELEMENTARY THERMODYNAMICS By J. PARKER, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 3s.

A TREATISE on ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS. New and Enlarged Edition. By S. L. LONEY, M.A., formerly Fellow of Sidney Sussex College. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SOLUTIONS of the EXAMPLES in a TREATISE on ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS. By the same Author. [In the press.]

New Volumes of the Pitt Press Mathematical Series.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on PLANE TRIGONOMETRY for the USE of SCHOOLS. By E. W. HOBSON, M.A., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, and University Lecturer in Mathematics, and C. M. JESSOP, M.A., Fellow of Clare College. [In the press.]

ARITHMETIC for SCHOOLS. By C. SMITH, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. [Nearly ready.]

SOLUTIONS to the EXERCISES in EUCLID, BOOKS I-IV. (Pitt Press Mathematical Series, by H. M. TAYLOR, M.A.) By W. W. TAYLOR, M.A. [In the press.]

New Volumes of the Pitt Press Series.

THUCYDIDES, BOOK VII. The Text newly Revised and Explained, with Introduction, Summaries, Maps, and Indexes. A recollection of the British Museum MS. M. has been made for this Edition. By Rev. H. A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D. 5s. Also in Two Parts. 5s. Part I. INTRODUCTION AND TEXT. Part II. NOTES AND INDEXES. 5s.

CICERO.—PRO PLANCIO. Edited by Rev. H. A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D., Examiner in Greek to the University of London. New and Revised Edition. 4s. 6d.

LIVY, BOOK IX. With Notes and Introduction by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., formerly Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. [In the press.]

MILTON'S ODE on the MORNING of CHRIST'S NATIVITY, L'ALLEGRO, IL PEN- SIEROSO and LYCIDAS. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Indexes, by A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College. 2s. 6d.

MILTON'S SAMSON AGONISTES. With Introduction, Notes, and Indexes. By the SAME EDITOR. [In the press.]

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

WARD & DOWNEY'S NEW BOOKS.

In November will be published, in 2 vols., royal 8vo, with many Illustrations, at £2 2s.

GOSSIP of the CENTURY. By the AUTHOR of "FLEMISH INTERIORS," "De Omnibus Rebus," &c.

MEMOIRS of RICHARD ROBERT MADDEN. Edited by his Son, THOMAS M. MADDEN, M.D. 1 vol., 7s. 6d. [Now ready.]

ENGLAND and the ENGLISH in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By W. C. SYDNEY. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

"The studies on Fleet marriages, on quacks, and on King Mob are perhaps the most notable for new matter; but the whole book is very well worth reading."—National Observer.

MODERN AUTHORS: a Review and a Forecast. By ARTHUR LYNCH. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"No more just and generous utterance in respect to the great realistic master of French fiction (Zola) have I ever read."—Black and White.

NOTES on MEN, WOMEN, and BOOKS. By LADY WILDE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"They are acute and lively."—St. James's Gazette.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL STUDIES. By A. W. BUCKLAND, Member of the Anthropological Institute. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 4s.

"The book deserves to be widely read."—Morning Post.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION of "THE INSANITY OF GENIUS."

THE INSANITY of GENIUS and the GENERAL INEQUALITY of HUMAN FACULTY PHYSIOLOGICALLY CONSIDERED. By J. F. NISBET. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

MARRIAGE and HEREDITY. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY of the LIFE of JORGEN JORGENSON.

THE CONVICT KING. With Reproductions of Original Drawings by Jorgen Jorgenson. By J. F. HOGAN, Author of "The Lost Explorer." Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Now ready.]

WARD & DOWNEY, YORK STREET, W.C.

ORIENTAL TRANSLATION FUND. NEW SERIES.

A faithful Translation from the Persian of MIRKHOND'S "RANZAT-US-SAFA." Part I., Volume I., containing the Moslem version of our Bible Stories from the Creation of Genii before Adam up to the Death of Aaron.

Printed, Published, and Sold under the Patronage of the ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY, 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON.

Price Ten Shillings.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.; or cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s. Uniform with the Life and Work of Sir E. Leighton, Bart., P.R.A. Sir J. E. Millais, Bart., R.A., L. Alma Tadema, R.A., J. L. E. Meissonier, J. C. Hook, R.A., Rosa Bonheur, and Birket Foster. The above may still be had, paper, 2s. 6d.; cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s., or handsomely bound together, 21s.

THE ART ANNUAL FOR 1891, Being the CHRISTMAS NUMBER of the ART JOURNAL.

CONSISTING OF THE LIFE & WORK of BRITON RIVIERE, R.A. By WALTER ARMSTRONG.

With two full-page Etchings, "Circé," and "The Last Spoonful," and a Photogravure of "Persepolis," and about 40 Illustrations in the Text. London: J. S. VANCE & Co., Limited, 26, Ivy Lane, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851. BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand. TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT. For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH. The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S PUBLICATIONS

DUMARESQU'S DAUGHTER. By GRANT ALLEN, Author of "The Tents of Shem," &c. 3 vols., at all Libraries.

"It is a novel and powerful conception, and Mr. Grant Allen has wrought it out well."—Scottish Leader.

The SIN of OLGA ZASSOULICH By FRANK BARRETT, Author of "Fettered for Life," &c. 3 vols., at all Libraries.

MISS MAXWELL'S AFFECTIONS. By RICHARD PRYCE. 2 vols., at all Libraries.

"Mr. Pryce may be cordially and justly congratulated upon having written one of the cleverest, most thoughtful, and yet most vivacious novels of the year.....Charles Dickens himself might have been proud of Mrs. Peck."—Daily Telegraph.

SANTA BARBARA, &c. By OUIDA. Square 8vo, cloth elegant, 6s. [Shortly.]

THE JUNIOR DEAN. By Mrs. MARSHALL, Author of "A Fellow of Trinity." 3 vols., at all Libraries. [November 2.]

FREELAND. By Theodor HERTZKA. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Freeland! may be recommended to all who are interested in social questions, and especially to those who indulge in visions of a Utopia.....There is a Defoe-like literalness in the narrative."—Globe.

THE FOSSICKER: a Romance of Mashonaland. By ERNEST GLANVILLE, Author of "The Lost Heiress." With Frontispiece and Vignette by Hume Nisbet. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

URANIA: a Romance. By CAMILLE FLAMMARION. Translated by AUGUSTA RICE STETSON. With 90 Illustrations by De Bieler, &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s. [Shortly.]

TWO GIRLS on a BARGE. By V. CECIL COTES. With 41 Illustrations by F. H. Townsend. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"A brighter book of its kind has not appeared for years."—Truth.

THE NEW MISTRESS. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s. each.

THE BURNT MILLION. By JAMES PAYN.

RUFFINO. By Ouida.

PANDURANG HARI. With Preface by Sir BARTLE FRERE.

LIFE OF JAMES BOSWELL. By PERCY FITZGERALD, M.A. With 4 Portraits. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

"Two very entertaining volumes. In this work, in which there is not a single dull chapter, we have a very life-like picture of 'Bozzy'.....Mr. Fitzgerald's biography will no doubt find its way into every well-appointed library."—Manchester Examiner.

LIFE of JANE WELSH CARLYLE. By Mrs. ALEXANDER IRELAND. Second Edition. With Portrait and Facsimile. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"Mrs. Ireland has conferred a benefit on the reading world at large in writing the 'Life of Jane Welsh Carlyle.' Here we have the whole pathetic story of one of the most interesting women, if not the most interesting woman, of the nineteenth century.....We gladly welcome this sympathetic history of one of the most attractive personalities of her time."—Newsmen.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, Piccadilly, W.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO. beg to announce that Mr. SHORTHOUSE'S New Novel, BLANCHE LADY FALAISE, is now ready at all Libraries and Booksellers'. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

Just ready, 8vo, cloth, 18s. net.

SCHLIEMANN'S EXCAVATIONS: An Archæological and Historical Study.

By Dr. C. SCHUCHHARDT, Director of the Kestner Museum in Hanover. Translated from the German by EUGENIE SELLERS. With an Appendix on the Recent Discoveries at Hissarlik by Dr. SCHLIEMANN and Dr. DORPFELD, and an Introduction by WALTER LEAF, Litt.D. Illustrated.

A popular but strictly accurate account of the whole series of Dr. Schliemann's Excavations and their results.

TIMES.—"A very valuable contribution to archeological Science.....Dr. Schuchhardt's treatment of the subject is masterly, and Miss Sellers is well qualified for the task of translator.

AN IMPORTANT NEW WORK ON THE EGYPTIAN QUESTION.

Just Ready, 8vo, cloth, 30s. net.

MAHDIISM and the EGYPTIAN SUDAN. Being an Account of the Rise and Progress of Mahdiism, and of subsequent events in the Sudan to the present time. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A., D.S.O., Assistant Adjutant-General for Intelligence, Egyptian Army. With 17 Maps and numerous Plans.

TIMES.—"We may truthfully say that as a consecutive and detailed narrative of military and other events in that country during the last ten years, Major Wingate's book stands without a rival."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Likely to be received as the standard history of England's work in Upper Egypt and all that has come of it down to the present day."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

SERMONS OUT of CHURCH. By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman."

NOVELS BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Uniform in size and price.

OLIVE. Illustrated.

THE OGILVIES. Illustrated.

AGATHA'S HUSBAND. Illustrated.

HEAD OF THE FAMILY. Illustrated.

TWO MARRIAGES.

THE LAUREL BUSH.

MY MOTHER AND I. Illustrated.

MISS TOMMY: a Mediaeval Romance.

Illustrated.

KING ARTHUR: Not a Love Story.

NEW VOLUMES OF

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Just ready, 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

LIVING or DEAD. By Hugh Conway.

A FAMILY AFFAIR. By the Same.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CHEAP EDITION OF F. MARION CRAWFORD'S NOVELS.

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A CIGARETTE-MAKER'S ROMANCE. By F. Marion

CRAWFORD, Author of "A Witch of Prague," "Khaled," &c.

GLOBE.—"The best of Mr. Crawford's stories."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"The author has given us more elaborate stories than this, but never, we think, a more perfect one."

NEW VOLUME OF THE CHEAP EDITION OF ROLF BOLDREWOOD'S NOVELS.

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A COLONIAL REFORMER. By Rolf Boldrewood, Author of "A Robbery under Arms," "The Miner's Right," &c.

A NEW STORY BY A NEW WRITER.

Just ready, crown 8vo, 6s.

TIM. A Story of School Life.

PUNCH.—"A delightful story."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Excellent writing, pathetic without being sentimental, and humorous at times with genuine schoolboy humour. 'Tim' is a genuine success."

A NEW NOVEL, BY THE AUTHOR OF "MADEMOISELLE IXE."

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CECILIA DE NOEL. By Lanoe Falconer, Author of "Mademoiselle Ixe."

Globe 8vo, 2s.

A COMPANION to "IN MEMORIAM." By Elizabeth R. CHAPMAN.

"Miss Chapman's Analysis of 'In Memoriam' is excellent in taste and judgment."

TENNYSON.

EDITED BY DR. EMIL TRECHMANN.

Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORICAL GRAMMAR of the GERMAN

LANGUAGE. Translated and adapted from Professor Behaghel's "Deutsche Sprache," for the Use of English Schools, by EMIL TRECHMANN, B.A., Ph.D., Lecturer in Modern Literature in the University of Sydney, N.S.W.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Just published, globe 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE CHILDREN of the CASTLE. By Mrs. Molesworth.

Illustrated by Walter Crane.

A BEAUTIFUL PICTURE BOOK.

Just ready, folio, cloth, 21s. net.

PICTURES from SHELLEY. Designed by E. E. Dell and engraved by JAMES D. COOPER.

LEEDS MERCURY.—"To say that this young artist has succeeded in her labour of love is but moderate praise. Her delicate drawings are touched with the mysterious fancy of the poet who inspired them, and her work is in every respect a worthy tribute by a poet-artist to the artist-poet.....It is indeed worthy of remark that the 'Pictures from Shelley' as an exposition of perfect harmony between artist and engraver, and the perfection to which the time-honoured Art of wood engraving, can yet in competent hands be brought in the face of its modern rivals, is a notable book."

A POPULAR WORK ON ELECTRICITY.

Just published, super-royal 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. Translated from the French of AMEDEE GUILLEMIN. Revised and Edited by SILVANUS P. THOMPSON, D.Sc., B.A., F.R.S., Principal and Professor of Physics in the City and Guilds of London Technical College, Finsbury; late Professor of Experimental Physics in University College, Bristol. With 600 Illustrations.

SCOTSMAN.—"The book contains in every page matter that is worthy of standard works of reference. . . . It is a history of the evolution and development of a great science as well as a masterly exposition of the principles by which it is controlled. This is in all respects a work worthy of universal admiration. It is simple in manner, clear in style, forcible in argument, splendid in illustration. It ought to be placed in the hands of every student of science."

BY PROFESSOR CHARLES ELIOT NORTON.

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE DIVINE COMEDY of DANTE ALIGHIERI. Translated by JOHN ELIOT NORTON. Part I. HELL.

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S CHRISTMAS STORY.

Ready shortly, crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

NURSE HEATHERDALE'S STORY. By Mrs. Molesworth.

With Illustrations by Leslie Brooke.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "FORTY YEARS IN A MOORLAND PARISH."

Ready next week, globe 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

THE LAST of the GIANT-KILLERS; or, the Exploits of Sir Jack of Danby Dale. By the Rev. J. C. ATKINSON, D.C.L., Canon of York, Author of "Forty Years in a Moorland Parish," &c.

Now ready, Vol. IV., 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE CAMBRIDGE SHAKESPEARE. A New and Revised

Edition. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A. In 9 vols. To be published quarterly. Contents of Vol. IV.: King John—King Richard II.—Henry IV.; Parts I. and II.—King Henry V.

CAMBRIDGE REVIEW.—"The book is almost perfect, learned without being pedantic, complete without undue profusion. The printing and paper are all that could be desired."

NEW VOLUME "OF ENGLISH MEN OF ACTION SERIES."

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

RODNEY. By David Hannay. With Portrait.

TIMES.—"A vivid sketch of the career of one of our great naval heroes."

NEW EDITION.

Just ready, Ninth Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

FAMILIAR QUOTATIONS: A Collection of Passages, Phrases, and Proverbs, traced to their Sources in Ancient and Modern Literature. By JOHN BARTLETT.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CHEAP EDITION OF MISS YONGE'S NOVELS.

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

P's AND Q's; or, the Question of Putting Upon, and LITTLE LUCY'S WONDERFUL GLOBE. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe."

CLASSICAL SERIES—NEW VOLUME.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth.

PLAUTUS.—CAPTIVI. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by A. R. S. HALLIDIE, M.A., late Junior Student of Christ Church, Oxford. 3s. 6d.

THUCYDIDES. BOOK II. Edited, with Introduction, Critical Notes, and Commentary, by E. C. MARCHANT, M.A., Assistant Master at St. Paul's School. 3s. 6d.

* * This Edition contains a new Collation of the British Museum MS. M. The Introduction to the Text is arranged on the lines of Cobet's School Edition of "Lysias."

THUCYDIDES. BOOK V. Edited, with Introduction and Commentary, by C. E. GRAVES, M.A., Classical Lecturer and late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 3s. 6d.

A companion volume to Mr. Graves's edition of Book IV., which has already appeared in this Series.

ELEMENTARY CLASSICS—NEW VOLUME.

18mo, cloth.

CAESAR.—DE BELLO CIVILI. BOOK I. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Vocabulary, by MALCOLM MONTGOMERY, formerly Student of Trinity College, Dublin. 1s. 6d.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1017.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S NEW BOOKS.

Ready November 3, at all Booksellers.

MY PERSONAL EXPERIENCES in EQUATORIAL AFRICA as MEDICAL OFFICER of the EMIN PASHA RELIEF EXPEDITION. By THOMAS HEAZLE PARKE, Hon. D.C.L. (Durh.), Hon. Fellow Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, &c., Surgeon Army Medical Staff. With Map, Portrait, and numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Paul Hardy, Stanley Berkeley, and Lieut. Stairs. Demy 8vo, cloth, ONE GUINEA.

EDMOND SCHERER'S ESSAYS on ENGLISH LITERATURE. Translated, with a Critical Introduction, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt, 6s. [Just ready.]

This volume contains those essays on English subjects—Shakespeare, George Eliot, John Stuart Mill, Taine's "History of English Literature," Milton, Sterne, Wordsworth, Lord Beaconsfield's "Endymion," and Carlyle—which M. Scherer included in his "Etudes sur la Littérature Contemporaine, and which he himself wished to be placed before an English audience.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES AT ALL LIBRARIES.

A RED SISTER: a Story of Three Days and Three Months. By C. L. Pirakis, Author of "A Dateless Bargain," "At the Moment of Victory," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"A thoroughly readable and enjoyable novel."—Court Circular.

GODIVA DURLEIGH. By Sarah Doudney, Author of "A Woman's Glory," "Where the Dew Falls in London," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"The story is sure to be popular with girls."—Scotsman.

THE SQUIRREL INN. By Frank R. Stockton, Author of "Rudder Grange," "The Late Mrs. Null," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A pleasing little comedy, which may be read when we are a little tired of seriousness, and are glad to open a lighter page."—Daily Graphic.

RUDDER GRANGERS ABROAD. By Frank R. Stockton. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

NOW READY. A NEW POPULAR ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF

LORNA DOONE: a Romance of Exmoor. By R. D. Blackmore. With 18 Illustrations by William Small. Square 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

"An ideal gift-book is provided by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. in the shape of an elegantly-bound, clearly printed, and gracefully illustrated edition of Mr. Blackmore's 'Lorna Doone.' This is likely to become a 'joy for ever' in many a cultured household."—Tribune.

LIFE of an ARTIST: an Autobiography. By Jules Breton. Translated by Mary J. Serrano. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. This book abounds in vivid glimpses of a group of clever Painters in whom the art world is interested.

RANDOLPH CALDECOTT: a Personal Memoir of his Early Art Career. By Henry Blackburn, Editor of "Academy Notes," and Author of "Breton Folk," &c. With 172 Illustrations. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

COOMASSIE and MAGDALA: the Story of Two British Campaigns in Africa. By Henry M. Stanley. Entirely New and Abridged Edition, with all the Original Illustrations. Crown 8vo, with Map, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The CRUISE of the "FALCON": a Voyage to South America in a Thirty-Ton Yacht. By E. F. Knight, Barrister-at-Law. With numerous Illustrations and Map. New Edition (Sixth). Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

AT THE ANTIPODES; Travels in Australia, New Zealand, Fiji Islands, the New Hebrides, New Caledonia, and South America, 1888-89. By G. VERSCHUUR. Translated by MARY DANIELS. Numerous Illustrations and Map. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

WOMEN and their WORK. By Veva Karsland, Authoress of "Smitten and Slain," &c. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s. A Series of Articles on the Various Employments open to Women.

GUIDE to MODERN COOKERY. By Miss Mary Harrison, Author of "The Skilful Cook," &c. With a Preface by the Right Hon. Sir THOMAS DYKE ACLAND, Bart. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Needs no recommendation beyond its own fulness, clearness, and practical utility."—Scotsman.

HOW MARTIN DRAKE FOUND his FATHER; or, Wanderings in the West. By G. Norway, Author of "The Adventures of Johnny Pascoe," &c. Illustrated by Lancelot Speed. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, 5s.

AN INCA QUEEN; or, Lost in Peru. By J. Evelyn. Illustrated by Lancelot Speed. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, 5s.

"The story is briskly told, and full of incident."—Spectator.

"Will prove a fascinating book to many a young reader."—Daily Chronicle.

NEW WORK BY JULES VERNE.

CESAR CASCABEL. By Jules Verne, Author of "From the Earth to the Moon," "Around the World in Eighty Days," &c. Illustrated with 80 Full-Page Engravings. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, 6s.

In "César Cascabel," Jules Verne again takes his readers on one of those extraordinary voyages by which the great romancer made himself famous. His hero is a travelling showman, who, having made his fortune, resolves to leave California and return to France, in his caravan, across the United States and the Atlantic; but eventually alters his plans and attempts to enter Europe by way of British Columbia, Alaska, Behring Straits, and Siberia.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
BUCHANAN'S THE OUTCAST, by G. COTTERELL	375
LAW'S HISTORY OF HAMPTON COURT, by the Rev. C. J. ROBINSON	375
WESTCOTT'S ESSAYS IN THE HISTORY OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT IN THE WEST, by the Rev. RONALD DAYNE	376
LE GALLIENNE'S BOOK-BILLS OF NARCISSEUS, by ERNEST RADFORD	377
THE LIFE OF ROBERT COATES, by F. HAWKINS	378
THE NEW ORIENTAL TRANSLATION FUND, by H. S. ASHBER	379
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	379
CLASSICAL BOOKS	380
NOTES AND NEWS	382
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	382
ORIGINAL VERSE: "The Language of the Sea," by Prof. SKRAT	383
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	383
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	383
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Notes on Heraklidas , by F. G. Kenyon, Prof. Tyrrell, F. B. Jevons, W. R. Hardie, A. E. Crawley, and E. W. B. Nicholson; The Old-English "Cemertmann," by H. Bradley	384
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	385
DR. CODRINGTON'S THE MELANESIANS, by Prof. A. H. KEANE	385
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Notes on some Pali and Jaina Prakrit Words, by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris	387
PHILOLOGY NOTES	387
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	388
INDIAN NUMISMATICS, by VINCENT A. SMITH	388
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Chester Pigs of Lead , by Prof. Rhys	390
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	390
STAGE NOTES	391
THE AUTUMN OPERA SEASON, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	391
MUSIC NOTES	391

CONTINENT.—LADY wishes others to join her in APARTMENTS. Best social advantages. Would chaperon girls studying. References exchanged.—"Beta," Westerton's Library, Knightsbridge, London.

LESSONS given in ANCIENT and MODERN GREEK by a Native Professor. Terms moderate. Easy and successful method.—Apply to Messrs. FRANZ THUMM & CO., Foreign Booksellers, 24, Brook Street, London, W.

THE HERETIC for OCTOBER is now out of print. Applications for the January number (enlarged, sixpence) should be made early in December to Capt. Charlton Tucker, 28 Beachamp-avenue, Leamington.

TO EDITORS, PUBLISHERS, AUTHORS.—Translations undertaken from the German, French, and Spanish, Novels, History, Travels, Biography, Plays. Terms low.—Address Lewis Fickel, 24, Allenby Road, Forest Hill, S.E.

PRIVATE SECRETARYSHIP desired by Gentleman (age 37). Excellent references.—Address TACT, News Agency, 17, Dartmouth Street, Westminster.

CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the Study of BROWNING'S POETRY.—Apply for particulars to "Beta," 49, Talbot Street, Southport, Lancashire.

SCULPTURE STUDENTS instructed, and prepared for the Schools of the Royal Academy, by a Gold Medalist and Experienced Teacher, all of whose Pupils have passed first sending up. The majority have been awarded medals and other distinctions.—Write in first instance SCULPTOR, 87, Chelsea Gardens, S.W.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of NORTH WALES (BANGOR).

APPLICATIONS invited for the CHAIR of LOGIC, PHILOSOPHY, and POLITICAL ECONOMY, now Vacant in this College, owing to the appointment of Professor Henry Jones to the Chair of Philosophy and Rhetoric in the University of St. Andrews. Stipend £250, with share of fees guaranteed up to £50. Applications, with 40 copies of testimonials, to be in the hands of the undersigned not later than WEDNESDAY, Nov. 27th. The new Professor will be expected to enter on his duties at the beginning of the New Year. For further particulars apply to W. CADWALADR DAVIES, Secretary and Registrar. Bangor, October 27th, 1891.

SCOTCH COLLEGE, MELBOURNE.

WANTED, a GRADUATE with Honours to take the Sixth or Highest Class in CLASSICS and MATHEMATICS. The Members of this class have already passed the Matriculation Examination at the Melbourne University, but remain at school for one or two years reading Classics and Mathematics for Honours and Exhibitions at the University. Salary for the first three years will be £300, £350, and £400 respectively per annum. Letters of application, with testimonials, must be sent not later than 16th November, to Dr. MORISON, Glasgow Academy, Glasgow, who will furnish further particulars regarding the appointment.

FRENCH CONVERSATIONAL LESSONS.—A LADY, who has been engaged for eight years in conducting large public English Classes for la Ville de Paris, and also for the Association Polytechnique in that city, is now desirous of finding PUPILS who wish to continue their fluency of speech in the French language.—Address F. T. M. (French), 16, Breakpear Road, & John's, S.E.

READY ON NOVEMBER 2.
In 2 vols., imperial 8vo, bound in cloth, price £3 3s.
A SUPPLEMENT
TO ALLIBONE'S DICTIONARY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE
AND
BRITISH AND AMERICAN AUTHORS.
By JOHN FOSTER KIRK, LL.D.,
Author of "The History of Charles the Bold."

This Supplement brings down to the latest practicable date one of the greatest literary enterprises of the century. It consists of nearly 1,600 closely printed double-column pages, contains upwards of 37,000 articles (Authors), and enumerates over 93,000 titles. To those who know aught of the literary ability and painstaking industry of Dr. Kirk, it is needless to say anything of his fitness for undertaking such a task, or of the probable completeness of a work prepared under his editorial supervision. It may be mentioned, however, that in the Supplement the works of Sir Edwin Arnold occupy nearly one page, those of Matthew Arnold more than three pages, and those of Darwin more than two pages. To the works of George Eliot (Mr. Cross) nearly four pages of discriminating criticism are given, and numerous other Authors, whose careers had scarcely commenced when the original work of Allibone was compiled, have all their later publications described in the Supplement with minuteness and care.

ALLIBONE'S DICTIONARY AND SUPPLEMENT
Form together 5 uniform imperial 8vo vols., £7 17s. 6d., bound in cloth.
Published by J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY,
10, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; and 715, Market Street, Philadelphia, U.S.A.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE for LADIES,
43 and 45, Harley Street.
Principal—The Rev. Canon ELWYN, Master of the Charterhouse.
Lady-Resident—Miss CROUDACE.
The HALFTERM for the College and School will begin on THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 5.
Prospectus of the SECRETARY.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE (for LADIES),
LONDON, 43 and 45, Harley Street, W.
The PROFESSORSHIP of MODERN HISTORY will be Vacant at Christmas.
Applications, with Testimonials, to be sent in before THURSDAY, November 12th.
Particulars may be obtained, personally or by letter, from the LADY-RESIDENT, at the College.

NEW SOUTH WALES.
THE WOMEN'S COLLEGE within the UNIVERSITY of SYDNEY.
Applications are invited for the Post of LADY PRINCIPAL of the above College. Salary, £500 per Annum, with Board and Residence in the College.
Particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, accompanied by Four copies of Testimonials, must be sent not later than the 16th NOVEMBER, 1891.
Candidates must state their Tutorial qualifications and experience, and age.
SAUL SANDER,
Agent-General for New South Wales,
9, Victoria-street,
Westminster, S.W.
9th October, 1891.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS
GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.
The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

CATALOGUES.
FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel Poetry, &c.) are invited to forward them for consideration. MSS. read within 14 days of receipt, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. Rejected MSS. promptly returned.
DIGBY, LONG, & CO., Publishers,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.
SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per Annum.
MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.
Books can be exchanged at the residences of Subscribers in London by the Library Messengers.
SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.
MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.
MUDIE'S FOREIGN LIBRARY.
All the best Works in French, German, Italian, and Spanish are in circulation.
Catalogue of English Books for 1891, 1s. 6d. Catalogue of Foreign Books, 1s. Prospectuses and Clearance Lists of Books on Sale, postage free.
MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED,
30 to 34, New Oxford Street, London.
Branch Offices:
241, Brompton Road; and 2, King Street, Cheapside.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 5s.
FIAT LUX! or Rays of Light from Practical Philosophy, Humbly dedicated to all Searchers after Truth. By "PHILOSOPHUS."
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.
FURTHER RELIQUES OF CONSTANCE
NADEN: being Essays and Tracts for our Times. Edited with an Analytical and Critical Introduction, and Notes, by GEORGE M. MCCRE. With Portrait and Facsimile of her last Letter. Demy 8vo, cloth, top edge gilt, 7s. 6d.
BICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester Square, London, W.C.

Soreness and Dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough, and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. In boxes, 7jd.; tins, 1s. 1jd., labelled "JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists."

THROAT IRRITATION
AND COUGH.

NEW NOVEL by the AUTHOR of "A VILLAGE TRAGEDY."

Now ready at all the Libraries, 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

ESTHER VANHOMRIGH.

By MRS. M. L. WOODS.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

Ready this day, at all Libraries.

By the Author of "Man Proposes," &c.

A RUDE AWAKENING. 3 vols. By Mrs. A. Phillips,

Author of "Benedicta," &c.

By the Author of "Husband and Wife."

THE LADY of BALMERINO. 3 vols. By

MARIE CONNOR LEIGHTON, Author of "A Morganatic Marriage," "The Triumph of Manhood," "Sweet Magdalen," &c.

TRISCHLER & COMPANY, 18, NEW BRIDGE STREET, E.C.

JAPANESE POTTERY,

WITH NOTES

Describing the Emblems, the Poetical Associations, and other thoughts and subjects employed in the Decoration of the Ware, an Account of the Festivals, and of some of the Customs of Japan.

By JAMES L. BOWES.

Imperial 8vo, cloth, 600 pp., with Plates, £2 12s. 6d.

The "Extra Illustrated Edition," half-morocco, gilt top, £6 6s. (Only a few copies left.)

Japon Mail.—"It is a noble book... a book of the most valuable and genuine character. It is evident that Mr. Bowes has brought together a really representative collection, and that he has made every specimen it contains the object of careful research and intelligent scrutiny."

China Telegraph.—"Few are entitled to speak with absolute authority, but of these Mr. Bowes stands foremost. Virtually a complete history of the art. To the true connoisseur it needs little recommendation."

The Academy.—"Produced with singular care and completeness... A worthy sequel to the author's previous labours in the cause of Japanese art."

The Times.—"Worthy of its subject and its author."

The Art Journal.—"Remarkably free from mistakes."

The Saturday Review.—"Let us repeat our admiration of Mr. Bowes' beautiful and enticing volume."

The Architect.—"A guide for the collector, and the best of its kind."

The Builder.—"Not only one of the most beautiful, but one of the most useful and rational books upon Japanese art which has been published in England."

Notes and Queries.—"To collectors his books are as authoritative as to the lover of Elzevirs the priceless book of Mr. Wilkins."

St. James's Gazette.—"The volume is one in which the connoisseur will delight."

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited
Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL.

ORIENTAL TRANSLATION FUND.

NEW SERIES.

A faithful Translation from the Persian of MIRKHOOND'S "RANZAT-US-SAFA." Part I., Volume I., containing the Moslem version of our Bible Stories from the Creation of Genii before Adam up to the Death of Aaron.

Printed, Published, and Sold under the Patronage of the ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY,
22, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON.

Price Ten Shillings.

To H.B.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Hill, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.; or cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

Uniform with the Life and Work of Sir F. Leighton, Bart., P.R.A. Sir J. E. Millais, Bart., R.A.; L. Alma Tadema, R.A.; J. L. E. Meissonier, J. C. Hook, R.A.; Rosa Bonheur, and Birket Foster.

The above may still be had, paper, 2s. 6d.; cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s., or handsomely bound together, 21s.

THE ART ANNUAL for 1891,

Being the CHRISTMAS NUMBER of the ART JOURNAL.

CONSISTING OF

THE LIFE AND WORK OF BRITON RIVIERE, R.A.

By WALTER ARMSTRONG.

With two full-page Etchings, "Circ," and "The Last Spoonful," and a Photogravure of "Persepolis," and about 40 Illustrations in the Text.

London: J. S. VVURCK & Co., Limited, 26, Ivy Lane, E.C.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.
FRANCIS RAYNES-CROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR

TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALLEANCE, with full particulars post-free, on application.
FRANCIS RAYNES-CROFT, Manager.

CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS

NEW BOOKS.

Just published, 8vo, half-bound, price 14s.
(Originally Published in 1841.)

AN ESSAY on the GOVERNMENT of DEPENDENCIES. By Sir GEORGE CORNEWALL LEWIS, K.C.B. Edited, with an Introduction, by C. P. LUCAS, B.A., of Balliol College, Oxford, and the Colonial Office, London.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 6s. 6d.

SELECTED FRAGMENTS of ROMAN

POETRY. From the Earliest Times of the Republic to the Augustan Age. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by W. W. MERRY, D.D., Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford.

BY THE SAME EDITOR.

1 extra fcap. 8vo, price 3s.

HOMER.—ODYSSEY, BOOKS VII—

XII. With Introduction, Notes, and Table of Homer's Forms.

* This Edition has been adapted with very slight alterations from the widely-known edition of Books I.—XII., for the use of Students preparing for Examinations in which only these Books, or part of them, are required.

Books I.—XII. FORTY-FIFTH THOUSAND, 5s.; Books XIII.—XXIV., 5s.; Books I and II., 1s. 6d. each.

Extra fcap. 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

LE MISANTHROPE: a Comedy by

Molière. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by H. W. GEGG MARKHEIM, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

"It is a worthy deed to have edited a play of Molière in a form necessarily designed in the first case for school use, and to have edited it with a complete lack of conventionality, yet with plenty of scholarship. This is what Mr. Markheim has done."—Saturday Review.

"One who knows this edition well knows the last word of modern scholarship about the play."—Scotsman.

Extra fcap. 8vo, price 4s. 6d.

THOMSON.—THE SEASONS, and

THE CASTLE of INDOLENCE. Edited, with Biographical Notice, Introductions, Notes, and a Glossary, by J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., Editor of "Selections from Burns."

"The notes are excellent and will be of value for educational purposes."—Notes and Queries.

"Thomson, to our thinking, has never been so fully or so well edited before."—Glasgow Herald.

COMPLETION of MR. FURNEAUX'S "ANNALS OF TACITUS."

Just ready, demy 8vo, with a Map, price 20s.

THE ANNALS of TACITUS. Vol. II.

BOOKS XI.—XVI. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by HENRY FURNEAUX, M.A., Formerly Fellow and Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

(Volume I. Books I.—VI., price 18s.)

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 8s. 6d.

T. MACCI PLAUTI RUDENS. Edited, with Critical and Explanatory Notes, by EDWARD A. SONNENSCHNEN, M.A., Professor of Greek and Latin in the Mason College, Birmingham.

(TRANSLATION.)

"The first English edition of the 'Rudens' may be reckoned among the most important works which have appeared in recent times in the field of Plautine criticism. The admirable commentary which contains on more than one hundred pages an abundance of pithy observations on the usage of Plautus and Old Latin generally, secures for this edition permanent value."
E. R. (Literarisches Centralblatt, No. 33, August 8, 1891.)

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues post free.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,
CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 913.—NOVEMBER, 1891.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS—“THE ELERGIE.”—THE FUTURE ROLE OF THE ARMY RESERVE, by Major-General F. Chenevix Trench, C.M.G.—AUTUMN LIGHTS AND SHADES, by “A Son of the Marshes.”—DAWN IN NYASALAND, by Dr. D. Kerr Cross, Blantyre, East Central Africa.—CHRONICLES OF WESTERLY: A PROVINCIAL SKETCH.—VON MOLTKE'S FRANCO-GERMAN WAR OF 1870-71, by General Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., G.C.B.—THE AULD HOUSE O' GASK: A SKETCH FROM STRATHHEARN, by John Stuart Blackie.—THE EGYPTIANS AND THE OCCUPATION.—THE OLD SALOON.—THE RIOTS IN CHINA.—THE RIGHT HON. W. H. SMITH.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE,

No. 355.—NOVEMBER, 1891.

CONTENTS.

1. A FIRST FAMILY of TASAJARA. By BRET HARTE. (Chaps. IX-X.)
2. TALMA. By A. F. DAVIDSON.
3. THE RIGHTS OF FREE LABOUR. By C. B. ROYLANCE KENT.
4. THE FLOWER OF FORGIVENESS.
5. OFF THE AZORES.
6. THREE PERSIAN QUATRAINS. By T. C. LEWIS.
7. MOZART'S LIBRETTIST. By Mrs. ROSS.
8. A CURIOUS DISCOVERY. By HORACE HUTCHINSON.
9. COWPERS LETTERS. By J. C. BAILEY.
10. PHILANTHROPY AND THE POOR-LAW.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

THE TIMES.—“A magazine which has no rival in England.”

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For NOVEMBER, 1891, price 6d. net, contains—

1. SIR ROBERT CECIL, MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, K.G. Engraved by W. BISCOE GARDNER. Front.
2. HATFIELD HOUSE: the Seat of the Marquis of Salisbury. Mrs. MARWOOD TUCKER (nee BERENFORD HOPE). Illustrated.
3. RUGBY SCHOOL.—III. Games. LEES KNOWLES, M.P. Illustrations by C. O. MURRAY.
4. A WIFE'S CONFESSION. VIOLET FANE. Illustrations by T. J. DALZIEL.
5. CARLYLE AND RUSKIN. (Two Letters.) Portrait of THOMAS CARLYLE.
6. HOCKEY. FRANCIS PREVOST. Illustrations from Photographs by Mr. A. G. LOW.
7. “NEVER RESTING TIME LEADS SUMMER ON” (Sonnet V.). SHAKESPEARE. Designed and Engraved by H. FELL.
8. THREE PORTRAITS OF MILTON. Ven. Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D. Illustrated by Hugh THOMSON.
9. THE USE OF THE LATHES. W. A. S. BENSON. Illustrated.
10. A STRANGE ELOPEMENT. Chaps. IV, V. (to be continued). W. CLARK HUSSELL. Illustrations by W. H. O'FERRAND.
11. ART NOTES FROM AUSTRALIA. GILBERT PARKER.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE,

CONTENTS FOR NOVEMBER.

- MR. HENRY JAMES. MISS POUNTNER.
ESTHER VANHOMRIGH. (Continued) Mrs. WOODS.
THE FIRST ENGLISH FREE LIBRARY. JOHN TAYLOR.
ROMANCE OF MARY MACADAM. Part I. E. A. ARNOLD.
MRS. BARBAULD and her PUPIL. Mrs. RICKARDS.
LADY BETTY'S BALL GOWN. MISS BLOMFIELD.
POLITICAL PAMPHLETS. F. C. MONTAGUE.
SCENES IN RUSSIA. Part II. ANDREW HOPE.
SOCIAL BATH. (Continued) Mrs. PHILLIPS.
BEGUN IN JEST. (Continued) Mrs. NEWMAN.
“ROSES.” Mrs. ALEXANDER.
“TOUT CELA POUR BIBI.” Madame DICKSELL.

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR NOVEMBER.

- CHARLES STEWART PARNELL. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.
THE SPIRITUALISATION OF THOUGHT IN FRANCE. By Madame BLAZE DE BURY.
GREEK IN THE UNIVERSITIES. By E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L.
THE APPLICATIONS OF HYPNOTISM. By C. LLOYD TUCKER, M.D.
THE RENAISSANCE OF THE STAGE. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.
GRIEVANCES OF ELEMENTARY SCHOOLTEACHERS. By T. A. ORGAN.
DID GEOGRAPHICAL CHANGES CAUSE the GLACIAL EPOCH? By Professor T. G. BOSSNEY, F.R.S.
LOCAL GOVERNMENT IN IRELAND. By Sir STEPHEN E. DE VERE, Bart.
THE FOURTH GOSPEL. By the Rev. W. W. PEYTON.
THE BRAND OF CAIN IN THE GREAT REPUBLIC. By EDWARD WAKEFIELD.

ISBISTER & Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

THE EXPOSITORY TIMES.

The NOVEMBER Number, now ready, contains the First of a Series of important Articles by Mr. PINCHES, of the British Museum, on “THE OLD TESTAMENT IN THE LIGHT OF THE LITERATURE OF ASSYRIA AND BABYLONIA.”

Price Sixpence Monthly. Annual Subscription, 6s.

Volumes I. and II., in cloth, 4s. each.

“A most promising beginning is made with the enlarged Series of THE EXPOSITORY TIMES. Every page is closely packed with good things.”—The Independent.

Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 38, George Street.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART

Now ready, price 1s.

For NOVEMBER,

Forming the FIRST PART of a NEW VOLUME.

New Features.

PICTURE IN COLOURS—“A BREEZY DAY.” Painted by H. E. DETMOLD. CHROMOTYPOGRAVURE.

OUR ILLUSTRATED NOTE-BOOK. With 8 Illustrations:—“St. Mary Magdalen,” by Conrad Dressler—“The Burns Memorial at Ayr,” by G. A. LAWSON—“A Roman Lady,” by G. F. WATTS, R.A.—“The late Sir W. F. DOUGLAS, P.R.S.A.”—“George Reid, the NEW P.R.S.A.”—“Lord Napier of Maudslayi,” by Sir EDGAR BOCHM, Bart., R.A.—“The Widow's Mite,” by Sir EVERETT MILHIS, Bart., R.A.—and “The Doubtful Coin,” by J. F. LEWIS, R.A.

Leading Contributions.

THE MYSTERY of HOLBEIN'S “AMBASSADORS”: a SOLUTION. By W. F. FRED. DICKES. With 8 Illustrations.

WHERE TO DRAW the LINE: a Word to Students. By THOMAS WOOLNER, R.A. With a Portrait of T. Woolner, R.A.

“PRIMITIVE METHODISTS.” Painted by W. H. Y. TITCOMB. With a Note by FREDERICK WEDMORE.

THE COLLECTION of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON. By WALTER SHAW-SPARROW. With 6 Illustrations. “The Six Days of the Creation,” by E. Burne-Jones, A.R.A.

POLITICAL CARTOONS. By LINLEY SAMBOURNE With 2 Illustrations.

RICHARD REDGRAVE, C.B., R.A., DECEASED By F. G. STEPHENS. With a Portrait of Richard Redgrave, and 3 Illustrations of his Works.

RECENT HONITON LACE. By ALAN S. COLE. With 7 Illustrations.

THE CHRONICLE of ART: ART in OCTOBER.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

“The Story of the Great Armada, as told in contemporary Spanish chronicles, now being published in LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE, will be read by all who have still any taste left for good literature.”

WORLD.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE,

Number CIX.—NOVEMBER.

CONTENTS.

- THE THREE FATES. By F. MARION CRAWFORD, Author of “Mr. Isaacs,” “Dr. Claudius,” &c. Chaps. XVII, XVIII.
THE SPANISH STORY OF THE ARMADA.—III. By J. A. FROUDE.
THE LADY GUIDE. By Mrs. ALFRED W. HUNT.
THE BASKING SHARK. By Sir H. W. GORE BOOTH.
LIFE IN A FRENCH PROVINCE. By Miss E. C. PRICE.
MEMORIES. By ADAMS BATTIE.
THE LINGUIST. By E. NESBIT.
AT THE SIGN OF THE SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.
London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

THE NEW REVIEW.

NOVEMBER.—Price Ninepence.

- EXCURSION (FUTILE ENOUGH) TO PARIS; Autumn 1851. (To be Concluded.) By THOMAS CARLYLE.
SIR JOHN LUBBOCK and the LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. By FREDERIC HARRISON.
CONCERNING MISSIONARIES and the TROUBLES IN CHINA. By the Hon. CHARLES K. TUCKERMAN.
THE BRITISH MUSEUM and the BRITISH PUBLIC. By Dr. GARNETT.
THE SIMIAN TONGUE. No. II. By Professor R. L. GARNER.
THE UNION OF ITALY. By His Excellency SPENCER WALPOLE.
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY: his Life and Duties.
TRAINING: its Bearing on Health. (Concluded.) By Sir MORELL MACKENZIE.
THE QUINTESSENCE OF IBSENISM. By WILLIAM ARCHER.
A RAMBLE IN BOSNIA and the HERZEGOVINA. By T. W. LUGH, M.P.
London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

Vol. I, just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d. (large-paper, 9s. net).

ABBOTSFORD SERIES OF THE SCOTTISH POETS. Edited by GEORGE FARL-TODD.—Vol. I. EARLY SCOTTISH POETRY. Thomas the Rhymer, John Barbour, Andrew of Wyntoun, and Henry the Minstrel.

WILLIAM HODGE & Co., Glasgow.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, London and Edinburgh.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.;
And all Booksellers.

The Religious Tract Society's List.

Just published, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d., cloth.

THE CALIPHATE: its Rise, Decline, and Fall. By Sir WILLIAM MUIR, K.C.S.I., LL.D., D.C.L., Ph.D., Author of “The Life of Mahomet,” “Mahomet and Islam,” &c.

“The story of Islam, stationary as it is, is a study which Englishmen who represent, as Lord Beaconsfield used to say, a great Mussulman power, have no right to neglect, and in this study Sir William Muir must always be regarded as one of the most competent and authoritative guides.”—The Times.

Just published, Imperial 8vo, 8s., handsome cloth, gilt edges.
UNITED STATES PICTURES: Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By RICHARD LOVETT, M.A., Author of “Norwegian Pictures,” “London Pictures,” &c. With a Map and 155 Engravings.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS according to the AUTHORIZED VERSION. Metrically arranged with Introductions, various Renderings, Explanatory Notes, and Index. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth boards, red edges. The notes are strictly explanatory, constant reference being made to the differences of rendering in the “Prayer Book” the “Revised,” and other versions. Besides the brief Preface to each Psalm, an extended INTRODUCTION on the structure, authority, and general character of the whole, is prefixed to the volume; and a full alphabetical INDEX to the Notes is appended.

THE RACES of the OLD TESTAMENT By A. H. SAYCE, M.A., LL.D., Author of “Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments,” “The Hittites,” &c. (By-PATHS OF BIBLE KNOWLEDGE, No. 16.) With Illustrations from Photographs by Mr. Flinders Petrie. Crown 8vo, 3s., cloth boards.

THE LIFE and TIMES of JOSEPH in the LIGHT of EGYPTIAN LORE. By the Rev. H. G. TOMKINS. (By-PATHS OF BIBLE KNOWLEDGE, No. 17.) Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

THE LOVE of CHRIST: His to Us, Ours to Him. By Rev. JOHN P. HOBSON, M.A., Author of “From Death unto Life,” &c. Small 8vo, 1s., cloth boards, red edges.

THE NONSUCH PROFESSOR in his MERIDIAN SPLENDOR; or, the Singular Actions of Sanctified Christians. By the Rev. WILLIAM SECKER, Minister of All Hallows Church, London Wall. With an Introduction by the Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

ATTRACTIVE TRUTHS in LESSON and STORY. A Series of Outline Lessons with Illustrative Stories for Junior Christian Endeavour Societies, Children's Meetings, and Home Teaching. By Mrs. A. M. SCUDDER. With Introduction by the Rev. F. CLARKE, President of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

THE DAYS of QUEEN MARY; or, Annals of her Reign. Containing particulars of the Restoration of Romanism and the Sufferings of the Martyrs during that period. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards, gilt edges.

THE GREAT REST GIVER. By W. HAIG MILLER, Author of “Life's Pleasure Garden,” “The Mirage of Life,” &c. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

ITALIAN EXPLORERS in AFRICA. By SOFIA BOMPIANI. With Portraits and Illustrations. (NEW LEISURE HOUR LIBRARY, No. 3.) Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth boards.

HOW to KEEP HEALTHY. Familiar Talks on Hygiene. By A. T. SCHOFIELD, M.D. Illustrated. (NEW LEISURE HOUR LIBRARY, No. 4.) Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth boards.

BRIEF COUNSELS concerning BUSINESS. By AN OLD MAN of BUSINESS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

HEROES of the TELEGRAPH. By JOHN MUNRO, Author of “Electricity and its Uses,” “Pioneers of Electricity,” &c. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth boards.

HEROISMS in HUMBLE LIFE; or, Stories from the Records of the Montyon Prize of the French Academy. By L. G. SEGUIN, Author of “Walks in Algiers.” With Illustrations. Small 16s., 5s., cloth boards, gilt edges.

THE KING'S CUP-BEARER. By Mrs. O. F. WALTON, Author of “Christie's Old Organ,” “Shadows,” &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth boards.

A series of very helpful and direct religious talks based upon Schmidt's history. It will be found very helpful by all classes of readers, and especially suitable for young people.

ILLUSTRATED TALES. Twenty-five Illustrated Stories have just been published, ranging in price from 6d. to 6s. each, attractively bound, and suitable for Presents or Prizes.

Please send a Post Card to the Trade Manager, 56, Paternoster Row, London, E.C., and ask for the Religious Tract Society's Illustrated List of New and Recent Books.

PUBLISHED BY THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY,
56, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON;
And Sold by all Booksellers.

BLACKIE & SON'S
NEW ILLUSTRATED STORY BOOKS.

REDSKIN and COWBOY: a Tale of the Western Plains. By G. A. HENTY. With 12 Page Illustrations by ALFRED PEARSE. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olivine edges, 6s.

THE DASH for KHARTOUM: a Tale of the Nile Expedition. By G. A. HENTY. With 10 Page Illustrations by JOHN SCHONBERG and J. NASH, and 4 Plans. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olivine edges, 6s.

THE PILOTS of POMONA: a Story of the Orkney Islands. By ROBERT LEIGHTON. With 8 Page Illustrations by JOHN LEIGHTON, and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olivine edges, 6s.

HELD FAST for ENGLAND: a Tale of the Siege of Gibraltar. By G. A. HENTY. With 8 Page Illustrations by GORDON BROWNE. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olivine edges, 6s.

THREE BRIGHT GIRLS: a Story of Chance and Mischance. By ANNIE E. ARMSTRONG. With 6 Page Illustrations by W. PARKINSON. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

SILAS VERNEY: a Tale of the Time of Charles II. By EDWARD PICKERING. With 6 Page Illustrations by ALFRED PEARSE. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

BROWNSMITH'S BOY: a Romance in a Garden. By G. MANVILLE FENN. New and Cheaper Edition. With 6 Page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

BLACKIE'S NEW THREE-SHILLING SERIES.

Crown 8vo, with Full-Page Illustrations, and elegantly bound in cloth.

THE ROVER'S SECRET: a Tale of the Pirate Cays and Lagoons of Cuba. By HARRY COLLINGWOOD. New and Cheaper Edition.

THE WIGWAM and the WARPETH: Stories of the Red Indians. By ASCOTT R. HOPE. New and Cheaper Edition.

GIRL NEIGHBOURS; or, The Old Fashion and the New. By SARAH TYLER. New and Cheaper Edition.

PERSEVERANCE ISLAND; or, The Robinson Crusoe of the Nineteenth Century. By DOUGLAS FRAZAR. New and Cheaper Edition.

BLACKIE'S HALF-CROWN SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with Illustrations.

STIMSON'S REEF: a Tale of Adventure. By C. J. HYNE. Illustrated by W. S. STACEY.

GLADYS ANSTRUTHER; or, The Young Stepmother. By LOUISA THOMPSON. Illustrated by F. H. TOWNSEND.

MARIAN; or, The Abbey Grange. By ANNIE E. ARMSTRONG. Illustrated by L. LESLIE BROOKE.

BLACKIE'S TWO-SHILLING SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with Illustrations.

THE LONELY PYRAMID: a Tale of Adventures. By J. H. YOXALL. Illustrated by W. S. STACEY.

BAB; or, The Triumph of Unselfishness. By ISMAY THORN. Illustrated by L. LESLIE BROOKE.

CLIMBING the HILL, and other Stories. By ANNIE S. SWAN. Illustrated by T. H. WILSON.

BRAVE and TRUE, and other Stories. By GREGSON GOW. Illustrated by F. H. TOWNSEND.

•• Blackie & Son's New Illustrated Catalogue of Books for Young Readers sent post free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED,
OLD BAILEY.

MESSRS. ISBISTERS' LIST.

BY THE LATE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK.

SERMONS, LETTERS, AND SPEECHES.

By the late W. C. MAGEE, D.D., Archbishop of York.

Edited by his Son CHARLES S. MAGEE.

With an Introductory Note by His Grace the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.

3 vols., large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

- I. GROWTH in GRACE. [Now ready.]
- II. CHRIST the LIGHT of all SCRIPTURE. [In November.]
- III. LETTERS and SPEECHES. [In November.]

The Originator of the Liverpool Free Library.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS

OF SIR JAMES A. PICTON.

Originator of the Liverpool Free Public Library.

By his Son, J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.P.

With Portrait and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s.

New Vol. of Isbisters' Home Library.

TOILERS IN ART:

Biographical and Critical Sketches.

Edited by HENRY C. EWART.

With Illustrations from the Works of each Artist.

In Handsome Binding, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAP EDITION.

MARY HOWITT:

An Autobiography.

Edited by her Daughter, MARGARET HOWITT.

With 1 Portrait, and all the original Illustrations.

1 vol., demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

New and Revised Edition.

SOCIAL WRECKAGE:

A Review of the Laws of England as they affect the Poor.

By FRANCIS PEEK, Chairman of the Howard Association.

New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Of those who have of late years laboured to enlighten public opinion and stimulate public sentiment with regard to the condition of the poor, few have done better service than Mr. Peek."—Scotsman.

The Social Problem.

TRIES AT TRUTH:

Essays on Social Subjects.

By ARNOLD WHITE,

Author of "Problems of a Great City," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 2s.

CONTENTS:—Pauper Immigration—Thrift—Strikes—Sweating—Colonisation—Gifts to the Poor—Amusements—Over-crowding—General Booth's Scheme, &c.

In handsome binding, gilt edges, 900 pages each.

Price 7s. 6d. each.

THE

GOOD WORDS. SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

VOLUME 1891.

Edited by DONALD MACLEOD, D.D.,

One of H.M. Chaplains.

CONTAINING—

THE MARRIAGE OF ELINOR.

The New Three-Volume Story.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

THE LITTLE MINISTER.

The New Three-Volume Story.

By J. M. BARRIE.

And Contributions by

Late Archb. of York.
Bishop of Winchester.
Prof. Henry Drummond.
Dean of Gloucester.
Andrew Lang.
"Shirley."

&c.

Carmen Sylva.
Professor W. F. Barrett
Linley Sambourne.
Harry Furniss.
Augusta Webster.
Annie Swan.

&c.

VOLUME 1891.

Edited by the Rev. B. WAUGH,

Author of "Sunday Evenings with my Children," &c.

CONTAINING—

GODIVA DUBLEIGH.

The New Three-Volume Story.

By SARAH DOUDNEY.

WITH WHITE WINGS GLEAMING.

The New Story.

By L. T. MEADE.

And Contributions by

The Bishop of Ripon
Archdeacon Farrar, D.D.
Rev. T. B. Stephenson, D.D.
Rev. E. J. Hardy, M.A.
The Hon. Mrs. J. Stuart
Wortley.

&c.

Canon Scott Holland.
William Wright, D.D.
The Riverside Visitor.
The Master of Trinity.
The Hon. and Rev. E.
Lyttleton, M.A.

&c.

Butterfly Collecting.

AMONG THE BUTTERFLIES.

A Book for Young Collectors.

By the Rev. B. G. JOHNS, M.A.

With 12 Full-page Plates and numerous Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"A charming example of juvenile literature. It deserves to be well known and widely used."—Teacher's Aid.

Political Economy.

PRINCIPLES OF POLITICAL ECONOMY.

By CHARLES GIDE,

Professor of Political Economy in the University of Montpellier.

Translated by E. P. JACOBSEN,
Formerly of University College, London.

With an Introduction and Notes by JAMES BONAR, LL.D.
Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

ISBISTER & CO., LIMITED, 15 AND 16, TAVISTOCK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE. THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE for NOVEMBER, 1891, contains, among other Articles of interest—MR. CHAINE'S SONS. By W. E. NORRIS. CHAPS. 41—44.—DICKENS AS AN ART CRITIC.—EIGHT WEEKS' SERVICE IN THE GERMAN ARMY.—TURENNE.—SOME FAMOUS BORDER FIGHTS.—THE STRANGE CASE OF MURIEL GREY.—A MODERN MYSTIC.—LOVE OR MONEY. CHAPS. 39, 40.—&c.

NEW WORKS.

Mrs. FRANK GRIMWOOD'S narrative of her ESCAPE from the scene of the recent MUTINY in MANIPUR will be published early in November, in One Volume, demy 8vo, with Portraits and Illustrations, 15s.

BY THE HON. MRS. RICHARD MONCK.
MY CANADIAN LEAVES: an Account of a Visit to Canada. By FRANCES E. O. MONCK. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

A NEW VOLUME OF ROAD TRAVEL.
ACROSS ENGLAND in a DOGCART: from London to St. David's and back. By JAMES JOHN HISSEY, Author of "A Tour in a Phaeton," &c. With 20 Illustrations from Sketches by the Author, and Plan of the Route. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

BY THE REV. C. H. COPE.
CHARLES WEST COPE, R.A., a LIFE RECORD. By his Son, the Rev. CHARLES HENRY COPE, M.A. With Portrait and Facsimile Reproductions. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

BY M. LAVISSE.
THE YOUTH OF FREDERICK the GREAT. From the French of ERNEST LAVISSE. By STEPHEN LOUIS SIMEON. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

New Novels at all Libraries.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN LONDON TOWN."
LOVE or MONEY. By KATHARINE LEE (Mrs. JENNER), Author of "A Western Wild Flower." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"An interesting and exciting story."—Observer.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MDLLE. DE MARSAC."
MR. CHAINE'S SONS. By W. E. NORRIS, Author of "A Bachelor's Blunder," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER A CHARM."
BEACON FIRES. By E. Werner, Author of "Success," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GODFREY HELSTONE."
PATIENCE HOLT. By GEORGIANA M. CRAIK, Author of "Diana," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NEW SIX-SHILLING EDITIONS.
THE DEWY MORN. By RICHARD JEFFRIES.

MARY ST. JOHN. By Rosa N. CAREY. Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & Son, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW. NOVEMBER.

THE FRENCH ARMIES (with Map). By the Right Hon. Sir CHARLES W. DILKE, Bart.
FAMINE in RUSSIA. By E. B. LANIN.
IRISH LOCAL GOVERNMENT. By T. W. RUSSELL, M.P.
THE FREE STAGE and the NEW DRAMA. By WILLIAM ARCHER.
THE EMANCIPATION of WOMEN. By Mrs. HENRY FAWCETT.
RUDYARD KIPLING. By FRANCIS ADAMS.
FRENCH and ENGLISH. By Miss BETHAM-EDWARDS.
SLAVERY in MADAGASCAR. By VAZAH.
THE BARD of the DIMBOVITZA. By FREDERIC HARBISON.
THE "INTERVIEWER" ABROAD. By Professor DOWDEN.
THE MODERN MARK ANTONY. By Col. MALLESON.
A HUMAN DOCUMENT. Chaps. IV.—VIII. By W. H. MALLOCK.

W. R. HUGHES, F.L.S.

A WEEK'S TRAMP in DICKENS-LAND. Together with Personal Reminiscences of the "Inimitable Boz" therein Collected. By W. R. HUGHES, F.L.S. With upwards of 100 Illustrations by F. G. Kitton, Herbert Railton, and others. Demy 8vo, 16s. [This day.]

CHARLES DIXON.

THE BIRDS of OUR RAMBLES: a Companion for the Country. By CHARLES DIXON, Author of "Annals of Bird-Life," "Idle Hours with Nature," &c. With Illustrations by A. T. Elwes. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

G. MASPERO.

LIFE in ANCIENT EGYPT and ASSYRIA. From the French of G. MASPERO. With 188 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s. [This day.]

TWO NEW NOVELS.

BLANCHE ROOSEVELT.

HAZEL FANE. By BLANCHE ROOSEVELT. 3 vols.

MARY A. DICKENS.

CROSS CURRENTS. By MARY A. DICKENS. 3 vols.

The ANTI-JACOBIN says: "'Cross Currents' is no discredit to the illustrious name which its author bears. On the contrary, it is all the more worthy of that name because Miss Dickens honours her immortal grandsire by resolving that like him she will be no imitator.....One of the best of recently published novels."

Now ready, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

FRESH LIGHT on the DYNAMIC ACTION and PONDEROSITY of MATTER. By "WATERDALE." A System of Dynamics based on the Inertia of the Etherial Fluid, being identical with that of other Matter, evolving therefrom its Automatic Cause of Gravity.

MANCHESTER COURIER.—"An excellent text-book for students, written in a very lucid and masterly style. The writer deals with the constitution of the etherial fluid, primary cause of gravity, transplacement, specific ponderosities of elementary atoms, &c."

OBSERVER.—"The volume will hardly fail to interest all who are conversant with the prevailing methods of dealing with scientific subjects."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"In these days it is somewhat unusual to find a scientific book written by an anonymous author, and in this case the nature of the subject and the method of treatment only whet one's curiosity all the more to know who the writer is. To thus summarily knock away the bases upon which some of the most universally acknowledged beliefs of the physical scientists are founded by a clever process of reasoning, which seeks also to build up new ideas, is a proceeding daring and audacious, and it remains to be seen whether the views advanced will meet with acceptance."

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

NOW READY.

NATURAL THEOLOGY. The Gifford Lectures, 1891. By Prof. Sir G. G. STOKES, Bart., M.P. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"As useful as it is interesting."—Observer.
"The Gifford Lectures are an important contribution to the controversy between belief and unbelief."
Times.

"A valuable contribution to the literature of their subject."—Scotsman.

PAGANISM and CHRISTIANITY. By J. A. FARRER, Author of "Military Manners and Customs." Crown 8vo, 6s.

HISTORY of ISRAEL and JUDAH. By J. WELLHAUSEN, Professor at Marburg. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.

AUTHOR'S EDITIONS.

COMPLETE SETS.

- Price £1 1s. SIXPENNY EDITION, in 4 vols., 8vo, half French morocco.
- Price £1 17s. POCKET EDITION, Illustrated with 125 Wood Engravings, in 25 vols., 12mo., cloth. The same in limp Cape morocco, price £3 3s.
- Price £2 8s. TWELVE-VOLUME EDITION, printed from the Plates of the Centenary Edition, Illustrated with Steel Frontispieces and Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, cloth.
- Price £2 10s. TWO-SHILLING EDITION, printed from the Plates of the Centenary Edition, Illustrated with Frontispieces and Vignettes. 25 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.
- Price £3 3s. HALF-CROWN EDITION, printed from the Plates of the Centenary Edition. Illustrated with Steel Frontispieces and Vignettes. 25 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top. The same may be had in half ruby Persian calf, or in half blue morocco.
- Price £4 4s. CENTENARY EDITION, with Additional Notes, Illustrated with 158 Steel Plates, in 25 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. The same may be had in half-calf.
- Price £6. ROXBURGH EDITION, Illustrated with 1,600 Woodcuts and 96 Steel Plates, in 48 vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label; or in half French morocco, £8 8s.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK,
SOHO SQUARE, W.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1891.

No. 1017, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Outcast. A Rhyme for the Time. By Robert Buchanan. (Chatto & Windus.)

READERS of this poem will find at the end of it a "Letter Dedicatory," addressed to C. W. S., in America. They would do well to read this dedicatory letter before they read the poem. It will help them to understand much which otherwise they might fail to appreciate, and some things which might even offend their taste, in the poem itself. If they follow this plan, there is little danger of their not doing at least as much justice to Mr. Buchanan as he does to himself. It may be questioned, indeed, whether he is either just to himself or reasonably fair towards others. If he had been quite true to his genius, he might have escaped the bitterness which appear to have entered into his life, and which have certainly coloured his later work as a writer. That work is perhaps consistent with Mr. Buchanan's own idea of his vocation. He thinks that the poet must necessarily be a propagandist; "and to be a propagandist or a poet," he says, "is to be cursed in the market-place." That depends, one would be inclined to answer, upon the kind of propagandism the poet attempts. If it be that of a mere controversialist, a deliberate picker of quarrels, then no doubt the curses in which he indulges will come back to him with emphasis and with interest. But if it be a propagandism of sympathy—of generous solicitude for the welfare of his fellow men—the poet will speak no curses and will receive none. The present writer recalls the very real delight with which he read earlier books of Mr. Buchanan's—books in which there were no curses, and the flavour of which was that exquisite essential one of true poetry. The "Undertones" had in them the very spirit of freshness and joy. In the "London Poems" there were records of sorrow and suffering, but the poet remembered that his true mission was to bless and not to curse. "Balder the Beautiful," "The Book of Orm," and other memorable works, are witnesses for the intellectual side of the poet's nature. They represent the earnest doubts and questionings, the struggles towards a higher conception of life, which are a poet's privilege and a necessity of his existence. But there was in them no trace of the rancour which Mr. Buchanan has since too often made the habit of his Muse, or, as I would rather say, of his pen.

These observations are suggested by much that will, to many readers, seem regrettable in the present poem. The writer feels sure that they will not, at any rate, be misunderstood by Mr. Buchanan himself. The poet "tosses" his book, as he somewhat ungenerously says, "to the birds of prey"; but among those unfortunate persons, the critics, who are so indicated, I can answer for it that there is at least one, and I doubt not there are many, who will receive it in quite another spirit than that which the poet anticipates. The Outcast is a "rhyme for the time," in the sense of being a satire on the times. The poet makes Vanderdecken, the Flying Dutchman, his hero, because the mythical reappearances of that wandering shade at intervals of ten years give him an opportunity of presenting a view of the world, and of men and women, as seen by an observer who is not avowedly himself. Vanderdecken, however, is as much a shade in the poem as out of it. He is the veritable alter ego of Mr. Buchanan. At times, it is true, the acts and opinions of the hero are obviously not to be charged upon the poet, who is careful to detach them from his own personality by the device of inverted commas; but even in these instances one feels that the poet has only projected himself into imaginary surroundings, and that, in fact, the objective Vanderdecken is really the poet's subjective consciousness. Vanderdecken stands to Mr. Buchanan in much the same relation that Don Juan bore to Byron. Between the two poems—Byron's masterpiece and The Outcast—there is a distinct resemblance and also a marked difference. The resemblance consists in the unrestrained freedom which each poet gives his hero and himself; the difference, in the fact that Byron's poem was a mixture of fooling and earnest, while Mr. Buchanan's is almost painfully earnest throughout. There are probably readers who will find in the later poem, as in the earlier one, passages of excessive licence. Possibly the first impression of nearly every reader will be that such passages are a blemish in Mr. Buchanan's work. I will not contend that they are not, but one knows that the shadows in a picture are as essential to its completeness as the lights. Besides, there is a purism which is made vicious by its imputations of imagined vice. Rather than fall into that mistake, one would heartily exclaim with Mr. Buchanan, "O for one glimpse of honest Adam and Eve, naked but unashamed!"

My own complaint against the poem is that there is a lack of charity and of breadth in it. Mr. Buchanan rails against every one with whom he does not agree. One can perhaps forgive him his repeated flings at Goethe. It is a hobby with him to throw mud at the illustrious German; and, like other exercises which have become a matter of course, this particular hobby does no harm. Not all the mud-throwing in the world will detract from Goethe's intellectual greatness, while his moral shortcomings are not disputed. But men who have nobly striven after high ideals are pointedly assailed in this poem. If the failures of some of them have been conspicuous, their successful achievements have been gloriously conspicuous, and the world holds them in reverence. To scoff at one of these, to sneer at another—in a word, to tolerate nobody's ideals but his own—is not the spirit one expects in a poet, and certainly it is not that one would like to see in a poet of Mr. Buchanan's rank.

Let no one suppose, however, that The Outcast exhibits none of the better spirit or of the higher qualities of a true poem. This spirit and these qualities abound in it. The present volume is only the beginning of the work, and it is therefore impossible to pronounce a final judgment upon it. That cannot be done until each part of the work can be considered in its relation to the other parts. But one need not hesitate to say that only a poet could have written it. In power of imagination and in facility and felicity of expression it is unquestionably a work of genius. One might take an extract from almost any page at random to prove this. The following passage has literally been chosen at random, but it may be left to speak for itself:

"Unto how many men each hour
 Frail little fingers seek to bring
 Some gentle gift of love, some flower
 That is the Soul's best offering?
 Some happiness which we despise,
 Some boon we toss aside for ever—
 And only that our selfish eyes
 May smile one moment on the giver!
 How many of us count or treasure
 The little lives that perish thus,
 To garner us a moment's pleasure,
 A moment's space to comfort us?
 Blind, ever blind, we front the sun
 And cannot see the angels near us,
 Forget the tender duties done
 By willing slaves to help and cheer us!
 Earth and its fulness, all the fair
 Creations of this heaven and air,
 All lives which die that we may live,
 All gifts of service, we pass by,
 All blessings Love hath power to give
 We scorn, O God, or we deny!"

These, these, O God, are daily sent
 To give thine outcasts sacrament,
 And in so giving themselves attain
 Thy sacred privilege of pain!
 Yet still our eyes turn sunward blindly,
 And blindly still our souls contemn
 The loving hands that touch us kindly,
 The lips that kiss our raiment's hem;
 And we forget or turn away
 From flowers that blossom on our way;
 Blind to the gentle ministrations
 Of tutelary angels near,
 We find too late that our salvation
 Lies near, not far; not there, but here!"

I confess that I am and always have been one of those lovers of poetry—be the number large or small—who have an undoubting faith in Mr. Buchanan's genius. Occasionally I have regretted to see him waste his powers on work and on interests that were beneath them; though in saying this I do not refer to his romances or to his chief plays, and it is needless to particularise further. Of this I am sure, that if he will let politicians and all the other quarrelsome people fight out their differences for themselves, and will devote his powers to creative work, he may take a foremost place among living men of letters.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

History of Hampton Court Palace. Vol. III.
 By Ernest Law. (Bell)

THE third and concluding volume of this history is equal to its predecessors both in bulk and in interest. It carries down the annals of the Palace from the Stuart times to the present day; and if some of the Court gossip drawn from Hervey, Walpole, and Lady Suffolk be more entertaining than edifying, it helps one to realise the fact that dulness and decorum are not inseparable companions. The monotony which reigned supreme at Hampton Court throughout the Hanoverian period was at its height in George II.'s reign, when Lord Hervey tells us that

"No mill horse ever went in a more constant track or a more unchanging circle, so that by the assistance of an almanack for the day of the week and a watch for the hour of the day, you might inform yourself fully, without any other intelligence but your memory, of every transaction within the verge of the Court."

In truth, in the two centuries embraced by this volume the incidents of historical importance connected with Hampton Court are remarkably few—royal births and deaths being the chief of them. Mr. Law is therefore to be congratulated upon having been able to supplement what "has been" by "what might have been," and to give us a letter of Dr. Johnson's and a fact in his life which had escaped the researches of Boswell and Croker. As Hampton Court was at the date of Johnson's application for rooms tenanted exclusively "by people of fashion, mostly of quality," he would have felt the incongruity of his position had his request been granted, but his letter to Lord Hertford (then Lord Chamberlain) is worth preserving as a model for future use:

"My Lord,

"Being wholly unknown to your lordship, I have only this apology to make for presuming to trouble you with a request—that a stranger's petition, if it cannot be easily granted, can be easily refused. Some of the apartments at Hampton Court are now vacant, in which I am encouraged to hope that, by application to your lordship, I may obtain a residence. Such a grant would be considered by me as a great favour: and I hope, to a man who has had the honour of vindicating his Majesty's government, a retreat in one of the houses may be not improperly or unworthily allowed. I therefore request that your lordship will be pleased to grant such rooms in Hampton Court as shall seem proper to

"My Lord,

"Your lordship's most obedient
"and humble servant,

"SAM. JOHNSON.

"Bolt Court, Fleet Street.

"April 11, 1776."

Mr. Law has enabled us to see who have been the occupants of the private apartments in the Palace since it ceased to be a royal residence in the strict sense of the term. There are few illustrious names in the list, except so far as lustre is derived from the possession of a title or consanguinity with royalty. But in later days the widows of those who have served their country well have been regarded as suitable occupants; and in 1858 the Queen recognised the claims of science by assigning to Prof. Faraday the Crown house on the Green, which now bears his name. The inner life of the denizens of the Palace has undergone great changes since communication with London has become so easy. Holiday makers interfere with its repose, and within the building (though we are told the tone is cosmopolitan rather than provincial) there are distinct "sets" and, doubtless, no little social jealousy. One ancient feature, at least, still survives—namely, an old sedan-chair, mounted on wheels, drawn by a chairman, and call "The Push," which is used by the ladies for going out in the evening from one part of the building to the other. For, it must be remembered, the Palace is of very large dimensions, and within it are included several detached houses; and while in some cases the suites of apartments are compact and self-contained, in other cases they are inconveniently disconnected. The courts and cloisters are numerous, and it sometimes happens that part of a suite of rooms is to be found in one of them and part in another. Of the fifty-three apartments into which the Palace is now divided, some contain as many as forty rooms with five or six staircases, and under such circumstances a lodging rent free is by no means the unmixed boon which it is generally supposed to be. The cost of maintaining the Palace and gardens is about £11,000 a year, and for this the public receive a fair share of enjoyment—a single Sunday sometimes bringing down from London as many as five thousand visitors.

If the historical incidents related by Mr. Law in this volume are few and unimportant, the details given of the architectural history of the Palace cannot be so described. As a matter of fact, the Palace, as we know it, together with the park and gardens, dates from the reign of William the Third. The place took the King's fancy—Mr. Law says "the flatness of the country reminded him of the scenery of his dear home in Holland"—and he saw the convenience of having a house within easy reach of London and yet beyond its noise and bustle. He very quickly determined to remodel and greatly enlarge Wolsey's Palace, and entrusted the work to Sir Christopher Wren. It was no easy matter for an architect so to wed the debased Renaissance of Louis XIV. with the Tudor work of Henry VIII. as to make a consistent design, and the difficulty was increased by the King's frequent interference with Wren's plans. These embraced a great deal more than was ever executed, and it is, therefore, scarcely fair to pass judgment upon an incomplete undertaking. In the office of Her Majesty's works there is preserved, we are told, a careful and detailed plan—probably drawn by Sir Christopher himself—for a magnificent new entrance court to the Palace on the north side, and an approach to it from Bushey Park, besides other schemes still more grand and extensive. But the King's death and an empty exchequer stopped these projects. To Wren we owe the imposing East Front—(much spoilt by the great pediment, which does not rise above the balustrade, and thus break the straight line and conceal some of the ugly chimneys)—and the less ornamented South Front; the Fountain Court; the Colonnade in the Clock Court (strangely out of keeping with its Tudor surroundings); and the State Apartments. Perhaps also there is due to him the credit of Grinling Gibbons' appointment to be "master carver" at Hampton Court, in which capacity he showed his skill not merely in executing the delicate wood carvings with which his fame is associated, but in designing and perhaps chiselling the decorative stone-work of the East Front.

But for information on these and all other matters we must refer our readers to Mr. Law's History. So far as we can judge, it contains all that any reasonable person can expect to find in it. Its illustrations are numerous and excellent, its type clear, its index copious and accurate, while the arrangement of the extensive materials which the author has collected is altogether admirable. What most strikes us in the book is its thoroughness; and we heartily congratulate Mr. Law upon having brought to so happy a conclusion a work on which no labour has been spared, and from which genuine satisfaction can be gained. May we suggest to him that there are other royal palaces awaiting like treatment?

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

Essays in the History of Religious Thought in the West. By Brooke Foss Westcott, D.D., (Macmillans.)

THE preface to these essays tells us that "very early in life" their author planned an elaborate work which was to be "a careful examination of the religious teaching of representative prophetic masters of the West." The essays are published because Dr. Westcott despairs of completing the work as originally designed. He specially regrets that he has not treated of Homer, Heraclitus, Virgil, Epicurus, Plotinus—"to name the men from whom I believe we may gain most"; but he adds to the five essays written for his original scheme four others which will enable sympathetic readers to understand how great the scheme was, and to realise a little what was to have been the spirit of its execution. The essay on Christianity as the Absolute Religion would have been the introduction. The completed book was to demonstrate of Western civilisation that

"it is true in every realm of man's activity, true in action, true in literature, true in art, that the works which receive the most lasting homage of the soul are those which are most Christian, and that it is in each the Christian element, the element which answers to the fact of the Incarnation, to the fellowship of God with man as an accomplished reality of the present order, which attracts and holds our reverence."

This clear statement of the scope and aim of the writer is made still clearer by the denial that it can be shown that "the vital force of any other great religion is alien from Christianity," and by the insistence that "we are, we must be, as believers in Christ, in the presence of a living, that is, of a speaking God." To show what is meant by this last sentence, the paper on Browning's Teaching is inserted; and to enable us to comprehend quite fully the spirit in which the whole scheme was to have been carried out, Dr. Westcott gives us the charming sketch of Benjamin Whichcote, which might almost be called the soul of the volume. The elaborate essay on Christian Art atones for the absence in the earlier essays of any attempt to prove that in great art Christ must be found making it great.

The sentences we have quoted above contain indeed a splendid and a sufficient creed; a creed which gives a real and glorious content to the phrase so easily spoken—the divinity of Christ. But it is so far from the creed of orthodox Christianity that to recite it saddens us rather than cheers. Most Christians do not dare to allow any inspiration to “profane” writers, as they profanely call them, lest the authors of the New Testament should be jealous; and young men are bullied or sneered out of their natural belief in the inspiration of Plato and Browning before they leave college, or as a necessary preliminary to entering holy orders. Clergymen and ministers are the worst offenders. Orthodox Christianity asks merely whether an author calls himself a Christian, and does not conceive that it owes any special reverence to a poet or painter merely because he has moved the minds of men. Against this blindness, this indifference to Christ’s honour, Dr. Westcott’s book was to have protested. He would prove the Incarnation by demonstrating that poets and painters and philosophers have achieved greatness when they have expressed with conviction some part of the truth of Christianity—when they have agreed with Christ. We find it hard to reconcile ourselves to the loss of the completed work; but perhaps if Dr. Westcott the Bishop declares to his clergy that there is food for the Christian soul in Euripides and Browning, he will produce more effect more quickly than could have been brought about by the magnum opus of the theologian.

We come back now to the fragments of the original work, the five essays on Plato’s Myths, Aeschylus, Euripides, Dionysius the Areopagite, and Origen. The first of these appeared twenty-five years ago in the Contemporary Review. They are all remarkable for the immense pains bestowed upon them, and for the characteristic modesty of the writer in suppressing himself, and endeavouring clearly and accurately to present his subject. They are therefore invaluable to the student, who cannot easily find guides of acknowledged erudition and learning patient enough or humble enough to teach carefully. The essays on Dionysius and Origen are admitted to be the best accounts of their subjects which we have. In the essay on Dionysius we miss any reference to Dean Colet’s study of his works, but perhaps this is merely because we particularly wished to hear what Dr. Westcott would say on the point. In the paper on Plato the length of the quotations somewhat hampers the author’s freedom of movement; and in the analysis of the religious teaching of Euripides the consciousness that Browning has previously gone over the ground is perhaps too much in Dr. Westcott’s mind, and checks his originality. The essays are very full of matter. It will briefly indicate their line of thought if we note that the paper on the Platonic Myths insists that Plato was as far as possible from mere story telling in presenting his myths; “they answer to Revelation, as an endeavour to enrich the store of human knowledge”; they are to be judged seriously, as we judge the visions of Ezekiel. The analysis of the plays of Aeschylus leads up to the statement:

“it is often said, and even taken for granted, that the severer aspects of the Christian creed are due to some peculiarity of the ‘Semitic’ mind; that they are foreign to the more genial constitution of the ‘Japhetic’ type; that here at least the instinct which revelation satisfies is partial and not universal. Against such assumptions, the tragedies of Aeschylus remain a solemn protest.”

Concerning Euripides, Dr. Westcott points out that “he scatters the dream which some have indulged in of the unclouded brightness of the Athenian prospect of life”; and the essay strives to show that the sadness and bewilderment of the dramatist continually feel after truths emphatically and definitely Christian.

Among the later essays which have been already alluded to, the study of Browning resembles the earlier essays in being an analysis and account of its subject as well as a criticism. It professes only to summarise “some points in Browning’s view of life,” but is interesting in view of the criticism of Browning’s Christianity in Mrs. Sutherland Orr’s Letters and Life. All lovers of Browning have been grateful to Mrs. Orr for her careful and sympathetic volume; but some of them have found her tone of apology for her hero’s apparently commonplace Christianity somewhat hard to bear, and have resented an occasional tendency to put what Browning said to his friends before what he said to his public. This is grievously to insult the poet. Dr. Westcott sketches Browning’s convictions concerning “the unity of life, the discipline of life, the continuity of life, the assurance of life.” The summary is executed with insight and completeness, but just because it is a summary is not satisfactory. What challenges our attention in Browning is not the clearness or completeness of his proofs, but the passionate strength of his feelings. We are handling fire when we pick up his volumes; and no flame surprises us more frequently in every corner of his wide domain, or burns more fiercely, than his hope of immortality. As regards his Christianity, the point to note is simply this: that he has again and again expressed in his poetry a love and loyalty for Christ, so intense that, beside his words, the language of our greatest divines seems professional and dead, and they must quote Browning to express what they mean. Dr. Westcott’s book was to prove that souls are set on fire by Christ when they give out any considerable heat or light. His task, when he came to consider Browning’s conflagration, would not have been hard.

The essay on the Relation of Christianity to Art needs a criticism to itself. Like the essays on Dionysius and Origen, it ranks with the best that has been written on the subject. Its erudition and accuracy are as remarkable as its clearness of arrangement, and we mark a very distinct progress since the earlier essays in power of expression and grace of style. In the later essays Dr. Westcott himself speaks, and takes his own place among the prophets he is eager to interpret.

RONALD BAYNE.

The Book-Bills of Narcissus: an Account rendered by Richard Le Gallienne. (Derby: Frank Murray.)

MR. LE GALLIENNE prefaces the production of these bills of his friend Narcissus with the wise remark that there is a sterner veracity in such records than would be found in the pages of a private diary.

“You have kept a diary for how many years? Thirty? Dear me! But have you kept your wine-bills?”

The wine-bills will be more eloquent of your real life than any journal of self-appreciation.

Mr. Le Gallienne follows out this thought as he turns over the book-bills of Narcissus. He seems to dream over his task, and does not compel his readers closely to it, so that in the end we know of Richard Le Gallienne more than we do of Narcissus, albeit these two are one and the same. Book after book suggests thought after thought. Fancy dances upon Reflection’s bald head, and, following his easy lead, we are soon far away from such mundane things as bills. “Criticism,” says Mr. Le Gallienne, “is a good thing, but poetry is a better.” As silence is a prime condition of judgment, what a pity that critics must talk! There is a quality of poetry here that should strike silence into garrulity. As a dance may be suggested in the mere movement of a maiden’s feet, so is there the music of pulsing life beneath this writer’s prose. At every moment of rest, he bursts into song:—

“How many queens have ruled and passed
Since first we met!
How thick and fast
The letters used to come at first,
How thin at last!
Then ceased, and winter for a space!
Until another hand
Brought spring into the land,
And went the Season’s pace.”

Mr. Le Gallienne is young enough to cherish views of life which have all the buoyancy of a balloon before its collapse. In the pin-prick of experience he may have a nasty fall. However, it were better to wait and fall that way than to meekly descend from the heights at the cold request of a critic. Criticism asks for “explanations” which poets laugh to scorn. If a poet could “come down” to his critic’s level that would be a fall indeed. This book is beyond criticism, except by a certain sort of destitute dead-head, who may read it and grunt “Meredith.” Mr. Le Gallienne has made a Study of Meredith—good for Meredith, good for him; but for his own part he has done better than study. He has lived. He does not follow the fashion of the fin de siècle—squeezing all life from his subject in order to exhibit it in decorative subjection. In his prose, at its best, there is cadence that has the very pulse of life. If he tells of love it is of true love. If there were no music here, what use would these book-bills be?

I have no space for quotation. I disdain the business of a critic whose office it is to drag his author down to the level of his own understanding. I wish only to assert that here is a book touching life at its very core, as full of thought as free of fancy: approaching delicate matter with a tender touch, and rich in good things truly said.

ERNEST RADFORD.

The Life of Robert Coates, better known as "Romeo Coates," the "Amateur of Fashion." By John R. and Hunter H. Robinson. (Sampson Low.)

It may appear strange, even in this age of biography-writing, that an octavo volume of nearly two hundred and fifty pages should be devoted to the career of that half-demented amateur player, "Romeo Coates." The foibles which brought him into notice—his egregious vanity, his vulgar craving for notoriety, his ostentatious display of wealth, and, above all, his firm but unwarranted conviction that nature had destined him to shine on the stage—might be sufficiently illustrated within the limits of an ordinary magazine article. Mr. Walter Thornbury dealt with the subject in this way about a quarter of a century ago; but it unfortunately happened that, not content with embodying some of his father's personal recollections, he ventured, on the faith of a passage in a collection of old gossip, to assert that the "amateur of fashion" pocketed a portion of the money he made under the pretence of playing for purely charitable purposes—an assertion for which no justification in fact can be found, and which impaired the authority of an otherwise trustworthy little essay. Messrs. Robinson, seemingly moved to indignation by the mis-statement, have thought it worth their while to give us a long account of Coates's life; and if they fail to paint an exact portrait of their hero, who in his wildest aberrations appears to them an object of respect rather than ridicule, it is not to be denied that they have produced an entertaining narrative.

Robert Coates was the son of Alexander Coates, a prosperous merchant and sugar planter at Antigua, and was born in 1772. After a careful education in England, he passed some years in his native place, where an abiding craze for acting took possession of his mind. In 1807 the elder Coates died; and his son, finding himself in possession of considerable wealth—a portion of which, however, had been prudently secured from anticipation or alienation—went to London with a resolution to become conspicuous both on and off the stage. During a visit to Bath he made the acquaintance of Pryse Gordon, who thought that he recited well, but complained that he did not always stick to his author's text, even in the case of Shakspeare. "Aye," he complacently remarked, as to a passage in "Romeo and Juliet," "I think I have improved upon that." Pryse Gordon introduced him to the manager of the Bath Theatre, with the result that he played Romeo there as an amateur. His utter incompetency was soon put beyond doubt: an audience, well disposed towards him at the outset, went into fits of laughter; and in the fifth act, where he seized a crowbar to break into Juliet's tomb, the clamour became so great that the curtain had to be lowered for good. His Romeo dress—in which, by the way, he proudly strutted about at a subscription ball a few nights later—is described as consisting of a spangled cloak of sky blue silk, crimson pantaloons, and a feathered white hat, the whole being ornamented with a large collection of diamonds bequeathed to him by his father. Not long afterwards he repeated the performance at Cheltenham. In the second act, on saying, "Oh let us hence; I stand on sudden haste," he missed a diamond buckle from his knee, and, instead of making the necessary exit, looked anxiously about him for the article. "Come off, come off," the prompter cried to him from the wings. "I will as soon as I have found my buckle," the aspiring amateur replied.

For the space of five or six years Coates enjoyed in London the notoriety for which he sighed. In the first instance he started an equipage of a kind happily unknown in this or any other country. It was a curricule shaped like a scallop shell, painted a rich lake colour, elaborately ornamented within and without, and drawn by two white horses of "faultless figure and action." In the front was a life-size cock with out-spread wings—the owner's crest—and the appropriate motto, "Whilst I live I'll crow." Gorgeously arrayed, Coates flashed about the town in this peculiar vehicle, which could not but be regarded with disgust by the judicious few, with admiration by the injudicious many, and with open-mouthed astonishment by all. It was to be seen in Pall Mall, in Bond-street, and even in the staid and respectable City. Towards the close of 1811, perhaps thinking that he had done enough to advertise himself, Coates appeared at the Haymarket Theatre as Lothario, in Rowe's "Fair Penitent," "for the benefit of the widow Fairbur." Thanks in a large measure to the curricule, the house was crowded in every part. No farce, we are told, had ever been half so funny as the chief performance, and as a farce the audience treated it throughout. Again and again did Coates exhibit himself at the Haymarket and elsewhere, but always with the same result. His gaudy and bediamonded attire, his self-satisfied smirk, his affected air, his at times idiotic conduct on the stage, his awkward deportment, his complete inability to give due expression to what he said, may well have made silent attention impossible. In some cases he was pelted by the rougher sort of playgoers with oranges, carrots, and so forth. Ridicule in all its forms was poured upon him, but never with any visible effect upon his belief in himself. In the country, be it added, he occasionally met with more indulgence. The good people of Stratford-on-Avon applauded his efforts. Charles Mathews the elder tells a good story of the "philanthropic amateur of fashion" in this town. Dressed as Romeo, he went to Shakspeare's birthplace, called himself the "illustrator" of the poet, and, complaining that the house was not half good enough for such a man to have been born in, proposed to pull it down and erect something better at his own expense. Next, repairing to the church, he wrote on the Shakspeare monument, close to the pen in the bard's right hand,

"His name in ambient air still floats,
And is adored by Robert Coates."

Of his doings on the stage more than one graphic account has come down to us. Captain Gronow writes of one performance:

"His dress was outré in the extreme; whether Spanish, Italian, or English no one could say; it was like nothing ever worn. In a cloak of sky-blue silk, profusely spangled, red pantaloons, a vest of white muslin, surmounted by an enormously thick cravat, and a wig à la Charles II., capped by an opera hat, he presented one of the most grotesque spectacles yet witnessed on the stage. The whole of his garments were evidently too tight for him; and his movements appeared so incongruous that every time he raised his arm or moved a limb it was impossible to refrain from laughter. . . . In the midst of one of Juliet's impassioned exclamations, Romeo quietly took out his snuff box and offered a pinch to his nose. On this a wag in the gallery called out, 'I say, Romeo, give us a pinch,' when the impassioned lover, in the most affected manner, walked to the side boxes and offered the contents of his box, first to the gentlemen, and then, with great gallantry, to the ladies. . . . But how shall I describe his death? Out came a dirty silk handkerchief from his pocket, with which he carefully swept the ground; then his opera hat was carefully placed for a pillow, and down he laid himself. After various turnings about he seemed reconciled to the position; but the house vociferously bawled out, 'Die again, Romeo!' and, obedient to the command, he rose up and went through the ceremony again. Scarcely had he lain quietly down when the call was again heard, and the well-pleased amateur was evidently prepared to enact a third death; but Juliet now rose from her tomb and gracefully put an end to the ludicrous scene by advancing to the front of the stage, and aptly altering a quotation from Shakspeare:—

"Dying is such sweet sorrow
That he will die again to-morrow."

From another source we learn that he dragged Juliet from the tomb "like a sack of potatoes." One night his wiping of the stage with a pocket-handkerchief was hailed with a more than usually intense scream of derision. "You may laugh," he said to the audience, "but I do not intend to soil my nice new velvet dress upon these dirty boards."

Coates was not so prominent in English society as his opulence and unquestionable individuality might have led some to suppose. He tried hard to obtain a place in the Prince Regent's particular set, but invariably to no purpose. One morning, as a consequence of this well-known weakness on his part, he received a letter formally inviting him to a supper and ball at Carlton House. Ablaze with diamonds, he proudly went thither at the time specified, only to find that the document was a forgery. The perpetrator of the hoax was Theodore Hook, to whom a genuine invitation had been sent, and who had obtained the card and seal necessary to his mischievous intent. One of the amateur's friends was the wealthy Miss Tydney Long, afterwards Mrs. Wellesley Pole. He became rather badly enamoured of her, and, not being able to poetise himself, employed Euphemia Boswell to provide him with sonnets to the lady's eyebrows. In one of these effusions he is made to say:

"Enchanting fair one, save, oh, quickly save Your dying lover from an early grave."

and also :

"Give me your hand ; your cash let venals take."

It is distressing to find that the fair Euphemia, pressed for money, threatened him with an exposure of their secret unless he came to her assistance. At a later period he was frequently the guest of Sir Thomas Noon Talfourd, who is somewhat unnecessarily described in this volume as standing in the first rank of dramatists. His "Ion" and "Glencoe," excellent in their way, are scarcely sufficient to justify the distinction here awarded to him.

By the year 1817 Coates had vanished from the public stage, much to the relief of all real lovers of the drama. His life henceforward was that of a private gentleman about town. The troubles in the West Indies reduced him to temporary embarrassment, and he took refuge at Boulogne-sur-Mer. Here his self-love was gratified by a rather curious incident. Louis Philippe and his Queen came to the town at the moment when the relations between England and France were a little strained, and Coates, domiciled at the Hôtel du Nord, gave up to them the only suite of apartments in which they could be fittingly accommodated. Let a correspondent of the London Morning Chronicle tell us what followed :

"Last night, as the royal pair were ascending the stairs of the hotel, they encountered Mr. Coates, and the king very graciously thanked him for his politeness. Mr. Coates, an enthusiastic old gentleman, answered by shouting in French, 'Long live the king and queen; prosperity to France and England, and eternal peace between them.' . . . The king himself exclaimed in a loud voice, and, as if to enhance the compliment, in the English language, 'Prosperity to England and France; eternal peace between them; and while I live there shall be.' His Majesty afterwards translated his words into French, and they were heartily responded to by his suite."

That this little speech improved the aspect of public affairs there can be little doubt.

Messrs. Robinson's work, while full of readable matter, is marked by a certain simple-mindedness which at times becomes almost pathetic. Romeo Coates is to them a sort of hero. They speak of him with bated breath and whispering humbleness. His only fault in their eyes is his besetting fondness for finery in dress and surroundings. According to them, he had exceptional qualifications as a player, and was hooted and jeered at in the theatre only from a malice as stupid as it was unfounded. His ill-success in one instance they gravely ascribe to an unwillingness among a conservative audience to accept new readings. They are unable to perceive—for a sense of humour is apparently denied to them—that on their own showing he must have cut a supremely ludicrous figure on the stage, and they are equally blind to the fact that many of his acts were in the worst possible taste. The memoirs and journals of the time yield abundant testimony on the subject; but Messrs.

Robinson, whose candour and ingenuousness may be taken for granted, have not thought it necessary to push their researches very far.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

The Rauzat-us-safa; or, Garden of Purity. Containing the Histories of Prophets, Kings, and Khalifs. By Muhammed bin Khävendshâh bin Mahmûd, commonly called Mirkhond. Part I., Vol. I. Translated from the Original Persian by E. Rehatsek, and called by him "Sacred and Profane History according to the Moslem Belief." Edited by F. F. Arbuthnot. (Printed and published under the patronage of the Royal Asiatic Society, 22, Albemarle Street.)

AN attempt to revive the Oriental Translation Fund should command the hearty support of the entire community. The old Fund, which counted George Sale among its founders, worked well for fifty years, publishing translations from fifteen different languages, and then collapsed from apathy, neglect, and want of money. It is now proposed to reinstate it, and the volume before me is the first of the new series.

The connexion of England with her Eastern possessions is to-day much closer and more important than it was in 1828, when the original society was started. Englishmen have been reproached, perhaps not altogether unjustly, with their indifference in Oriental matters, and for neglecting to acquaint themselves with the literatures, religions, and modes of thought of those Eastern races, so many of whom are their fellow subjects. Surely more advantage can be derived from the perusal of able translations of the great books of the East than from renderings, frequently hurried and unsatisfactory, of ephemeral foreign novels now unfortunately so much in vogue. Our thanks then are due to Mr. E. Rehatsek for his excellent translation, and to Mr. F. F. Arbuthnot for his careful editing, of this first volume of Mirkhond's work.

The selection appears to be particularly happy. The Rauzat-us-safa, not hitherto translated, at any rate in its entirety, into any European language, contains the Moslem version of our Bible stories, beginning with the creation of Genii before Adam and ending with the death of Aaron. It therefore appeals equally to the Orientalist, to the theological student, and to the general reader.

"No work of this kind," observes Mr. Rehatsek in his Preface, "is more popular or more highly esteemed than the Rauzat-us-safa fi sîret-ulambiâ va ulmulûk va ulkhuifâ, generally called 'The Garden of Purity, containing the Histories of Prophets, Kings, and Khalifs.' The word 'Rauzat' means literally a garden; but usage has in all Mohammadan countries, as well as in India, assigned to it the signification of mausoleum surrounded by a garden or park. The word 'safa' is a plural, meaning pure, holy, and by extension illustrious. Hence the more correct translation of the above title would be as follows: 'Mausoleum of Illustrious Men, containing the Biographies of Prophets, Kings, and Khalifs.'"

The author, Mr. Arbuthnot informs us, was born in A.D. 1432, and belonged to a family of Sayyids settled for many generations in Bukhara. His father, Sayyid Burhan-ud-Din-Khävend Shâh, a man of great learning and piety, left that place for Balkh, where he died. Mirkhond himself spent most of his life in Hirat, writing his book, under the patronage of the Amir, A'li Shir, and died there, A.D. 1498.

Although, as already remarked, no European translation exists of the Rauzat-us-safa, extracts from it have been done into Latin, English, French, and German, ranging from 1662 to 1850. The volume before us is but an instalment, and a small one, of Mirkhond's voluminous work; but it is proposed to publish in six volumes the whole of the two first parts of his history, an enterprise of no mean importance.

The Garden of Purity then runs parallel with our own sacred history; and in it will be found the lives of Adam, Cain and Abel, Noah and his sons, Abraham, Isaac, Ishmael, Jacob, Joseph, Job, Moses, and Aaron, &c., told frequently at greater length and with fuller details than in our own Bible. It holds, in fact, with respect to the Old Testament somewhat the same position as the work of Josephus does to the New, although undoubtedly worthy of greater credit.

It would be an interesting task to compare the Hebrew and Persian versions of the patriarchal histories and to offer side by side extracts from the Bible and The Garden of Purity. This would, however, lead me too far, and I must be content to recommend warmly to my readers a careful study of the Rauzat-us-safa.

H. S. ASHBEE.

NEW NOVELS.

Peggy's Perversity. By Mrs. Conney. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Unless! By Randolph Haines. (Blackwoods.)

A Matrimonial Mixture. By C. J. Hyne. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

A Merciful Divorce. By F. D. Maude. (Trischler.)

The Mystic Serpent. By Saumarez de Havilland. (Iliffe.)

Won by Honour. By Vanda. (Digby & Long.)

Violin and Vendetta. By T. I. S. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

Deck-Chair Stories. By Richard Pryce. (Ward & Downey.)

MRS. CONNEY'S new novel is one of those stories which are written expressly for young women, and which, therefore, cannot apparently be condensed into less than three volumes. There is plenty of feminine irrepressibility in it; and Peggy the heroine is one of those attractive self-willed girls, who get into and out of endless scrapes, and who are therefore supposed, or at least said, to be typical. She is in love with Roger Middleton, and Roger Middleton is in love with her. But she is jealous of what seem to be Roger's scandalous attentions to Blanche Treherne, the wife of her half-brother, by whom he (Roger) had been declined with thanks when he was a youngster. As a matter of fact, Blanche is a dipsomaniac, and Middleton is helping her husband to prevent anything like an exposure of her failing in the society among which they move. Peggy discovers Roger's self-sacrifice on the altar of friendship, but is literally burnt in making the discovery. As a consequence, she has to content herself with "sweet tea-gowns" in place of "the square-cut evening frocks, in which, as Blanche had very truly said, she looked her best." As, however, Roger returns to her, Peggy Treherne is not inconsolable. Add to this plot country gossip of the clericalised sort, and the talk of a number of well-to-do people who are troubled not about "ideas" but about horse-racing, and Peggy's Perversity is given in a nutshell. Although in parts rather absurd and even tedious, it is very readable.

Unless! is a clever story by a writer who is rather too obviously a clever fellow. Up to a certain point—the point where Kate Clinton goes through the form of a marriage with Paul Hunter—it is admirable and even masterly. The railway accident which literally throws the two young people together, and the events which lead to the jilting of Stuart Ainslie by Kate, are all worked up with a skill which is decidedly superior to that displayed by the ordinary writer of fiction. But Kate's refusal to live with her husband is simply a senseless piece of eccentricity which spoils Unless! as a story. It contains, however, some excellent character-sketches. Kate's father, shrewd, sensible, and remorselessly resolute, is a very careful study, and it is impossible not to have some sympathy with Stuart Ainslie, in spite of his bad behaviour, especially towards the close of the story. He is a good specimen of the spoiled but not altogether bad young man.

As a study in odious social vulgarity, A Matrimonial Mixture is a considerable success, even though it is too long drawn out, and though its plot is in parts too farcical. There seems no good reason why the two sets of lovers in it should not "hit it off" in the first volume, instead of contracting absurd engagements to break them off in the third. Maurice Veyn is a contemptibly selfish creature; but it is hardly possible not to entertain a sort of sneaking respect for Olive Stubbes, who marries him to accomplish her social ambitions. She is almost as devoid of soul, and as willing to attain her ends by means of her physical charms, as M. Zola's Nana herself. But she is clever and resolute, and her efforts to stamp out her hereditary vulgarity, even to the extent of getting rid of her patois, are emphatically "worthy of a better cause." Dicky Devereux, who makes up to Miss Stuart for her disappointment, is rather too much of a goose in the first two volumes, and too much of a n. "u of sense and a gentleman in the third. One gets tired, too, of some of the minor characters in the story—especially the Jownzes—although the courtship of Mrs. Jownz and the Rev. Nathaniel Raby would make an excellent bit of farce on the stage. As a study in that vulgarity, which, as has already been said, A Matrimonial Mixture so mercilessly and so realistically depicts, Olive's brother Sam is perfection.

A Merciful Divorce is ostensibly, and even ostentatiously, a story of "society," and of what are termed its "sports, functions, and failings." As is the fashion with books of this kind, it represents this society in a very bad light. There is not a person in the book who has what Carlyle would term "the brain of a moderate-sized rabbit." Had, in particular, Arthur Gerrardine been possessed of such an organ, he would never have married so silly and selfish a creature as Fanny Banning; while even she, had she been so endowed, would not have deserted Arthur, to whom she is as much attached as she really could be to any one, for the boy Trelane who can only give her dresses. The quotations, chiefly from Byron, that are prefixed to the chapters are the best things in A Merciful Divorce, but then the chapters are not equal to the quotations.

Mr. Saumarez de Havilland, in the preface to his story, informs the constituency which he describes confidently as "my readers" that, "marvellous as some of the incidents may seem, they are founded on facts, and are the results of individual experiments." Had one not had Mr. de Havilland's very decided word for it, one would have come to the conclusion that The Mystic Serpent was a very elaborate and, on the whole, ingenious gibe at the modern craze—or "revelation"—of Theosophy. The Club of the Undiscovered Murderers is a conception which, had it not been a serious one, would have been worthy of Mr. Stevenson himself. As things are, the uninitiated in "the mysteries," at least if they happen to be familiar with sensational fiction, will find a certain amount of pleasure in glancing over Mr. de Havilland's choice assortment of murders. The final duel between Professor Sergius and the Rajah of Kolahbund is one of the best things of the kind that have taken place even in fiction. But as The Mystic Serpent is obviously written only for the faithful, ordinary criticism is out of place, if indeed it is not essentially an outrage.

There is really no excuse for the publication of Won by Honour. The plot, which is full of murders committed by an aristocratic scoundrel whom the veriest tiro in Scotland Yard would have no difficulty in capturing, is absolutely grotesque; the action moves between England and Spain in an altogether unaccountable fashion. There is indeed hardly anything human in it, except the "gentle suggestion" of "the wing of a chicken and some sparkling hock" to the Earl by his steward, and the answer of the Earl to the steward, "Ruthven, your shoes creak horribly; is there no cure for this distasteful discord?" The author has evidently intended to write an old-fashioned story in an old-fashioned style, but has totally failed. Nor, in spite of his well-meant efforts to portray a "noble character" in his hero Antone, can he be recommended to make another attempt at fiction.

Although it contains a very fair amount of mystery, crime, and punishment, Violin and Vendetta is not a good specimen of the better-class shilling dreadful. There is not a sufficient amount of action in the plot; and although there is a connexion between the violin and the vendetta, both of which figure in these pages, it is not sufficiently obvious, and the introduction of agencies of a supernatural character, which in any case is doubtful in a story of a realistic character, is not well managed. That part of the plot which leads up to the murder of the unfortunate violinist Gioacchino drags sadly; and indeed the only thing that redeems the book is the ingenuity of the methods employed to compass the deaths of the assassin and his instigators.

Mr. Richard Pryce is one of the cleverest of the younger novelists who, within the last five years or so, have made their way to the front; there are not above three or four of the veterans of fiction who can command the interest of their readers from the beginning to the end of a story more effectually than the author of The Quiet Mrs. Fleming. He sets himself in Deck-Chair Stories, the contents of which have already appeared in periodicals, to show that he is quite as much at home in slight as in serious sketches. Nor has he altogether failed. "Vale Place, Pont Street," which very nearly reaches the dimensions of a novelette, is as good, sprightly, and wholesome a story of a woman's triumph over herself, or at all events of the triumph of the spirit of the woman over the spirit of the adventuress, as has ever been published. The designing widow, who plans an escape out of pecuniary embarrassments by means of a good marriage, is a familiar character. But Mrs. Ferrars, who deliberately sets a trap for Cecil Farquhar, and baits it with such attractions as the back of a dinner-dress, which is "one of Corise's triumphs," is a novelty. For she falls into her own trap, being so infatuated with Cecil that she marries him when he has become apparently poor rather than accept a wealthy man who asks her to become his wife. Then her sister Mrs. Mud, who hates her married name almost as much as Lamb's "Mr. H." hated his, is a delightful sketch. In "Princess Poppaea," which is the second of Mr. Pryce's stories, he returns to something very like "the ugly Miss Wetherby" vein; the luckless adventuress who figures in it is undoubtedly well drawn. In some of his very short stories the author does not show to such advantage, because he seems desirous above all things of demonstrating that he is at home in every department of the novelist's art. This is especially true of the rather weak "The Venus of Paris." All things considered, however, this is perhaps the most readable, and in other respects the most remarkable, collection of short stories that has been published this year.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

CLASSICAL BOOKS.

The Seventh Book of the History of Thucydides. The Text newly revised and explained, with Introduction, Summaries, Maps, and Indexes, by H. A. Holden. (Cambridge: University Press.) The pleasant anticipations with which one takes up a new edition of a classical author, by Dr. Holden, are amply fulfilled in the case of his Seventh Book of Thucydides. Dr. Holden's admirable scholarship and his methodical way of working have enabled him to turn out as comprehensive and as lucid an edition of a single book as can be found in any language. The editor of Plutarch's lives of Nikias and of Timoleon was naturally drawn again toward Sicily; and he shows ability in setting forth the military aspects of Thucydides' story no less than in dealing with his involved constructions. There is a good preliminary account of Sicilian affairs, making use, as is fit, of Mr. E. A. Freeman's volumes, but strangely overlooking the brilliant work of Mr. Watkiss Lloyd. The notes usefully supply gaps in the story as told by Thucydides, e.g., on the question of where it was exactly that Gylippos first faced the Athenians (c. 3); but the account of the ἀντηρδεις in c. 36 wants a note as well as a translation to make it clear. As to the text, Dr. Holden has re-collected the Britannicus or Londinensis MS., and gives a list of readings peculiar to it. The disposition of so many scholars at the present day to make texts easier by smoothing out difficult readings is kept well under control; though, in c. 7 1, ἀέχει is omitted in reference to the suggestion of Holm and Classen. About the three maps we hardly know what to say. They are useful, no doubt, but enough care has not been spent on them. The name Achradine, which Dr. Holden employs, does not appear on the map at all. Syce (Συκῆ) is transmogrified into something which is neither the Greek nor the English word. Maps and letterpress waver between the forms Helorum and Helorus, Neeton and Neeton. In c. 54, τῆς ἕως τῆς πρὸς τῷ τελεχεῖ ἀπολήψεως, Thucydides can hardly have meant "That on the high ground of Epipolæ." The little action referred to (c. 51) had been fought just outside the Athenian lines; and we understand the Athenians to have abandoned Epipolæ before that, and so Dr. Holden says in a note on c. 43. It would probably be better, with Krüger, to bracket τῆς ἕως; and then the remaining words will apply to the Athenian camp on the low ground.

Thucydides, Book II. Edited by E. C. Marchant. (Macmillans.) One of the best series of school-books that we know of—Macmillan's "Classical Series"—has now been extended by an excellent edition of the second book of Thucydides. Mr. Marchant has written a most fresh and interesting introduction to it—for which we are deeply grateful to him—and his notes are solid and valuable. We are anxious to do Mr. Marchant the justice of saying this, because we have to add that he expresses a view from which we dissent toto coelo.

"It is just possible that Thucydides, at his death, left a certain number of blunders in his work, due to mere oversight, which he would have removed had he lived to read it through again. It is an editor's duty to remove them, if they exist, just as he would correct the misprints in a new edition of a modern book."

Now by blunders here we understand Mr. Marchant to mean cases of grammatical irregularity and harshness of phrase or construction; and we cannot concede that it is an editor's duty—or, indeed, compatible with his duty—to "remove" anything which he has fair reason to suppose came from the pen of his author. An old writer may be modernised, as he may be Bowdlerised; but in either case the resulting prose or verse is not what he wrote. We are glad to say that Mr. Marchant's bark is worse than his bite, and that he has taken few liberties with the text; but the mere statement of such principles calls for protest. Moreover, part of the use of reading Thucydides consists in his irregularities of expression. The consideration of why and how he fell into them is one way of learning to write good English and to be exact in thought. Densus et brevis et semper sibi instans, said Quintilian of him; and the first two epithets explain the third. His frequent harshness is not due to mere oversight, but to his struggling to express himself in an unwonted manner. After all, inaccuracy of speech is the rule, accuracy but an exception. Even if we only listen to our own countrywomen talking in the omnibus, we shall see that there is much more cause for wonder in the fact that Herodotus wrote straight than in the fact that Thucydides wrote crooked; and all wonder ought to disappear when we remember what Thucydides was and when he wrote. Here was a man who had much to say, and who did not wish to be long-winded, who was trying to write in a periodic style, and who had never had the opportunity of reading anything of the sort before. We might as well expect Pope's predecessors to have written verse with all the polish of Pope. To take to pieces and to explain the wonderful sentences of Thucydides is one thing, to reduce them to order is another: the first is a legitimate occupation, the second breaks all the laws of the game. If, when an editor has accomplished the former task, he has still energy left, he had better, instead of attempting the second, try to explain why the irregularities, which are scarcely more common in Thucydides than they are in Plato, are so harsh and jarring in the one writer, while in the other they occur so smoothly that they are not always discovered.

The Protagoras of Plato. Edited by B. D. Turner. (Percival.) This is, if we mistake not, the first English edition of the Protagoras which has been published since that of Mr. Wayte; and as the latter, good as it was, is now more than a quarter of a century old, it was quite time that stock should be taken of what has been done in the meanwhile (chiefly, though not entirely, by German scholars) for the study of Plato in general, and of the Protagoras in particular. If (of which we have great doubts) Plato is a suitable book for boys to read at all, this is certainly a good dialogue to begin on. Its brightness, the little touches of humour in it, the proud spirit going before a fall, and the unavailing struggles of the sophist to escape from his tormentor, relieve the reading of a dialogue which postulates a maturity and a familiarity with Greek ideas rather in excess of what young students usually bring with them. Mr. Turner has done what he can—and that is a great deal—to put even the youngest of his readers in a position to do justice to the work. He has produced an excellent school edition, abounding in help on every side, while he has judiciously refrained from giving overmuch aid in the way of translation. His study of the Greek of the dialogue is very minute and full—though, perhaps, the unusual attraction of οἷς from the nominative in 353 B (δοκεῖ ἔμμενεν οἷς ἔστι εδοξεν ἡμῖν) deserves a note. We observe that the English of the Introduction is occasionally rather loose, as on p. 6, where "he" is alternately Plato and his commentator, Herr Schöne; and we wonder how the reference on p. 134 to Cicero ("Ep. in Senecam post red.") ought really to read. But in the graver matters of the commentary, there is little to dissent from. The metaphor, in 329 A—B, is surely misunderstood in rendering it "Protagoras knows how to answer a question—unlike the ordinary orator, on whom a question has the same effect as a finger laid on a sounding vessel." A finger so laid produces silence; and what Socrates says is that Protagoras is not the man to go off with a long speech on being asked a question, as bronze vessels on being struck go on ringing till someone stops them; he can answer briefly and to the point. Mr. Turner has based his text on the recensus of Schanz, and he has provided an unusually full and well-classified index.

Loculi: a Junior Latin Reading-book. By F. D. Morice. (Percival.) Mr. Morice is well known for his Attic Stories—the best collection of the kind in Greek for boys. The success of that has encouraged him and Messrs. Percival to try an analogous Latin Reader. We should say, firstly, that in the nature of the case, Greek stories are better than Latin; and, secondly, that, in the matter of a Latin Reader, Mr. Morice has a more substantial number of rivals in the field. His book consists of 146 stories leading up to Latin authors; some ordinary notes; some sentences (pp. 99-122) for translations into Latin; and lastly, a vocabulary—the latter part being supplied by Mr. H. R. Heatley, and evidently compiled with care. The print is good, and the stories, though some of them are somewhat hackneyed, are fairly interesting. But a book of this kind needs to be specially attractive, and this quality is absent. We think, too, that there are some minor flaws to be amended: e.g., on p. 29, §75, it is a pity to teach boys to use utrum without an alternative; and, in the same section, balneas requires a note to explain why it is not neuter, as in the vocabulary. Can stories 86 and 146 be called "really Latin" (Pref. p. v.)? and why, in 36, are sensim and beluæ put at the ends of their respective sentences? and should not redibo (ib. l. 9) be rediero? and, in the first sentence of 37, is there any emphasis to justify the place of diligentius?

Aristote: la République Athénienne. Traduite en français pour la première fois par Th. Reinach. (Paris: Hachette.) This little pamphlet is something more than a mere translation. It contains a bold and rather Procrustean attempt at reconstituting the text.

"Mots altérés, phrases transposées, bévues et lapsus n'y sont pas rares; souvent des gloses explicatives ont expulsés les termes originaux ou s'y sont installées à côté d'eux; enfin, chose plus grave, des morceaux tout entiers, empruntés sans doute à un ouvrage antérieur sur le même sujet, mais de mince autorité, ont été insérés dans le texte à leur place chronologique, sans égard pour les contradictions criantes qui en résultent. Ces interpolations, qui constituent de véritables fraudes historiques, ont été reléguées au bas des pages de notre traduction."

By this easy method disappears, as M. Reinach says, the chief reason against ascribing the work to the paternity of Aristotle. But, like the modern doctrine of "adscripts," it would leave us something very unlike our traditional texts. In pursuance of it, M. Reinach declares the words τῆς πρὸ Δράκοντος in c. 3 to be interpolated; all c. 4 to be interpolated, except the sentence about Drakon and Aristaiichmos, which belongs to c. 1; καὶ νόμους ἔθηκε in c. 6 to be out of place; καθάπερ δήρητο καὶ πρότερον in c. 7 to be interpolated; and so on, till the new treatise is gradually robbed of most things which made it striking. The translation is well done; and M. Reinach wisely prefixes to it a rendering of the five fragments (taken from Rose's collection) which seem to belong to the chapters lost at the beginning of the British Museum papyrus. At the end of c. 20 he may perhaps be right in making τῶν Ἀλκμεονιδῶν a partitive genitive with Κηδῶν (cf. c. 17, Ἀρχίως τῶν Κυψελιδῶν), not governed by πρότερον, as Mr. Kenyon's recently published translation takes it. Mr. Poste evades the question.

Griechische Lyriker in Auswahl für den Schulgebrauch. Herausgegeben von Alfred Biese. (Leipzig: Freytag; London: Williams & Norgate.) There is no doubt that our school education unduly neglects Greek lyric poetry. Choruses are really too hard, as a rule, to serve as a good introduction; the elegiacs ascribed to Tyrtæus, and many of the earlier poems of the Anthologia, are far better fitted for the purpose. We should criticise Herr Biese's collection as combining the straightforward with the really difficult too freely: a Pythian Ode (pp. 47-52) is too hard for the purpose. But, in a little and clearly-printed book of 90 pages, Herr Biese has put together a considerable number of the gems of Greek poetry. In our judgment his book would form a pleasant interlude in the somewhat monotonous programme of English classical school books. On page 80, line 3, should not μῆρος be μῆρον?

NOTES AND NEWS.

IT is announced that Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff and Mr. Whitley Stokes have undertaken to write a memoir of the late Sir Henry Maine.

MRS. GRIMWOOD'S book is to be published immediately by Messrs. Richard Bentley & Son, in one volume, with illustrations. It will be entitled My Three Years in Manipur, and Escape from the Recent Mutiny.

MR. J. S. ELLIS'S Shelley Concordance is in type as far as SHE, and will be ready early in the poet's centenary year, 1892.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. will publish in December Summer Rambles round Rugby, by Mr. Alfred Rimmer. This volume, though dealing primarily with Rugby itself, will contain an account of the numerous places in the neighbourhood possessing historical or antiquarian interest, such as Coventry, Ashby, St. Legers, Coombe Abbey, Oakham, Stamford, Dunchurch, Kenilworth, and Leamington. The chapter on Rugby School has been contributed by the Rev. W. H. Payne Smith. The book will be illustrated with seventy-five reproductions of original drawings by the author, and will be printed on specially-made paper by Messrs. T. and A. Constable, of Edinburgh.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. have in preparation a series entitled "Periods of European History," written for the most part by the younger generation of historical students at Oxford, under the general editorship of Mr. Arthur Hassall. The object of this series is to present in separate volumes a continuous account of the general development of European history, and to deal fully and carefully with the more prominent events in each century. The volumes will embody the results of the latest investigations, and will contain references to and notes upon original and other sources of information. The following volumes have already been arranged for:—Period (1) 476-987, by Mr. C. W. C. Oman; (2) 987-1272, by Prof. T. F. Tout; (3) 1272-1494, by Mr. R. Lodge; (4) 1494-1610, by Mr. E. A. Armstrong; (5) 1610-1715, by Mr. H. O. Wakeman; (6) 1715-1789, by Mr. A. Hassall; (7) 1789-1815, by Mr. H. Morse Stephens.

THE first three volumes of Cassell's "International Series" are now nearly ready for publication, and will be issued in a few days. They consist of The Story of Francis Cluddle, by Mr. Stanley J. Weyman; The Faith Doctor, by Dr. Edward Egglestone; and Dr. Dumany's Wife, by Maurus Jókai. Each of these books will contain matter equal to the usual contents of a three-volume novel, and will be issued at 7s. 6d. net.

MR. JOSEPH HATTON'S Princess Mazaroff, which follows in the wake of the ninth edition of By Order of the Czar, will be published simultaneously in New York and London on November 10. The London publishers are Messrs. Hutchinson.

The Big Bow Mystery, the sensational story by Mr. J. Zangwill, with which the Star made a new departure in August, will be published in a few days in volume form by Messrs. Henry & Co.

MESSRS. EASON & SON, of Dublin, will shortly publish a volume of Historical and Legendary Poems, by Mr. T. D. Sullivan, entitled Blanaid. They are founded on Gaelic tales of the pre-Christian period, in which Cuchullin and his "Red Branch Knights" are the leading characters.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. announce a new series, to be called the "Pocket Library of English Literature," edited by Mr. George Saintsbury. The first volume will consist of selections (in almost every case of considerable length) from Mrs. Radcliffe's four chief novels—A Sicilian Romance, The Romance of the Forest, The Mysteries of Udolpho, and The Italian; from Mat. Lewis's Monk, and from Maturin's Melmoth. It will thus give a representation of the most striking examples of those tales of terror or mystery which were so popular at the end of the last century and the beginning of this, but which have now, with one or two exceptions not included in the book, almost entirely fallen out of general reading. The next five volumes will be: (2) an anthology of political verse from Skelton to the present day; (3) the most remarkable passages of Defoe's minor novels; (4) representative political pamphlets by Halifax, Defoe, Swift, Burke, Sydney Smith, Cobbett, and Sir Walter Scott; (5) a collection of seventeenth-century lyrics; and (6) one volume of characteristic Elizabethan or Jacobean pamphlets or tracts by Lodge, Greene, Breton, Harvey, Nash, Martin Marprelate, and Dekker.

WE may add that Messrs. Richard Bentley & Son also have in the press a reprint of Melmoth, in three volumes, to which will be prefixed a memoir of the author.

MESSRS. LUZAC & Co. will publish shortly a revised and enlarged edition of Sir M. Monier-Williams's Indian Wisdom.

THE Early English Text Society is reprinting Dr. Furnivall's edition of the Hymns to the Virgin and Christ, the Parliament of Devils, &c., from the Lambeth MS., with which the text has been collated afresh.

THE first number of the Educational Review—with which Education is incorporated—will appear on November 2. It will deal with education in all its branches, university, secondary, and elementary. The articles will, where possible, be illustrated. There will also be a chronicle of the educational events of the month, recorded by Mr. Reginald W. Macan for Oxford, Mr. Oscar Browning for Cambridge, and the general editor; together with notices of new books, &c. Among those who have promised to contribute to the first number are:—Mr. Walter Wren, Mr. J. R. Diggle, Prof. Skeat, and Mr. M. E. Sadler.

SIR GEORGE DOUGLAS is to contribute to the new volume of the Scots Magazine a series of "Border Tales." The first, entitled "The Nabob: a Story of a Scotch Marriage," appears in the November number, which will also contain an article on "Carlyle and Kirkcaldy."

SOME little while ago it was announced in the ACADEMY that Mr. Henry Littlehales had undertaken to reproduce in facsimile the Durham Book of Life. We now regret to hear that, after going so far as to have every page of the MS. photographed, he has been compelled to abandon the work, for the following reasons:

"The binding does not in all cases permit the whole page to be photographed; the ink discolouring the vellum and showing through from the other side of each of the earlier leaves prevents the writing from standing out clearly in the reproduction, though the distinction between penmanship and discolouration is in the original clearly discernible; the leaves, in many places drawn and puckered, appear in the reproduction with every irregularity represented in black, the black mingling with and obscuring the writing; the names at times fail to appear in the reproduction, due probably in a measure to the presence of gilding."

MR. GLADSTONE has addressed a letter to Mr. Hall Caine, containing the following passage: "I congratulate you upon The Scapegoat as a work of art, and especially upon the noble and spiritually-drawn character of Israel."

MESSRS. LUZAC & Co. have printed a Catalogue of much interest to Anglo-Indians, containing the chief part of the library of the late Sir Henry Yule, which they offer for sale.

MESSRS. SOTHEYBY will be engaged in selling throughout next week the library of Mr. John Warwick, which is chiefly notable for containing a number of choice illustrated volumes, such as Young's Night Thoughts with the designs of Blake.

A SERVICE in commemoration of the founders and benefactors of Westminster School will be held in the Abbey, on Tuesday, November 17, at 8.30 p.m. The service will be in Latin, with the special psalms and the Te Deum set to Gregorian music. After the service the head master and the masters will hold a reception in the great schoolroom.

MM. A. CARRIÈRE and S. Berger have reprinted, from the Revue de Théologie et de Philosophie, an article upon the third or apocryphal Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians (Paris: Fischbacher). This epistle, together with the letter from the Corinthians to St. Paul to which it is an answer, has hitherto been known only in an Armenian version, which has recently been discussed by Prof. Vetter of Tübingen, and Prof. Zahn of Leipzig. The general opinion has been that it comes from a Syriac original. But M. Berger was fortunate enough to discover last October, while studying in the Ambrosian library at Milan, a Latin version of both letters, in a Latin Bible of the tenth century. This Latin version is here printed, based upon a careful collation of the MS., which is not very legible, and also somewhat mutilated. The importance of the discovery arises from the fact that this Latin version is evidently derived from a Greek original, which profoundly alters the conditions of the problem.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

CANON PAGET has been appointed by the Crown to the Deanery of Christ Church, when that office shall become vacant after Christmas by the resignation of Dr. Liddell.

THE proposal to appoint a syndicate at Cambridge to consider the question of "compulsory Greek" was rejected on Thursday of this week by a majority of 525 to 185 votes.

MR. PERCY GARDNER, Lincoln professor of archaeology at Oxford, has written a book entitled New Chapters in Greek History: Historical Results of Recent Excavations in Greece and Asia Minor. It will be published by Mr. John Murray, with illustrations.

THE library syndicate at Cambridge have submitted a report to the senate, recommending that a charge of one guinea a year be made for the admission to the library of regular readers who are not members of the university. It appears that the number of such readers has increased during the past twenty years from about 40 to 180; and that, as a consequence, members of the senate frequently complain that they are unable to find a seat. This charge is not intended to apply to students from a distance who desire specially to examine MSS. or other rare books.

MRS. WOODS, the wife of the president of Trinity, will deliver a lecture upon "Shelley," on Friday next, in aid of the funds of the Oxford Association for the Education of Women.

At the annual meeting of the Russell Club, to be held at Oxford on Monday next, Mr. G. Bernard Shaw, of the Fabian Society, will give an address upon "Some Alternatives to Social Democracy."

MR. BUCHAN, university lecturer in geography at Cambridge, is delivering a course this term upon "Physical and Chemical Geography, with special reference to Land Surfaces and their Development under Climatic and other Agencies."

MR. ARMITAGE is delivering a course of lectures at Oxford, at the Taylor Institution, upon "Seventeenth-Century French Literature."

ACCORDING to the returns of the Registry, the total number of matriculations at Cambridge this term is 858, showing a decrease of eleven when compared with last year, and of no less than ninety when compared with 1889. The decrease seems to be most marked at St. John's, Gonville and Caius, Pembroke, and Trinity Hall; while the increase is largest at Selwyn Hostel, Jesus, Queens, and Sidney Sussex.

THE Oxford Magazine for this week prints the list of non-collegiate freshmen, who number seventy, as compared with thirty-nine at Cambridge. But the most interesting feature about the list is the former places of education. No less than eight come from the United States, two from Melbourne, two from India, one from Russia, two from the Blind College, Powyke, and about ten from various universities or provincial university colleges in Great Britain.

PROF. ALTHAUS commenced on Wednesday of this week, at 8.30 p.m., at University College, Gower-street, a course of five lectures on "Modern German Literature." The public are admitted without payment or ticket. The lectures, we may add, are delivered in German.

A COMMITTEE of the council of the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, are issuing an appeal to friends of higher education generally to assist in providing a permanent hall of residence for their women students. In 1887 a hall was established to meet their needs, and Miss E. A. Carpenter was appointed lady principal, residence being made compulsory. A large lodging-house on the promenade was hired, when 11 women students entered. Their number has now increased to 40, residing in two hired houses. The women's side, at first an experiment, is now an integral and very successful part of the college, and the erection of a permanent hall of residence has become absolutely necessary if the women are to work under the most favourable conditions. A suitable freehold site is available on the sea-front adjoining the college, and between £6000 and £7000 will be required to purchase the ground and erect the building.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE LANGUAGE OF THE SEA.

WHERE'ER, beneath the scudding clouds,
The good ship braves the blast
That, roaring through the quivering shrouds,
Flies furiously and fast—
Where Stars and Stripes and Union Jack,
To every sea-gull known,
Carrer along the ocean's track,
Our English holds its own.
Our English tongue to every shore
Flies onward, safe and free;
It creeps not on from door to door,
Its highway is the sea!

Oh! glorious days of old renown
When England's ensign flew,
Nail'd to the mast, till mast fell down
Amid the dauntless crew—
When Rodney, Howe, and Nelson's name
Made England's glory great,
Till every English heart became Invincible as fate.
God rest the souls of them that gave
Our ships a passage free,
Till English, borne by wind and wave,
Was known in every sea!
Our ships of oak are iron now,
But still our hearts are warm;
Our Viking courage ne'er shall bow
In battle or in storm.
Let England's love of freedom teach
The tongue that freemen know,
Till every land shall learn the speech
That sets our hearts aglow.
Long may our Shakspeare's noble strain
Float widely, safe and free;
And long may England's speech remain
THE LANGUAGE OF THE SEA!

WALTER W. SKEAT.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE current number of Mind, which completes the sixteenth year of its existence, is noticeable for the retiring editor's "Valedictory." Prof. Croom Robertson has reason to be proud of the position which by dint of years of patient effort he has secured for the journal. There is a good deal to show that psychology is attracting a wider class of students in this country; and the value to such of a journal like Mind, which keeps its eye on all the varied activities of the psychological field, is incalculable. The amount of experimental work now carried on in Germany and elsewhere, the reports of which are often difficult of access, makes it absolutely necessary to the student to consult a periodic summary of results. All diligent students of the science have found in Mind constant aid. It is to be hoped that the same will apply to the journal under its future management. The list of supporters looks, perhaps, just a little too academic, in a country where psychology has to a considerable extent been the work of laymen; but if the selection of names means that the two older universities are going to make the science a serious pursuit everyone interested in its success will be thankful. A word or two must suffice on the contents of the present number. Mr. G. F. Stout, the new editor, follows up his studies on the cognition of reality by an essay on "Belief." The chief point of the paper seems to be that reality is always cognised through opposition to our activity, bodily or mental. Ingenious as it is, the article does not do justice to many sides of its subject. Indeed, it is less a psychological account of the characteristics and genesis of belief than an analysis of the idea of reality. Mr. H. R. Marshall continues his discussion on "The Physical Basis of Pleasure and Pain." He argues skillfully that pleasure and pain are connected with excess and defect of reaction above or below stimulus. Some of the conclusions drawn are striking; yet the whole study, able as it undoubtedly is, leaves the impression left by its predecessors, that the attempt to bring all the phenomena of pleasure and pain under a single quantitative principle has to resort to a humiliating amount of forcing. Mr. J. Donovan makes the timely suggestion that instead of deriving music from speech, with Mr. Spencer, we ought rather to trace back language to a primitive musical utterance. According to the essayist, this may be done by supposing the first music to have been social and festal, the expression of "communal interests," the outcome of play excitement, and the concomitant of dance movements, more or less mimetic of common actions completed or to be done. In this way tones might, he supposes, come to be connected with particular actions, and so pass into the verbal phase, by embodying those concepts of action which, according to recent philological research are, at the basis of known languages. The idea is interesting, but evidently very incomplete. Thus, no attempt is made to show how mere tonal differences, i.e., differences in the pitch of the primitive song-elements, would be transformed into articulate differences. Mr. Spencer clearly has an advantage here. He can discover a rudiment of musical character in speech, but Mr. Donovan fails to discover, in his prelingual song-music, the rudiment of articulate differentiation.

THE October number of the Imperial and Asiatic Quarterly Review is almost entirely devoted to the recent Oriental Congress. It forms a bulky volume of more than 350 pages, together with some half-dozen illustrations. First, we have a detailed report of the proceedings of the Congress from day to day, with a summary of the several papers that were read. Then follow some of the papers printed at length, among which we may specially mention that by Mr. W. M. Flinders Petrie upon "Epigraphy in Egyptian Research." Dr. Bellew again repeats his extraordinary attempt to discover Greek names among the tribes of Afghanistan: Prof. Darmesteter, it may be remembered, is doubtful even about the identity of the Πάρτες of Herodotus and the modern Pakhtun. In a paper of somewhat similar character, the Rev. Dr. J. Edkins endeavours to refer many Indo-European words to Tartar roots. Sir M. Monier-Williams states his views on the transliteration of Oriental languages; and there are two communications upon the encouragement of Oriental research at English and Scotch universities. We may also mention that Sir J. Drummond Hay adds the weight of his authority to Mr. Haliburton's assertion that dwarf-races exist in Morocco. There are also a few articles not directly connected with the Congress. The case of Col. Grambechevsky's explorations in the Pamir is presented from his own point of view; Sir E. N. C. Braddon writes about the early history of Tasmania; and a story of the late Sir Walter Elliot forcibly recalls the recent tragedy at Manipur.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CARO, Madame E. Amour de jeune Fille. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
CHILD, Théodore. Les Républiques Hispano-Américaines. Paris: Librairie Illustrée. 20 fr.
FROBEL, J. E. Lebenslauf. 2. Bd. Stuttgart: Cotta. 12 M.
GENRLIN, P. Unsere höffischen Epen u. ihre Quellen. Innsbruck: Rauch. 1 M. 50 Pf.
MANITIUS, M. Geschichte der christlich-lateinischen Poesie bis zur Mitte d. 8. Jahrh. Stuttgart: Cotta. 12 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BASSERMANN, H. Geschichte d. evangel. Gottesdienstordnung in badischen Landen. Stuttgart: Cotta. 4 M.
KUNTZE, J. Die Gotteslehre d. Irenaeus. Leipzig: Dörfling. 1 M. 20 Pf.
SPITTA, F. Die Apostelgeschichte, ihre Quellen u. deren geschichtlicher Wert. Halle: Waisenauss. 8 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BIRRMANN, J. Tractatus fletus. Stuttgart: Enke. 9 M.
BRÖCKING, W. Die französische Politik Papst Leos IX. Stuttgart: Göschen. 2 M. 50 Pf.
CURTIUS, E. Die Stadtgeschichte v. Athen. Mit e. Uebersicht der Schriftquellen zur Topographie v. Athen v. A. Milchhoefer. Berlin: Weidmann. 16 M.
HEYD, W. v. Die historischen Handschriften der k. öffentl. Bibliothek zu Stuttgart, beschrieben. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 25 M.
JEAN, A. Les Evêques et les Archevêques de France 1682—1801. Paris: Picard. 12 fr.
OERTMANN, P. Die Volkswirtschaftslehre d. Corpus juris civilis. Berlin: Prager. 4 M.
TAIGR, G. Documents historiques relatifs à la Principauté de Monaco. T. III. (1540—1641). Paris: Picard. 25 fr.
THORSCH, O. Materialien zu e. Geschichte der österreichischen Stats schulden vor d. 18. Jahrh. Berlin: Prager. 3 M.

WERNER, M. Die römische Agrargeschichte in ihrer Bedeutung f. das Staats- u. Privatrecht. Stuttgart: Enke. 8 M.
WLASSAK, M. Römische Proceßgesetze. 2. Abthg. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 9 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

HEGLER, A. Die Psychologie in Kants Ethik. Freiburg-i.-B.: Mohr. 8 M.
SCHMIDT, F. Studien zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der Pulmonaten. I. Dorpat: Karow. 2 M. 40 Pf.
SEMPER, C. Reisen im Archipel der Philippinen. 2. Thl. 5. Bd. 6. Lfg. Wiesbaden: Kreidel. 24 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

BAAR, J. De Bacchidibus Plantina questiones. Münster: Theissing. 1 M.
BORINSKI, K. Grundzüge d. Systems der artikulierten Phonetik zur Revision der Prinzipien der Sprachwissenschaft. Stuttgart: Göschen. 1 M. 50 Pf.
EICKÉ, Th. Zur neu-rom. Literaturgeschichte der Rolandage in Deutschland u. Frankreich. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
GEORGI, H. Die antike Aesthetik, aus den Scholien u. anderen Quellen hergestellt. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 10 M.
KÜHNÉ, K. Selbstbiographie d. Q. Horatius Flaccus. Einsiedeln: Benziger. 2 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON HERO[N]DAS.

British Museum: Oct. 27, 1891.

In answer to Mr. W. R. Hardie's appeal in the ACADEMY for October 17, I send some additional and corrected readings of the papyrus. It will easily be understood that in the more mutilated or defaced portions of the MS. conjecture must precede decipherment, and it is possible that this list may be extended hereafter. Meanwhile, I believe it represents all the cases in which the MS. can be stated to give decisive testimony in favour of conjectures which have already been made, either in the ACADEMY or elsewhere. With conjectures which involve a departure from the MS. text I have here nothing to do:

- I. 3. Punctuate after θυρη and συ.
4. Punctuate after προσελθιν.
6. The ε of αγγελου is dotted.
25. The ascript is κυσης, altered to κυλικος, the latter five letters being written above the last three of κυσης.
35. The letter before ναι is η, and the letter before that may be θ.
46. η ημεων.
48. συνεγγυος.
50. A χ is written over the κ of Ματακνης.
57. τα σπλαγχν ερωτι.
80. χηκτημυρους τρεις.
II. 3. την νηυν (see note).
13. τ[ου η]λιου.
17. λιμον probably.
73. φιλι. . .
III. 19. The letters above the line may be ελι, so that the MS. has δαι corrected to δε λι.
97. αι ποτιναι.
IV. 36. Probably θεβη[κεν].
47. Apparently δι σ εγκηται.
51. The σ before κνηση is dotted.
V. 30. ταποψηστρον is possible. It is not certain that there is a letter between εμον and η.
69. τατι, and there is room for a small letter, such as σ, before it, but it is not necessary to supply anything.
VI. 70. αυται γαρ εσμεν.
VII. 8. End ν(?) κλλιη.
9. End ψ. The number of letters missing in these two lines is not quite certain.
38. τα εργα της τεχνης.
40. ιαν . . . εων.
41. ημεθ(?)ον οτ ημεων.
42. . . . α(?)ι προσ[ος].
46. υπη Zeus probably.
50. τ[ο]ν ην υπ ημιν ανδανηι.
52. Possibly [α]εγει (or λεγεις) ψευδεα.
54. νηθεισας.
64. ηρας (consequently delete note).
69. τωτ οικει, probably, and possibly ου σε ρηιδιος.
72. εφ ης αλωπηξ νοστινη πεποιηκεν.
109. εσ θεου αναπηται probably; αναστηναι is not impossible.
129. θαλπουσ ανευ δει νδον φρονουντα (see note).

Most of these readings were in the first instance conjecturally proposed, either in print or privately, by various scholars, notably Dr. Jackson, Mr.

W. G. Headlam, Profs. Diels and Bücheler. A few were independently extracted from the MS., and in one or two cases a partially right suggestion led the way to a correct decipherment. Passages in which a conjecture, though practically certain, cannot be verified from the MS. are not included in the list: nor are those in which only a redistribution of the letters is required (e.g., II. 29, 98; III. 67).

It may be mentioned that a facsimile of the whole MS. is in course of preparation, which will enable scholars at once to see in what passages doubt as to the MS. reading is admissible. As a general rule, it may be taken that there is not much doubt as to the MS. readings in columns 8-31, except where it is otherwise indicated in the text or stated in the notes. The defects in the earlier columns are mostly caused by rubbing, which often leaves some slight traces of letters, in the later columns chiefly by worm-holes, which destroy the writing entirely.

F. G. KENYON.

The University, Durham: Oct. 8, 1891.

II. 44-5. K.

μη προς τε κυσος φησι χω ταπης ημιν του του λογου δη τωτο ληγης κυρησι.

R. alters 44 into μη προς τ' ακυρον φη, τι χω θαλγης ημιν, changes ληγης into ληγη, and translates: "For fear both that he (the clerk) say something irrelevant, and Thales get this much of my speech to the good." Would it not be possible to adhere more closely to the MS? We might take the words προς τε κυσος φησι χω ταπης ημιν as a parenthetical remark, meaning "in strict confidence," "between ourselves," and expressed in terms appropriate to Battaros's calling. Read προς γε κυσον κ.τ.λ. Retain ληγης in the next line: "For fear this portion of my speech should come in for looting," i.e., be stolen from me.

III. 8. In support of the rendering of κου μεν η θηρη κειται, suggested in my last letter, cf. the proverb οδ πατ' ισχεν η θυρα.

III. 74-76 K.:

αλλ is ποιητος Κοτταλε ωστε και περνας ουδεις σ επαυσειεν ονδ οκως χωρης οι μυσ ομοιως τον σιδηρον τραγουσι.

R. puts a full stop after χωρης at the end of 75, and reads χωρης. Apparently he feels no uncertainty about the meaning of the last line (for he puts accents on all the words), and even thinks it too obvious to require explanation, for he gives no note. As to 75 he says: "If the reading is sound, the last words must mean 'not even to get rid of you.'" But this would be a very weak repetition of και περιεσ. Remove the full stop and read οδ' δκου χωρης οι μυσ ομοιως τον σιδηρον τραγουσι.

No one could say a good word for Cottalus, even if trying to sell him, and certainly no one—οδδ does not necessarily mean "not even"—would say a good word for him in the land where mice nibble iron. This is apparently some proverbial or imaginary land of No-where, about which all that can be said is that Cottalus, according to Lampriscus, would fare badly there.

VI. 16. K.:

φθρεσθε νω βυστρα ω[τα] μουνον και γλασσα.

Read perhaps:

φθειρ' εσσι δρηπειρ' οτα μουνον και γλασσα.

VI. 44-46. K.:

νυν ορωρηκας Μητρον το πρωτον η τι ταβρα σοι ταυτα ευευχομαι.

R. reads in 45, η εστιν αβρα σοι ταυτα; but does not say how he translates the words. As T is often exchanged for F and β for υ (cf. λαβρα for λαυρα) we might read:

η τι γαυροις ει ταυτα

επειχομαι;

VI. 47 and 48. K.:

μα η μοι εν ευχη

Κερδων ερραψε.

R. reads μα μη μοι ενχηει, and translates "do not deafen me with your questions." But might not μοι εν ευχη ερραψε mean "he made it to my order"? The other βαυβων was made to order, cf. 92.

VI. 81. K.:

ηλθεν γαρ η Βιτατος εν μεσοι δουλη.

Δουλη is nonsense. Cf. 25, η Βιτατος Ευβουλη and read εν μεσ' Ευβουλη. The original reading was ENME ETBOTAH. First, MECET was "corrected" into MECOI, and then BOTAH was inevitably altered into ΔOTAH. Δουλη of course involves a misunderstanding of the action of the mime. From 29 the reader of the mime learns that Eubule borrowed the βαυβων from Coritto, before Coritto had even tried it on herself; and now, from 81, the reader learns that Eubule came in just when Cerdon had brought the βαυβων—which explains how it was that Eubule managed to carry it off. That Eubule carried it off herself and did not send a slave girl for it is obvious from 30: η δ' ασπερ ευρημ' αρπασασα δωρεται. In this connexion I may point out that R.'s reading in 32 and 33, χητηρον τιν' ανθ' ημίων | φιλην αδρειτω ες τελλα Νοσσις (K. Νοσσιδ[ι]), cannot be right. Nossis cannot be the subject of αδρειτω. In the first place, there is nothing in the mime that indicates that Nossis was a friend of Coritto's. On the contrary, probably Coritto had a particular dislike for her. In the next place Nossis had done nothing to deceive Coritto or to incur her displeasure. It was Eubule who pounced upon the βαυβων and carried it off, Eubule who lent it τρησι μη δει, and Eubule whose friendship Coritto in consequence now renounces—not Nossis.

VI. 83. K.:

αυτη γαρ ημειων ημερην τε και νυκτα τριβουσα τον ονον σκωρινη πεποιηκεν οκως τον αυτης μη τετραβολο[ν] κοψηι.

These lines explain how it was that Eubule happened to call just when Cerdon was delivering his goods. But what do they mean? I make the following suggestion for what it is worth. One of the meanings of ονος is "spindle" (Hes. υνος · εφ' ου την κροακην νηθουσι); and, if Homer (Od. ix. 333) can use τριβειν of Odysseus twirling the stake round in the eye of the Cyclops, Hero[n]das might use it of a woman twirling a spindle. In the next place, Eubule by twirling the spindle made something (σκωρινη πεποιηκεν); and, as she could only have made yarn of some kind or other, and σκωρια means nothing but slag, it seems necessary to change σκωρινη into στήμονας, or perhaps στήμιον (δ ημεις κατόστημον η πολύστημον, Hes.). The passage will, therefore, mean: "How it was that Eubule came in just when Cerdon was showing me the βαυβων was that she has been making yarn night and day with my spindle for fear of spoiling her own." Spindles were made of different materials—wood, bone (the one in the Mainz museum is of bone), and even of metal (Sid. Apoll. xxii. 197, "fusi mollitum nesse metallum"). They may, therefore, have been of different strengths for different work—which might account for Eubule's wanting to use Coritto's.

F. B. JEVONS.

P.S.—I have just found on p. 620 of a collection of proverbs (entitled simply Αδαια, folio, date 1629) the following extract from "Gilberti Cognati Nozarenii Spylloge": "Ubi mures ferrum rodunt. Hoc dicitur quum significamus illic oportere esse homines praestantiores ubi mures ferrum rodunt." That settles the reading in III. 75.

Balliol College, Oxford: Oct. 19, 1891.

My notes on Herondas, published in the ACADEMY of October 17, were written in a remote part of Argyllshire, without books to consult or opportunity of revising the proof. With the indulgence of the editor, I wish to add a few further remarks and corrections.

I. 3. I took the δε in εσωδε to be the termination seen in οικαδε, Μεγαρδε, &c. I know no other instance of its being affixed to an adverb; but εσω-δε! seems natural and intelligible.

I. 17-18. [θαμιζε?] και μη του χρόνου καταψευδου · [χρόνος φιλει?] γαρ, Γύλλι, χητηρους δυχχειν.

Time is hard upon other people, too, Mētrichē says, thinking of prolonged separation from a lover. Gullis sees in this a reflection upon her own advanced age, and replies σίλλαυε ταύτα κ.τ.λ. ἐπιστάται γὰρ would serve equally well.

I. 34. Here, and on l. 55, R.'s reconstruction seems to me admirable. O si sic omnia! But is it necessary to depart from the letters of the MS. at all in the latter passage? ἀδικτος εἰς Κυθρία ἢν σφρηγίς—untouched in regard to affairs of the heart or the mysteries of Cythera.

1. 53 f. I still think it likely that Pisu (Olympia) was mentioned here, perhaps not in l. 56, but at all events in l. 53. The words ἐπ' Ἰσον are not quite natural in themselves or necessary in their context.

I. 74. Mr. Hicks suggests μητρῴης in the Classical Review. Why not μητρῴης? "a story which befits one who stepmother's them." I had thought of μυσταίς as near the letters; but this plain-speaking is not consistent with Métrich's general treatment of her visitor.

II. 63 ὄσσα λή' μ' πῖσση | μύς. Compare Demosthenes, p. 215, c. Polycl. 26: ἔστι μὲν πῖττη γέυεται· ἐβούλετο γὰρ εἶναι Ἀθηναῖος (said of a wealthy μέτοικος).

II. 72. Mr. E. J. Palmer's πλῆν ἂν ἐξεφύσησεν (just the sort of phrase which Battaros would use) is supported by Ar. Thesmoph. 3: πρὶν τὸν πλῆνα κομῶν μ' ἐκβαλεῖν (extreme vexation or distress). λεηλατόμοι, I find, has been proposed by Mr. Robinson Ellis (in the Classical Review). There is an argument in its favour which I have not seen stated—that expressions like Μυσῶν λεία were current, implying that an Asiatic was an easy prey. To be despoiled by a Mysian was the depth of degradation, a reversal of the natural order of things. Battaros calls his opponent a Phrygian in l. 37.

IV. 44. καρκίνου μέζον: I should probably have removed in proof anything like a serious suggestion that Mr. Rutherford did not know the meaning of κάρκινος. But an editor who so carefully dissembles his acquaintance with such words as ἑπέμβυρον and ψαστά runs some risk of being misunderstood.

IV. 68. Perhaps ζῶν βλέπουσι νημερτῆ (or νημερτέα). νημερτής = unerring, veracious, true to nature.

IV. 94-95. I can find no evidence for a genitive with λῶ (αὐτῆ | τῆς ἰστίης λῶ, R., "I too desire health"). A quite different interpretation of the passage is possible. The νεοκῶρος, finding his perquisites rather scanty, stops the departing visitor, and his tone now is less respectful:

αὐτῆ, τῆς ὑγιῆς, λῶ, πρόσδος· ἢ γὰρ ἰστίου μέζων ἀμαρτεῦ' ἢ ὑγιῆ (?) ἵστί τῆς κοίτης;

"Give something more, for Hygieia" (in her name, to be hers): can Hygieia (health) be augmented by sacrifices, if she misses her share of them? But I have no evidence to offer for a parenthetic λῶ in the sense of "I pray." Mr. Palmer suggests that the νεοκῶρος is trying to obtain a gratuity for a fellow-servant, who is attached to the neighbouring shrine of Hygieia: τῆ τῆσδε δούλφ πρόσδος: τῆς ὑγιῆς was an inter-linear explanation of τῆσδε, and λῶι is a surviving fragment of δούλφ. This seems a better solution than "the assumption of a parenthetic λῶ."

W. R. HARDIE.

Trinity College, Dublin: Oct. 21, 1891.

I. 74. Read

φέρουσα χάρι· μῦθον δε μετρήησι

The η and ι form a diphthong, as in γυναικίῳν VI. 1.

II. 30. Does the MS. absolutely forbid ἐδ' δημοτῶν πρήσσοντα?

III. 75. οὐδεὶς σ' ἐπαινέσειεν οὐδ' ὕπων χωρῆς.

Read χωρεῖς, "no one would praise you or your goings on." The iota of the subjunctive does not appear in the papyrus. In l. 88 we have δυση.

IV. 38.

ἐς τοῦτο τὸ εἰκόσιμα μὴ . . . ἢς δέσθω

Read μὴ τ' ἄμης δέσθω. The word for real as opposed to a work of art is ἐτυμος. Cf. Theocr. XV. 82, ὡς ἐτυμ' ἐστάκαντι καὶ ὡς ἐτυμ' ἐδιδνεῦντι.

IV. 62. Read τάργυρεῦν πύραγρον δέ.

VII. 59. To avoid a false quantity read ἀμφο-σφ'ρία. And for the same reason correct l. 102 to κεί τεσσαράς μοι ὕπισχιέοιτο δαρείκουσ.

R. Y. TYRRELL.

Leatherhead, Surrey: Oct. 17, 1891.

IV. 4-5. . . ἢς τε χεῖρι δεξιῆ φανῖς Ἰγία τε κ' ὠν περ, κ.τ.λ.

Keep the form Ἰγία, which is so given by the MS. all through this piece: and cut out the following τε. This is necessary for the metre, Ἰγία being a proclenematic; and removes a difficulty, for if τε is kept Ἰγία τε cannot refer to ἦς, but an antecedent must be understood for ἦς (e.g., Aigle who is not mentioned; cf. the list of Asklepios's children by Hermippos—Machaon, Podaleirios, Iaso, Panakeia, and Aigle).

τε may easily have crept in from the line above or below.

IV. 35-6. τον Βαταλῆς γαρ τουτον ουχ ορης Κυννοι οκως Β. Β ἀδριαντα της Μυττω.

Still another suggestion for οκως Β. Β May it be βέβηλος. (K. marks five letters missing, but that is not fatal. The suggestions βέβηκεν, βεβαιος have been made.)

βέβηλος would mean, not exactly ἀμύητος, but "unlike a μύστης." Batala may have been a well-known Hetaira; and this would give a good point. Then read μύστω. "The notorious Batala as a μύστης, how unlike the character she is!" μύστης seems to be used of women beside the feminine μύστις.

IV. 51. εν η το Βρεγμα τουτο τουσυρος, κ.τ.λ. Taking βρέγμα="pate," and μάρη (antecedent to ἦ) or μέρη="hand"—as the Saturday Review—read τῶ ζυρόν. (I had come to this before seeing Mr. Hicks's suggestion.)

IV. 57. Keep MS. κοινῆν; but interpret thus: "A. helped in the carving." κοινός = κοινῶν frequently.

IV. 68. ουχι ζῶνν βλέπουσιν ημερην παντες. ζῶνν ημερην gives no good meaning, and the phrase seems impossible.

I suggest—νῆ μ' Ἠρην (= ναὶ μὰ Ἠρην, a common woman's oath). The ν being wrongly joined with βλέπουσιν(ν)—ἡμερην would naturally be written for the unintelligible ημερην. I had thought of νημερτῆ.

A. E. CRAWLEY.

Oxford: Oct. 24, 1891.

"More last words"! In a moment of temporary aberration I thought of the opt. of ἐπεύχο as ἐπευχόσιο, and pointedly changed Mr. Hicks's accentuation of ἐπευχόσιο! May I say that I wrote, just too late to catch the press, a correction of this absurdity?

And may I congratulate Mr. Headlam on pulverizing my criticism of his translation of τὸ τοῦ λόγου δὴ τοῦτο in II. 45? But the analysis of the phrase was difficult: from one of his quotations it looks as if the first three words are a subject, and the last an object governed by ὡσπὶ understood.

For a tribrach in the fifth foot let Mr. Richards (whose μετρησιῶν is of course right in I. 74, and not my μετρησιῶν) see III. 40.

In taking leave of the subject for the present, I cannot help adding that some of the critics seem bent on out-Rutherfording Rutherford, and that very soon there will hardly be a line of the unfortunate poet which somebody will not have "emended"! Perhaps someone else will then step forward and give him decent burial? for how many people would read an edition which should betray a belief that the scribes and correctors of such papyri knew colloquial Greek better than we do, and were capable of writing it without an incessant series of blunders such as experience cannot parallel nor imagination explain?

EDWARD W. B. NICHOLSON.

THE OLD-ENGLISH "CELMERTMONN."

London: Oct. 13, 1891.

The word celmertmonn, used for "hiring" in the Lindisfarne and Rushworth Gospels, has not, so far as I know, been etymologically accounted for. It has occurred to me that celmert would be the exact shape which, according to phonetic law, would be assumed by an early adoption of a late Latin col(l)imbertus*, a possible variant of collibertus. A glance at Ducange will be sufficient to show that this etymology labours under no difficulty on the ground of the sense. But are we justified in assuming that a form col(l)imbertus* really existed? Although I cannot cite an actual example of the occurrence of the required form, there seems to be a clear trace of it in the statement quoted by Ducange from Peter of Maillezais (eleventh century) that some people believed the word to be derived a cultu imbrum. The notion of derivation from colere and imber might easily be suggested by the form colimbertus, but not, I think, by colibertus. Possibly the absence of any record of col(l)imbertus may be due to editors having ignored the line over the i (denoting an omitted m), which would naturally be regarded as a mere scribal blunder.

HENRY BRADLEY.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, Nov. 1, 3.45 p.m. South Place Institute: "The Life and Works of Wagner," by Mr. Carl Armbruster. 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture Society: "Underground Russia: Authentic Prison Experiences," by Mr. Walter L. Bicknell. 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Difficulties of Individualism," by Mr. Sidney Webb.
- MONDAY, Nov. 2, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting. 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Trunk," I., by Prof. W. Anderson. 8 p.m. Aristotelian: Presidential Address, by Mr. Shadworth H. Hodgson.
- TUESDAY, Nov. 3, 8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "Some Points of Resemblance between the Ancient Nations of the East and West," by the Rev. James Marshall. 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Pleistocene Bird-remains from the Sardinian and Corsican Islands," by Mr. R. Lydekker; "A remarkable Fish from Mauritius, belonging to the genus Scorpaena," by Dr. A. Günther; "A little known Species of Upupa from the Island of Lifu, Loyalty Group," by the Hon. Lionel Walter Rothschild; "Lophotes cephalotes, Giorna, at the Cape of Good Hope," by Mr. Roland Trieman.
- THURSDAY, Nov. 5, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "Guilds among Anglo-Saxon Monasteries," by the Rev. J. Hirst; "Prehistoric Stonework of Mexico," by Mr. O. H. Howarth. 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration: "The Trunk," II., by Prof. W. Anderson. 8 p.m. Linnæan: "A Theory of Heredity based upon Force instead of Matter," by the Rev. Prof. G. Henslow. 8 p.m. Chemical.
- FRIDAY, Nov. 6, 5 p.m. Physical: "Corresponding Temperatures, Pressures, and Volumes," by Prof. Sydney Young. 8 p.m. Philological: "The Pronunciation of the English Vowels in the Seventeenth Century," by Dr. Russell Martineau; "A New View of the Greek Indirect Negative," by Mr. E. R. Wharton. 8 p.m. Geologists' Association: Conversazione.

SCIENCE.

The Melanesians: Studies in their Anthropology and Folk-lore. By R. H. Codrington, D.D. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

This work is issued in uniform size, form, and type with the author's Melanesian Languages, of which it may be regarded as the sequel. The two together rank, as contributions to Melanesian philology and ethnology, on a level with Dr. Guppy's writings on the geology and natural history of the group. Owing to many causes, but perhaps mainly to the reputed ferocity and treachery of the natives, no serious attempt had been made to explore this interesting section of Polynesia for three hundred years after Mendana's first voyage of discovery in 1567. At least, the expeditions made by Bougainville, La Perouse, Cook, and others during the second half of the last century can be regarded as little more than coast surveys, and, in fact, accomplished little beyond roughly determining the contour lines of the several members of the archipelagoes. Much of the interior of all the larger islands, in both the Solomon and the New Hebrides groups, is even still unknown. But, thanks chiefly to the labours of Dr. Guppy and Dr. Codrington, we have at last a fairly accurate general picture of the physical features and social relations of the Melanesian world.

In preparing the present work, Dr. Codrington has repeated the process so successfully carried out in his classical treatise on the Melanesian languages. Availing himself of the unrivalled opportunities afforded by a twenty-five years' residence on the spot (1863-87), and especially in the central missionary station of Norfolk Island, where natives from every part of the group have for many years been brought together for instruction, he has collected at first hand a great body of information on the usages, traditions, oral literature (folk-lore), religious views, arts, and industries of nearly all the Melanesian islanders. This information has been carefully sifted and tested in every way by, so to say, cross-examining the more intelligent native teachers, all of them "competent and trustworthy witnesses," from Ysabel, Florida, Aurora, Saa, the Banks' Islands, and other parts of the Solomon and New Hebrides archipelagoes. In this way alone was it possible to set forth, as is here done, "as much as possible what natives say about themselves, not what Europeans say about them." Dr. Codrington has thus done for the Melanesians what Major Ellis has done for the Upper Guinea negroes, and Mr. im Thurn for the aborigines of British Guiana. His work may doubtless, as he admits, be incomplete; but what he gives his readers is thoroughly trustworthy, and thus offers a solid foundation for a more comprehensive study of these interesting savages.

For savages as they are, and savages in some respects of an extremely low type, they none the less present problems of a highly complex order connected with the evolution of racial and linguistic types. Dr. Codrington places beyond reasonable doubt the homogeneous character of all the Melanesian tongues, excluding for the present consideration many, perhaps most, of those current in New Guinea and all the Australian family. He further goes a long way to show that with these possible exceptions there is but one linguistic type, say, one fundamental order of speech, in the whole of the Oceanic world from Madagascar, close to the African continent, to Easter Island, within measurable distance of the South American mainland. Lastly, and here comes the crucial difficulty, he almost demonstrates that the primitive form of this Oceanic speech is to be sought, not among the higher members of the family—Malays, for instance, or Eastern Polynesians—but among the admittedly lower Solomon, Santa Cruz, Banks' Islanders and other Melanesians. He holds—and he is the greatest living authority on the subject, certainly greater than Von der Gabelentz, A. B. Meyer, or even Whitmee—that the languages of the black, mop-headed Fijian, Mota, and Guadalcanar savages are radically the same as, but more archaic than, those of the large, brown, long-haired, and relatively civilised Samoans and Tahitians, or the yellow-brown cultured Malays of Sumatra and Java. Thus, the simple theory that the higher imposed their speech on the lower peoples collapses; and in the Oceanic world anthropology and philology are found to be not merely non-coincident, as often elsewhere, but absolutely antagonistic, as perhaps never elsewhere. Or how are ethnologists going to explain the strange phenomenon that the physically debased, or at all events more primitive, Solomon Islander has inherited a more organic, a more highly developed, a far less degraded form of the original Oceanic language than the Menangkabau Malay, who speaks what Dr. Codrington regards, and perhaps rightly regards, as a degenerate form of the same Oceanic language? It is, to seek an analogue in the Aryan world, as if the yellow, broad-faced, flat-featured Hazarachs of North Afghanistan were found speaking, not a corrupt neo-Persian dialect, as is the fact, but a more organic and highly developed form of Iranian than the author of the Shāh-nāma, and spoke, for instance, of the Khshaya (root Khshi) while Firdausi had already reached the weakened modern form shah.

Dr. Codrington feels the difficulty, but does not discuss the question in the present work, which is mainly devoted to such more attractive subjects as the social regulations, exogamy, status of chiefs, land tenure, secret societies, clubs, initiations, witchcraft, marriage and funeral rights, tabu, cannibalism, head hunting, and religious notions generally. Religion in the strict sense of the term can scarcely be said to exist; and although Dr. Codrington speaks of their "conception of the supernatural," it may be questioned whether the natives have any distinct idea at all of the supernatural as understood by more advanced races. Their ideas are strictly anthropomorphic; there is no belief either in a supreme being, or in any superhuman beings dwelling in trees, rocks, or rivers, or in a personal devil, although the word in its English form has become current through contact with European traders. The religious system, such as it is, is concerned exclusively with the so-called mana, and with those beings, whether corporeal or incorporeal, who are supposed to possess this mana. The corporeal being may be any powerful chief or member of the community, while the incorporeal is either a human spirit (ghost), or a non-human spirit, that is, one that has never dwelt in a human body, though still possessing a certain bodily and visible form of its own. The mana, on the other hand, is something absolutely impersonal, a mysterious force or influence, which may be here, there, or anywhere, associated temporarily or permanently with a stone, a fruit, or such like object, or resident in a disembodied or an ethereal spirit, or through them in man himself. Dr. Codrington calls this mana "a supernatural power or influence." But whatever is normal, in accordance with or a part of the established order of things, considered of course from the subjective standpoint, can scarcely be called supernatural, and such the mana certainly appears to be. The vui, or non-human spirit, regarding which notions vary in the different groups, is said to be "supernaturally powerful with mana," without mana being nought, of no account, and nowhere an object of any cult. The same is true of the tindalo, or ghosts, who are also nought unless they be the spirits of men who, when alive, had mana in them. Otherwise

"the souls of common men are the common herd of ghosts, nobodies alike before and after death. The supernatural [?] power abiding in the powerful living man abides in his ghost after death, with increase of vigour and more ease of movement. After his death, therefore, it is expected that he should begin to work, and some one will come forward and claim particular acquaintance with the ghost; if his power should show itself, his position is assured as one worthy to be invoked, and to receive offerings, till his cultus gives way before the rising importance of one newly dead, and the sacred place where his shrine once stood and his relics were preserved is the only memorial of him that remains; if no proof of his activity appears he sinks into oblivion at once."

Thus everything depends on the mana, its presence or absence; and the ultimate aim of the respect paid to the living man, the homage paid to the departed, is to secure this mana for oneself. The living and the dead are in this respect exactly on the same level, nor can any radical distinction be drawn between them and the vui, which latter are not the object of any kind of worship in the Western, or Solomon, group. In a word, the Melanesian "religion" recognises no permanent deities or devils, but only evanescent objects of veneration, and this not for their own sake, but for the sake of the mana supposed to be in them. The possession of the mana again, being common alike to the corporeal and incorporeal spirits, does not present itself to the native mind as anything "supernatural," but perfectly normal and in accordance with the established order of things. A general survey of all the so-called natural religions, such as those of the Guiana Indians, the Negroes, Australians, and Melanesians, makes it more and more evident that the savage mind is incapable of distinguishing between a natural and supernatural order, and that the latter idea is a later development, gradually evolved according as pure anthropomorphism receded into the background. The Guiana "cloudland," and the Prairie Indian's "happy hunting-grounds," differ only in degree from the sublunary world.

In this connexion it is instructive to read that in the Melanesian Panoi, or Elysian Fields, there are "many mansions," such as the sure tupu, where simple harmless ghosts congregate, and the sure lumagar, where youths go who die in the flower of their age, "a place more pleasant than the rest, where all kinds of flowers abound and scented plants." But everywhere there is much that resembles the upper world, "villages, houses, trees with red leaves, and there is day and night. It is even a beautiful place, for at a great festival when the village place is bright with flowers and coloured leaves, and thronged with people dancing, drumming, and singing, the saying is that it is 'like a sura, as if the mouth of Panoi were opened.'

In the chapter devoted to the tribal divisions there is much suggestive matter, throwing light on matriarchal and patriarchal usages, on the constitution of the tribe, on the origin of the totem system, which in Melanesia appears to be in a rudimentary state, and on the social institutions generally of primitive peoples. In Florida and some of the neighbouring islands, the Kema is not a political division, but a purely exogamous group, in which the husband stands "on one side of the house," the wife and all the children on the other. But though the arrangement is called "matriarchal," the mother is in no way the head of the family. The house, the grounds, the authority, all belong to the father, who rules and controls his sons, though they are not of his own kin. In a large village there will of course be several Kemas, the head of each being a chief; and, in order to prevent the disintegration of the community, the head of the dominant Kema becomes the paramount chief, exercising direct authority over all the others. But his sway cannot be permanent, nor can he become the founder of a dynasty, because the relative importance of the Kemas themselves is necessarily of an unstable character. This is owing to the exogamous basis of society, in which the sons are all of the mother's kin. Hence:

"If in a certain district one kindred is now most numerous, in the next generation it cannot be so, for the children of those now most numerous will be naturally many more in number, and will none of them be of kin to their fathers. Thus it was that twenty years ago the Nggaombata was the dominant Kema in Florida, and to be a great chief it was said that a man must be Nggaombata; but now the Manukama are rising into the chief place, and supply the chiefs in many districts of the island."

It is evident that these Melanesians are in the interesting transitional state between the original family group, the absolute starting-point of all human society, and the strictly tribal group, the absolute starting-point of the nation, and of all purely political institutions. Then if it be asked whence the family itself? the reply is that it goes back to the "arboreal ancestry."

The section occupied with folk-lore is of great value, because all but one of the stories here collected are close translations from originals written down by educated neophytes at Dr. Codrington's request. They are arranged under three divisions: animal stories, mostly concerning birds and fishes; myths and tales illustrating the native "theories of the universe," and the origin of things; and wonder tales dealing with the marvellous, as such, and without reference to preconceived "philosophic views." But no room has been left for quotations, especially as most of the stories are somewhat prolix, and it may be added, tant soit peu, incoherent.

Being one of the Clarendon Press Series, needless to say that the book is well furnished, though sparingly illustrated. The dancing dress at p. 108 is a good specimen of native decorative art, the Melanesians being in this respect scarcely inferior to their Papuan kindred of New Guinea and the Eastern Archipelago.

A. H. KEANE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON SOME PĀLI AND JAINA PRAKRIT WORDS—"ĀUTTI."

Dedham School, Essex.

"EGAYĀ guṇasamitassa riyato kāyasamphāsam anucimā egatīyā pānā uddāyamti: ihalogavedana-vejjāvadīyam: jam āutti-kammaṃ (v. l. -kayam) tam parinnāya vivegam eti."

(Āyāraṃgasutta I. 5. 4, §. 3.)

"Sometimes, though a monk be endowed with* virtue and walking (in righteousness), living things, coming into contact with his body, will be killed. (If this happens through mere carelessness) then he will get his punishment in this life, but if it be done contrary to the rules he should repent of it and do penance for it" (Jaina Sūtras, p. 48).

The Commentator explains āutti-kamma by ākutti-karma; but we fail to see how this can be translated by "contrary to the rules," unless there be some authority for ākutti in the sense of "transgression, then āutti kamma might signify "an act of transgression," "a breach of rule." As there is no such form as ākutti in the P. W., it is probably after all a coinage of the Scholiast, who was put to some trouble in finding a satisfactory Sanskrit equivalent.

It would seem that āuttikammaṃ has here the sense of "an intentional act (of injury)," a deadly sin in the eyes of the Jains, for which the offender would have to undergo severe penance, by going into seclusion, and there, on a bed of Kusa-grass or straw, expose his body to the attacks of insects, and finally starve himself to death.

The word ihalogavedanavejjāvadīyam seems to be an attributive compound qualifying āuttikammaṃ. Vejjāvadīya corresponds in form to a Pāli veyyāvātika which Childers wrongly refers to the root, vrit+vyā. There is a Jaina veyāvacca explained by the Scholiast as vaiyāvrittīya.

A slight modification of Prof. Jacobi's rendering is needed to bring out the more literal, and less traditional, meaning of the passage quoted above: "Sometimes though a monk be circumspect in his behaviour and walk (warily), living things, coming into contact with his body will (accidentally) be killed; (but) whatever wanton act, involving punishment in this life, (he commits) that he should confess and retire into solitude (to do penance for it)."[†]

The epithet an-āutti occurs in Āyāraṃgasutta I. 8. 1, v. 16:

"Ativāṭiyam anāuttim satam annessim akaraṇayāe jass' itthio parinnāyā savvakammāvahāo addakkhū."

"Practising the sinless abstinence from killing, he did no acts, neither himself nor with the assistance of others: he, to whom women were known as the causes of all sinful acts, saw (the true state of the world)."

Prof. Jacobi renders "ativāṭiyam anāuttim" by "practising the sinless abstinence from killing"; but it rather means that the destruction of animal life was purely accidental or unintentional on his part. Ativāṭiyam represents Sanskrit atipātikam, "the deadly sin of

* Samita generally means "circumspect"; sahita = endowed with.

† Without food he should lie down and bear the pains that attack him. . . . When crawling animals . . . feed on his flesh and blood, he should neither kill them nor rub the wound (Āyār. I. vii. 8, §§ 8, 9; Translation, p. 75).

injury to living creatures," and anāuttim must be in adjectival relation to it. Here again the meaning of "not wanton" or "unintentional" seems to suit the context.

Prof. Jacobi does not give us the Scholiast's explanation of anāutti, but fortunately it occurs elsewhere: "Janam kāena nāutti abhuo jam ca himsati" (Sūyagadāṃgasutta I. 1, v. 25, p. 65). Here we see that nāutti, "not wantonly injuring," is used antithetically to himsati. The Tīkā has the following note:

"Yo hi jānannavagacchan prānino hinasti kāyena cā' nākutti | kuttachedane ākuttanam ākuttah."

The Scholiast evidently connected āutti with the root kutt "to cut, strike." The Dīpikā explains nāutti by ahimsaka "harmless, doing no (wilful) injury."

As the original sense of āutti seems to be "intentional," "wanton," it cannot well be connected with a Sanskrit ākutti, but is, perhaps, related to some such form as ākūtin (producing a Prakrit ākutti, and, by connecting it with a wrong root, akutti), from the root kū "to design, intend." Cf. Sanskrit ākūta, ākūti.

Curiously enough we find a verb, āuttai, which appears to be related to the foregoing word āutti, "Aratim āutte se mehāvī" (Āyār. I. 2. 2. 1), which Prof. Jacobi renders by "a wise man should remove any aversion to (control)."

Āuttai, he adds, usually signifies "to exercise," but, according to the Commentary, it here answers to nivartayati. But āuttai or ākuttati may signify here "to undergo voluntarily," and we might translate the phrase by "a wise man should of his own set purpose undergo discomfort"—that is, he should not only not shirk the hard life of a monk, but should actually court it. In explaining āuttai by nivartayati the Scholiast was perhaps thinking of some such verb as āuttai = āuttati, from the root trut.

We find āuttai in the sense of to propose, try in the following passages:

"Se se paro suddhenam vā vaibaleṇam teiccham āutte" (Āyār. II. 13. 22).

"If the other tries to cure him by pure charms," &c.

"Vāsāvāsam pajjosavio bhikkhū ya icchijjā annayarim teicchim āuttitae" (Kalpasūtra. S., §. 49).

During the Pajjusan a monk might wish to try some medical cure. The Commentary explains āuttitae by kārayitum. Āuttai, if standing for ākuttai, may be a denominative formed from kūta from the root kū, hence the meaning of "to attempt," "to try," that seems to be attached in all cases to the verb āuttai.

R. MORRIS.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

PART III. of the Transactions of the Philological Society for 1888-90 (Kegan Paul & Co.) contains two papers by Mr. Whitley Stokes. One is a detailed criticism of Prof. Atkinson's edition of the Passions and Homilies in the Lebar Brecc or Speckled Book; the other is a collection of words from the Irish Annals of philological interest, either as being borrowed from other languages or on their own account. On early English, there are also two papers: Dr. R. von Fleischhacker discusses the old English nouns of more than one gender; and Dr. Karl D. Bulbring, continuing a task begun by Dr. Percy Andreae, gives an elaborate pedigree of no less than twenty-five MSS. of the "Pricke of Conscience." Prince L.-L. Bonaparte, with the help of several maps, fixes a number of isolated spots where Albanian, Modern Greek, Gallo-Italic, Provençal, and Illyrian are still spoken in Southern Italy and Naples. Mr. W. R. Morfill explains some peculiarities of modern Russian, by comparison with its earlier forms and with other Slavonic languages. Mr. E. R. Wharton's paper on "Latin Consonant-Laws" should be read together with two former papers on "Loan-words in Latin" and "Latin-Vocalism," as illustrating some hard sayings in the same author's Etyma Latina. And, finally, Prof. Skeat continues his notes on English etymology, dealing with several West Indian words by the light of Stedman's Serimum (1796). Incidentally, he shows that "draught-house," in the Bible, is precisely analogous in formation to "drawing-room" and in meaning to "Abtritt."

THE Modern Language Monthly, edited by J. J. Beuzemak, is a periodical which deserves an extensive circulation among students of modern European languages. The current volume, which began in May last, contains regular courses of elementary lessons in French, German, Spanish, and Italian. We are not sure whether these lessons (though they seem to be excellently arranged) are quite worth the space devoted to them; at all events, they are not the most valuable portion of the contents. Each number contains extracts from recent foreign books and journals, with annotations upon difficulties of vocabulary and idiom, and articles appear from time to time on questions of grammar and pronunciation. The treatment of phonetics especially deserves commendation. Mr. Beuzemak is not only familiar with the literature of the science, but is himself a skilled and careful observer.

THE October number of the Classical Review (David Nutt) opens with some dozen pages of emendations of Herodas, contributed by the Rev. E. L. Hicks, Dr. H. Jackson, and Mr. Robinson Ellis; but we understand that the editor does not intend to devote so much future space to this matter as he did to the settlement of the text of the Ἀθηναίων πολιτεία. Prof. Lewis Campbell also contributes a first article on the papyrus fragment of the Phaedo, published by Prof. Mahaffy. Among the other papers, we may specially mention Mr. A. C. Clark's account of the MSS. once belonging to J. G. Graevius, which he traces to the Harleian collection now in the British Museum, having been fraudulently sold through the intervention of two pretty scoundrels called Zamboni and Büchels. Mr. W. M. Lindsay writes upon Latin accentuation, supporting the doctrines of the older grammarians. The two most important reviews are those by Prof. Sonnenschein of Ellis's "Noctes Manilianae," and by Prof. Nettleship of Hessels's Eighth Century Latin Anglo-Saxon Glossary.

A NEW Basque Grammar has appeared at Bilbao, Euskal Ezkintea ó Gramática Euskara. The author is Don Resurreccion Maria de Azcue, the first professor of Basque in Bizcay. It is a large volume of 400 pages, in double columns, one of Basque, the other of Spanish translation. The price is 12 frs. 50 c.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

RUSKIN SOCIETY.—(Friday, Oct. 2.)

J. ELLIOTT VINEY, Esq., in the chair. A paper on "Practical Idealism" was read by Mr. Arthur Boutwood, who contended that the predominant practical spirit of the time, concerning itself merely with the external aspects of life, would, if unchecked, work incalculable harm in the narrowing and impoverishing of human life, by gradually banishing those emotional and intellectual elements which, although they do not appear to be of direct value in a money getting age, are yet the very light of life. In every department men are becoming prosaic and material. Art and literature bear testimony to this: architecture as an art has almost ceased to exist among us; painting shows an increasing tendency to confine itself to uninteresting portraits and commonplace landscapes, while literature is yearly becoming more and more simply a profession. In the political domain, the same tendency is shown in the exclusive attention which men pay to the external accidents of life, and in their reliance upon compulsory legislation. While all this might be good and useful in its way, it left the real root of social evils untouched. These are to be found in the people themselves, and until some change is effected in modes of thought and feeling no essential change for the better can be expected. Adopting Ruskin's doctrine, that the great end of national activity is "soul-manufacture," Mr. Boutwood urged that this never could be accomplished by the agencies now in favour. One great evil of our time is the empty, narrow lives of our labouring classes. At the time when a commonwealth most requires them to be real men, they are in danger of becoming mere cogs in the great machine of wealth. Our labour-troubles are largely due to the predominance of the idea that the proceeds of industry are to be divided by competition among the different claimants. The true end of life is the formation of character upon the basis of the whole of human nature. The beauty of art and literature, the sanctities of domestic and social life, and the devout enthusiasm of religion are as real as anything possibly can be, and they should all find their place in a fully developed and rightly-ordered life. All this must, however, be supplemented by the conception of duty, by the idea that for everyone there is a divinely appointed work to be done. This it is which will keep idealism fresh and strong, and will prevent culture from lapsing into mere self-pleasing. Finally, Mr. Boutwood urged that a life of the highest kind should be regulated by definite ideals. Concerning all action, it should be asked what type of character is this building up. The politicians of the day concern themselves too little with idealism of this kind. They live from hand to mouth, without, except among the advanced Radicals, any definite ideal of national life before them, and never inquire as to the probable effect of their measures upon the real manhood of the nation.

FINE ART.

INDIAN NUMISMATICS.

[THE following is only the preface to an elaborate report on the progress of numismatics in India, from January 1886 to July 1891, which was presented by Mr. Vincent A. Smith to the recent Congress of Orientalists. The report itself consists of a bibliographical index, under the eleven classes here named, giving the author's name, the publication, and a summary of the contents.]

This report is not as complete as I should wish it to be. The time at my disposal is only that which can be spared from heavy official duty, and it is difficult for a man living in a remote station in Upper India to keep himself acquainted with the progress of European scholarship. I should not venture to lay before the Congress a report so imperfect if I had any reason to suppose that the work would be better done by somebody else; but there is no reason to suppose that such will be the case, and I therefore offer what I can, in the belief that, with all its imperfections, the compilation will be useful.

The bibliographical notes have been arranged under eleven classes. No work on Indian Numismatics generally of at all recent date is in existence. Prinsep's Essays, Marsden's Numismata Orientalia, and Wilson's Ariana Antiqua are still and always will continue to be of value; but they are all old, and to a considerable extent obsolete. My rough attempt at classifying Indian coins under a few main heads with reference to modern discoveries may thus possess some interest.

I have not hesitated to describe the first class by the title "Early Indigenous Coinage." This class consists of rude coins, some blank, some impressed with the stamps of small punches successively applied, and some cast in moulds. A few are inscribed. Proof of the indigenous origin of these coinages was given long ago by Thomas and Cunningham. It has been summarised in my essay on the "Art of Coinage in India," which is section vii. of my paper entitled "Graeco-Roman Influence on the Civilisation of Ancient India," published by the Asiatic Society of Bengal in 1889.

Mr. Theobald's paper on the symbolism of the punch-marked coins, published by the same Society in 1890, is by far the most complete account of the subject, and, though fanciful, is deserving of careful study.

My second class consists of the Bactrian and Early Indo-Scythian coinages, which are too closely related to admit of separation. The standard authority on this subject is, of course, Mr. Percy Gardner's well-known Catalogue. Mr. Gardner has described some remarkable novelties belonging to the Bactrian series in the Numismatic Chronicle for 1887.

My notes are, I fear, more incomplete in this department than in any other. The purely Indian coinages are poorly represented in continental collections, and have seldom attracted the attention of continental scholars. But the Graeco-Bactrian coins have long excited keen interest, and I have probably failed to notice sundry papers in periodicals to which I have not access at present.

The most important contribution to the knowledge of the early Indo-Scythian coins which has been made since the publication of Mr. Gardner's book is Dr. Aurel Stein's brilliant demonstration of the Zoroastrian character of many of the deities represented on the coins, and his proof that the PĀO NANOPĀO legend is a form of the Persian Shāhan Shāh, equivalent to "king of kings," βασιλεὺς βασιλέων, Mahārājādhirāja.

My third class of coins, the Later Indo-Scythian, is a rather vaguely defined one. It corresponds generally with what Mr. Thomas called Indo-Scythian coins with Hindi legends. The legends are supposed to give eleven names of generals with more or less Scythic designations, and also the names of the tribal septa. But the interpretation of these brief and obscure legends is far from being satisfactorily settled. Dr. Hoernle has described many coins of this class in the Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal.

The fourth class, the Gupta, Hūna, and Indo-Sassanian coinages, is a very large and varied one. My monograph on the Gupta Coinage published by the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland in 1889 aimed at giving an exhaustive account of all that was known on the subject up to the date of publication. Mr. E. J. Rapson of the British Museum staff has published a valuable supplement to it in the Numismatic Chronicle. Mr. J. H. Rivett-Carnac, C.I.E., has recently submitted to me his splendid collection of Gupta gold coins, numbering nearly a hundred, the examination of which has supplied me with a considerable mass of additional notes, which I hope to publish at some time. His cabinet includes several new varieties, and a second specimen of the Conch type of Chandra Gupta II., hitherto known only from the specimen in the British Museum. Mr. Rivett-Carnac's coin is in better preservation, and bears the exergue legend nīpakriti, which Dr. Hoernle interprets as "skilled in dramatic composition." I may mention also as a matter of some interest that my reading of the conjunct, ṛh, in the word siṅha, has been fully established both by Mr.

Rivett-Carnac's coins, and by the manuscript brought from Central Asia by Lieutenant Bower, which Dr. Hoernle is engaged in deciphering.

The coins of the Kshatrapas or Satraps of Guzerat, whose dynasty was overthrown by Chandra Gupta II., have been well and lucidly described by Mr. Rapson.

Mr. Fleet has cleared up the outlines of the history of the Hūna kings, Toramāna and his son Mihirakula, who were largely concerned in the disruption of the Gupta empire, and has discussed their coins. But the coinage of these kings deserves fuller and more detailed investigation.

Dr. Hoernle's paper in the Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for 1889, suggesting that certain Indo-Sassanian coins, imitating those of the Sassanian king Firūz (A.D. 471-86), were probably struck by Toramāna, is of special importance.

M. Ed. Drouin has devoted himself to the interpretation of the legends on certain Sassanian coins written in an alphabet which he calls Irano-Scythic.

The history of the coinages of Nara (or Nāra) Gupta, the king called Prakāśāditya, and other local rulers connected with the Imperial Gupta dynasty, is still very obscure, but has been to some extent elucidated by the discovery of the inscribed seal of Kumāra Gupta II., published by Dr. Hoernle and myself. Dr. Hoernle's historical commentary is very valuable.

The fifth class consists of a very distinct group of coins, the Kābul and Pathān Coinage of the Bull and Horseman type. This very characteristic type seems to have been first used by the Brahmin kings of Kābul about A.D. 850, or a little later, and continued to be employed down to the time of Nāsiru-d-din Mahmūd, king of Delhi (A.D. 1246-64). It was also adopted by various Hindu princes of Delhi, Kanauj, and Narwar in Central India. I have lately shown (Proceedings of Asiatic Society of Bengal for 1890) that Thomas was mistaken in supposing that the Chandella kings of Mahoba struck coins of this type. It is now generally admitted that the Kābul coins are dated in the Śāka era.

The sixth class, Pathān Coinage other than that of the Bull and Horseman type, comprises the Delhi coins and related issues from the accession of Balban in A.D. 1265 to the death of Ibrāhīm Lodi in A.D. 1526.

The great Hoshangābād find of 477 gold mohurs (452 genuine, and 25 forgeries), which has been described by Dr. Hoernle, has added many novelties to the series.

Mr. C. J. Rodgers, in his four papers entitled "Coins Supplementary to Mr. Thomas's 'Chronicles of the Pathān kings of Delhi,'" has made extensive and valuable contributions to knowledge, but unfortunately in an undigested form. He has never carried out the intention, which he once announced, of rearranging and republishing these papers. Mr. Thomas's erudite work is itself so confused that the study of the so-called Pathān series is a troublesome business. Mr. Rodgers's papers also describe many coins of the Bull and Horseman type.

The mediæval Hindu coinage, other than that of the Bull and Horseman type, which forms my seventh class, comprises many types and varieties, but is of less general interest than the classes already noticed. The principal discovery concerning this class, which has taken place during the period with which this report is concerned, is that made by Dr. Hultzsch, that the well-known and abundant Ādi Varāha coinage was struck by the king Bhojadeva of Kanauj, who was reigning in the years A.D. 862 to 882. This prince assumed the Biruda or title of Ādi Varāha. The Ādi Varāha drammas are mentioned in the long Sujadoni inscription edited by Dr. Kielhorn. This record contains a very curious enumeration of different kinds of drammas and other coins, which deserves critical examination from the numismatic point of view.

Dr. Hoernle has enlarged the small series of the excessively rare Chandella coinage by publishing an undoubted specimen from the mint of Paramārdī Deva, the Parmāl of tradition, and another coin the legend of which is imperfect. The name is either Vira Varmma or Bāla Varmma. Both names occur in the Chandella genealogy.

The eighth class, the coinage of the Śūri and Mughal dynasties, extending from the accession of Bābar in A.D. 1526 to the Mutiny in A.D. 1857, is the most extensive of all. The variety of coins is, indeed, so enormous that they afford a subject practically inexhaustible. It has not yet been treated comprehensively. Some years ago Mr. R. S. Poole promised to undertake a catalogue of the coins of the House of Bābar in the British Museum, but the work has not yet, I believe, appeared.

Messrs. Rodgers and Hoernle have been the principal workers in this field during the past few years, and between them have produced a tolerably complete account of the coinage of Sher Shāh and the other Śūri princes.

A paper by Mr. Rodgers on "Rare Copper Coins of Akbar" contains some brief but important observations on the value of the dām, which should help to settle the vexed question of the real amount of Akbar's revenue. Mr. Keene has discussed this question in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, and shown that the estimate formed by Thomas was mistaken and extravagant.

Mr. Oliver has given an account of copper coins of Akbar, which should be read in connexion with the articles by Mr. Rodgers.

Two papers by Mr. Rodgers deal with the curious rhyming couplets on the coins of several of the Mughal emperors. The use of these couplets seems to have been introduced by Jahāngir, towards the close of Akbar's reign. It was discontinued by Shāhjahān, but revived by Aurangzeb, and continued by his successors.

My ninth class is an extremely heterogeneous one. For convenience I have lumped together a number of Nepalese, provincial, and miscellaneous, including Indo-European, coinages.

The coins of Amsuvarman, King of Nepāl (circa A.D. 637-651), and other kings of that country, published by Dr. Hoernle and myself, are interesting, and in part new.

Babu Sarat Chandra Das' promised detailed account of the coins of Tibet has not yet appeared.

Considerations of convenience have led me to lump together in a tenth class the coins of Southern and Western India.

Mr. Oliver has given in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal a very careful and elaborate description of numerous varieties of coins from Southern India, specimens of many of which are not included in the British Museum collection.

Dr. Hultzsch has discussed the very curious system of coin-nomenclature adopted by Tipū (Tippoo) Sultān, who used for the purpose the names of stars, Imāms, and saints.

In two Catalogues Mr. Thurston, the Superintendent of the Madras Government Central Museum, has satisfactorily described the series of Mysore, Ceylon, and Indo-Portuguese coins in that museum.*

The interest attaching to researches concerning the extensive commercial relations between India and the Roman Empire has induced me to bring together the few notices I could find in the publications of the last six years on the finds of Roman coins in India. Mr. Thurston devotes forty-six pages of his Catalogue, No. 2, to the subject, and gives a very interesting account of the finds in the South. He has supplemented this by an article in the Numismatic Chronicle. Dr. Hultzsch has pointed out that large quantities of Roman silver coins of Augustus and Tiberius are obtained at Karuvūr, the Károupa of Ptolemy, formerly the capital of the Chera kings. Three coins of Antoninus Pius, with two of his wife Faustina, were found at Manikyāllā in the Panjāb, worked into the shape of an ornament. The subject of the occurrence of Roman coins in India would be worth working out in detail.

The principal public collections of Indian coins in the United Kingdom are those of the British Museum (including the India Office collection) and the Bodleian at Oxford. The Mohammadan coins of the Bodleian cabinet have been catalogued by Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole, whose catalogue was published in 1888. The other Indian coins are still without a catalogue, except the Gupta gold and copper series, of which I published a catalogue, which has been since revised by Mr. Rapson. The Bodleian collection is little known, but is very rich. It was utterly neglected for many years; but the present Bodley librarian, Mr. E. Nicholson, has done much to improve its condition and render it accessible. His report published in December last gives an interesting account of the collection.

No catalogue of the Hindu and Buddhist coins in the British Museum, except of the Indo-Scythian and Gupta series, has yet appeared.

In India the chief public collections are those at the Indian Museum, Calcutta, the Lahore Museum, the Lucknow Provincial Museum, the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and the Central Museum, Madras.

Mr. C. J. Rodgers is now engaged in cataloguing the coins in the Indian Museum, and has completed a catalogue of those in the Lahore Museum, which is in the press. Mr. Thurston is doing good work in cataloguing the treasures of the Central Museum, Madras. A MS. catalogue of the coins in the cabinet of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, I believe, exists. The Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society possesses some coins, but nothing is known about them.

Private collections of Indian coins both in India and the United Kingdom are extremely numerous, and probably contain much unpublished material. Sir Alexander Cunningham's and Mr. Rivett-Carnac's are particularly rich.

The heading Coins and other headings in the General Index to the Archaeological Survey Reports bring together the numismatic facts scattered through the twenty-three volumes of Reports. The splendid volumes of the Reports of the Archaeological Survey of Western India are, unfortunately, not provided with any index.

I shall conclude by calling special attention to the disinterested labours of Dr. Hoernle, much of whose valuable time is taken up by the examination of the thousands of coins which are poured in upon him from all quarters. In his address for 1889, the president of the Asiatic Society of Bengal records the fact that during the previous year Dr. Hoernle had examined and reported on more than 4000 coins, of which

* We may add that the Indian Antiquary for September, 1891, contains an article by Dr. Hultzsch on "The Coins of the Kings of Vijayanagar," illustrated with two autotype plates; and that the Journal of the Anthropological Society of Bombay (vol. ii., No. 5) contains an article on "The Coins of the Nawābs of the Karnatik," by Mr. T. J. Symonds, with one lithograph plate.—

ED. ACADEMY.

vast number 2460 were noted in the Proceedings. In 1887, the same indefatigable worker examined more than 3200 coins.

In this Report I have quoted only those passages in the Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal which contain something of special interest. I have omitted all mention of numerous reports on common coins.

VINCENT A. SMITH.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CHESTER PIGS OF LEAD.

Oxford: Oct. 17, 1891.

The following is an abstract of a communication of mine, dated April 10, 1891, to the Chester and North Wales Archaeological and Historical Society. I am persuaded that the principal point of my letter would interest some of the readers of the ACADEMY, and that must be my excuse for troubling you.

In consequence of hearing that a member of the Cambrian Archaeological Association, on the occasion of their visit to Chester last year, had read DECEANGL on the pigs of lead in the Grosvenor Museum instead of the usual reading DECEANGLI, I made it a point to have a look at them, and I am happy to say that I agree with my brother Cambrian. I have no doubt as to the L on both pigs, but I am not so sure as to the G; though I am strongly inclined to think that it is the reading. I must admit that it may possibly be a C. But granted the reading DECEANGL, I should regard it as an abbreviation of a longer word with which I would identify Tegeingl, the name of a district embracing the coast from Cheshire to the river Clwyd.

Here it will be noticed first that the old name began with d, whereas the modern one has t; but this has its parallel elsewhere, as for example in Deganwy, near Llandudno, which is now more commonly called Teganwy, and in some instances of Welsh din, as in Tindaethwy in Anglesey, and other place-names which I could mention.

The next question is, What was the full name of the people alluded to on the pigs? One could hardly be far wrong, I think, in giving it as Deceangli or Deceanglii; and if so, their country was probably Deceanglia or Deceanglion, according as the word was feminine or neuter. The point of importance, phonologically speaking, is that the i was a consonant or semi-vowel, like y in the English words "yet" and "yes." Setting out from an early form Deceanglion, one can tell with an approach to certainty what it must become as a Brythonic word in later times; the semi-vowel would cause the a of the previous syllable to be modulated into ei, which would yield a form Deceinglion. Later, the termination would drop off and leave the word in the form of Deceingl. That was accented most probably Decéingl; but the accentuation Decéingl would make no difference, as in either case the contraction likely to follow could only be Decéingl. This explains a fact for which I see no other possible explanation—namely, that Tegeingl is still accented on the ultima, which is contrary to the rule obtaining in modern Welsh, except where the ultima is a contraction of two syllables. In other words, the a of Deceangl, which was at first my stumbling-block, becomes the means of clenching the argument for the connexion between Tegeingl and the Deceangl of the pigs. It also disposes of all uncertainty as to whether the de was in this case the Latin preposition or a part of the name, and it strengthens the argument of the antiquaries who trace the pigs of lead to the neighbourhood of Flint in Tegeingl. On the other hand, it leaves the passage in the Annals of Tacitus doubtful as before; for whether one reads in Decangos or inde Cangos, neither has anything to do with Deceangli, unless one has the courage to go further and adopt some such an emendation as in Deceanglos, which seems to me reasonable.

There are two other questions to which I should like to call attention, namely, what were the boundaries of ancient Tegeingl? and what is the actual application of the English name Englefield: when did it first appear, and how is it first used in connexion with Tegeingl?

Lastly, I ought to have said that this is by no means the first time the name of Tegeingl has been connected with that inscribed on the Chester pigs, but the strength of the linguistic argument has never, so far as I know, been shown before.

JOHN RHYS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON announce two new biographies of artists: The Life of John Linnell, by Mr. A. T. Story, with reproductions from some of his works; and John Leech: His Life and Work, by Mr. W. P. Frith, in two volumes, with portrait and illustrations.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. have nearly ready a book by Mr. W. Martin Conway, sometime professor of art at University College, Liverpool, entitled The Dawn of Art in the Ancient World: an Archaeological Sketch. It will deal with such subjects as the ages of stone and bronze, and the art of Egypt and Chaldea, with special reference to the succession of ideals.

OF the work on Eastern Carpets, which Mr. Griggs has long had in preparation, the first part, consisting of twenty-five coloured plates, with a short introduction by Sir George Birdwood, is nearly ready for issue. The full descriptive text is to appear with the last part. This important work will be published by Mr. Quaritch.

THE Fine Art Society, in New Bond-street, will open next week its first exhibition of the season with a collection of cabinet pictures of "The Riviera," by Mr. W. Logsdail.

MESSRS. DOWDESWELLS have followed up their very interesting collection of pictures by the "old masters" of the British School with a brilliant series of drawings by Mr. Thorne Waite, who may lay claim to being one of the "new masters" who follow the best traditions of our national school of landscape. No country has yet been painted so well as England has been painted by English artists; and to paint her fields, and lanes, and streams, and skies in true English fashion is no low ambition for any man. Mr. Thorne Waite is quite right in keeping to the traditions of Constable, De Witt, and David Cox; but it cannot be said that he has not a very distinct note of his own both in colour and feeling, which each year brings out more clearly. The something under ninety drawings now collected at Messrs. Dowdeswells' gallery in New Bond-street vary greatly in effect, in size, in finish. They are taken from Devonshire and Yorkshire, from Berkshire and Sussex, from Leicester and Essex; but they are all alike in being "as sweet as English air can make them," and possessing those qualities of purity and transparency which can only be obtained in water-colour.

WE may also mention two other exhibitions that are now open: a collection of pictures by Mr. Albert Bierstadt, at the Hanover Gallery in New Bond-street; and four pictures by Mr. G. D. Giles, illustrating "The Life of a Racehorse," at Mr. Raymond Groom's Gallery, Pall Mall.

WITH reference to a recent controversy we may mention that Fray Bernal Boyl, in an introduction to his Aragonese translation of the Abbot Isaac's De contemptu mundi, tells the story of Saint Elizabeth of Hungary, and twice applies to her the term desnuda, but certainly not in the sense of absolute nudity.

"No puede folgar en la real coma y braços del marido, y descansa desnuda en la dura tierra." "Toda desfigurada y flaca anda desnuda y descalça por los calles, tenida por loca sin saber donde á la noche ponga su cabeça."

THE STAGE.

MESSRS. RUDYARD KIPLING and Wolcott Balestier's novel, The Naulahka—of which the first instalment appears in the Century for November—has been dramatised by the authors, and their three-act version was produced—to secure dramatic copyright—at a special matinée at the Opéra Comique on Monday last.

THE career of Mr. C. Fitch's silly piece at the Court Theatre is likely to be a short one. It has been condemned with wonderful unanimity by critics who are accustomed to differ. Mrs. John Wood, Mr. Giddens, and Mr. Righton—excellent comedians as they are—have failed to give it vitality, and we may soon expect to see their talents more worthily employed than they have been during the last few nights. A revival of "The Magistrate" is talked about—we know not with what truth.

MR. F. C. PHILIPS, the novelist, and Mr. Charles Brookfield, the actor, are the authors of the new farcical comedy called "Godpapa," which has just been produced with success at the Comedy Theatre. The piece has a good cast, including the Messrs. Hawtrey, Mr. Brookfield, Miss Lottie Venne, and Miss Annie Irish.

WHEN Mr. Thomas Thorne returns to the Vaudeville, about Christmas, a new three-act play by Mr. Haddon Chambers, will, in all probability, be the chief item in his bill. Mr. Thorne has been playing during the last week or two at the Grand Theatre, Islington; but he is now again going into the provinces—those provinces we mean which are more remote than Islington—for several further weeks.

MRS. OSCAR BERINGER informs us that a piece which she has recently completed will be produced by Miss Genevieve Ward, who has purchased the English and colonial rights. There is in the piece a strong part for Miss Ward, yet one somewhat out of her usual line; and Mr. W. H. Vernon, a very sterling actor likely also to be associated with the play, has also been remembered.

WE shall doubtless shortly have a further opportunity of speaking of Mr. Pinero's "Times"—the new comedy of which a copy has been placed in our hands. Mr. Heinemann is the publisher. This is the first of a series of Mr. Pinero's comedies—both farcical and serious—of which the publication is now announced, under the sympathetic editorship of Mr. Malcolm Salaman.

WE have heard with great satisfaction of the appearance of Mr. Wilson Barrett, at either Manchester or Liverpool—we forget for the moment which—in the character of Othello. This is, we take it, the first time that this admirable romantic actor—who adds to keen intelligence, breadth; and largeness of style—has assumed the part of the Moor of Venice. It is one to which we can readily believe he is well suited. His reading of the character would, we are sure, have originality and force, and he has all the physical means with which adequately to carry out his conception. We sincerely hope that Mr. Wilson Barrett—when he is next seen in London—may be beheld as Othello.

MUSIC.

THE AUTUMN OPERA SEASON.

It was a great treat to see and hear Mme. Deschamps-Jehin in the title-rôle of Carmen last Thursday week at Covent Garden. She has a fine mezzo-soprano voice, and acts the part to the life. It seems scarcely possible to have a more subtle delineation of the character, or more satisfactory singing of the music. Mme. Deschamps, by her finished performance of the "Habanera" at once established herself a favourite, and her success was maintained to the end. Mlle. Simonnet gave a naïve and charming rendering of the Michaela music, and more than justified the good impression already made by her Juliet. M. Engel, as Don José, proved himself an intelligent artist; and M. Lorrain won the good favour of the audience as the Toreador, although he scarcely gave full effect to his song in the second act. M. Jehin conducted exceedingly well: there may be a little too much arm movement, but he thoroughly understands the music, and, what is better still, feels it.

Gounod's "Philemon et Baucis" was produced for the first time in England on Saturday evening. This opera consisted first of one act, then three, and lastly two. How far the changes were to the advantage of the work it is impossible to say; but in the two-act version, one feels that the second act is not so good as the first, and that the end of the opera is, to some extent, tame. This gives cause for regret, for in opera comique, as in many other things, it is advisable to have the best last. The first act, in which Jupiter and Vulcan visit the humble dwelling of the aged and happy couple, is one of Gounod's happiest efforts. The freshness of the music, the charming orchestration, the skill with which the composer remains perfectly simple without ever falling into the commonplace, all combine to render this first act most fascinating. But when Jupiter, grateful for the hospitality offered to him, gives back youth to Philemon and Baucis, the music becomes somewhat pretentious. There is much that is pleasing and effective; but it is clever rather than inspired, and there are concessions to popular taste. The performance, however, was so excellent that interest was maintained to the close; and if the clever French artists cannot altogether conceal the difference in the quality of the two acts, they can make one forget it for the moment. Mlle. Simonnet as Baucis was quite delightful: her acting was graceful and refined, and her singing admirable. M. Engel as Philemon deserves also his share of praise. M. Bouvet represented the king of gods and men with becoming dignity, and M. Lorrain, as the limping Vulcan, added much to the effect of his piece. He received a hearty encore for "Au bruit des lourds marteaux," a song which has long been popular in the concert room. M. Jehin conducted with much ability. The charming entr'acte was played with great delicacy. The opera was preceded by the third act of "Faust." Mlle. Marie Pétrina, from Stockholm, made her début as Marguerita. She has a pleasing voice, sings with taste, but cannot as yet do justice to the part. Mlle. A. Janson was an excellent Siebel.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

A CONCERT-OVERTURE, "Tam o' Shanter," by Mr. Learmont Drysdale, was played for the first time at the Crystal Palace on Saturday afternoon. It is appropriately Scotch in character, spirited and well-written; but there is too much of the big drum. M. Emile Sauret gave a fine performance of Saint-Saens' new and clever Violin Concerto in B minor (Op. 61). The rendering of Raff's "Lenore" Symphony by the band under Mr. Manns's direction deserves special praise. The Andante quasi Larghetto, however, was taken at too slow a rate. Mme. Giulia Valda was the vocalist.

MR. PERCY NOTCUTT gave a morning concert at St. James's Hall on Monday afternoon. The programme, a long one, was made still longer by encores. Messrs. Santley, Ben Davies, and Barton McGuckin, who all sang exceedingly well, were well received. The last-named sang a "Hindu" song by Bemberg, somewhat quaint, but not particularly characteristic. Mr. Notcutt's new song, "Love's Omnipresence," is a simple ballad with a decided Scotch flavour. It was pleasingly sung by Miss Macintyre. This lady was also heard in the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria," but her rendering of the music was affected. Master Gérardy pleased greatly in some 'cello solos. Master Max Hambourgh played Liszt's "Rigoletto Paraphrase," a poor piece, and not at all suited to the boy's small hands.

M. PADEREWSKI gave a pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon, when every seat was filled, and many unable to get in had to content themselves with taking tickets for the real "farewell" concert next week. M. Paderewski's reading of Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata was interesting, but not sufficiently bold; this was especially noticeable in the opening movement. The "glissando" octaves in the Prestissimo were neatly played. He gave three of Mendelssohn's Lieder with charm and neat execution, but the first (Bk. 4 No. 4) with exaggerated expression. M. Paderewski's light touch and flexible wrist action were displayed to advantage in Schumann's "Papillons," but it was not a true Schumann reading. He was much applauded for his Schubert-Liszt "Erliking," though it was certainly not the best rendering he has given of this difficult piece. He also played some Chopin solos, studies by Rubinstein, and other modern compositions, and with immense success.

THE Royal Choral Society commenced their season in brilliant fashion on Wednesday evening. Mr. Barnby's choir almost persuaded us that Beethoven had not written impossible things for the voices. In some, however, of the most trying passages of the second part of the Choral Symphony, the effort which the sopranos had to make was certainly perceptible. But the choir sang splendidly. The vocalists—Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. Iver McKay and Watkin Mills—did themselves justice. The orchestra was reinforced, and the tone at times was very fine; the instrumental movements went well, and, of the three, the first was the best rendered. Mr. Barnby deserves special thanks for adhering to the composer's expressed wish in making no break after the slow movement. Beethoven's Symphony was followed by Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise. The instrumental movements were well rendered, and the chorus sang with wonderful power and brilliancy.

At the South Place Institute, on Sunday next, November 1, Mr. Carl Arnbruster will deliver a lecture, at 3.45 p.m., upon "The Life and Works of Richard Wagner," with vocal and instrumental illustrations; and the popular concert, at 7 p.m., will consist entirely of Wagner's music. Admission to both is free.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS
TO
THE ACADEMY.
(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	15	0 7 7	0 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17	0 8 8	0 4 4

Now ready.

LITERARY OPINION

For NOVEMBER, price 3d., contains:—
THE NEW CRITICISM.
LE MORTE DARTHUR. By Sir EDWARD STRACHEY, Bart.
ECHOES from a SANCTUARY. By the BISHOP of DERRY.
DR. MARTINEAU as a THEOLOGIAN.
BY SEA and LAND. (Illustrated.)
THREE NOTABLE CHURCHMEN.
NOBLE NUMBERS.
POETRY of the MONTH.
EXPLORATION and ADVENTURE. (Illustrated.)
PORTRAIT and MEMOIR of W. E. HENLEY.
A LITERARY GOSSIP.
BOOKS of the BOUDOIR.
A BATCH of NOVELS.
OLLA PODRIDA. (Illustrated.)
OUR CONTINENTAL LETTER.
IN THE ROW. &c.
Publishing Office: 25, Paternoster Square, E.C.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S LIST.

BY CLEMENT SCOTT AND CECIL HOWARD.
THE LIFE of E. L. BLANCHARD and REMINISCENCES. With Notes from the Diary of W. Blanchard. With copious Index, Photogravure Portraits, and Illustrations. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 32s. Athenæum.—"The only record approximating to completeness of the theatrical doings of the last half-century. The book is welcome." This day.

BY H. B. MARRIOTT-WATSON.
THE WEB of the SPIDER. A Story of New Zealand Adventure. Crown 8vo, in cloth, gilt, 6s. The Times says:—"We are quite unable to give any idea of the thrilling events. . . . it is magnificent." Black and White says:—"If the destiny of 'The Web of the Spider' be not great and immediate popularity, it will be thought no fault in the author or his book." The Publisher's Circular.—"We have read no story of adventure that has so powerfully interested us since the appearance of 'King Solomon's Mines.'" Ready.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY THE LORD BISHOP OF RIPON.
ECHOES from a SANCTUARY. By the Rev. HENRY WHITE, of the Chapel Royal, Savoy, Chaplain to the Queen, &c. Edited by Miss SARAH DOUDNEY, with Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt, 3s. 6d. Immediately.
The BISHOP of DERRY in Literary Opinion says:—"These words of a dear friend are steeped in the quiet tenderness of his life and death. The prefatory poem is exquisitely pathetic and musical."

At all Libraries on November 10th.

By JOSEPH HATTON.

THE PRINCESS MAZAROFF: a
Romance of the Day. 2 vols., in crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE POETS AND POETRY OF THE CENTURY.

Edited by ALFRED H. MILES.
In 10 vols. 608 pages each, fcap. 8vo, in buckram, gilt top, 6s. per vol.; in cloth gilt, gilt top, 4s. per vol.

VOL. II. ROBERT SOUTHEY to PERCY
BYSSHE SHELLEY. Just ready.

VOL. III. JOHN KEATS to LORD
LYTTON. Just ready.

FAMOUS WOMEN OF THE FRENCH COURT.

By IMBERT DE SAINT-AMAND.

Translated by THOMAS SERGEANT PERRY.

MARIE ANTOINETTE at the TUILERIES. Just ready.

Already Issued.

MARIE LOUISE and the INVASION of 1814.—Marie Louise; The Return from Elba; and the Hundred Days. Third Edition.—Marie Antoinette and the End of the Old Regime. Second Edition.—Citizeness Bonaparte. Third Edition.—The Wife of the First Consul. Second Edition.—The Court of the Empress Josephine. Second Edition.—The Happy Days of the Empress Marie Louise. Second Edition.—Marie Louise and the Decadence of the Empire.
Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, with Portrait, 5s. each.
Other Volumes to follow.

Ready this Day, a NINTH EDITION of JOSEPH HATTON'S POPULAR NOVEL.

BY ORDER OF THE CZAR.
Cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 2s.

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO.,
PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

FINE-ART GIFT-BOOK.	THE WOMEN of the FRENCH SALONS. A Series of Articles on the French Salons of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. By AMELIA G. MASON. Profusely Illustrated. Fcap. folio, cloth, 25s. These papers treat of the literary, political, and social influence of the women in France during the two centuries following the foundation of the salons; including Pen-Portraits of many noted leaders of famous coteries, and giving numerous glimpses of the society of this brilliant period, together with a detailed account of the organisation and composition of several historic salons.	A HISTORY OF PLAYING CARDS.	THE DEVIL'S PICTURE-BOOKS. By Mrs. J. K. VAN RENSSELAER. With many Full-page Coloured and Plain Illustrations. Cloth elegant, 25s. net. [Just ready.]
THE ADVENTURE SERIES. New Volume.	A MASTER MARINER: being the Life and Adventures of Captain Robert William Eastwick. Edited by HERBERT COMPTON. Illustrated, large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. "In some respects the best of the series, and certainly possesses a unique interest in the glimpse it affords into the way in which fortunes were made and lost by adventurous ship-captains in the palmy days of the old East India Company and the French wars..... His straightforwardness, shrewdness, and indomitable enterprise entitle Eastwick to a niche in the temple of English worthies."—Times.	THE CHILDREN'S LIBRARY. Post 8vo, fancy cloth, marbled edges, 2s. 6d. each.	NEW VOLUME JUST READY. THE CHINA CUP, and other Fairy Tales. By FELIX VOLKHOVSKY. Illustrated by Malischeff. RECENTLY PUBLISHED. THE BROWN OWL. STORIES from FAIRYLAND. By GEORGES DROSINES and other Greek Writers. Translated by Mrs. Edmonds. Illustrated by Thos. Riley. By FORDIL HUEFFER. 2 Illustrations by Madox Brown. "A little book of often excellent fun and fooling." Daily Telegraph.
By LIEUT. BIGELOW.	THE PRINCIPLES of STRATEGY. Illustrated mainly from American Campaigns by JOHN BIGELOW, Jun., First Lieutenant 10th Cavalry, U.S. Army. Fcap. folio, with 66 Diagrams and 32 Maps, cloth, £1 1s. "By clear definition, the free use of plans and diagrams, and numerous examples, the author does much to elucidate this fascinating study."—United Service Gazette.	By the Author of "How to be Happy though Married."	THE BUSINESS of LIFE: a Book for Every One. By the Rev. E. J. HARDY, Author of "How to be Happy though Married," &c. Square imperial 16mo, cloth, 6s. "A host of social subjects are treated of in a way at once wise and witty, and in a manner as delightful to read as they are pleasantly improving."—Daily Telegraph.
A Book for the Curious.	NAMES and their MEANING. By LEOPOLD WAGNER. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. "This extraordinary volume is almost unique in literature." Newcastle Chronicle. "A curious and interesting book..... The work is well done, and will instruct every one not specially a student of philology; while even students will take a pleasure in the work..... Its index makes it useful for reference."—Scotsman.	By Ascott R. Hope	ROYAL YOUTHS: a Book of Princehoods. By ASCOTT R. HOPE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. "Mr. Hope succeeds in imparting an interest such as will make any boy who reads the sketches wish to read more. The volume is well illustrated."—Scotsman.
By Dr. Birkbeck Hill.	WRITERS and READERS. Educational Lectures. By GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Pembroke College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.	The Lives Worth Living Series. Two New Volumes.	THE LIVES of ROBERT and MARY MOFFAT. By their Son, JOHN SMITH MOFFAT. Popular Edition.
The Cobden Club Prize Essay.	FACTORY ACT LEGISLATION: its Industrial and Commercial Effects, Actual and Perspective. The Cobden Club Prize Essay for 1891. By VICTORINE JEANS. Fcap. 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.	The Pseudonym Library.	FAMOUS MUSICAL COMPOSERS. By LYDIA J. MORRIS. Second Edition. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.
Life with the Incas.	TWELVE MONTHS in PERU. By E. B. CLARK. 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. "A sprightliness in her descriptive writing exercises a certain charm over the reader."—Dundee Advertiser.	Two New Volumes.	EUROPEAN RELATIONS: a Tyrolese Sketch. By TALMAGE DALIN. "Graphic and realistic."—Dundee Advertiser.
By the late Professor J. E. Thorold Rogers.	THE ECONOMIC INTERPRETATION of HISTORY; Lectures on Political Economy and its History. New and Cheaper Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. "One of the most original and suggestive works on economy either in English or in any other language."—Echo.	Two New Volumes.	SOME EMOTIONS and a MORAL. By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS. "Distinctly clever and full of the unexpected." Anti-Jacobin. 24mo, paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. each.

RUDYARD KIPLING and WOLCOTT BALESTIER'S New Novel, 'THE NAULAHKA: a Tale of West and East,' commences in THE CENTURY MAGAZINE for NOVEMBER. This PART begins the NEW VOLUME. Price 1s. 4d.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1018.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.

THE BOOK OF THE SEASON FOR BOYS.

- BAREROCK; or, The Island of Pearls. By Henry Nash. Illustrated by Lancelot Speed. Large crown 8vo, handsomely bound, gilt edges, 6s. [Now ready.]
"A story of shipwreck and adventure which is calculated to make Daniel Defoe jealously uneasy in his grave."—Evening News.
- LOVE-LETTERS of a WORLDLY WOMAN. By Mrs. W. K. Clifford, Author of "Mrs. Keith's Crime," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s. [Just ready.]
- DARK DAYS in CHILE: an Account of the Revolution of 1891. By Maurice H. Hervey, Special Correspondent of "The Times." With Fifteen Full-Page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. [Immediately.]
- MY MISSION to ABYSSINIA. By Gerald H. Portal, C.B., H.M.'s Consul-General at Zanzibar. With Map and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. [Just ready.]
- ANIMAL SKETCHES. By Prof. C. Lloyd Morgan, Author of "Animal Life and Intelligence," &c. A Popular Book on Natural History. Fully Illustrated by W. MONKHOUSE ROWE. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Just ready.]
- FRIENDS of the OLDEN TIME. By Alice Gardner, Lecturer in History at Newnham College, Cambridge. With Illustrations from the Antique. Square 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. [Now ready.]
- ANIMAL LIFE and INTELLIGENCE. The Second Edition of Prof. Lloyd Morgan's Important Work is now ready at all Booksellers. Demy 8vo, with Forty Illustrations and Diagrams, 16s.
- A BOOK ABOUT ROSES. By the Very Rev. S. Reynolds Hole, Dean of Rochester. The Eleventh Edition is now ready at all Booksellers. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
- THE FORUM for OCTOBER, contained, among other Articles, English Royalty: its Uses and Cost, by HENRY LABOUCHERE, M.P.—SOCIAL VERSE, by ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.—AN ENGLISH ESTIMATE of LOWELL, by the Venerable Archdeacon FARRAR.—See THE FORUM for OCTOBER. Price 2s. 6d.; Annual Subscription, 30s., post free.
- A TEXT-BOOK of MECHANICS, including HYDROSTATICS. By Richard Wormell, D.Sc., M.A., Head Master of the Central Foundation Schools, Cowper Street. An entirely New Work, specially designed to meet the requirements of the London University Matriculation and other Exams. Crown 8vo, illustrated. [Ready early in December.]
- THE MERCANTILE ARITHMETIC: a Text-Book for Use in Schools. By Richard Wormell, D.Sc., M.A., Head Master of the Central Foundation Schools, Cowper Street. [December.]

FRENCH BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS.

- VICTOR HUGO.—QUATRE-VINGT TREIZE. Edited by JAMES BOIELLE, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Senior French Master at Dulwich College. Authorised Copyright Edition. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.
- HENRY GREVILLE.—PERDUE. Edited by JAMES BOIELLE, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Senior French Master at Dulwich College. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.
- DUMAS.—MONTE CRISTO. Edited by Francis TARVER, M.A., Senior French Master at Eton College. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.
- FRENCH REVOLUTION READINGS. Edited by A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Camp Hill, Birmingham, and C. M. DIX, M.A., Assistant Master at the Oratory School, Birmingham. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. net.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

Publisher to the India Office.

Digitized by Google

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ROCKSTRO'S THE LAND OF THE LAMAS, by STEPHEN WHEELER. 399
PERRY FITZGERALD'S LIFE OF BOSWELL, by W. P. COURTNEY. 400
THE NEW EDITION OF THE GOLDEN TREASURY, by the Rev. H. C. BRECHING. 401
AMBER ALI'S THE SPIRIT OF ISLAM, by H. G. KEENE. 402
LYNCH'S MODERN ARTISTS, by J. A. NOBLE. 403
NEW NOVELS, by G. SAINTSBURY. 403
RECENT THEOLOGY. 403
NOTES AND NEWS. 403
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES. 403
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS. 403
TRANSLATION: HORACE, by SIR STEPHEN DE VERE. 407
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS. 407
OBITUARY: PRINCE LOUIS LUCIEN BONAPARTE, by J. S. C. SIBBLEY'S CENTENARY. 407
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS. 408
CORRESPONDENCE:
Notes on Herodotus, by Prof. A. Palmer, S. E. Winbolt, F. D., and F. W. Hall; "Tullio," by John O'Neil; "Lionel," by the Rev. F. D. Morice. 408
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK. 409
KIRCHMAYER'S HISTORY OF BYZANTINE LITERATURE, by the Rev. F. H. TOZER. 409
CORRESPONDENCE:
"Sunset," "Asen," "Water," by E. Sibree. 411
PHILOLOGY NOTES. 411
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES. 411
THE VICOMTE DE ROULLE'S GEOGRAPHY OF ANCIENT EGYPT, by W. M. F. F. 412
CORRESPONDENCE:
An Ancient Tombstone at Inishowen, by the Rev. E. McClure; The Legend of Shalmaneser II., by the Rev. H. G. Tomkins; The Chester Pigs of Lead, by F. Haverfield. 412
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY. 413
SLAVE NOTES. 413
THE AUTUMN OPERA SEASON, by J. S. SHEDLOCK. 413
MUSIC NOTES. 414

FOR SALE.—150 HOGARTH STEEL ENGRAVINGS. What offers?—Apply "HOGARTH," "Standard" Office, Fleet Street, Barnsley.

TWO LARGE STUDIOS to be LET in HOLLAND LANE, KENSINGTON, at Christmas, top and north-east lights, kitchen, 2 bedrooms, sitting-room, bath-room, and offices, or could be let singly. For further particulars apply to A. LANGDALE, 138, Brompton Road, S.W.

STUDIO (Furnished) TO LET, Broadhurst Gardens, South Hampstead; direct north light; terms moderate.—Address "W. L.," care Davis & Co., Advertising Agents, Finch Lane, Cornhill.

LESSONS given in ANCIENT and MODERN GREEK by a Native Professor. Terms moderate. Easy and successful method.—Apply to Messrs. FRANZ THUMM & Co., Foreign Booksellers, 24, Brook Street, London, W.

TO EDITORS, PUBLISHERS, AUTHORS.—Translations undertaken from the German, French, and Spanish.—History, Travels, Biography, Plays, Termislow.—Address LEWIS FIELD, 24, Allynby Road, Forest Hill, S.E.

WANTED, a CLASSICAL MASTER, at ST. JOHN'S TRAINING COLLEGE, Battersea, London. Preference to candidates in Holy Orders, or desirous of entering Holy Orders.—For particulars apply to the Rev. Canon DANIEL, Principal.

FARNBORO, HANTS.

A GENTLEMAN'S LIBRARY of upwards of 2,000 VOLUMES, will be SOLD by AUCTION, by Mr. H. J. E. BRAKE, on WEDNESDAY, November 25th, 1891, at 2 for 3 o'clock in the afternoon, in his SALE ROOMS, LYNCHFORD ROAD. Catalogues now ready, and may be had of the Auctioneer, "Lynchford House," Farnboro, Hants.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANSTAEENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary book illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

ORIENTAL TRANSLATION FUND.

NEW SERIES.

A faithful Translation from the Persian of MIRKHOOND'S "RANZAT-US-SAFA." Part I., Volume I., containing the Moslem version of our Bible Stories from the Creation of Genii before Adam up to the Death of Aaron.

Printed, Published, and Sold under the Patronage of the ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY, 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON.

Price Ten Shillings.

NOW READY, OF ALL BOOKSELLERS.

S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO.'S

ANNUAL VOLUMES OF ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINES, 1891.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND. One Penny Monthly. Charming Stories, Interesting Articles, Beautiful Pictures, Puzzles, Prize Competitions, Music. The Yearly Volume now ready, coloured paper cover, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.; gilt edges, 2s. 6d. "A delightful Magazine for Young Folks."

THE BRITISH WORKMAN. One Penny Monthly. Beautiful Full-Page Illustrations by Eminent Artists; Stories and Articles specially suited for the Working Classes, inculcating Religion, Sobriety, and Thrift. Short Biographies of eminent self-made men, &c. The Yearly Volume now ready, coloured paper cover, 1s. 6d.; cloth, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

THE BAND OF HOPE REVIEW. One Halfpenny Monthly. First-Class Large Engravings by the Best Artists; Stories, Poems, and Articles, with Religious and Temperance Teaching; Prize Competitions, &c. The Yearly Volume now ready, coloured cover, 1s.; cloth gilt edges, 2s.

THE FAMILY FRIEND. One Penny Monthly. An Illustrated Paper for the Family Circle, with bright Stories and Poems, and Helpful Articles for Mothers and Housewives; Music, &c. The Yearly Volume now ready, coloured paper cover, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.; gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

THE MOTHER'S COMPANION. One Penny Monthly. An Illustrated Monthly Magazine, containing, in addition to Serial Stories and Articles of general interest by Popular Writers, papers upon all matters relating to the Management of the Home. The Yearly Volume now ready, coloured paper cover, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.; gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

THE INFANTS' MAGAZINE. One Penny Monthly. Full of bright Pictures and Stories for the Little Ones; and Baby-Music to sing to them. The Yearly Volume now ready, coloured paper cover, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.; gilt edges, 2s. 6d. "An invaluable help in the Nursery."

THE FRIENDLY VISITOR. One Penny Monthly. Stories, Poems, and brief Articles, all pointed with Gospel teaching. Printed in Large Type, and well Illustrated. Admirably adapted for District Visiting purposes. The Yearly Volume now ready, coloured paper cover, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.; gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO., 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

NOTICE is HEREBY GIVEN, that the NEXT HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATION for MATRICULATION in this University will commence on MONDAY, the 17th of JANUARY, 1892.—In addition to the Examination at the University, Provincial Examinations will be held at Queen's College, Birmingham; University College, Cardiff; the Royal Medical College, Epsom; the Training College, New City Road, Glasgow; the Yorkshire College, Leeds; the School of Science and Art, Newcastle-on-Tyne; the High School, Oswestry; Mannamoad School, Plymouth; and the Grammar School, Portsmouth. Every Candidate is required to apply to the Registrar (University of London, Burlington Gardens, London, W.) for a Form of Entry, not less than five weeks before the commencement of the Examination. ARTHUR MILMAN, M.A., Registrar. November 2nd, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of NORTH WALES (BANGOR).

APPLICATIONS invited for the CHAIR of LOGIC, PHILOSOPHY, and POLITICAL ECONOMY, now vacant in this College, owing to the appointment of Professor Henry Jones to the Chair of Philosophy and Rhetoric in the University of St. Andrews. Stipend £200, with share of fees guaranteed up to £50. Applications, with 3 copies of testimonials to be in the hands of the undersigned, not later than WEDNESDAY, Nov. 25th. The new Professor will be expected to enter on his duties at the beginning of the New Year. For further particulars apply to W. CADWALADR DAVIES, Secretary and Registrar. Bangor, October 27th, 1891.

SCOTCH COLLEGE, MELBOURNE.

WANTED a GRADUATE with Honours to take the Sixth or Highest Class in CLASSICS and MATHEMATICS. The Members of this class have already passed the Matriculation Examination at the Melbourne University, but remain at school for one or two years reading Classics and Mathematics for Honours and Exhibitions at the University. Salary for the first three years will be £200, £250, and £300 respectively per annum. Letters of application, with testimonials, must be sent not later than 16th November, to Dr. MORISON, Glasgow Academy, Glasgow, who will furnish further particulars regarding the appointment.

FRENCH CONVERSATIONAL LESSONS.—A LADY, who has been engaged for eight years in conducting large public English Classes for la Ville de Paris, and also for the Association Polytechnique in that city, is now desirous of finding PUPILS who wish to continue their fluency of speech in the French language.—Address F. T. M. (French), 16, Breakspair Road, St. John's, S.E.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per Annum. MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY. Books can be exchanged at the residences of Subscribers in London by the Library Messengers. SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY. COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

MUDIE'S FOREIGN LIBRARY. All the best Works in French, German, Italian, and Spanish are in circulation. Catalogue of English Books for 1891, 1s. 6d. Catalogue of Foreign Books, 1s. Prospectuses and Clearance Lists of Books on Sale, postage free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED, 39 to 34, New Oxford Street, London. Branch Offices: 241, Brompton Road; and 2, King Street, Cheapside.

FURTHER RELIQUES of CONSTANCE NALEN; being Essays and Tracts for our Times. Edited, with an Analytical and Critical Introduction, and Notes, by GEORGE M. M'GEE. With Portrait and Facsimile of her last Letter. Demy 8vo, cloth, top edge gilt, 7s. 6d.

BICKENS & SOX, 1, Leicester Square, London, W.C.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE FAIRYLAND OF SCIENCE." MORAL TEACHINGS OF SCIENCE. By ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY (Mrs. FISHER). Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 8s.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, UNIFORM IN SIZE. THE FAIRYLAND OF SCIENCE. Twenty-third Thousand. 6s.; calf, 11s.

THROUGH MAGIC GLASSES: a Sequel to "The Fairyland of Science." 6s.; calf, 11s.

LIFE and her CHILDREN. Thirteenth Thousand. 6s.; calf, 11s.

WINNERS in LIFE'S RACE. 2 vols., cloth, gilt edges, 4s. 6d. each; or bound in 1 vol., calf, 14s.

SHORT HISTORY of NATURAL SCIENCE Fourth Edition. 8s. 6d.; calf, 14s.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED, 7s. The PHYSICAL GEOLOGY and GEOGRAPHY of IRELAND. By EDWARD HULL, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S. With 2 Coloured Maps and 29 Illustrations. Large post 8vo, cloth.

Professor Hull has brought out a second edition of his admirable and complete work on this subject, which has been completely revised to include in all that is stated the results of the most recent researches. These remarkable fresh points and features are shown very clearly, and the value of the book has been greatly enhanced. As a scientific text-book it is unique.—Irish Times.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR. COAL-FIELDS of GREAT BRITAIN; their History, Structure, and Resources; with Notices of the Coal-Fields of other parts of the World. Fourth Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the PHYSICAL HISTORY of the BRITISH ISLES; with a Dissertation on the Origin of Western Europe and of the Atlantic Ocean. With 27 Coloured Maps. Medium 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED, 6s. A CENTURY of CONTINENTAL HISTORY, 1789-1889. By J. H. ROSE, M.A., F.R. Hist. Soc., formerly Classical Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge. Lectured on Modern History under the Cambridge University Extension Scheme. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Maps and Plans.

Mr. Rose may be congratulated on the succinct, able, and clear summary which he has given.—Spectator.

EDWARD STANFORD, 26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, LONDON, S.W.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES. BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also, ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA, TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS. SOLE ADDRESS—11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

MR. MURRAY'S

New and Forthcoming Works.

THE BAMPTON LECTURES, 1891.—

THE INCARNATION OF THE SON OF GOD. By CHARLES GORE, M.A., Principal of Pusey House, Oxford, Editor of "Lux Mundi." Svo, 7s. 6d.

MY CANADIAN JOURNAL, 1872—

1878. EXTRACTS FROM HOME LETTERS WRITTEN WHILE LORD DUFFERIN WAS GOVERNOR-GENERAL. By the MARCHIONESS OF DUFFERIN. Portraits, Map, and Illustrations. Crown Svo, 12s.

* 100 Special Copies on hand-made paper, Svo, £1 1s. each.

JASMIN: Barber, Poet, Philanthropist. By SAMUEL SMILES, LL.D., Author of the "Lives of the Engineers," &c. Post Svo, 6s.

JOURNEYS in PERSIA and KURDI-

STAN; WITH A SUMMER IN THE UPPER KARUN REGION, AND A VISIT TO THE RAVAN NESTORIANS. By Mrs. BISHOP (ISABELLA BIRD). Maps and 60 Illustrations. 2 vols., crown Svo.

ESTHER VANHOMRIGH. A New

Novel. By Mrs. WOODS, Author of "A Village Tragedy," &c. 3 vols., crown Svo, 31s. 6d.

JAPANESE LETTERS: Eastern Impressions of Western Men and Manners, as Contained in the Correspondence of TOKIWARA AND YASHIRI. Edited by Commander HASTINGS BERKELEY, R.N. Post Svo.

BEGUN in JEST. A New Novel. By

Mrs. NEWMAN, Author of "Her Will and Her Way," &c. 3 vols., crown Svo.

THE COMBAT with SUFFERING.

By Major E. GAMBIER PARRY. Fcap. Svo.

BRAHMANISM and HINDUISM, OR

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT and LIFE in INDIA. By Sir MONIER WILLIAMS, K.C.I.E., Boden Professor of Sanskrit, Oxford. Fourth Edition, enlarged and improved. With Portrait. Svo, 19s.

LUX MUNDI: A Cheaper Edition.

A SERIES OF STUDIES IN THE RELIGION OF THE INCARNATION. By Various Writers. Edited by the Rev. CHARLES GORE, M.A. Fifteenth Thousand. Crown Svo, 6s.

EGYPT UNDER the PHARAOKHS. A

History derived entirely from the Monuments. By HEINRICH BRUGSCH-BEY. A New Edition, Condensed and Thoroughly Revised, by M. BRODRICK. With Maps. Svo, 18s.

PRIMITIVE CULTURE. Researches into the Development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion, Language, Art and Science. By EDWARD B. TYLOR, F.R.S., Keeper of the Museum, Oxford. Third Edition, Revised. 2 vols., Svo, 21s.

OLD ENGLISH PLATE: Ecclesiastical,

Decorative, and Domestic. By WILFRED J. CRIFFS, C.B. Fourth Revised Edition. Illustrations. Medium Svo, 21s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALDEMARLE STREET.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

(All ready, unless otherwise stated.)

THE PRINCESS TARAKANOVA: a

Dark Chapter of Russian History. Translated from the Russian of DANILEVSKI. With Engraved Plates, Svo, 10s. 6d.

"Whilst adhering so closely to facts that his book may be called a historical study, the author, by his skilful development of the more romantic incidents—e.g., Orloff's treacherous wooing—has produced a work which deservedly ranks high in Russian literature, and which cannot but give a high opinion of his powers. A striking production."—Seedsman.

NEW BOOK BY MR. HENRY GEORGE.

THE CONDITION of LABOUR: a

Reply to the Papal Encyclical on Labour. By HENRY GEORGE, Author of "Progress and Poverty." With Appendix containing the Encyclical Letter. 2s. 6d.

THE BROWNING CYCLOPEDIA. By

Dr. EDWARD BERDOE. Very thick large crown Svo (about 700 pp.), 10s. 6d.

"This, the most important and most generally useful Browning work hitherto published, is at length almost ready, and will be issued in November."

ARGENTINA and the ARGENTINES.

By THOS. A. TURNER, for many years resident in the Argentine Republic. Profusely illustrated with Plates and Woodcuts in the Text. [Shortly.]

RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS of the WORLD: Pre-Christian, Christian, and Philosophic. A Series of Essays by Eminent Specialists. Second Edition, entirely Revised and considerably Enlarged, containing more than Twenty Additional Articles. [Shortly.]

UNCOLLECTED WRITINGS of

THOMAS DE QUINCEY. With a Preface and Annotations by JAMES HOGG. New and Cheaper Edition, in 2 vols., crown Svo, each 3s. 6d.

NAVAL WARFARE of the FUTURE:

a Consideration of the Declaration of Paris; its Obligation and Operation. By THOMAS WARAKER, LL.D. 5s.

THE WAGES of SIN. By Lucas

MALET. New Edition (the Sixth) of this the most successful novel of the Year. 6s.

"Surpasses in psychological insight any English novel published since the death of George Eliot."

Canon MACCOLL, in the Contemporary Review.

DR. and MRS. GOLD: an Episode in the Life of a Cause. By EDITH A. BARNETT. 6s.

THE ANTIQUARIAN LIBRARY.

Each 3s. 6d.

1. MONUMENTAL BRASSES. By

Rev. HERBERT W. MACCLIN, B.A., late Hon. Sec. Cambridge University Association of Brass Collectors. Fully illustrated. Second Edition.

2. SYMBOLISM in CHRISTIAN ART.

By Professor F. E. HULME, F.S.A., of King's College, London. Fully illustrated.

THE DILETTANTE LIBRARY.

Each with Portrait, 2s. 6d.

1. DANTE and HIS IDEAL. By

HERBERT BAYNES, M.R.A.S.

2. BROWNING'S MESSAGE to HIS

TIME. By Dr. E. BERDOE.

LEGAL HANDBOOKS SERIES.

Each 2s. 6d.

1. LEGAL HANDBOOK for EXECU-

TORS and ADMINISTRATORS. With all necessary Forms. By ALMARIC RUMSEY, Barrister-at-Law, Professor at King's College.

HISTORY of TITHES. By Rev. H. W.

CLARKE, B.A. 6s.

"A scholarly and opportune contribution to the discussion of the Revenues of the Church. Shows considerable historical research, careful analysis of successive legislation, as well as the latest statistics."—Spectator.

"Cannot fail to be of use."—Review of the Church.

"The best and most trustworthy manual upon tithes."—Manchester Guardian.

STUDIES in HEGEL'S PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION. By Professor J. MACBRIDE STERRETT. 7s. 6d.

"Gives an excellent general view of the Hegelian position. For the student who wishes to know about Hegel, there is really no better book than this."—Saturday Review.

HISTORY of the BUCCANEERS of AMERICA. By Captain JAMES BURNEY, F.R.S. 100 pp., and 2 Maps, Svo, net 4s. 6d.

STANDARD AUTHORS SERIES.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co., PATERNOSTER SQ., E.C.

WHITTAKER & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

By GEORGE FINDLAY, Assoc. Inst. C.E., General Manager of the London and North-Western Railway.

THE WORKING and MANAGE-

MENT of an ENGLISH RAILWAY. Fourth Edition, thoroughly Revised and Enlarged. With numerous illustrations, crown Svo, 5s.

"This is a delightful book."—Engineer.

"Mr. Findlay's book displays so much knowledge and ability, that it well deserves to rank as a standard work on the subject."—Nature.

"A very interesting work throughout."

Railway Engineer. "Mr. Findlay's book will take a high position in the library of practical science."—Athenaeum

WHITTAKER'S LIBRARY OF POPULAR

SCIENCE.

Ready, square crown Svo, 3s. 6d.

THE PLANT WORLD. Its Past,

Present, and Future. By G. MASSEE. With 56 Illustrations.

Contents.—Plant Architecture—Chemistry and Physics of Plant Life—Protective Arrangements. Reproduction of Plants—Relationship amongst Plants—Fossil Plants—Geographical Distribution of Plants.

PICTORIAL ASTRONOMY. By

G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S. With 134 Illustrations, 4s.

"One of the most interesting popular treatises that we have had in our hands for a long time."—Daily Chronicle.

"An elegantly printed and profusely illustrated work, which is worthy of the author's reputation."—Athenaeum.

Ready, square crown Svo, 2s. 6d.

LIGHT. By Sir H. Trueman Wood,

M.A., Secretary of the Society of Arts. With 86 Illustrations.

Containing Chapters on (1) The Nature of Light. (2) Reflection. (3) Refraction. (4) Colour and the Spectrum. (5) Inference and Diffraction. (6) Spectrum Analysis, the Rainbow. (7) Lenses. (8) Optical Instruments. (9) Double Refraction and Polarisation. (10) Chemical Effects of Light. (11) Fluorescence and Phosphorescence, Index, &c.

Second Edition, Revised.

WOOD CARVING. By Charles G.

LELAND. With 86 Illustrations, many of them Full Page. 170 pages, fcap. 4to., 5s.

"I consider it the best manual I have seen."—Miss HONGSON, Instructor in Wood Carving at Manchester Technical School.

WHITTAKER'S LIBRARY

OF ARTS, SCIENCES, MANUFACTURES, AND INDUSTRIES.

THE PRACTICAL TELEPHONE

HANDBOOK and GUIDE to the TELEPHONIC EXCHANGE. By JOSEPH POOLE (Wh. Sc. 1875), Chief Electrician to the late Lancashire and Cheshire Telephone Exchange Company. With 227 Illustrations, 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

A FIRST BOOK of ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. By W. FERREN MAYCOCK, M.Inst. E.E., Author of "Practical Electrical Notes and Definitions." With Illustrations, Questions, Index, and Ruled Pages for Notes, crown Svo, 2s. 6d. [Ready.]

FOR ARMY CLASSES.

"ARMY" FRENCH EXAMINA-

TION PAPERS, set at the Preliminary Examinations for Sandhurst and Woolwich, from November, 1876, to June, 1890. With a Comprehensive Vocabulary by J. F. DAVIS, D.Litt., M.A., Assistant-Examiner in the University of London. Crown Svo, 2s. 6d.

"ARMY" MATHEMATICAL EXAM.

PAPERS. The Preliminary Examination Papers of Recent Years, with Answers. By J. F. DAVIS, D.Litt., M.A. [Immediately.]

A GRADUATED FRENCH EXAMI-

NATION COURSE. By PAUL BABBIER, Lecturer in French Language and Literature in the South Wales University College and the Cardiff Technical School, Examiner to the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, the Cambridge and Oxford Universities Syndicates, &c. Crown Svo, 3s.

"There are plenty of exercises on French and English words of the same origin, and on nearly all the catches which are the delight of examiners."

Modern Language Monthly.

"The book will serve as well as any, and better than most."—National Observer.

ELEMENTARY FRENCH

READER. By JOHN F. DAVIS, D.Litt., M.A., Assistant-Examiner in English in the University of London, and FERDINAND THOMAS, B.A., B.Sc., Assistant-Examiner in French in the University of London. With Vocabulary. Crown Svo, cloth, 160 pp., 2s. 11d.

In use at Merchant Taylors' School, Dulwich College, &c.

New Catalogues Post Free on Application.

LONDON: WHITTAKER & Co., 2, WHITE HART STREET, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

The very Best Gift-Book for Young Children.

THE ROSEBUD ANNUAL, 1892.

Nearly 300 Illustrations, price Four Shillings.

This charming gift book for the little folk of the nursery is now ready, and will be eagerly looked for by thousands of tiny toddlers who are engaged in the difficulties of A B—ab, C A B—cab, &c. The volume usually runs out of print in a very short while, so parents, uncles, aunts, and other relations and friends will do well to secure their copies in good time.

The ROSEBUD ANNUAL is bound in a handsome and attractive cloth case. Binding and paper are alike made to resist the wear and tear of the frequent handling the volume is sure to receive.

NOVELS BY AMELIA E. BARR.

In a variety of handsome cloth bindings, or bound uniformly, crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. each.

- She Loved a Sailor.* Paul and Christina.
- The Last of the Macalisters.* The Bow of Orange Ribbon
- Woven of Love and Glory.* A Daughter of Fife.
- Feet of Clay.* Jan Vedder's Wife. (Also a Cheap Edition at 1s. 6d.)
- The Household of McNeil.* The Harvest of the Wind.
- A Border Shepherdess.* Crown 8vo, paper cover, 1s.
- In Spite of Himself.*

FRIEND OLIVIA: a Quaker Story of the Time of the Commonwealth. By AMELIA E. BARR. Six Shillings.

IN THE PRESS.
A SISTER TO ESAU.
By AMELIA E. BARR.
Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Ready shortly, price One Shilling.
THE "CHRISTIAN WORLD" ANNUAL FOR PITY'S SAKE.
By MARY LINSKILL, Author of "Hagar," &c.

LONDON: JAMES CLARKE & CO.,
13 AND 14, FLEET STREET, E.C.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. V., No. 9. NOVEMBER. 1s. 6d. net.
Yearly Subscription (Ten Numbers), 13s. 6d., post free.

- CONTENTS.
- E. B. CLAPP on 'Mr. RAYFIELD'S DOCTRINE of the CON-DITIONAL SENTENCE.
 - E. W. B. NICHOLSON—NOTES on some FRAGMENTS of MENANDER.
 - T. AMPBELL—NOTES on the ANTIOPÉ.
 - W. M. LINDSAY—LATIN ACCENTUATION. (Concluded.)
 - P. SCHWENKE—APPARATUS CRITICUS to the NATURA DEORUM. (Continued.)
 - HOMERIC SCHOLIA. W. LEAR.
 - PLUMMER'S EPISTLES of ST. JAMES and ST. JUDE. J. B. MAJOR.
 - SMITH'S DICTIONARY of ANTIQUITIES. New Edition. J. E. SANDYS.
 - SHORTER NOTICES.
 - NOTES.
 - ARCHAEOLOGY.
 - SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS.
 - BIBLIOGRAPHY (FOREIGN).

DAVID NUTT, 27 and 27 1/2, Strand.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.; or cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.
Uniform with the Life and Work of Sir F. Leighton, Bart., F.R.A.
Sir J. E. Millars, Bart., R.A.; E. Alma Tadema, R.A.;
J. L. E. Messinger, J. C. Hook, R.A.;
Rosa Bonheur, and Birket Foster.

THE ART ANNUAL for 1891,
Being the CHRISTMAS NUMBER of the ART JOURNAL.

CONSISTING OF
THE LIFE AND WORK OF BRITON RIVIERE, R.A.
By WALTER ARMSTRONG.

With two full-page Etchings, "Circé," and "The Last Spoonful," and a Photographure of "Persepolis," and about 40 Illustrations in the Text.

London: J. S. Virtue & Co., Limited, 26, Ivy Lane, E.C.

EPPS'S
(BREAKFAST)
COCOA

GRATEFUL, COMFORTING,
MADE SIMPLY WITH BOILING WATER OR MILK.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW WORK BY FRANCIS AUGUSTUS HARE.
Now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, illustrated, 6s.

THE LAST of the BUSHRANGERS.
An Account of the Capture of the Kelly Gang. By FRANCIS AUGUSTUS HARE, P.M., late Superintendent of Victorian Police.

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

THE GAMBLER'S SECRET. By PERY FENDALL, Author of "Spiders and Flies," &c. 2 vols.

FROM HARVEST to HAYTIME. By MABEL HART, Author of "Two English Girls."

ONE REASON WHY. By Beatrice WHITBY, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," &c. 2 vols.

"Every page shows the mark of a fresh vigorous mind. The style is good—in some parts excellent. It is clear, expressive, and often rhythmic."—Scotsman.

PEGGY'S PERVERSITY. By Mrs. CONNEX, Author of "A Lady Horse-breaker," "A Line of Her Own," &c. 3 vols.

CHARLIE IS MY DARLING. By ANNE BEALE, Author of "Fay Arlington," "The Pennant Family," "Squire Lisle's Bequest," &c. 2 vols.

"Miss Beale's novels are always unexceptionable, and 'Charlie is my Darling' is full of interest and neatly drawn character."—Guardian.

MAHME NOUSIE. By G. Manville FENN, Author of "The Master of the Ceremonies," &c. 2 vols.

"A spirited tale of scenes and adventures quite off the lines of the usual novel plot. And is a very graceful heroine, perfectly good and sweet, as well as beautiful."—Guardian.

CASPAR BROOKE'S DAUGHTER.
By ADELINÉ SERGEANT, Author of "Little Miss Colwyn," "A Life Sentence," &c. 3 vols.

HURST & BLACKETT'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, each 3s. 6d.

THE AWAKENING of MARY FENWICK. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS. By MABEL HART.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER.
By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman."

MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE.
By M. E. LE CLERC.

A MARCH in the RANKS.
By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

A SELECTION FROM

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, PRICE 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX."

- | | |
|---------------------------------|----------------------|
| JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN. | CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE. |
| A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS ABOUT WOMEN. | A NOBLE LIFE. |
| A LIFE for a LIFE. | HANNAH. |
| NOTHING NEW. | THE UNKIND WORD. |
| MISTRESS and MAID. | A BRAVE LADY. |
| THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM. | STUDIES from LIFE. |
| | YOUNG MRS. JARDINE. |

BY THE AUTHOR of "SAM SLICK."

- | | |
|---------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| NATURE and HUMAN NATURE. | THE OLD JUDGE; or, Life in a Colony. |
| WISE SAWS and MODERN INSTANCES. | TRAITS of AMERICAN HUMOUR. |
| | The AMERICANS at HOME |

BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

- | | |
|------------------|--------------|
| DAVID ELGINBROD. | ALEC FORBES. |
| ROBERT FALCONER. | SIR GIBBIE. |

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

- | | |
|------------------------------|-----------------|
| ADAM GRAEME. | LIFE of IRVING. |
| LAIRD of NORLAW. | A ROSE in JUNE. |
| AGNES. | THIÈRE, JUNIOR. |
| IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS. | |

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

MR. BUCHANAN'S NEW TALE in VERSE

Now ready, small demy, 8s.

With Illustrations by Rudolf Blind, Hume Nisbet, Peter Macnab, &c.

THE OUTCAST: A RHYME FOR THE TIME.

By ROBERT BUCHANAN.

The Tagblatt (Berlin) says: "We have again to thank Robert Buchanan for a poem which stands out from the chaos of books and booklets. It is stimulating, spiritual, entrancing—really a 'rhyme for the time,' with its restless striving and its pessimism. We feel inclined to believe that the spirit of Don Juan and Cain speaks to us once more. Epigrammatic point, clever word-play, piquancy, home-hitting satire."

The Star says: "Buchanan is a spiritualist in a world of materialists. In this is his significance, and in this he stands side by side with the greatest poets of our time, with him who has just left us, and with 'the Master yonder in the Isle.'"

Vanity Fair says: "A very remarkable production. The audacity of its reflections is little short of astounding. The poem is a brilliant piece of work."

The Speaker says: "In the world of literature at the present day Mr. Buchanan's form is Titanic. His very sublimity has offended the small race of critics."

Anti-Jacobin says: "At times it reminds us of the great poets. Happy humour of thought and graceful beauty of phrase."

The Observer says: "The best work Mr. Buchanan has given us. It is plain speaking in a very pretty language, and with a good story to tell. Let it be said at once that the poem is written for grown men and women, not for children, and that it is a clever, interesting, and intelligent production."

The Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News says: "Occupied all day and much amused with reading Buchanan's 'Outcast,'.....I revelled in the work because, in the first place, it is dramatically interesting; and, secondly, it is so wild, vigorous, and surprising."—"Diana's Diary."

The Scotsman says: "Amazingly clever and wonderfully beautiful."

The Glasgow Herald says: "One of the most interesting of books. It will charm his friends and delight his foes. The latter will be grateful for the opportunities it affords them of brickeaving and slating.....The first tale is very beautiful, and shows that Mr. Buchanan's hand has lost none of its poetic cunning. The book contains a fine criticism of life and all its interests, and is phenomenally clever."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

New Edition, 6s., with 2 Illustrations by Macnab.

THE CITY OF DREAM

By ROBERT BUCHANAN.

Mr. W. E. H. LECKY, the historian, said, in responding for literature at the Royal Academy Banquet, 1888: "If it be said that this great master of picturesque English (Kinglake) was reared in the traditions of a more artistic age, I would venture to point to a poem which has only been a few weeks before the world, but which is destined to take a prominent place in the literature of its time.....I refer to 'The City of Dream,' by Robert Buchanan.....While such works are produced in England, it cannot, I think, be said that the artistic spirit in English literature has very seriously decayed."

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Shortly will be published, small demy, One Shilling, with Illustrations.

THE BUCHANAN BALLADS, OLD AND NEW.

Being the First Volume of

BUCHANAN'S POEMS FOR THE PEOPLE.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, PICCADILLY.

FRANK MURRAY'S
NEW BOOKS.

IN THE PRESS. READY IMMEDIATELY.

Second Edition, crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 5s.

THE BOOK-BILLS OF NARCISSUS.

An Account rendered by RICHARD LE GALLIENNE,
Author of "George Meredith," "My Ladies' Sonnets,"
"Volumes in Folio," &c.

Twenty-five Copies will be printed on LARGE
PAPER, imp. 8vo, buckram. Price on application.

"The pleasant touches of humour or pathos, the little strokes of irony, are so blended that you cannot detect any positive evidence of moral judgment, even when censure may seem to be implied. The whole record, in short, is harmonised, and artist and work are as one. The deliberate quaintness of style, as of a new Euphuus, or a Euphuus with something of the poetic grace of the old and a manner that is his own, is in perfect agreement with the theme.... Mr. Le Gallienne has achieved the end he had in view. He has made the 'rose of Narcissus to bloom anew.'"—Saturday Review, Article: "Narcissus Poeticus," Oct. 10, 1891.

"If an unusually fine literary instinct could make a solid book, Mr. Le Gallienne would be at no loss for an enduring reputation.... Nothing can be prettier than his pleas and persuasions on behalf of Narcissus and George Muncester."—"C. D. B." (Mr. BERNARD SHAW) in The Star, Sept. 12, 1891.

"His wayward moods, his innocent love affairs, his wanderings, his readings, his culminating grand passion, Mr. Le Gallienne renders his account of them all, and does it in a fresh and breezy style which suits his pleasant subject admirably. There is a special charm, too, about the graceful lyrics which sparkle here and there in the pretty little volume. In fact, Mr. Le Gallienne is an artist."

"The Baron's Assistant Reader," Punch, Sept. 19, 1891.

"Among the depressing brutalities which, on the one hand, are saluted as the outpourings of unparalleled genius, and the Cockney vulgarities which, on the other, are accepted as humour fit for innumerable editions, it is pleasant to come upon a booklet so delicate, so artistic, and so fanciful as 'The Book-bills of Narcissus.'.... I quote the delightful songs which George Muncester sings to his children.... Happy Geoffrey, Owen, and Phyllis, say I, to have such songs to wake them and lull them to sleep."

"R. C. L." in Illustrated London News, Sept. 26, 1891.

"To have read a book through once delightedly and then to commence it again is surely a test, be the reader who he may, of its interest, if not of its worth.... The book is so good that it is too short."

Review of Reviews (with Portrait), Oct. 15, 1891.

LIMITED TO 200 SIGNED AND NUMBERED COPIES.

CAPTAIN CASTAGNETTE. His surprising almost incredible Adventures. From the French of MANUEL (by AUSTIN DOBSON). Printed by Ballantynes & Co. on Large Paper manufactured for the purpose. With the Forty-three Humorous Illustrations by Gustave Doré on India Paper mounted in the Text. Royal 4to, extra cloth, morocco back, gilt top, 21s. net.

CONCLUDING VOLUME OF "THE MORAY LIBRARY."

LETTERS to EMINENT
HANDS. (Andrew Lang, Rudyard Kipling, R. L. Stevenson, &c.) By "i." 75 Large Paper, 8vo, 9s. net; 190 Small Paper, fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. All printed on Van Gelder's hand-made paper, edges untrimmed.

. For List of this Series apply to the Publisher. A few Volumes can still be had.

LIMITED EDITION ON LARGE PAPER.

DALE and its ABBEY (Derbyshire.) By JOHN WARD. Crown 4to, on Van Gelder's hand-made paper. Only 250 printed. Illustrated by the Author. Roxburghe binding, gilt top, 12s. 6d. net.

The Reliquary says:—"Mr. Ward has evidently gone thoroughly to work, and he has produced a book which will be of interest and use to many who may visit Dale and to others who may not do so."

The Antiquary says:—"Mr. Ward's book is the best and most thorough handbook of an abbey that we have seen."

FRANK MURRAY, DERBY, LEICESTER, AND NOTTINGHAM.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO., LTD.

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

The Only Authorized and Complete "WEBSTER."

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

An entirely New Edition of "Webster's Dictionary of the English Language," thoroughly Revised, considerably Enlarged, and Reset in New Type from beginning to end.

Medium 4to, 2,118 pages, 3,500 Illustrations, cloth, £1 11s. 6d.; half-calf, £2 2s.; half-Russia, £2 5s.; calf, £2 8s.; or in 2 vols., cloth, £1 14s.

"We believe that, all things considered, this will be found to be the best existing English dictionary in one volume. We do not know of any work, similar in size and price, which can approach it in completeness of vocabulary, variety of information, and general usefulness."—Guardian.

"The most comprehensive and most useful of its kind."—National Observer.

"We recommend the new Webster to every man of business, every father of a family, every teacher, and almost every student—to everybody, in fact, who is likely to be posed at an unfamiliar or half-understood word or phrase."—St. James's Gazette, February 8, 1891.

Full Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, on Application.

The LIBRARY of TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

Its History and Contents. By the Rev. ROBT. SINKER, D.D., Librarian of the College, with Illustrative Views and Facsimiles. Fcap. 4to, half-roan, 10s. 6d. net.

150 copies only, on hand-made paper, half-parchment, 15s. net to subscribers.

THIRD AND CONCLUDING VOLUME OF MR. LAW'S "HISTORY OF HAMPTON COURT."

A HISTORY of HAMPTON COURT PALACE. By

ERNEST LAW, B.A., Barrister-at-Law. Vol. III. ORANGE and GUELPH TIMES. Fcap. 4to, with numerous Etchings, Engravings, Maps, and Plans. 31s. 6d.

Vol. I. (TUDOR TIMES). Vol. II. (STUART TIMES). 21s. each.

This Volume concludes the History of the Palace down to the Year 1891, with an Appendix of all the occupants of Private Apartments for the last 130 years, with Notes on their Lives; and an Exhaustive Index to the whole work.

"It is full of interesting matter, and its value is not a little enhanced by the numerous engravings, etchings, maps, and plans, which illustrate and explain the text."—Times.

"It is impossible, wherever we open, not to find something entertaining, generally something new, and very often something which tempts us to read on indefinitely."—Saturday Review.

THE ONLY COMPLETE ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF EPICETUS.

THE DISCOURSES of EPICETUS. Arrian's "Discourses."

With the Enchiridion and Fragments. Translated, with Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE LONG, M.A. New Edition. 2 vols., post 8vo, printed on hand-made paper at the Chiswick Press, and bound in buckram, 10s. 6d.

Large-paper Edition, 2 vols., post 8vo, limited to 150 Copies, 21s. net.

THE POETICAL WORKS of ALEXANDER POPE.

A New Edition, Revised by G. R. DENNIS, B.A., Lond., with a Memoir by JOHN DENNIS, Author of "Studies in English Literature," &c. Aldine Edition, fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. With Portrait. 3 vols. [Vol. I. ready.]

The present Edition of Pope's Poems has been thoroughly Revised, and no pains have been spared to make the text as accurate as possible.

THE POETICAL WORKS of THOMAS GRAY.

English and Latin. Edited, with Introduction, Life, Notes, and a Bibliography, by JOHN BRADSHAW, M.A., LL.D., Editor of Milton's Poetical Works, &c. Aldine Edition, fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

This Edition of Gray's Poems is an entirely new work, and is believed to be the most complete as well as the most accurate yet published.

MRS. EWING'S BOOKS for CHILDREN. Fcap. 4to.

Illustrated, in Four Volumes, ornamental cloth binding, with Fictorial Design, 3s. each.

Vol. I. Six to Sixteen and Mrs. Overthway's Remembrances. | Vol. III. Melchior's Dream and the Brownies.

Vol. II. Flat Iron for a Farthing and Jan of the Windmill. | Vol. IV. A Great Emergency and We and the World.

HAPPY HOURS. Short Stories and Scientific

Articles for Young People. A new Edition of "The Parents' Cabinet." Edited by CONSTANCE HILL. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6 vols., each Volume complete in itself, and sold separately, 2s. 6d.

"Few persons, young or old, can read them without learning something from the contents."—Times.

"It must be a welcome addition to the family bookshelf where there are young people in the house."—Queen.

"Fathers and mothers cannot do better than buy, and boys and girls will find it difficult to discover pleasanter reading, than is to be found in 'The Parents' Cabinet of Amusement and Instruction.'"—Atalanta.

NEW VOLUME OF THE SHILLING SERIES.

ANDERSEN'S TALES. Translated by Caroline

PEACHEY. With the original Illustrations by B. Pedersen and E. H. Wehnert. Fcap. 4to, double columns, 1s.

BOHN'S HANDBOOKS OF ATHLETIC SPORTS.

NEW VOLUMES. 3s. 6d. each.

Vol. IV. RUGBY FOOTBALL, by HARRY VASSALL. ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL, by C. W. ALCOCK. BASEBALL, by NEWTON CRANE. ROUNDERS, BOWLS, SKITTLES, QUOITS, &c., by J. M. WALKER and C. C. MOTT. [Immediately.]

Vol. V. CYCLING and ATHLETICS, by H. HEWITT GRIFFIN. SKATING, by DOUGLAS ADAMS. With 188 Illustrations.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS.

Mrs. FRANK GRIMWOOD'S narrative of her ESCAPE from the scene of the recent MUTINY in MANIPUR will be published next week, in One Vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Illustrations, 15s.

BY MRS. J. H. RIDDELL.

A MAD TOUR; or, Rambles on Foot through the Black Forest. By CHARLOTTE E. L. RIDDELL, Author of "George Geith of Fen Court." Large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BY THE HON. MRS. RICHARD MONCK.

MY CANADIAN LEAVES: an Account of a Visit to Canada. By FRANCES E. O. MONCK. Demy 8vo, 15s.

A NEW VOLUME OF ROAD TRAVEL.

ACROSS ENGLAND in a DOGCART: from London to St. David's and Back. By JAMES JOHN HISSEY, Author of "A Tour in a Phaeton," &c. With 20 Illustrations from Sketches by the Author, and Plan of the Route. Demy 8vo, 16s.

BY THE REV. C. H. COPE.

CHARLES WEST COPE, R.A., a LIFE RECORD. By his Son, the Rev. CHARLES HENRY COPE, M.A. With Portrait and Facsimile Reproductions. Demy 8vo, 16s.

"No stimulus is needed to induce society to give a hearty reception to those reminiscences. Strong in memories of an art student's life, in gossip about Mr. Cope's pictures and those of his contemporaries; and in sketches of rustic characters noted for their poaching propensities."—Times.

BY M. LAVISSE.

THE YOUTH of FREDERICK the GREAT. From the French of ERNEST LAVISSE. By STEPHEN SIMEON. Demy 8vo, 16s.

"An important work which may be studied side by side with Carlyle."—Times.

New Novels at all Libraries.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NO RELATIONS."

CONSCIENCE. By Hector Malot
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN LONDON TOWN."

LOVE or MONEY. By KATHARINE LEE (Mrs. JENNER), Author of "A Western Wild Flower." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"An interesting and exciting story."—Observer.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MADAME DE MERSAC."

MR. CHAINE'S SONS. By W. E. NORRIS, Author of "A Bachelor's Blunder," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER A CHARM."

BEACON FIRES. By E. Werner, Author of "Success," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GODFREY HELSTONE."

PATIENCE HOLT. By GEORGINA M. CRAIK, Author of "Diana," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NEW SIX-SHILLING EDITIONS.

THE DEWY MORN. By RICHARD JEFFRIES.

MARY ST. JOHN. By Rosa N. CAREY. Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Cassell & Company's Announcements.

"The novel of the year."—National Observer.

Just published, price 31s. 6d.

THE LITTLE MINISTER.

By J. M. BARRIE.

The SPEAKER says: "The reader is held spell-bound, not by any cunningly devised artifices, but by the sympathy which is evoked in his breast with those whose fortune he is asked to follow."

The NATIONAL OBSERVER says: "Here is a book of genius. 'Tis a big word, and one not often used in this place. But we use it now with a full sense of the weight of it, and a clear perception of our responsibility."

The SUNDAY SUN says: "The plot is extremely skilful, but it is only one of many charms in this book. I cordially recommend it to all who love a vivid picture of the intense depths of a fervid community, and of the deep and the exalted in human emotion. . . . A fine, well-arranged, thrilling story."

Cassell's International Series

Consisting of Copyright Novels by the best English, American, and Continental Authors, published at a UNIFORM PRICE of 7s. 6d. NET, instead of the usual three-volume form.

The first Volumes issued in this Series will be published in a few days, and will consist of the following Works:—

THE STORY OF FRANCIS CLUDDE.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN, Author of "The House of the Wolf."

THE FAITH DOCTOR.

By Dr. EDWARD EGGLESTON, Author of "Roxy," "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," &c.

DR. DUMÁNY'S WIFE.

By MAURUS JÓKAI, Author of "Timar's Two Worlds."

Translated by F. STEINITZ.

* * Other important Volumes in this Series will be shortly announced.

MR. WALTER CRANE'S NEW WORK.

Now ready.

QUEEN SUMMER; or, The

Tourney of the Lily and the Rose. Penned and Portrayed by WALTER CRANE. Containing 40 Pages of Designs by Walter Crane, printed in Colours. 6s.

N.B.—A Large-Paper Edition (limited to 250 numbered Copies) has been produced, and is published at One Guinea net. Applications for Copies will be registered in the order received.

Ready in a few days.

CASSELL'S NEW FINE ART EDITION OF

ROBINSON CRUSOE. With

upwards of 100 Original Illustrations expressly executed for this Edition by WALTER PAGET. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

Ready shortly, demy 8vo, price 21s.

WATERLOO LETTERS: a Selection from Original and hitherto Unpublished Letters bearing on the operations of the 16th, 17th, and 18th of June, 1815, by Officers who served in the Campaign. Edited, with Explanatory Notes, by Major-General H. T. SIBORNE, late Colonel R.E. With numerous Maps and Plans of the Battlefield.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Price 10s. 6d.

WATTS PHILLIPS, ARTIST and PLAYWRIGHT. By Miss E. WATTS PHILLIPS. With 32 Plates.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "A MAN OF MARK."

Just published, price 6s.

FATHER STAFFORD. By ANTHONY HOPE.

"The book will be heartily enjoyed by every one who reads it, and will enhance its author's reputation."—Scotsman.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

DR. PARKE IN EQUATORIAL AFRICA.

MY PERSONAL EXPERIENCES in EQUATORIAL AFRICA as MEDICAL OFFICER of the EMIN PASHA RELIEF EXPEDITION. By THOMAS HEAZLE PARKE, Hon. D.C.L. (Durh.), Hon. Fellow Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, &c., Surgeon Army Medical Staff. With Map, Portrait, and numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Paul Hardy, Stanley Berkeley, and Lieut. Stairs. Demy 8vo, cloth, ONE GUINEA.

"Mr. Parke's journal fills up a distinct gap in the narrative of the expedition. . . . Every page of the book bears witness to the kindness of heart and clearness of head of Surgeon Parke."—Times.

"In its account of the experience of the expedition at I-oto and Fort Belo it has the field all to itself."—Daily News.

"A good store of valuable information is contained in Dr. Parke's graphic narrative, which, taken with painstaking observations of African animal and vegetable life, with elaborate diagnosis of local diseases and exact chronicles of their course under experimental treatment, and with introspective studies of native character, habits, and customs."—Daily Telegraph.

"A notable contribution to the record of travel in one of the last strongholds of savage man."—Journal Post.

"The best supplement to Mr. Stanley's book which has yet appeared."—Manchester Guardian.

EDMOND SCHERER'S ESSAYS

on ENGLISH LITERATURE. Translated, with a Critical Introduction, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. With Photogravure Portrait, crown 8vo, buckram, gilt, 6s.

"His essays are generally just and always interesting."—Times.

"Valuable, sound, and strong pieces of criticism."—Scotsman.

PREACHERS OF THE AGE.

IMPORTANT NEW SERIES.

Uniform crown 8vo vols., cloth extra, with Photogravure Portraits, price 3s. 6d. each.

Ready next Tuesday.

BY HIS GRACE THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY. LIVING THEOLOGY.

Ready November 24th.

BY THE REV. A. MACLAREN, D.D., of MANCHESTER. THE CONQUERING CHRIST.

Volumes will follow in quick succession by other equally well-known and representative preachers.

THE LIFE of CHRISTOPHER

COLUMBUS: an Examination of the Historical and Geographical Conditions under which the Western Continent was Discovered to Europe; with an Inquiry into the Personal History of Cristoval Colon. By JUSTIN WINSTON, Author of "A Narrative and Critical History of America," &c. With Maps and numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. [Ready on Tuesday.]

LORNA DOONE: a Romance of Exmoor. By R. D. BLACKMORE. New Popular Illustrated Edition. With 18 Illustrations by William Small. Square 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

"A beautiful gift-book is provided by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. in the shape of an elegantly bound, clearly printed, and gracefully illustrated edition of Mr. Blackmore's 'Lorna Doone.' This is likely to become a 'joy for ever' in many a cultured household."—Globe.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

NEW STORY BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

THE CITY of DREADFUL

NIGHT, and other Places, depicted by RUDYARD KIPLING. Author of "The Soldiers Three," "Plain Tales from the Hills." Demy 8vo, 1s.

A RED SISTER: a Story of

Three Days and Three Months. By C. L. FIRKIS, Author of "At the Moment of Victory," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"A thoroughly real and enjoyable novel."—Cont. Circular.

"The story is well conceived and skilfully developed."—Glasgow Herald.

THE SQUIRREL INN. By

FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange," "The Late Mrs. Null," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A pleasing little comedy, which may be read when we are a little tired of seriousness, and are glad to open a lighter page."—Daily Graphic.

A DARK PLACE of the EARTH.

By ALFRED CLARK, Forest Department, Ceylon. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

DR. HUGUET. By Ignatius

DONNELLY, Author of "Cesar's Column," "Ragnarok," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1891.

No. 1018, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Land of the Lamas: Notes of a Journey through China, Mongolia, and Tibet.
By William Woodville Rockhill. (Longmans.)

MORE than one ardent explorer, since the days of Huc and Gabet, has started on a journey to Lh'asa, only to be baffled and disappointed. English, French, Austrian, and Russian travellers have all tried in vain since then to reach the city of the Talé Lama, the Rome of Buddhism; and now an American may be added to the number of those who have failed to penetrate the veil behind which

"Far hence in Asia,
On the smooth convent-roofs,
On the gold terraces
Of holy Lassa,
Bright shines the sun."

And not one perhaps of Mr. Rockhill's predecessors set out with a fairer chance of success. He had resided in China for some years previously, making several excursions into the interior. His official position as Secretary to the United States Legation gave him an insight into the ways of Celestial diplomacy. He had read up the subject of Tibet ever since he was at college. At Peking he had cultivated the acquaintance of the Tibetan Lamas who from time to time visit the Chinese capital. He had translated portions of the Kandjur into English, and could speak Tibetan as it is spoken in Lh'asa. The governor of Shang, who is an abbot from the great Lamastery of Trashil'unpo, declared that he knew Mr. Rockhill must have sojourned long in Tibet; for how else could he have learnt the language? Nor was he unfamiliar with the customs of the country; and he did not hesitate to turn his knowledge to account. When a friendly Lama asked him if he would care to light a few lamps to the honour and glory of an image of the lord Buddha, he was quite equal to the occasion, and lit fourscore; so that the old women worshipping at the portals of the temple vouched for his piety and devotion. Last of all, Mr. Rockhill can congratulate himself on being endowed with certain personal qualifications for a journey in Tibet. "I remember once," he writes, "upon asking a Tibetan how he thought I should look, if dressed in his costume, he answered me that I would make a fine-looking Tibetan, as I had big ears and a big nose." With a pardonable touch of vanity, Mr. Rockhill adds that among the Tibetans large noses and eyes are deemed beautiful.

Yet with all these advantages, natural and acquired, the main object of the expedition proved unattainable. At Luser, in the Koko-nor region, a Khalkha Mongol, reputed to be an incarnation of Buddha, offered to take Mr. Rockhill to Lh'asa; but the plan fell through. Later on, at a place fifty days' journey from the holy city, one of the chiefs of Ts'aidam, who also seemed honestly anxious to help him, insisted that an escort of not less than twenty men would be necessary for the march. This frightened his followers; and as he was unable to engage others, he was now compelled to turn aside from his goal. Curiously enough, he was informed by the Ts'aidam chief that another expedition had reached Lh'asa, consisting of some seventy Russians, under an old man with a white beard. At first Mr. Rockhill thought that one of the late General Prejevalsky's companions had pushed on after his leader's death; but the mystery, if there be one, is still unexplained. Our traveller had now to form new plans: and he decided to strike southwards towards Assam, along a route which Prejevalsky had attempted to follow a few years before, and which the native explorer employed by the Indian Survey Department had traversed as far as Ta-chien-lu. In this resolution he was fortified, or at any rate his men were, by the vaticinations of another incarnate Buddha residing in the neighbourhood. The saint, a good-looking youth of nineteen, dressed in garments of yellow satin, having been presented with a razor, a looking-glass, and a cake of Pears' soap, not only prophesied that, barring accidents, the journey would be accomplished successfully, but even promised that so generous a donor should be remembered in his orisons.

Although Mr. Rockhill was never within less than four hundred miles of Lh'asa, his expedition was very far from being a failure. The careful and scholarly observations he made during the journey to Koko-nor, during his long stay in the vicinity of the Blue Lake, and when travelling through Eastern Tibet, throw a flood of light on the geography of a little known region. His notes supplement, and in some cases correct, the information obtained by previous travellers, and in particular by the Abbé Huc, by the Russian General Prejevalsky, and by the Indian surveyor known officially as the Pundit A—K. He agrees with Colonel Mark Bell, V.C.—no mean authority—in thinking that Prejevalsky has unfairly aspersed Huc's veracity, and he shows that on one or two occasions the General himself was inclined to exaggerate. But these are matters on which experts must employ themselves; by the ordinary reader the book will be appreciated as a vivid and picturesque description of a country which presents almost every possible variety of interest. At times, indeed, the route lay over a weary, desolate waste; but Mr. Rockhill's narrative is never dull for long. At one moment we seem to be watching the little company of toil-worn travellers, as they plunge through the snow-drift on some high mountain pass 16,000 feet and more above the level of the sea, or cross a deep swiftly-flowing river in tiny coracles that barely escape being swept away by the stream. Again they are riding quietly through a green valley, studded thick with villages; it might be a valley in Switzerland but for the strange people they meet, and the droves of yaks laden with brick tea, and the white and red walls of a Buddhist Lamastery rising in the distance. Or the stranger from the distant West may be elbowing the crowd at a country fair; or admiring the vessels of gold and silver, the images of gods, the illuminated MSS., and the satin vestments in the treasure house of the monastery of the hundred thousand images; or buying leaves off the famous tree at Kumbun, that grew more than five centuries ago from the hair of the great Buddhist reformer, Tsong-k'a-pa. And many quaint figures of outlandish folk attract the Western traveller's attention and are described in his book; tall Tibetans from Lh'asa, in dark velvet gowns trimmed with leopard's fur; wild-looking, red-capped men with dirty gaberdines of sheep's-skin and high boots, with long swords in their belts; Lamas in red cloth, and here and there one whose peculiar sanctity requires a dress of yellow satin, and a gilt and varnished hat, and who bestows his benediction on each passer-by.

Mr. Rockhill was asked many questions about India, and about the Buriat Kingdom, as the Lamas called Russia. Near Koko-nor he heard about the war between Lh'asa Tibetans and the Ying-gi-li, the English. The Lh'asa Lamas, he was told, had enlisted a number of men in Eastern Tibet and sent them to the front, bidding them not to be afraid of the British guns, as they themselves would be at hand to protect them by magical incantations. In the very first fight many of the Ch'ambo warriors were killed or wounded; upon which the survivors incontinently went home, leaving the Lamas to fight their own battles.

There is one important point on which Mr. Rockhill would appear to have gone astray. Since 1793, he tells us, the Chinese Amban, or political resident in Lh'asa, has taken an active part in the administration of the country. All the officials, Mr. Rockhill goes on to say, from the members of council downwards, obey his orders; and all affairs of state are submitted to him for his decision. He is responsible for the condition of the frontier defences, inspects the garrisons, controls the finances, and superintends the foreign policy of the country. He nominates the revenue officers; and his authority even extends to ecclesiastical appointments. Mr. Rockhill, it will be noted, does not speak from his own knowledge; he relies on Chinese statements and on a code of regulations which profess to define the Amban's status and duties. But, like some other writers before him, he has been misled by the rhodomontade and grandiloquence which Chinese officials are always prone to indulge in. More than ten years ago the late Mr. Colborne Baber pointed out that the Government of Lh'asa levied war upon other States without any material opposition, almost without any notice, on the part of the Chinese Government. Mr. James, in The Long White Mountain, writes:—"From the time of Kanghi, who was the first emperor to intertere effectually in Tibetan affairs, the control of China over Tibet has been only nominal." The Pundit A—K states that "Whenever any dispute arises between two parties of foreigners of the same nation at Lh'asa, it is decided by the chief men among them; but when the parties are of different nations, inquiries are conducted by the Tibetan rulers, who decide the case and, if necessary, assign punishment." But most of all I would refer to the facts and arguments adduced by the well-informed author of a paper on "The Chinese in Tibet," which appeared a year or two ago in the Times. The writer of this article shows conclusively that, although the Chinese Amban at Lh'asa "writes memorials and despatches on Tibetan affairs in a style which gives unwary readers the idea that he is master of the situation," his authority and influence may be regarded as infinitesimal. Mr. Rockhill quotes some of the despatches referred to as if they afforded trustworthy evidence of the state of things.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

Life of James Boswell (of Auchinleck). By Percy Fitzgerald. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

THE perseverance of Mr. Fitzgerald is beyond all praise. He roams through every kind of literature, both grave and gay; and the goods which he brings back in his "satchel" are not always confined to the "laborious nothings" which the satirist asserted were all that the widow of Mr. Thrale collected. He is blessed with a keen nose for a good subject for a biography; and after exhausting the sources of information which lie ready to his hand on the surface, he digests his materials into a shape which, from his frequent appearances before the public, must be considered to present sufficient attraction for a large circle of readers. Not infrequently he appropriates to himself a work on which some other scholar has been labouring quietly and unobtrusively for many years, with the disappointing result that, after adding day by day and month by month to a store of knowledge which he knows but too well is still deficient, he is anticipated in publishing by Mr. Fitzgerald.

A memoir of Boswell should, above all others, be a labour of love; for no other biographer has contributed so much to the general stock of information and pleasure. Generation after generation of student and idler have been introduced by him to the society of the most eminent and entertaining characters of that period, and have turned to his pages again and again with the certainty of finding therein both profit and pleasure. As a reward for all the happiness which he has imparted to others, poor Boswell has himself received nothing but obloquy. Croker was never so happy as in the moments when he was exposing to ridicule mistaken views of the chronicler whose work he was annotating; and Macaulay's essay has made the foibles of Boswell familiar to every lover of books. Now, after the lapse of many more years, the task of depicting this frail but loveable

Scot has been captured by Mr. Percy Fitzgerald. The discoveries which Mr. Fitzgerald has made, and for which he expects, as the Preface informs us, to receive the gratitude of the reader, are not very important; but for their appearance in print we do not hesitate to tender due acknowledgment. The account of Lord Auchinleck is the fullest in detail with which we are acquainted; and if it only serves to confirm our previous belief in the old judge's shrewd sense, and his quaint humour, we will not raise any complaint against it on that account. But even in this chapter on Boswell's ancestors there are sentences which cannot be accepted as accurate. One of his predecessors had married "a Dutch lady of the noble house of Sommelsdyck"; and this circumstance, we are informed on page 4, "naturally accounts for the Dutch education given to her son and grandson." In assigning this foreign alliance as the reason why the grim old Scotch judge and his jovial son were sent to Utrecht to finish their education, Mr. Fitzgerald has somewhat led his readers astray. Indeed he himself must, as he penned the opening lines of Chapter VI., have become aware that this previous explanation was founded on an error; for he is there perforce compelled to confess that "not a few British youths were at this period sent to Holland for their education," and among them are mentioned the names of Wilkes and Charles Townshend. Had he glanced but for a moment at the list of English-speaking students at Leyden, which Mr. Peacock some years ago issued under the auspices of the Index Society, it would have been apparent to him that, for a century or more, shoals of British boys were sent to Holland in quest of an education wider and more free from doctrinal or other influences than could be obtained at home, and that in the ranks of these young students the Scotch element largely predominated. When Boswell quitted the university of Utrecht to travel through Germany and Italy, he became, at Naples, closely allied in friendship with the notorious Wilkes, whose acquaintance he seems to have had no difficulty in making. They soon parted, but Wilkes was not allowed to escape so quickly from the clutches of the hungry Scot. Letter after letter was sent after him; and, as they have never been published, says Mr. Fitzgerald, they are now given at length. Sprightly and genial are these letters of the volatile Boswell, and his biographer has done wisely in reproducing them in their entirety. The spirits of the traveller were at this stage in his life gloriously exuberant, and after his return from visiting Paoli at Corsica an enthusiastic letter was sent by him to Rousseau. This has now been unearthed by Mr. Fitzgerald from a volume of minor and unedited tracts by the French philosopher, and has also been printed at large. Boswell was then making his way back to England, and with his usual fondness for strange acquaintances he undertook the task of escorting to London Rousseau's mistress. Though nothing could permanently damp the enthusiasm of this travelled Scot, there were many occasions on which he suffered from a severe depression of spirits. It would have been strange indeed had it been otherwise, for throughout his life the unhappy man was experiencing disappointment after disappointment and was sinking deeper and deeper into the mire of debt. On one of these temporary periods of gloom he resolved upon relieving his mind by describing for the world at large the symptoms of his sadness. To the London Magazine he therefore contributed a series of essays, not uncheery in treatment, in which he depicted himself as "The Hypochondriac," and exposed to the gaze of the public most of his favourite vices and the results to which they led. From these, too, as but little known, Mr. Fitzgerald has made large extracts. Boswell's offspring are described with the same plethora of matter that has been lavished on his father. His two sons, Alexander and James, were men of talent, and their lives are rightly chronicled; but the narrative extends to the unhappy daughter, whose appeals for pecuniary help are set out at some length in the new Life of Romeo Coates, and to descendants more distant and more obscure.

The faults of these volumes are never absent from the reader's attention. They stand out in glaring prominence and mar his enjoyment at every turn. The plan of the work is conceived on far too elaborate a scale. Whole dialogues are conveyed from Boswell's immortal work, and many of them have but little bearing on the career of Boswell himself. The quarrels of Boswell with Miss Seward, Mrs. Piozzi, and Sir John Hawkins have long since ceased to excite the interest which could justify their reappearance at the extreme length devoted to them by Mr. Fitzgerald. If the differences of rival biographers of a century ago have not continued to retain any charm, the enmities of editors of more recent days were never invested with any attraction for the world at large. The "mare's nests" of Mr. Croker have been exposed, it is stated in a note of some length in vol. II. pp. 4-5, by Mr. Fitzgerald himself in another work; but he undertakes the same dreary task again in these volumes. This in itself would be enough, and more than enough, for ordinary biographers, but in page after page of large type and small type he foists upon us his differences with Dr. Birkbeck Hill. Dissertations of this character have but little relevance to the life of Boswell himself; but by excursions like these a biography which might have been condensed into a single volume, is diluted through two volumes of about 300 pages apiece. Unfortunately, too, the fatal taint of inaccuracy which has vitiated many a previous compilation is not wanting from this, the last labour of Mr. Fitzgerald. It begins with an opinion of "Dean Boyd in his reminiscences;" but the sole volume of reminiscences associated with the name of Boyd was composed by an author who, far from being in clerical orders, had been steeped in business through all the active years of his life. Take, again, the dates given on pp. 6 and 7 in the career of Lord Auchinleck. A letter from him to the Duke of Newcastle, expressive of his eagerness for promotion is dated June 19, 1755. In this application, records the biographer, "he did not succeed;” but the following words, strange to say, are that “in 1755 he was more fortunate.” Another sentence opens with the statement that “six years later this attachment to his Grace fell under suspicion”; but the letter, three portentous pages in length, given in support of this statement, is dated, “March 20, 1760.” In the same way the date of the suicide of Boswell’s companion in early life, Captain Erskine, is given as September, 1793; but, immediately afterwards, the letter of Burns, describing his distress at the news of the death, is said to be dated in October, 1791. A biographer who has written so much on this century as Mr. Fitzgerald has done should not have quoted (I. 82) a well-known politician’s name, as “banker Gascoigne”; nor should a student who has edited two editions of Boswell have asserted that the notes of Dr. Johnson’s conversation, which were jotted down by the Irish Dr. Campbell, found their way to New Zealand, and were printed there.

The fairest estimate which can be framed on these volumes describing the life of poor Jemmy Boswell is that some portions of their contents may serve to amuse an idle hour, but that they cannot be accepted as a serious addition to the literature bearing on the last century.

W. P. COURTNEY.

The Golden Treasury of the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language.
Revised and Enlarged. (Macmillans.)

For thirty years this little book, produced under a happy star by a most fortunate conjunction of editor, publisher, and printer, has been, as its Preface anticipated, “a storehouse of delight” to thousands of Englishmen, while to many thousands more it is not too much to say that it has represented English poetry. The promise therefore of a “revised and enlarged” edition provoked in many serious breasts conflicting emotions. On the one hand there were, no doubt, many English lyrics as good as many already in the volume, and not a few better, and there was hope that these might find their place; on the other hand, the idiosyncrasy of the editor, plainly enough visible, notwithstanding the advice of the Poet Laureate and the two other friends of “independent and exercised judgment,” might in thirty years have developed into extravagance. Possessors of the 1883 edition were not among the least fearful; for that edition was furnished with an Appendix which, while it contained two more of Shakspeare’s songs, Sidney’s sonnet to Sleep (so curiously amplified by Shakspeare in “Macbeth”), another verse from Vaughan, and, not least welcome, Cowper’s “Castaway,” contained also yet another sonnet of Wordsworth, some stanzas from C. Smart’s “David,” an infantile prattling of Blake, and an insufferably bad poem of Wolfe’s “To Mary.” The appearance of the present volume shows that both hopes and fears were warranted.

To take account first of the new-comers. Coleridge’s “Kubla Khan” arrives late, but never too late; Vaughan fills another well-earned place with “They are all gone into the world of light”; Marvell two more places with “The Picture of Little T. C.” and a passage from “The Nymph and Fawn”; Cowley another with some stanzas from his fine elegy on Mr. Hervey; that chaste gentleman, W. Habington, is presented for the first time, which is no more than he deserves; Lord Essex takes the place of Lord Oxford, either being welcome and neither much missed; Greene replaces Constable, and Lord Rochester the Viscount St. Albans, both decidedly to our loss; the clergy are joined by Mr. Norris of Bemerton and by Mr. Lyte, the latter of whom, whatever his rank in The Book of Praise does not show to advantage in the present company; Mary Lamb is admitted to soothe the solitude of Mrs. Barbauld amid the throng of Scots poetesses; but undoubtedly the lion of the party is Dr. Campion, who appears out of the unknown with no less than ten poems.

The total omission of Sidney’s sonnets from the old Golden Treasury was one of the inexplicable things about it, especially when room was found for four sonnets by Drummond; and the mystery was not lifted by the note appended in 1883 to the sonnet then added: “After or beside Shakspeare’s sonnets, his ‘Astrophel and Stella,’ in the editor’s judgment, offers the most intense and powerful picture of the passion of love in the whole range of our poetry.” Exactly; but why then print Drummond “beside Shakspeare” instead of Sidney? Sidney is now represented by three sonnets, the stanzas “My true love hath my heart,” and the song “The nightingale as soon as April bringeth.” The present reviewer would have preferred the first verse of this song without the second, which is disagreeable in a way no other song of Sidney’s is disagreeable, although they are, many of them, less in modern taste than the sonnets. Another great name long ignored has at last received attention more proportionate to its deserts, but it has not received justice. In the appendix to the 1883 edition appeared Blake’s “Song of Infant Joy”; besides this, we now have “Never seek to tell thy love,” “Sleep, sleep, beauty bright,” and “Whether on Ida’s shady brow.” For the last of these lovers of Blake will return thanks; but they will as certainly ask what the others are doing in a collection of English lyrics, from which “My silks and fine array,” “How sweet I roamed from field to field,” “And did those feet in ancient times,” and “The sick rose,” are banished; and they will agree that it is better to ignore a poet than thus to misrepresent him. A third name we must notice at somewhat greater length is Campion’s. Some readers of the new Golden Treasury may have expected to find Campion’s poems in the same key as Southwell’s, considering him to be the famous Jesuit. But he is another person altogether, a writer of songs and song music, whose poems were exhumed by Mr. Arthur Bullen some two years since, and promptly reburied in a privately printed edition.* Certain of his songs take a high place among English lyrics, others are good to sing and no more, others begin enchantingly and come to nothing. Prof. Palgrave has counted Campion’s masterpieces on the fingers of both hands! “Of Neptune’s empire let us sing,” well deserves its place; “The man of life upright” is one of our few successful Horatian odes; and “Turn back, yon wanton flyer” might stand as a successful attempt with a difficult subject; but we should have preferred “Kind are her answers”; “Follow your saint, follow with accents sweet”; “Come, O come, my life’s delight”; “Silly boy, ’tis full moon yet”; “Give beauty all her right”; and “Never weather-beaten sail more willing bent to shore,” before the other seven now printed. For “When thou art home to shades of underground” is (pave our friend, Mr. Bullen) in falsetto; “Never love unless you can bear with all the faults of man” is amusing vers de société, but not poetry; “Follow thy fair sun, unhappy shadow,” is an excellent conceit to start with, but it proceeds to speak of a shadow as “scorched black” by the sun, which is not to be borne. The other selected poems are pretty, but not distinguished enough for the Golden Treasury.

* Since this was written Mr. Bullen has republished his delightful Lyrics from the Song-books of the Elizabethan Age, which includes a very large selection from Campion.

From Mr. Bullen’s other collections a great deal has been gathered. “Fain would I change that note,” “I saw my lady weep,” “Though others may her brow adore,” are up to the level of the anonymous verse already in the Treasury, such as “Love not me for comely grace” and “My love in her attire doth show her wit.” But there are many pieces which fall below this level. Such verses as:

“*Out of thy golden quiver
Take thou thy strongest arrow
That will through bone and marrow;*”

or,

“*Viewing both alike hardly my mind supposes
Whether the roses be your lips, or your lips the roses;*”

or,

“*Love in thy youth, fair Maid, be wise;
Old Time will make thee colder,
And though each morning new arise,
Yet we each day grow older;*”

or,

“*When thou has taken thy repast
Repose my babe on me.*”

Such verses as these would pass in a song, but they have no business in an anthology of English poetry. Why has Prof. Palgrave admitted them?

Some light is thrown on this question by the final note in this edition. We are there told that a certain little Scots song has been set by a gentleman “to an air worthy of its beauty.” Now the fact that Prof. Palgrave has not thought it beside the mark to print that note seems to show that he does not habitually look at songs purely as literature, but also as words for music. And this would explain, further, how “Rule Britannia” came to be in the volume, as well as “Sally in our Alley”—for both these performances, impossible to read, become quite tolerable, nay, laudable, when they are sung. But this can hardly be the whole explanation. Further light is thrown by a passage in the Summary to Book i. (last edition):

“great excellence . . . has from the beginning of things been even more uniform than mediocrity, by virtue of the closeness of its approach to nature: and so far as the standard of excellence kept in view has been attained in this volume, a comparative absence of extreme or temporary phases in style, a similarity of tone and manner, will be found throughout: something neither modern nor ancient, but true and speaking to the heart of man alike throughout the ages.*

This is undoubtedly well said, and there can be no doubt also that The Golden Treasury, as a popular anthology, has largely profited from a rigorous application of the principle. For instance, scholars may cry out against the exclusion of Donne; but Donne's poems are great in spite of great defects, and there is good reason for excluding them.* But it is not difficult to see how a principle of this kind admits of exaggeration—how it might even degenerate into a preference for commonplace. There were not wanting signs of more than the possibility of this in the first edition. If most students were asked to represent Carew by a single poem, it would certainly be by "Ask me no more," a poem of striking beauty both of rhythm, phrase, and fancy. Prof. Palgrave represented him, and still represents him, by "He who loves a rosy cheek," which is commonplace in all these particulars. But the most striking evidence of the perversion of the principle in the old volume was the disproportionate abundance of selections from Wordsworth, Campbell, Scott, and Moore, and the minor Scotch poets. There were forty-one poems of Wordsworth! Now, we assert that at least a dozen of these have nothing to recommend them but the commonplaceness of their sentiment. Those we mean are the following: "Why art thou silent, is thy love a plant?" "Surprised by joy, impatient as the wind," "When I have borne in memory what has tamed," "Ethereal minstrel, pilgrim of the sky," "Degenerate Douglas, O th' unworthy lord," "Yes, there is holy pleasure in thine eye," "Tax not the royal saint with vain expense," "Yarrow unvisited," "Yarrow visited," "The two April mornings," "The fountain," "Simon Lee," and "Ruth." If these had been cancelled, not only would the book have been lightened, but the reputation of Wordsworth would have been raised among the general public. But, incredible as it may seem, two more poems are now added, "Lucy Gray," and "Glen Almain;" and the sonnet on the Trosachs, admitted in 1883 to an Appendix, is now thrust between "O world, O life, O time," and "My heart leaps up," two poems whose juxtaposition Matthew Arnold once thought so happy. Further, as if to point the moral of commonplaceness more unmistakably, additions to Wordsworth are made room for by excisions from Shelley. "Rarely, rarely comest thou" we do not much regret, but "A widow bird," how did that offend?—a poem as simple as the simplest of Wordsworth's, but of a most haunting music. We pray that it may haunt Prof. Palgrave.

* Donne's name has found a place, in this edition, by reason that the poem on "Absence" from Davison's Rhapsody is now very properly assigned to him. There is an unfortunate misprint or emendation in the last verse of this poem.

The third poem of Shelley's to make way is "Life of Life! Thy lips enkindle!"

These remarks are called forth by the editor's hope expressed in the last sentence of his Introduction that "so far as in him lies, a complete and definitive collection of our best lyrics, to the central year of this fast closing century, is now offered." We venture to think that Prof. Palgrave might in a last revision, with great advantage to his book, draw the limits still closer. And in the hope that he will not yet take his hand from the table, we will point out in conclusion several small things in the notes, so excellent in general, which would bear correction. And first, it cannot fail to strike the reader with surprise and amusement that the poems originally excluded, as we are told not without consideration, and afterwards admitted, are far more highly praised than those about which there was never any doubt. The note on Marvell's "Picture of Little T. C." is one example, that on the "Girl and Fawn" another; that on Collins' "Ode to Simplicity" another; that on Mr. Lyte another. The parallel between Keats and Wolfe (p. 263) suggests Plutarch less than his imitator Fluellen; though it must be admitted that Prof. Palgrave has made it less ridiculous than one could have thought possible by printing three of the worst of Keats's sonnets. Again, the note on Blake (p. 156) can hardly be serious. Amongst the old notes, notwithstanding the very great improvements made in 1883, there are still a few, troublesome to the mind's eye, which might conveniently be removed. Is it necessary to tell us that "waly" is connected with "caterwaul" (p. 104); or, that "Hohenlinden" means "high lime trees" (p. 243), considering that no explanation is given, for instance, of Blenheim? Might not the little puff of Wordsworth's "Cuckoo" follow into retirement that on Gray's Elegy? At least, there seems no need now to speak of Wordsworth as its "illustrious author." And might not an attack on optimists in the Summary to Book iv., seeing that it has grown gradually more respectful, at last be withdrawn (like the attack on the French Revolution), not because the professor is not in the right, but because he is treating of matters outside his profession. And, lastly, is it not time that a certain famous note, which pronounces a certain pleasant little song to be "worthy of the Ancients, and even more so," should be reconsidered, as the world is still unconvinced?

H. C. BECHING.

The Spirit of Islam. By S. Ameer Ali. (W. H. Allen.)

The learned author of this book is a barrister, a Master of Arts, and judge of the Calcutta High Court. He thus furnishes an example of the best side of English influence in Asia. As under the Roman Empire the provincials learned to adopt the language, manners, and even the philosophy of their distant mistress, and—with a certain native element of their own—became a new breed of Romans; so it almost certainly appears that the educated men (and even women) of India are being affected in the present day. Hitherto, indeed, the influence has been mostly confined to the Hindus, but in the book before us we have an instance how far the spirit of the time may be extending. Hinduism is in its nature eclectic, and its followers—however exclusive and sometimes Pharisaic they may be—only too readily adopt any fashion that may suit a temporary purpose: a Hindu often practises his native rites in his own family while professing the broadest liberality abroad. But in the creed of the Muslim there is more depth and more conviction than this; and so long as a Mahometan believes that the Koran is of divine and conclusive authority, he cannot have any real sympathy with Western civilisation. The consequence has been that over fifty millions of British subjects have been living, hitherto, in a state of social and political excommunication; and it can hardly be necessary to say how serious a loss of strength that means for the Empire.

These facts give a peculiar value to Mr. Ameer Ali's book, which is intended to show that both Muslims and non-Muslims have failed to understand the true nature and scope of Islam; while it undertakes to furnish a kind of Eirenikon that may enable both classes to live and work together as good citizens. The author's own position is a type and illustration of his teaching; for he comes before us as a highly educated British public servant; the husband, moreover, of one wife, an educated lady, to whose judgment the book is publicly submitted by an appropriate inscription. Whether it is orthodox Mahometanism must be a question for the author's co-religionists: it will probably not escape the rocks and shoals which usually beset the navigation of Broad Church pilots. But this we may safely say: that if some such system is not capable of being worked as a reconciliation between Islam and progress, so much the worse for Islam. Whether or not the reader passes by the first half of the book (which is purely historical), he should attentively examine the questions raised in the last 300 pages, noting especially that many of the faulty views and unsocial precepts often considered as essentials of the Muslim creed are here represented, by an expert, as due to the state of the communities among which it arose, like those of a kindred creed given to the Jews through Moses "by reason of the hardness of their hearts."

The historical value of the book, apart from these special themes, is very considerable. From a cultivated and kindly standpoint, the author shows how much of the schismatic feuds in early Islam were due to chronic disputes in desert life; how a spirit of literature and science, never wholly wanting, became developed under the Abbassid caliphs; and how, alike at Bussora and in Spain, the spread of learning immediately led to liberal and rational religious doctrines. The book has an excellent introduction, a chronological list of the various dynasties of Eastern caliphs, and an index of names. Those who care nothing for the polemics of the matter may still find profit and pleasure from the narrative portion, while to others it may suggest a new and important view of the development of the human mind. For it may lead them to inquire whether manners may not influence religion at least as much as—according to the general opinion—religion influences manners.

It may be added that all cannot expect to find the whole of the complicated details equally established. Many may be of opinion that the Prophet gave too much countenance to slavery, sexual indulgence, and religious warfare; and the author's spirited and intelligent polemic will not, perhaps, materially alter that conclusion. It is, indeed, to little purpose that he contends that Christians have done all these things. The point which this sort of argument fails to affect may thus be stated:—While non-Muslim communities have generally denounced and gradually destroyed the excess of these evils, Islam has preserved and enhanced them, until what may have been originally tolerated abuses have grown into characteristic features. The Moors of Spain may have been more civilised than contemporary Christians; but it is certain that, at the present day, polygamy and nameless vice, bigotry, and slave-hunting are more systematically practised under the Crescent than under the Cross.

Nevertheless, the book is extremely noticeable; even though the candid reader must lay it down with an impression that the author is somewhat of a Rationalist, and his school a sect of Dissent.

H. G. KEENE.

Modern Authors. A Review and a Forecast.
By Arthur Lynch. (Ward & Downey.)

THIS is a book of much cry and little wool. The cry begins to make itself heard in the first sentence of the Preface, where Mr. Lynch describes his work as being "less a criticism of the productions of others than a proposal towards introducing new principles of criticism." Seeing that from the days of Aristotle to those of M. Hennequin and Mr. Pater all possible principles of criticism seem to have been formulated and applied, the reader naturally exclaims: "These be brave words," and, in spite of inevitable doubts, is moved to expect that something which shall be at least novel and arresting will be found in the pages that follow. Well, blessed is he that expecteth nothing, for he, and he only, will close Mr. Lynch's volume without disappointment, though not, it is to be feared, without bewilderment and weariness.

The new principles are very briefly stated in a paragraph upon the second page, of which the whole volume may be regarded as an expansion and illustration. Mr. Lynch's discovery is that

"Capable criticism has most (sic) to deal with three factors: The intellectual grasp; the emotional co-efficient (calibre, bore, scope, range); and (the field itself being given) the experience, knowledge of the field—the latter being again divided into the intellectual and emotional elements. Under these divisions, too, the bunt display of life—that is, the variety and characteristics of intellectual and emotional experiences; points of wit, humour, pathos, and the like; and pari passu, the main part of the question of technique—will be found most advantageously handled."

Certainly this statement is tangled enough in the matter of expression to leave behind it a vague suggestion of profound significance; but when its meaning is laboriously puzzled out, it reveals itself as something which certainly cannot boast either profundity or novelty. The critics have disagreed about many things, but not one of them has ever doubted the proposition so clumsily enunciated here—that the rank of a work of literary art is to be determined by its display of intellectual grasp, quickness and range of emotional sensibility, fulness and accuracy of knowledge, and satisfying perfection of workmanship. This is not a principle of criticism: it is simply the primal truth, the recognition of which precedes and necessitates the search for a principle; and those who look to Mr. Lynch for aid in their search will assuredly look in vain. He does not even pretend to give a canon which shall serve as a test of the intellectual grasp, the emotional calibre, and so on: he gives us nothing but a collection of disjointed obiter dicta in curious English and still more curious German, which serve to acquaint us with his opinions on Shakspeare, Scott, Carlyle, Zola, Walt Whitman, and a host of other writers, with no indication whatever of the critical road by which these opinions have been arrived at. Even the opinions themselves seem to be characterised by an utter lack of anything like largeness of view. One of Mr. Lynch's favourite methods of justifying a preference is to quote a weak passage from the author who is contemned and a strong passage from the author who is admired, to assume that both are representative, and then to call upon his readers to acknowledge with him the supremacy of the writer whose "emotional calibre" or "intellectual grasp" is thus vindicated. Just as any theological doctrine may be established to the satisfaction of those who accept it by a judiciously-made selection of Scripture "texts," so any literary estimate can be commended to uncritical readers by an array of cunningly-chosen quotations. The method is valueless at its best; and it is surely seen at its worst in the hands of a writer who, on the strength of the set of a single sonnet, asks us to place Mr. Swinburne by the side of a poetaster whose memory is preserved only in Byron's reference to "grovelling Stott." "Even as Nature," continues the urbane Mr. Lynch, "required to join a Homer and a Virgil to make a Milton, so en revanche she has surely dismembered a Stott to make a Swinburne and a Wilde." To speak of such a dictum as uncritical would be utterly beside the mark: it is outside of all relation to criticism; it is simply a vulgar impertinence, which manages to achieve grotesqueness by its appearance in a volume, the avowed purpose of which is to dethrone the criticism of whim, and to set up in its place the criticism of "fertile principles."

It must in justice be admitted that in the passage just quoted we find Mr. Lynch touching the furthest frontier of his possibilities of fatuity. He is sometimes sensible, sometimes shrewd, once or twice even sagacious—as, for example, in his remarks on "Titus Andronicus," and on Fielding and Smollett; but he is much oftener extravagant, incoherent, or bewilderingly irrelevant. Nor is the manner more attractive than the matter, for Mr. Lynch seems absolutely devoid of any feeling for literary form. His pages read, not like a continuous discourse, but like a series of hasty jottings from a memorandum book thrown together pell-mell. Here we have a string of short sentences with not a verb among them; and there, a remark which seems like one of the gnomic utterances of Mr. F.'s aunt, so entirely unrelated is it to what precedes and follows it. For Mr. Lynch, as for many of our young revolutionaries, the English language is utterly inadequate as a vehicle of expression. One of his favourites is a bahnbrecher—"pioneer" would be much too commonplace a word; the works of a second are derb; those of a third are bunt; while, as for that grand old man, Walt Whitman, he is derb, bunt, and a bahnbrecher into the bargain. These affectations are intensely irritating to the sober-minded reader; and they are injurious to the writer, because they are apt to suggest a suspicion of charlatanry, which may be altogether undeserved. It would hardly be fair to say of Mr. Lynch's book, as a whole, that it darkens counsel by words without knowledge, for it is clearly an outcome of wide reading; but his reading is rendered ineffective, for purposes of helpful criticism, by the lack of those fixed principles of judgment which it professes to supply.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

NEW NOVELS.

Cecilia de Noel. By Lanoe Falconer. (Macmillans.)

Mr. Chainé's Sons. By W. E. Norris. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Interference. By B. M. Croker. In 3 vols. (White.)

One Reason Why. By Beatrice Whitby. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Of this Death. By Mrs. Vere Campbell. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Tim. (Macmillans.)

Charming to Her Latest Day. By Alan Muir. (Sutton & Drowley.)

OF Lanoe Falconer's new book a poetic child might ejaculate:

"Glory, remember Mamselle Ixe's day,
And hide Cecilia de Noel away."

And as Mademoiselle Ixe, if not quite so good as it was called, was really good, the best thing to do would be to say nothing about this successor in the present, and promise to forget all about it in the future. Yet as divers of our excellent brothers in criticism appear to be taking the book up, and putting it in training for the Robert Elsmere Handicap or even the Called Back Stakes, it may be well to devote a few lines to showing what Cecilia de Noel really is. It is a ghost story without a ghost, except in the subjective presentments of the ghostseers. The master of the house, Sir George Atherley—an intolerable creature who talks book (and that cheap atheism-book) to his wife, his guest, and almost his butler; who says "like she was," and so forth—does not see it: nor his admirable, foolish wife. Nor is its direct effect on the guest, a jilted cripple, who naturally takes gloomy views, related. But it is seen by others—the cook, an evangelical lady, a spiritualist ditto, a worldly canon, an ascetic curate—and it affects them after their own natures. Lastly comes Cecilia de Noel, a cousin of the atheistic and ungrammatical baronet, who speaks kindly to it, and is addressed by it in ghostese (the accuracy of which will be at once acknowledged) as "brave human creature." Cecilia soothes and reconciles them all; even the atheist with the bloody hand being staggered by the jilted cripple's question—"George, how do you explain the mystery of her existence?" as if the mystery of his own were not enough had he chosen to consider it. Did Lance Falconer ever hear a certain story about Moses and the Prophets? The simple critical fact is that Cecilia de Noel is in essence a Christmas story of the class of the late Mrs. Ewing's charming stories, padded out, watered down, adapted to the current fads and cants of "grown-ups," and in our humble judgment spoilt, for all the excellence of its intentions and all the touches (there are a few) of faculty. For which expression of opinion any one may send us to Coventry or Ashkelon if he pleases; we have kept the bird in our bosom.

Mr. Norris is a very clever man; but Mr. Chaine's Sons is a very disappointing book. It begins rather well, after the manner which infuriates American critics, by a garden party in a cathedral close. And though the image and superscription of the characters—Violet Staunton, a would-be worldly but really warm-hearted little coquette; Ida Pemberton, victime du devoir, tall, pale, haughty; John Chaine, good-natured oaf; Wilfrid Chaine, brother of John and villain of the piece; Hubert Chaine, brother of both and lover of Violet; Jessie Viccars, encumbrance to Wilfrid, &c.—is rather worn and well-known, so also is the image and superscription of sovereigns, whereof a man shall hardly have too many. It is in the use of his money, the spending of his sovereigns, that Mr. Norris is faulty. That the plot is a mixture of the extremely obvious and the excessively sensational; that the circumstances in which John Chaine, when suspected of murder, disappears and reappears are anything but convincing; and that the accident at the end which plays the part of rather ferocious deus ex machina by removing the superfluous brother and the wicked brother straight off, is, let us say, convenient to excess, are things which do not trouble us very much. All this might be so, and the book yet be first-rate. If Mr. Chaine's Sons is not first-rate, we can only explain it by reference to the immortal story of the Oxford cook who could give no explanation of the superiority of his fondues but: "You see, sir, I takes the cheese, and so on [exactly what everybody else took], and then I fondoo's 'em." Mr. Norris does not succeed on this occasion in "fondoing 'em." He seems to be as much embarrassed with the person of his good clumsy hero John as that hero is with his own, till the kindly ferocity of the deus ex machina relieves him and Mr. Norris and the reader of it; and he has repeated a common and curious mistake of many latterday English novelists in respect to Ida Pemberton. Having married John Chaine without any affection for him, under no particular compulsion, and (though she had been earlier deceived) with her eyes wide open at the last moment, she loses the right to interest us in her affection for her other lover. We say: "No, madam, you can't eat the cake of selling yourself to No. 1 and have the cake of romantic and virtuous love for some No. 2. Don't, as one of the greatest characters of Mr. Norris's master says, adopt French institutions à demi. As you have married improperly, love improperly, or, if you want to be proper, be proper all round."

It is possible that Miss Croker is not so clever as Mr. Norris; but her book is much more interesting and much better hit off than his. The third volume is, we think, inferior to the other two; not that the incident on which it is based, and which gives the novel its title, is impossible, though it is bold, but that the author, by the same fault again, draws upon our sympathies without due authority. It is a good problem, no doubt. What ought a man of honour to do when he has sent a proposal to one young woman, and the mother of another, a wicked mother she, tampers with it so that her own daughter receives it, accepts it, and goes out to be married in India? George Holroyd seems to have thought, and a good many people will doubtless agree with him, that the damsel thus flung at him being personally guiltless, he could do nothing but "execute himself." Well and good, though we do not think so. But, having done this, he had to make the best of his bargain, and the bargain, except that it had no brains and a violent temper (a not uncommon combination in woman) does not seem to have been a wholly bad one. So that, when the wife comes to an evil end—after discovering, of course not to her pleasure, that it was the other person who was loved all the time—we are rather sorry for her, and not at all disposed to ring marriage bells for the other two. True, Miss Croker has too much good taste to ask us to do this explicitly, but we know it is in the chapter after "the end." However, put the tragedy part away, and Interference—that is to say, two whole volumes of it—is a capital book, full of "go" and life, and with the Irish scenes sketched in an easy, straightforward, unconventional, and yet precise fashion of character-drawing, which is really a far greater triumph of art than the laboured manner-pieces of the analyst school. Miss Croker's people are live men and women, not lay figures put together out of books, with little improvements to suit the latest fashion. The naughty heroine—except that she is perfectly selfish, and easily loses her temper, there is not much harm about her—Isabel Redmond or Holroyd, might walk into any room any day, and except in the character of her husband, no man need object to being in that apartment.

The good heroine, her cousin Betty, is not quite so lifelike—somehow the good heroines never are—but she is not bad; and most of the minor persons, especially the members of the Malone family are admirable.

A bold young woman is Miss Beatrice Whitby to take once more the angelic, accomplished, and "put-upon" governess, to pit her against a haughty damsel for the heir's hand, and to give it her triumphantly. To tell the honest truth, we did not think it could have been, except by positive genius, done well again. Here it is done very well, with a quite ingenious ghost story thrown in, with a good deal of smart dialogue and writing generally, and with no bad taste.

"What I here suggest," says one of Mrs. Vere Campbell's characters in her novel with an alarming and somewhat truncated title, "What I here suggest, is not for the Philistine to jibe at as madness." This might be written up over the whole book as an equivalent to: "Critics will be prosecuted with the utmost rigour of the law"; and it would be rash indeed for any critic to disregard so plain a warning. Still, it cannot be actionable—even in that new division of the High Court of Justice, which some good friends of ours, are anxious to set up—to observe that there is a good deal in Of This Death at which the wicked Philistine may jibe, and a good deal more of which the honest Philistine will frankly confess that he does not know what the deuce it is all about. Perhaps this last is as well. But there are many things of interest here, including a great deal of the finest style and imagery. A hydra with its finger on its lip, for instance; how novel, how startling, and we must add how exceedingly difficult! Beside it a dawn which "rises like a hag propped on a skinny elbow," and does other divers and disgusting things, though more ostensibly elaborate, is less thoroughly satisfactory. But these good things and others like them in Of This Death should be left uncompered. "Can one ever reconcile a parallel?" says Phyllis Eden, whose remarkable history is here told. We don't know: we never tried; but the attempt might be expiatory after speaking disrespectfully of the equator.

Tim, which has been rather unwisely advertised as by "a new writer," a title which has deplorable associations, contains some very fresh, pleasant, and, we believe on good authority, accurate sketches of Eton life, together with a picture of the devotion of a small boy to a friend and hero. These two themes are both embroidered on a canvas of Paul Dombey. The book is well written, and shows a certain subtlety of handling; but whether it will prove interesting or not must be very much a matter of individual taste. We do not feel enthusiastic about it ourselves; but we should find no great fault with anyone who did so feel.

Mr. Alan Muir's effort is distinguished by an effort at an almost extinct quality—archness. It is also distinguished by ignorance on the part of the writer that a lady whose godfathers and godmothers called her Barbara, and who has married Mr. Temple, does not call herself "Mrs. Barbara Temple," and by ignorance on the part of the illustrator that the costumes of 1838 were different from those of 1891, or rather 1889 or thereabouts.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

RECENT THEOLOGY.

The Light of the World, and other Sermons. By Phillips Brooks. (Macmillans.) The reviewer, who usually judges of volumes of sermons by samples taken at random out of the sack, is troubled by such a preacher as Mr. Phillips Brooks. Each sermon seems weightier and mellowed and stronger than the last. There is a refreshing absence on the one hand of poverty of thought, and on the other of rhetorical exuberance. Mr. Brooks has such a mastery of his themes that he can afford to practice restraint, and avoid the mistake of riding his ideas to death. What he wishes to say is said weightily and well, with conviction and yet with grace; and there he stops. Intensity of fervour, gracefulness of phrase, aptness of metaphor, eloquent appeal, all these we admire in his sermons; but behind these literary excellences, and giving them the matter they work in, is a practical acquaintance with the weakness and strength of men's souls not acquired in the study and not often possessed by popular preachers. Mr. Brooks has the knowledge of life and the insight into moods and motives of a great dramatist, and this is the source of the impression his sermons produce. We read first of all in the volume sermon viii., on "the Silence of Christ," and have found it on the whole the most striking and beautiful among the sermons, all of which are impressive.

The History of the Christian Church to A.D. 337. By F. J. Foakes-Jackson. (Cambridge: Hall.) It is not probable that anything more serviceable than this History will be produced for some years. In the face of the "chronological tables, index, questions for examination," &c., it cannot be denied that the book approximates to a glorified cram-book; but it is a scholarly, intelligent, enlightened cram-book, and has been a labour not only of learning and pains, but also of love. The chapters which strike us as the best are vi. on "the Apostolic Fathers," and ix. on "Christian Thought in the Second and Third Centuries"; and generally the narrative portions of the book are weaker than the critical, because the bewildering mass of facts here thrown together cannot be made interesting. It is impossible to do real justice to the career of Athanasius in twenty short pages: the stage is not large enough for the drama enacted; but Mr. Foakes-Jackson's plan does not permit the omission of any important facts. A pleasant characteristic of the volume is its candour and gentleness of spirit. There is no gloating over the sudden death of Arius, or condoning of the murder of Hypatia. A great effort is made to include in the volume the most recent discoveries and results on all points of importance. The book may be said to follow, on the whole, the views of Bishops Lightfoot and Westcott.

Saint Chrysostom and St. Augustine. By Philip Schaff. (Nisbet.) Dr. Schaff has consented to open with these Lives a series of "Studies in Christian Biography." His preface contains a short passage explanatory of the reasons of the dedication of the book to the memory of Bishop Lightfoot, "the greatest patristic scholar of England," which Englishmen will read with interest and gratitude. Dr. Schaff has given the writers who are to follow him excellent examples of the way their work should be done. Both biographies are obviously the work of one who has an intimate acquaintance at first hand with the voluminous writings he describes. They are solid pieces of work, which will attract every earnest student by their fulness of information and firm grasp of complicated controversies. The Life of Augustine is naturally the longer of the two, and has had more labour spent upon it than the sketch of Chrysostom; but the Chrysostom is written forcibly and picturesquely, and admirably arranged. The series, if it maintains the high standard of this volume, will be valued by all students of Church History.

The Literature of the Second Century. (Hodder & Stoughton.) The authors of these "short studies in Christian evidences" are F. R. Wynne, J. H. Bernard, and S. Hemphill. Each writer contributes two lectures: Canon Wynne on the evidence to Christianity supplied by the literature of the sub-apostolic age, and on the gradual growth of the New Testament Canon; Mr. Bernard on the apocryphal gospels, and on the miraculous in early Christian literature; and Mr. Hemphill on Tatian's Harmony, and on "early vestiges of the fourfold Gospel." Mr. Bernard's lectures are the most interesting of the series, which is of very unusual merit. The preface explains that the writers pretend to no originality; but they are masters at first hand of their subject, and write with a candour and carefulness not often found in lectures meant to be popular. Mr. Hemphill's clear and readable paper on "the long-lost Harmony" of Tatian tells its story well, although it perhaps makes too much noise about rather a small matter. One sentence which speaks of "a trashy book called Supernatural Religion, which was quite the rage among English sceptics some years ago," stands alone in its want of courtesy, and should be altered. Such language harms no one but the user of it.

Fathers of the English Church. Second Series. By Frances Phillips. (Bemrose.) It is only necessary to note that this second series of "short sketches for young readers" is "based on the same lines" as the first, and has the same excellences. The "spirit of loyalty to the doctrines and principles of the English Church" is sometimes too "entire." To say that the Long Parliament "rendered its name for ever disgraced in history by the murder of King and Primate" is certainly to have the courage of one's opinions; but such language must suggest that loyalty to the English Church involves disloyalty to the English nation. It is not easy to estimate how much the Established Church suffers from words which in most Englishmen's ears are merely treasonable. But Laud's life presents peculiar difficulties; on the whole, the sketches are fairly and discreetly written, and evince a very uncommon gift of telling a story simply but vividly. The series contains four Lives—St. Richard Bishop of Chichester, William of Wykeham, Archbishop Matthew Parker, Archbishop Laud.

"CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS."—The Epistles to the Thessalonians. Edited by G. G. Findlay (Cambridge: University Press.) Mr. Findlay maintains the high level of the series to which he has become a contributor. Some parts of his introduction to the Epistles to the Thessalonians could scarcely be bettered. The account of Thessalonica, the description of the style and character of the Epistles, and the analysis of them are excellent in style and scholarly care. The notes are possibly too voluminous; but there is so much matter in them, and the matter is arranged and handled so ably, that we are ready to forgive their fulness. The parts of the Introduction which give some account of the views of critics who reject the Pauline authorship of the Epistles are naturally the least satisfactory. A few names are given; but it can scarcely be pretended that a serious effort is made to explain the reasons why Pfeiderer rejects the Second Epistle, and unless some such effort is made, it is doubtful whether anything should be said on the matter. The elaborate Appendix on the Man of Lawlessness (2 Thess. ii. 1-12) contains a sketch of the history of the various ideas which have been held about Antichrist since the early days of Christianity. The interest and ability of this sketch are as conspicuous as its learning, but we regret that Mr. Findlay should insist upon the Positive Philosophy as in any true sense a manifestation of Antichrist. Bishop Westcott has stated that he found in the Politique Positive "a powerful expression of many salient features of that which I had long held to be the true social embodiment of the Gospel." We cannot but think Mr. Findlay's judgment of Comte ethically shallow, and his statement of it a blot upon his very able volume. His commentary is a valuable addition to what has been written on the letters to the Thessalonian Church.

The Acts of the Apostles. By A. J. C. Allen. (Nisbet.) These "notes and explanations" of the Acts are published without the text, and constitute one of "Nisbet's Scripture Handbooks." The handbooks are "prepared for the Oxford and Cambridge local examinations, and for school and family use." The best part of the volume is the Introduction, on the geography and history and on the Book of the Acts. This is tersely written, and condenses very ably a large mass of facts. The notes strike us as too scrappy. To say of the speaking with other tongues of the day of Pentecost that it was "quite different" from the speaking with tongues of 1 Cor. xiv. is unsatisfactory. As soon as the student comes upon a frank discussion of the subject, he will look upon Mr. Allen's note as dishonest. And why should the note on the communism of Acts iv. 32-37 be so unappreciative? It is an instance of a type of comment only too frequent, comment which strives to make of none effect the obvious teaching of the text. The note on the Stoics and Epicureans offends in the same manner. "It will be seen at once how far the teaching of both these schools was opposed to Christianity." It would be more profitable to see how far the teaching was in accord with Christianity!

Stories from the Bible. By the Rev. A. J. Church. (Macmillans.) Mr. Church's attempt "to re-tell some of the chief stories of the Old Testament" will be read with interest. It is very difficult to criticise it fairly. It is impossible to alter or to paraphrase the story, for instance, of David, as told in the Old Testament, without weakening the force and freshness of it. Genius is required to produce anything which shall for a moment rival the story as already told, and yet be different from it. Mr. Church has judgment and skill, and cannot be said to have genius, simply because his plan allows no scope for it. We cannot imagine anyone with his Bible beside him reading Mr. Church by preference; but teachers may find much to help them in Mr. Church's method and treatment, and will doubtless welcome his volume. The notes are very useful, and the stories themselves continually elucidate the Old Testament narrative. We are not aware that anyone has performed Mr. Church's task with at all the same skill, and are glad he proposes to continue the work. Although it in no way supersedes the chapters of the Old Testament, it is calculated to advance intelligent study of them, and help all earnest students. The book contains numerous illustrations "after Julius Schnorr."

God's Champion, Man's Example. By H. A. Birks. (Religious Tract Society.) Mr. Birks's

"study of the conflict of our Divine Deliverer" is a series of short papers, devotional in tone, on the Temptations. They are somewhat pretentiously divided into five books, which are essentially popular in character—intended for the ordinary reader and not for the student. The numerous quotations from all sorts of writers detract, of course, from the originality of the volume, but they are chosen with care and judgment, and never degenerate into a mere list. The clearness and liveliness of Mr. Birks's style are exceptional, and will find him many readers. His book is not quite exhaustive. We should have liked him to have dwelt at greater length on the words "if Thou be the Son of God," and to have connected them more definitely with the recent baptism. Satan's and Christ's conception of sonship should be carefully contrasted. But, on the whole, we cannot complain that the author's exposition is meagre. Why is the view of the author of Ecce Homo—that Christ in the third Temptation was asked "to employ force in the establishment of his Messianic kingdom"—described as "an astute evasion rather than a clear elucidation of the Gospel history"? The word "astute" is ill-mannered and should be struck out.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE understand that Mr. T. F. Kirby, the bursar of Winchester College—who published some three years ago a list of Winchester Scholars—is now preparing for the press a collection of documents from the college archives of more general interest, illustrating the internal life of the school from early times down to the last century. The volume will be published in time for the celebration of the five hundredth anniversary of the foundation, which occurs next year.

WE hear that a collector, who prefers to remain anonymous, has nearly finished a bibliography of the works of Matthew Arnold, both prose and verse. It will form a little volume of about fifty pages, and will be issued from the Dryden Press, Long Acre, before the end of the year.

IT is proposed to issue an edition of the poems and minor writings of the late Patrick Proctor Alexander, with a memoir by the Rev. Dr. W. W. Tulloch. Those having in their possession any letters or writings of Mr. Alexander will perhaps be good enough to communicate with Dr. Tulloch, editor of the Scots Magazine, Glasgow.

THE English edition of M. Bonvalot's Travels in Tibet is now in a forward state of preparation, and will be published shortly by Messrs. Cassell & Co. in one large volume of about 500 pages. In the course of their journey from the frontier of Siberia to the coast of Tonquin, M. Bonvalot and Prince Henry of Orleans passed through regions which no European had previously traversed: and the work about to be issued will contain a full record of the severe privations and sufferings they endured during their eventful travels. The book will be furnished with about 100 illustrations, made principally from photographs taken by Prince Henry, and a large route map in colours.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish immediately Two Happy Years in Ceylon, by Miss C. F. Gordon Cumming, in two volumes, with fifteen full-page illustrations and a map.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL announce a second series of essays by Mr. W. L. Courtney, formerly of New College, Oxford, to be entitled Parerga: Stray Studies in Literature.

MESSRS. METHUEN will shortly add to their series of "Social Questions of To-Day," which is under the general editorship of Mr. H. de B. Gibbins, two volumes of exceptional interest. One will deal with Women's Work in various professional and industrial departments, and will be the joint production of Lady Dilke, Miss May Abraham, and Miss Amy Bulley. The other will discuss the question of Destitute Immigration, and will be contributed by Mr. W. H. Wilkins, the secretary of the society for preventing the immigration of destitute aliens.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish in a few days a new and revised edition of The Law of Musical and Dramatic Copyright, by Messrs. Edward Cutler, Thomas Eustace Smith, and Frederick E. Weatherley. The cases of Moul v. Grönings, Fishburn v. Hollingshead, and other recent decisions on the retrospective operation of the Berne Convention are discussed: and there is also given the text of the American Statute of 1891, an explanation of the questions arising upon it, and a general view of the United States law bearing on the subject.

MESSRS. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & Co. will issue in a few days A Month in a Dandi, by Miss Christina S. Bremner, being a record of a holiday spent in India away from the beaten route of visitors.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will shortly publish a new book by Mr. Silas K. Hocking, entitled For Light and Liberty.

MESSRS. DEAN & SON announce a new work on Pigeons: their Varieties and Management, by Mr. Edward Brown. It will contain numerous illustrations by Mr. Ludlow.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will shortly publish a work entitled The Modern Odyssey; or, Ulysses Up to Date, describing adventures, experiences, and impressions during recent wanderings in many lands.

MR. FISHER UNWIN will publish immediately popular editions of Our Fields and Cities, by Mr. Scrivener C. Scrivener; and Greek Art, by Miss Jane E. Harrison.

A NEW edition of Mr. Worsley-Benison's Nature's Fairyland is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

PROF. PELHAM has been elected a vice-president, and Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice and the Hon. G. C. Brodrick have been elected members of the council, of the Royal Historical Society.

THE Authors' Society invite subscriptions, limited to one guinea, for the purchase of a piece of plate for presentation to Mr. Robert Underwood Johnson, of New York, in recognition of the part played by him in the successful agitation for the International Copyright Act.

THE next monthly meeting of the Library Association will be held at 20, Hanover-square, on Monday, November 9, at 8.30 p.m., when the following papers will be read:—"A Card-Charging System for Lending Libraries," by Mr. J. H. Quinn, of the Chelsea Public Library; and "The Municipal Libraries of Paris," by Mr. E. M. Borrajo, of the Guildhall Library.

MESSRS. SOTHEY will sell on Thursday and Friday of next week the library of Mr. Leonard Shuter, late of Bexley, Kent, which contains a good number of handsomely illustrated modern books.

MR. DANA ESTES writes of the Boston Browning Society:

"Our membership is now larger than ever before, and I really think the interest is greater: and the same appears to be true of the Philadelphia Society. I have reason to believe that there is vitality enough in our society to last many years, as we are constantly getting accession from the ranks of people who have become interested in Browning and feel that the society will help them to a greater knowledge and better appreciation of the poet."

TOUCHING Mr. Lang's graceful tribute in the November number of Longman's to the late Edward Cracroft Lefroy, and his reference to Mr. W. A. Gill's obituary (ACADEMY, October 3), it may, perhaps, be of interest to mention that the unsigned review in the ACADEMY of Echoes from Theocritus and other Sonnets published six years ago was written by Mr. Hall Caine. We have reason to know that the poet was much cheered and helped by Mr. Caine's notice.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

MR. THOMAS HARDY has written for the National Observer a story entitled, "Saturday Night in Arcady," which will appear in a literary supplement to the issue of that journal for November 14.

THE opening chapter of Mr. W. D. Howells's new serial story, "John Northwick, Defaulter," will appear in this week's Wit and Wisdom.

MESSRS. BEMROSE & SONS are about to issue a new Church magazine, entitled The Evangelist Monthly. Its aim will be to speak out on the vital questions of the day; but it will be written in a popular style intended to gain the ear of the people, and will be illustrated. The editor is the Rev. Alfred Whymper, who now edits the Church Evangelist.

THE Religious Review of Reviews will be in future conducted from a Church of England standpoint. Among the articles appearing in the forthcoming number (Nov. 15) will be one on "Edmund Burke and the Oxford Movement," by the Rev. Dr. Carr; "A Short History of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge," with portrait of the editorial secretary; a character sketch of Prof. Blackie; "Isaiah xxxiv. and xxxv.," by the late Prof. Graetz; an interview with Prof. Sayce; "Methods of Philanthropy," by Prebendary Harry Jones; "Amusement," by Archdeacon Sinclair; and "The Church of England: its Growth and Work."

MARY ALBERT will contribute a serial tale to the Ladies' Treasury next year, entitled "The Diamond Shoe Buckles."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

JUST three years ago Mr. C. Drury E. Fortnum presented to the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford a large part of his collection, which illustrates by superb examples the entire history of art, from early Greek times down to the Italian Renaissance. We now hear that he has offered the remainder of his collection to the university, subject to certain conditions; and that he is further willing to build a gallery for its reception, at his own expense. The site proposed is in the immediate neighbourhood of the Taylorian Institution, but not facing the street, where the university has recently acquired some property. Upon the collection it would be difficult to place a value; but we understand that the sum of money which Mr. Fortnum offers to devote to the gallery is £10,000.

MR. E. G. BROWNE, university lecturer in Persian at Cambridge, is engaged upon a catalogue of the Persian MSS. in the University Library, for which purpose he has been specially authorised to borrow not more than five volumes at one time, without giving a bond.

A COMMITTEE has been formed at Cambridge to raise a fund for procuring a portrait of Prof. Michael Foster, to be presented either to the University or to Trinity College, as the subscribers shall determine.

DARWIN'S family have presented to the University of Cambridge a cast of the model executed by the late Sir J. E. Boehm for the fine seated statue in the central hall of the Natural History Museum.

THE University of Cambridge has conferred the honorary degree of M.A. upon Mr. David Sharp, curator in zoology.

THE Rev. Dr. A. J. Mason has been appointed by the special board of divinity at Cambridge to be lecturer in pastoral theology for next year.

MR. W. G. MARKHEIM will deliver a lecture at the Taylorian Institution, Oxford, on Tuesday next, November 10, upon "Possible Points of Contact between Shakspeare and Molière," with special reference to "Timon" and "Le Misanthrope."

MR. W. R. MORFILL, reader in Slavonic at Oxford, was to deliver a public lecture on November 6 upon "National Life and Thought in Bohemia."

AT the recent election of fellowships at St. John's College, Cambridge, the following were the subjects of the dissertations written by the successful candidates: Mr. W. M. Orr, "The Contact Relations of Certain Systems of Circles"; Mr. E. E. Sikes, Sir Charles Newton student at the British School of Athens, "The Nike of Archermos"; and Mr. P. Horton Smith, "The Composition and Action of Peptonised Milk."

PROF. W. M. RAMSAY, of Aberdeen, has accepted an invitation to deliver a course of lectures next year at Mansfield College, Oxford, upon "The Church and the Roman Empire."

PROF. G. H. DARWIN has been re-elected president of the Cambridge Philosophical Society for the ensuing session.

AT the meeting of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, to be held on Wednesday next, November 11, Mr. J. W. Clark will read a paper on "Some Seventeenth Century Book-cases recently discovered at Clare College."

AN elaborate report by Prof. Flower upon the collections in the University Museum at Oxford is printed at length in Nature for October 9.

AT the half-yearly meeting of the general council of the University of Edinburgh, held on October 30, Mr. Arthur J. Balfour was unanimously elected chancellor, in the room of the late Lord President Inglis. He was proposed by Emeritus Professor Campbell Fraser.

SEÑOR RUARDO RAMIREZ has been appointed professor of the Spanish language and literature at King's College, London.

TRANSLATION.

HORACE, BOOK I. ODE 8.

(Lydia, dic per omnes.)

I.

By all the gods above,
Say, Lydia, say, why hasten to destroy
Young Sybaris, ill-fated boy,
With love, disastrous love?

II.

Why doth he shun
The open plain? Why scorn in warlike course
To curb with wolf-fanged bit his Gallic horse,
Patient of dust and sun?

III.

Why, Lydia, doth he hate
The athlete's oil worse than the viper's blood?
Why fear old Tiber's yellow flood,
Love-sick, disconsolate?

IV.

Why do those sinews strong
No bruise of arms, no manly blackness bear,
From whirling disc or ponderous spear
Beyond the limit flung?

V.

Hides he as Thetis' son,
Who woman-robed among the maiden train
Shunned Lycian foes, but shunned in vain?
He died at Ilium.

STEPHEN E. DE VERE.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE October Livre has special attraction for Englishmen in an article by Mr. R. C. Christie upon one of the more respectable sides of the character of a very curious and very disreputable person the Chevalier D'Eon. Mr. Christie ranks almost first among English bibliophiles for sheer learning; and nobody could be better qualified than he to give an account of the exercises of the polypragmatic Chevalier in Latin, in theology, and in literature generally. The paper is illustrated by a fine portrait (described as inédit, but surely we have seen it somewhere before) of the Chevalier in his woman's garb, or at least headdress. Even without this the number is interesting, with a paper of gossip about the information existing as to the private life of the men of 1830, and another by M. Gausseron containing anecdotes of French publishing in the present century, together with a fresh batch of sometimes curious autograph letters.

THE principal contents of the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia (July-September) are annotated texts and studies of the Fueros of Najera, and of Brihuega, by Padre F. Pita and C. Garran. The earliest text of Najera is dated 1076; but it implies older usages. The confirmations by subsequent kings are full of interest. The compensation for murder of a Jew is the same as that of a noble or a monk; while for the killing of a Moor it is only that of an ass. The Bulls and other documents concerning the erection of a cathedral of Cartagena (S. A.) in 1538, printed by Jimenez de la Llave, are valuable from the details given of the administration of the cathedral body, and of the limits of the several offices. The whole patronage and appointments remain in the hands of the crown. There are accounts of archaeological discoveries by J. Vilanova in Jumilla (Valencia), and by Catalina Garcia in the caves of Perales de Tajuna (Madrid). Padre Pita also prints a series of documents throwing light on the biography of Fray Bernard Buyl, who was sent with Columbus on his second voyage, and of his companions. The strife between the civil and ecclesiastical powers began at once in the new world; the friars interdicting the admiral, and the admiral cutting off the rations of the friars.

OBITUARY.

H.L.H. PRINCE LOUIS LUCIEN BONAPARTE.

THE news of the death of Prince L.-L. Bonaparte will not come as a surprise to those who know how seriously his health had been impaired in recent years. He had suffered from more than one stroke of paralysis, but the actual cause of death was failure of the heart's action. Some three weeks ago he left London on a visit to his niece, the Countess Bracci, at Fano, on the Adriatic coast; and there he died on the morning of Wednesday, November 4. He thus survived his friend and fellow student, Dr. Alexander J. Ellis, by just twelve months.

The last of the nephews of Napoleon, he recalled the traits of his uncle in face, in figure, and in harshness of voice; but in philosophical spirit, and in devotion to learning, he was a worthy son of the Prince de Canino. He was born in 1813, at Thorngrove in Worcestershire, where his father was then living in a sort of honourable surveillance. His youth was spent for the most part at Musignano, in the States of the Church; and his sympathies were always divided between England and Italy. He was elected a deputy for Corsica in 1848, and for Paris in the following year. Though excluded from the succession by a decree of Napoleon I., he received the title of Imperial Highness from Napoleon III., and was also nominated to the senate; but he never took any active part in French politics.

His sole passion was for learning. At first he studied chemistry and mineralogy, as his elder brother Charles studied natural history. But he soon devoted himself to linguistics, and in particular to the Basque language and the dialects of Western Europe. In these two departments he possessed an unrivalled library, not the least interesting portion of which was his own series of privately printed tracts, which numbered more than two hundred. His best known work is his elaborate treatise on the Basque Verb (1869), which had been preceded (1863) by a linguistic map of the Basque provinces, showing the subdivisions of the several dialects. If his views upon the affinities of Basque have not met with universal acceptance, his enterprise in placing the facts upon record deserves the warmest gratitude of philologists. Like his friend, Dr. A. J. Ellis, he possessed a genius for distinguishing dialects; and, like him too, he spared no pains and no expense in making his researches available. In 1857, he brought out a translation of St. Matthew's version of the Parable of the Sower in no less than seventy-two languages and dialects of Europe; and a few years later he was instrumental in getting printed the Song of Solomon in twenty-seven English dialects. Of his later researches, some were communicated to the Philological Society (of which he was vice-president), and some first appeared in the columns of the ACADEMY. The two last letters that we received from him illustrate the character of his interests. One had reference to the erection of a memorial to Dolly Pentreath, said to be the last person who spoke Cornish; the other recorded his grateful recognition of the hospitality he received in Southern Italy, while investigating the relics of Albanian and Greek speech still to be found there. The results of this tour, undertaken with enthusiasm at the age of seventy-six, are to be found in the last Part of the Transactions of the Philological Society (Kegan Paul & Co.), which was actually published after he had left England. This paper is a good example of the carefulness of his work, and of the unexpected nature of some of his discoveries.

The University of Oxford conferred upon him the honorary degree of D.C.L. at the Commemoration of 1854; and in 1883 Mr. Gladstone gave him a pension of £250 on the Civil List, "in consideration of his services to learning and literature." J. S. C.

SHELLEY'S CENTENARY.

THE year 1892 will be the centenary of the birth of Percy Bysshe Shelley. August 4 is the precise date.

The Shelley Society, which was founded in 1886, has reason to expect that the year will be marked by two incidents important to the poet's admirers. (1) A Shelley Concordance will be published by the Clarendon Press of Oxford—a laborious and valuable work, projected and carried out by the zeal and munificence of a member of the society, Mr. F. S. Ellis; and (2) Lady Shelley, the widow of the poet's son, will offer to the nation, or to some public body, a monument of Shelley in marble and bronze.

* In recording this in his Alumni Oxonienses, Mr. Joseph Foster makes two bad blunders. He describes him as the son of a daughter of Joseph, King of Spain—whereas his mother was, we believe, the widow of a stockbroker; and goes on to make him a Cardinal, thus confusing him with his nephew, the son of Charles.

The society wish to bear their part in commemorating the centenary. With this object they propose to obtain a fresh performance of Shelley's tragedy of "The Cenci," which was, for the first and only time, acted at their instance in 1886 at the Grand Theatre in Islington. Lovers of the drama have not forgotten the pre-eminent excellence of the performance, on that occasion, of Miss Alma Murray and Mr. Herbert Veizin, not to speak of other actors.

The Shelley Society are not at present in a position which would warrant their undertaking the entire cost or responsibility of a fresh performance of "The Cenci." They therefore invite co-operation from other quarters. The performance must, of course, be a private one, and the audience will be confined to subscribers of a guinea each. For this guinea every subscriber will receive two tickets for the performance of "The Cenci," besides such publications (one or more) as the society may issue for 1892—probably at least a reprint of Hogg's original articles on "Shelley at Oxford." No other liability will attach to subscribers; but the society wish, as a fitting precaution, to obtain promises towards a guarantee fund, in case the subscriptions fall short of the moderate cost of the performance. The fund stands now at thirty guineas.

A meeting of the Shelley Society will be held on Wednesday next, November 11, 1891, at University College, Gower-street, at 8 p.m., for the purpose of discussing these arrangements, or any other plan which may be suggested in relation to the centenary of Shelley. All persons interested in the matter, whether members of the society or not, are invited to attend.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BENOIST, Ch. Enquête algérienne. Paris: Lecène. 3 fr. 50 c.
FABRY, L. de. La Broderie du XI^e siècle jusqu'à nos jours. Paris: Leroux. 100 fr.
LANO, P. de. La Cour de Napoléon III. Paris: Victor-Havard. 4 fr.
LENIEST, Ch. La poésie patriotique en France au moyen âge. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
LESSING, J., u. A. MAU. Wand- u. Deckenschmuck e. römischen Hauses aus der Zeit d. Augustus. Hrg. vom k. deutschen archäolog. Institut. Berlin: Reimer. 40 M.
LICHTENFELD, A. Grillparzer-Studien. Wien: Graeser. 2 M.
ROOSES, Max. Compte rendu de la première session de la Conférence du Livre. Paris: Cercle de la Librairie. 10 fr.
SIMON, Jules et Gustave. La Femme du vingtième siècle. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BACHER, W. Die Agada der palästinensischen Amoraer. 1. Bd. Strassburg: Trübner. 10 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ALLAIN, E. L'Œuvre scolaire de la Révolution 1789—1802. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 6 fr.
GREFE, C. Beiträge zur Geschichte der Israeliten in Wien. I. Der alte jüdische Friedhof im IX. Bezirke aus dem XVI. Jahrh. Wien: Gilhofer. 10 M. 80 Pf.
KNEER, A. Kardinal Zabarella (Franciscus de Zabarellis, Cardinalis Florentinus) 1360—1417. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte d. grossen abendländ. Schismas. 1. Thl. Münster: Theissing. 1 M.
LEONIS X. pontificis maximi regesta, edd. J. et F. Hergenrother. Fasc. VII., VIII. Freiburg-Br.: Herder. 10 M. 80 Pf.
PAJOL, le Comte. Les Guerres sous Louis XV. T. VII. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 12 fr.
WOYNAR, K. Oesterreichs Beziehungen zu Schweden u. Dänemark, vornehmlich seine Politik bei der Vereinigung Norwegens mit Schweden in den J. 1813 u. 1814. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M. 20 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ERDMANN, B. Logik. 1. Bd. Logische Elementarlehre. Halle: Niemeyer. 10 M.
FISCHER, P., et D. P. CHELERT. Expéditions scientifiques du Travailleur et du Talisman 1880 à 1883. Brachiopodes. Paris: Masson. 20 fr.
JAECKEL, A. J. Systematische Uebersicht der Vögel Bayerns. Hrg. v. R. Blasius. München: Oldenbourg. 10 M.
KRAEPELIN, K. Revision der Skorpione. I. Die Familie der Androctonidae. Hamburg: Gräfe. 5 M.
WASMANN, E. Die zusammengesetzten Nester u. gemischten Kolonien der Ameisen. Münster: Aschenorff. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- HORATI FLACCI, Q. sermonum et epistularum libri. Mit Anmerkgn. v. L. Mueller. 1. Thl. Satiren. Leipzig: Freytag. 8 M.
JOHANSSON, K. F. Beiträge zur griechischen Sprachkunde. Upsala: Lundström. 6 M.
MARINSON, e. altfranzösisches. aus e. Pariser Handschrift d. 13. Jahrh. zum ersten Mal hrg. v. H. Andresen. Halle: Niemeyer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
REICHENBERGER, S. Die Entwicklung d. metonymischen Gebrauchs v. Götternamen in der griechischen Poesie bis zum Ende d. alexandrinischen Zeitalters. Karlsruhe: Braun. 2 M. 40 Pf.
SAGA-BIBLIOTHEK, altnordische, hrg. v. G. Cederschield, H. Geiring u. E. Mogk. 1. Hft. Halle: Niemeyer. 1 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON HERO[N]DAS.

Trinity College, Dublin: Oct. 25, 1891.

- I. 17. [ἀπερρε] καὶ μὴ κ.τ.λ.
I. 35. [θεὰ τέρει]ναι καλλονήν.
I. 41. οἶκον πρὸς ἄλλον.
I. 64. κάλ' οἶα πράξεις ἦδ' [ἐπιστολῇ λέξει].
I. 74-81.

σὺ δ' αὖτις ἐξ με μηδὲ ἔν, φίλην, τοῖον φέρουσα χῶρει· μῦθον δὲ μεμνηναῖς πρέπει γυναιξὶ ταῖς νέαις ἀπάγγελλε τὴν Πυθῶν δὲ Μη-ρίχην ἔα θάλλειν τὸν οἶφρον· οὐ γὰρ ἐνγελεῖ τις ἐς Μάνδριν. ἀλλ' οὐχὶ τοῦτων, φασί, τῶν λόγων Γύλλαις δείται. Θρήσσα, τὴν μελαινίδ' ἐκτριφον [χ]έκ[τ]ημό[ρ]ου [τ]ρείς, [εἰ]τ' εἰ[φ]υσσον] ἀκρήτον καὶ ἄδωρ, ἐπιστάξασα δὸς πειν.

χέκτημόρου is due to Mr. Nicholson. I take it to mean wine-glasses or cups, and μελαινίς to be a decanter of some sort. It is literally a shell-fish. Cf. cum bibitur concha.

II. 3. τὴν νῦν. Read τὴν ναῦν. Thales was a wealthy corn-merchant and owned a ship. Cf. v. 59.

II. 4. ἐγὼ δ' ἐμ[α]υ]ς ἄρτους. Perhaps ἐγὼ δὲ μῦς ἄρτους: scil. πρῶγω "while I am like a mouse nibbling at loaves," i.e., living from hand to mouth, a proverbial expression.

II. 74, 80. Read: ἔλας σὺ μὲν ἴσως Μυρτάλης, οὐδὲν δειδν, ἐγὼ δὲ πυρῶν· ταῦτα δὸς ἐκεῖν' ἔξεις.

"You love my Myrtale, and no wonder: I love your wheat [Thales was a wealthy wheat merchant, see v. 19]: let us then make an exchange." There can, I think, be no doubt as to the reading.

III. 23. Kenyon. ἢ τίσω ζῶν; "or am I to pay my life."

IV. 25. αὐτῇ. Read certainly αὐτῆ vocative.

IV. 94, 95: πρὸσδος· ἢ γὰρ ἱροῖσιν μείων ἀμορτήσῃ ἐγγίης τρίτης μοίρης.

"Give more; otherwise, being short in your dues, you will miss a third part of health." Cf. μεταγωγείν. III. 81 will defend the elision or erasis.

V. 1 and 15. Γάστρων. I think this should be printed with a small initial. γάστρων is "fat-paunch," a term of abuse, not a proper name. The man's name was really Davus, v. 68: the meaning of which verse seems to be: "Let Davus meet with the retribution of a mouse" referring to the proverb κατὰ μῦθε δλεθρον: cf. "confossio rem soricina naenia" in the Bacchides of Plautus.

V. 4. οραρχα. This does not seem to give sense. I should like to know from Mr. Kenyon if the ductus is consistent with ἀραρχα: "I have taken Amphytaea for my wife."

V. 18. φερῖς οὐ] φῶρ εἰς σὺ.

V. 59. ἐμα τοῦτις] μὰ τὸν, τοῦτους.

V. 77. Read οὐ τὴν τύραννον. "No, by the Queen"; probably a traditional oath in Cos, which may have come down from the days of Artemisia, Queen of Caria.

V. 85. ἔξειε τὸτ' ἀμ[ε]λ[ε]τ[ή]νδ] ἐορτὴν ἐξ ἐορτῆς. This is one of Mr. Hicks's brilliant emendations, the bracketed letters not being written or else illegible. I should like, however, to suggest that γαμήλια or γαμηλίην might be worked in. Perhaps:

ἔξετε γαμήλι' εἴτ' ἐορτὴν ἐξ ἐορτῆς. The bride seems to me to be Amphytaea, not Cydilla.

VI. 10. στ εσ τι]. Read στ' ἔστι scil. λαμπρός. "When I have had the trouble of brightening it myself." Acknowledging the probability of Ellis's Ἐδάλαστρι, I yet think that the latter part of the verse may have run:

Ἰλαστρα θυέ μου ταύτη.

"Offer a thanksgiving to Metro for appeasing me." Ἰλαστρα might be formed from Ἰλάσκομαι. Cf. Ἰλαστήριον, Ἰλημι.

VI. 68. μανη might be inserted in the gap. VII. 37. φέλασσε κήσας or κλάσας.

A. PALMER.

Castle Howard, Yorkshire: Oct. 23, 1891.

I. 7, 8. Perhaps the text should be thus assigned: Μετρίχη (to Threissa). κάλει τις ἐστ. (= Call out who it is).

Threissa (to Metriche). Γυλλίς, ἄμμα Γυλλίς. Μετρίχη. σπρίφον τ', &c.

19, 20. Mr. Rutherford's punctuation makes this passage hard to translate. It reads more easily thus:

οἴλαινε· ταῦτα τῆς νεωτέρης ὑμῖν πρῶστειν· ἀλλ' οὐ τοῦτο μὴ σέ θερμήνην.

(= Mock away! That is an advantage you young people have: but this mocking will certainly not give you much excitement.)

34, eq. Perhaps this reads best without any break at ἔρμησαν:

οἶα πρὸς Πάριν καθ' ἔρμησαν πάλαι κριθῆναι καλλονῆν· λάθοιμ' αὐτὰς λέγουσ' ὀκυλήν, &c.

(= Went once long ago to Paris to be judged in beauty. May I escape their vengeance if I say what a fine spirit you have to sit warming your chair, &c.)

55. Probably should be read:

κινέων, ἔδικτος, καὶ Κυθηρῆς σφριγᾶ. σφριγᾶ=πληρῆς ἐστι. Hesychius. (= He is new to love and full of passion). Κυθηρῆ is evidently the form given in the MS.

57. Possibly the clue to the right reading here is also given by Hesychius:

Ἐπικιχράδας ὄως καρδίην ἀνεσπρήθη.

In Cos, which is probably the scene of this poem, Zeus, who is here taken as a type of passion, was called Epikichradas (= with his heart frenzied like Zeus).

87. An alternative to Mr. Rutherford's οὐ πεπράσκει τις is οὐ πεπώκας σὺ.

II. 73. The line contains local colouring to which we have no clue:

Ἔσπερ φιλόβρις ἐν Σάμφ κοτ' ὁ Βρέγχος, was possibly the original, though who Breuchos was must remain a secret.

III. 19. A proper name seems to have dropped out of the fourth foot. Perhaps Ἡράκλεις, suggested by the context on gambling:

αἱ δόρακες δὲ, καὶ Ἡράκλεις τε καὶ Ἄπολλον.

49. ἴδοντας certainly makes the best sense. The neighbours, knowing from whom they can claim compensation, do not trouble to stop Cottalos at his pranks.

64. Perhaps ἀστραβῆς ὄκωσπερ οἶδα (=yes, as steadfastly as I know how to). Or Cottalos may as yet be impudent and say ἐς τραυλὸν ὡς πρᾶγμ' οἶδα (=counters! yes, you know how jolly they are). τραυλὸν=ἦδύ, Hesychius.

66, 67, 68. The remarkable alliteration on κ is to be noticed, as a sign of Lampriscus's rising anger.

69. πεδητὰς (hinderers) is better than πεδήτας (Rutherford).

76. The meaning, perhaps, is: mice can get into iron as little as this whip make any impression upon you.

96. Very possibly we should read παν τὸ δέρμα δερθέντα.

=with all his hide well tanned. This suits the merciless disposition of the mother.

IV. 68. If the reading is οὐκὶ ζῶν δοκοῦσιν ἡρμεῖν πάντες, we might compare Keats's "Ode on a Grecian Urn," stanza iv.

92. The gap should almost certainly be filled up thus: καὶ παισὶ δέουσιν. παισὶ = πλακούντια (flat cakes), Hesychius.

V. 68. The text looks like a corruption of an original οὗτω καταμυθεῖς ὥστε Δαιδάλου τιμῆ.

(—thus scratched, as a tribute of honour to Daedalus).

VI. 59. (σκούτευσ) φαλακρός, μικκός ἐστ'.

One is forcibly reminded of Plato's χάλκευ φαλακρός καὶ συμκρός. (R. p. 496.)

VII. 90. Perhaps there is here a play on words, γαλαῖ containing an allusion to the name of the cobbler. Κέρδω also means weasel.

S. E. WINBOLT.

Cambridge: Oct. 24, 1891.

Herondas.

I. 71. μὴ τῆς μετρήσης.

80. εἶτα ὑποχέον (ὑποχεῖν is the technical word opposed to ἐπιχεῖν, which is here replaced by ἐπιστάζαστα).

II. 6. τί μὴ ἴκαλιώ; καὶ τὸν γὰρ ἀξιώ κλαῦσαι.

18. πυροῦς δὲ περὶ τὰς ἐκ Τύρου, τί τῷ δήμῳ μετέδοικε; δωρεὴν γ' ἔρ' (οἱ γὰρ) οὐδ' οὗτος πυροῦς δίδωσ' ἀλήθειαν, οἷτ' ἐγὼ πάλιν κείνην.

III. 93. Ἰσ' ἂν ("it would be quite as easy for you").

VI. 97. Coritto. ὑγίαινε Μητροῦ. μὴ πάλαι μάτην χωρεῖ. ἡμῖν δὲ, φῶρ γὰρ ἐστι.

VII. 23. ἐξηρτίωται.

35. ἀπὸ κερδίων γίνονται.

38. τὰβλα τῆς τέχνης ἡμέων ἔχουσιν ἄλλοι, αὐτὸς δὲ δειλαίην οἰζύν, διόρω τε ποτέων νύκτα χημέρην θαλαπᾶ, οὐδ' ἐστι σίτον ἄχρισ ἐσπερης κάπτειν.

48. τὰς κοχῶνας θλίβουτες (?).

52. ἐστ' ἂν σαφέως πεισθῆτε μὴ λέγειν.

69. εἰ τοῦτο λῆς γάρ, οὐ σε ῥηδίων ψεύσω εὐχέων.

Hypereides.

I. 23. μόνῃ σοὶ οὐκ ἔμελεν ὑπὸ τοῦ δήμου τιμᾶσθαι οὐδέν. διὰ τί; ("why do I say this?") ὅτι, εἰ ἐφρονεῖ' ἡμέης.

39. ἤδη καὶ.

100. πολλῆς ἀνοίας.

F. D.

Trinity College, Oxford: Oct. 30, 1891.

IV. 36. τὸν Βαγάλης γὰρ τοῦτον οὐχ ὄρξς, Κυρνοῦ, ὄκως β. β . . . , ἀνδρίαντα τῆς μύττεω.

None of the suggested emendations of the second line seem to give a good sense, or to correspond with the five letters indicated as missing. As β and δ do not seem very different when roughly written in the MS. (v. c., pl. i., col. i., ll. 14 and 18), I should like to substitute a δ for the second β, and read ὥσπερ βαδίζονθ—"the statue seems almost to be walking."

F. W. HALL.

"TALLYHO!"

Paris: Oct. 10, 1891.

The quotation from Sir Walter Scott, which Mr. Puget Toynbee supplies (and which I only saw to-day) was, I now find, used (and misused) by Littré under T'aiant, as follows:—

"W. Scott, Waverley, Append. to a general preface, ii. dit.: a loud taiant, et en note: tailliers-hors, et en phrase moderne: tally-ho!"

"Estce que taiant," added Littré, "viendrait de tailler?"—thus throwing up the sponge in the first round; for "tailliers-hors" (apart from some possible lost context) is mere gibberish, with all due worship to the Wizard of the North, and to Littré also.

However, we may score up their joint admission that tally-ho seemed to come from tayaut.

Hunting the word somewhat further, I find that Mouchet, who made a considerable collection of books on hunting written before 1400, considered "le Dit de la Chace don Cerf" the earliest in that kind in the vulgar tongue; so that we have the oldest authority making for taho. Next to that (said Mouchet) came "le Livre du Roy Modus" (about 1322 to 1327). In Hardouin's "Trésor de Venerie (1394), I now find (line 1215) a curious form:

Et leur doit dire fort et haut:
Ta ha, thalaut, thalaut.

and again (line 1485):

Et doit crier tout à estau:
Ha ha ha thalaut thalaut.

I cannot answer for the correctness of these, taken from a faulty first publication (at Metz, 1856); and, in fact, "crier" is my correction from the crier of that edition.

Pairault does not give these; but from Gaston de Foix (called Phoebus) he does print "sa! sa! taho! taho!" which is our earlier taho, and (as may be conjectured) our ta also, but disfigured into sa, just as Jubinal mauled it into ra in "la Chace don Cerf."

From C. L. Gauchet, Pairault cites a form of cry: thau, which may be a misprint; from Du Fouilloux he gives tya hillaud (which reminds of our view-hollow); and finally he records from Le Verrier de la Conterie the form taiant.

All this was unknown to Littré, who went no further back than Molière's "Les Fâcheux" (1661) for his taiant.

To sum up, there seems to be nothing here that discredits my conjecture that the taho of the earliest known piece of sporting literature in the vulgar French tongue was the direct ancestor, some seven centuries ago, of tayaut and of tallyho.

JOHN O'NEILL.

"LOCULI"

Rugby: Oct. 31, 1891.

In your notice to-day of my little book Loculi (Percival), the reviewer asks "Can stories 86 and 146 be called 'really Latin' (Pref., p. 5)?"

I will not venture to answer for 86, which I wrote myself. But I think 146 must be "really Latin," as it is taken—with only a very few most trifling simplifications, e.g., nemo for neque . . . quisquam, laudem for præconium, and the like—straight from Cicero (pro Archia P., c. 20 and c. 24).

F. D. MORICE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Nov. 8, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture Society: "The Personal Life of Shakspeare," by Mr. W. E. Church.

4 p.m. South Place Institute: "Costa Rica; The Happy Valley," by Major Martin A. S. Hume.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Corruptions in the State," by Mr. H. S. Cohen.

MONDAY, Nov. 9, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Trunk," III., by Prof. W. Anderson.

8.30 p.m. Library Association: "A Card-charging System for Lending Libraries," by Mr. J. H. Quinn; "The Municipal Libraries of Paris," by Mr. E. M. Borrajo.

TUESDAY, Nov. 10, 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Presidential Address, by Mr. George Berkley; Presentation of Medals, &c.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "The Malay Peninsula: Its Resources and Prospects," by Mr. W. E. Maxwell.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Recent Journey through the Trans-Salween Shan States to Tong-King," by Lord Lamington.

WEDNESDAY, Nov. 11, 8 p.m. Geological: "Dacrytharium ocimum from the Isle of Wight and Quercy," by Mr. R. Lydekker; "Supplementary Remarks on Glen Roy," by Mr. T. F. Jamieson.

THURSDAY, Nov. 12, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Lower Extremity," I., by Prof. W. Anderson.

8 p.m. Mathematical: "The Classification of Binodal Quartic Curves," by W. H. M. Jeffery; "Selective and Metallic Reflection," by Mr. A. B. Basset; "A Class of Automorphic Functions," by Prof. W. Burnside; "The Contacts of Systems of Circles," by Mr. A. Larmor; "A Certain Identity," by Prof. G. B. Mathews; "Finding the G Points of a given Circle with respect to a given Triangle of Reference," by Mr. J. Griffiths.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "The Standard Volt and Ampere Meter used at the Ferry Works, Thames Ditton," by Capt. H. R. Sankey and Mr. F. Y. Anderson.

FRIDAY, Nov. 13, 7.30 p.m. Ruskin Society: "The Poems of Mr. Ruskin," by Mr. W. Marwick.

7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting, "The Works on the Barking and Pitsea Extension Railway," by Mr. H. E. Stilgoe; "Rail-Pile Bridges in Ceylon," by Mr. H. Buckraill.

8 p.m. New Shakspeare: "Measure for Measure," by Mr. W. Poel.

SATURDAY, Nov. 14, 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

A HISTORY OF BYZANTINE LITERATURE.

Geschichte der Byzantinischen Litteratur. Von Dr. Karl Krumbacher. (Munich.)

A HISTORY of Byzantine literature has long been a desideratum, and the present volume admirably supplies the want. Dr. Krumbacher presents us with a complete survey of this vast field of study, which covers the entire period of nine centuries that intervene between the age of Justinian and the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, and includes most of the subjects that fall under the head of literature. His choice of the sixth century as his starting-point in the investigation was determined by circumstances external to himself. For his own part, he would date the commencement of Byzantine literature from the same period which Finlay and others have fixed on for the beginning of the Byzantine empire—the end of the seventh, or the early part of the eighth, century, when the administration of the state was modified in various ways, and both the population and the language were subjected to numerous changes; but he found himself obliged to go back to the earlier date, because Dr. Christ, who has written the history of classical Greek literature for Dr. Iwan Müller's Handbuch der klassischen Altertumswissenschaft, to which series the present volume also belongs, did not bring his work down later than Justinian's time. It will be a surprise to many readers to discover how extensive and how varied this literature is, comprising as it does—to mention only the chief heads—history, philosophy, rhetoric, philology in the widest sense of the term, the study of antiquity, poetry—both sacred and profane—and prose romances. Whatever its faults may be, no true student can deny its importance, especially when we regard it as a whole, which we learn to do from the present work: we thus perceive its continuous development, and the relation that one part bears to another. The neglect with which Byzantine literature has until lately been treated, has arisen from its being estimated from the standpoint of classical Greek literature, for in consequence of this it has been stigmatised as feeble and degenerate. To estimate it rightly, it should be compared with the literary productions of the middle ages in Western Europe, by which process its superiority is at once perceived. In tracing the history of this literature, Dr. Krumbacher has acted wisely in not treating his subject under centuries or periods, with a general survey of the productions of each, but in taking the different branches of study one by one, and tracing them in their development or decline from their earliest to their latest stage. The thoroughness with which this difficult and laborious task has been accomplished, and the sound judgment shown in the criticism of the different writers, deserve the highest commendation; while the clearness of Dr. Krumbacher's method, and the liveliness of his style, impart an interest to what might otherwise be a ponderous subject. Not the least valuable part of the work consists in the elaborate apparatus of authorities and sources of information, which is appended to each section. The author tells us that he devoted six months to ransacking the back numbers of all the periodicals of Europe—philological, archaeological, theological, and historical—which have been published during a period extending from fifteen to thirty years from the present date, in order to discover contributions to the study of his subject. The results of this are placed before the reader in the most instructive manner; for the authorities are not merely named, but the exact points on which they throw light are indicated, and an estimate of their merit is frequently appended. These summaries by themselves form an admirable repertory of information for the special student.

It is not easy within a limited space to give an account of so comprehensive a book as this, but we will endeavour to describe the manner in which some of its various branches have been treated. To the historical writers the first place is by right accorded, and they are dealt with in separate groups according as they were historians or annalists; that is, according as, on the one hand, they recorded contemporary events and other facts about which they could obtain evidence at first hand, and wrote with a certain conception of history as a work of art, requiring care and completeness, or, on the other, summarised the history of the world in the form of a chronicle, for the benefit of a half-educated public and in popular language. The latter of these two classes exercised by far the more extensive influence at the time when they wrote, while to us they are chiefly of value from the extracts that they give, or the information that they have derived, from earlier authors. Dr. Krumbacher tells us what is known of each writer, and, after giving an account of the contents of his work, estimates his capacity, fairness, and acquaintance with the facts which he narrates, and compares his style with that of other historians. By bringing to light in this manner the individuality of the several authors, he disproves the existence of that uniformity in style and treatment which has often been imputed to them. Much had, no doubt, been accomplished in this direction for particular historians by other scholars in separate treatises and in magazine articles. The merit of the present work consists in its bringing all this criticism to a focus, and so enabling us to form a general estimate of these authorities. The importance of this portion of the literature will be increasingly felt, in proportion as the greatness of the part which was played by the Byzantine empire in the history of the world is more fully recognised; but, in addition to this, the subsidiary aid which these historical treatises furnish to other branches of study can hardly be overrated. A marked proof of their value in furthering the science of geography has recently been afforded by Prof. Ramsay's great work, The Historical Geography of Asia Minor, the discoveries contained in which are based in no slight degree on facts and intimations derived from that source. We may remark, in passing, that the great need of a new edition of the Byzantine historians is strongly impressed on us by the condemnatory language in which Dr. Krumbacher speaks of the Bonn edition, especially in respect of the almost complete neglect of the revision of the text which those who took part in it displayed.

The sections of the work which are devoted to Byzantine philological literature and its representatives are of especial interest. Here we find a full account of the studies of that extraordinary genius, the Patriarch Photius—a man whose attainments would have been conspicuous in any age, but who, appearing suddenly, as he does, at the end of the darkest period of the middle ages, the seventh and eighth centuries, is altogether a literary phenomenon. Not only were his mental activity and the extent of his researches prodigious—we hear of him as studying whole nights, and collecting books from every quarter—but he was not less distinguished by the acuteness of his criticism and the independence and clearness of his judgment. His productiveness as a writer and his enthusiasm as a teacher were equally remarkable, and his house became the resort of enquiring students. There are interesting sketches also of Michael Psellus, the "prince of philosophers" in the eleventh century, who, notwithstanding marked faults of character, was the first literary man of his time, and ushered in the revival of letters which took place under the Comneni; and of Eustathius, who combined the pursuit of scholarship with activity in other directions, for he was eminent as a politician and a reformer of the Church, and both his philanthropy and his capacity for meeting an emergency were proved at the time of the capture of Thessalonica, of which city he was archbishop, by the invading Normans. Very valuable also is the information which Dr. Krumbacher gives concerning the dictionaries of the Byzantine period, such as those of Suidas and the various Etymologica; in the case of the former of these the discussion of the sources which were used in its compilation is conspicuously thorough. It may be a consolation to scholars to learn that he doubts whether the Byzantines from the ninth century onwards possessed more of the classics than we do at the present day.

In treating of the subject of Byzantine poetry the author commences by quoting the judgment of Bernhardt, that "the Byzantines had no acquaintance with poetry in the proper sense of the term, and it never existed among them." The explanation of this harsh criticism, which he undertakes to refute, lies, he says, in the fact that the real Byzantine poetry has been almost entirely discovered, or at least revealed to the literary world, since Bernhardt wrote. Of this, in its two branches of Christian hymnology and popular poetry in the vulgar tongue, an ample account is given in the present work. Dr. Krumbacher has an especial right to speak on the former of these, the sacred poetry of the Byzantines, because he has made it a subject of careful study; and we learn from the present work that he is engaged in editing the hitherto unpublished hymns, which he has copied from a MS. in the library at Patmos, by Romanus, whom he regards as the greatest master of this species of composition. That the hymnology of the Eastern Church deserves the praise which Dr. Krumbacher bestows on it, and may claim a distinguished place in literature, few persons will deny who are acquainted with the specimens contained in Christ and Parankas' selection; and the metrical, or rather rhythmical, principles by which these poems are regulated deserve the serious attention of students. The clear exposition of these principles which is here given is all the more valuable, because of the great differences of opinion concerning them that existed until lately, and are only now giving way to the true explanation, which was originally propounded by Pitra. It is, to say the least, an important chapter in the history of the poetic art; and along with the discussion of it will be found an interesting sketch of acrostich verse-writing, which was generally employed by the Byzantines to give the name of the writer of a poem, and thus possesses an historic value.

The other branch of Byzantine poetry, that which was composed in the vulgar tongue, is also very completely dealt with in the present volume. Dr. Krumbacher's summary of the subject is all the more valuable, because, though numerous poems or groups of poems of this class have been carefully edited, no account of them as a whole has yet appeared. Here we find analyses of the various poems, estimates of their merits, accounts of the different forms, original or expanded, in which they are found, discussions of their probable dates, where these are not certainly known, and notices of the principal criticisms that have been passed on them. The relation of these Greek romances to Western poems on similar subjects had already been elaborately discussed by M. Gidel in his Études sur la Littérature grecque moderne; but this writer, in Dr. Krumbacher's opinion, has over-estimated the influence of French prototypes in their formation. Foremost among the metrical tales of native growth is the mediæval epic of Digenes Akritas, which resembles in its general features, though it is totally unconnected with, the stories of Roland and of the Cid. The hero of this, whose history falls in the middle of the tenth century, is called Digenes because of his parentage, as being the son of a Mahometan father and a Greek mother; and Akritas from his exploits in defending the boundaries of the empire towards the south-east, in the region of Cappadocia and the neighbourhood of the Euphrates. An especial interest attaches to this story because of its extraordinarily wide circulation among Slavonic and other races, and because fragments of it are found in many of the ballads of the Greek peasantry at the present day. Others of these metrical romances turn either on characters and events in earlier Greek history, or on heroes and heroines of Western chivalry, or on incidents arising from the Crusades, in which there is a mixture of Frankish culture with Greek and Oriental life. Discursive as these poems are, they still deserve study as a characteristic product of their time, which must have exercised a considerable influence on the popular mind.

Enough has now been said to give the reader some idea of the wide field over which Dr. Krumbacher's volume ranges. It will be found to be a mine of information, both by persons who wish to study the subject as a whole, and by those who are in search of materials to illustrate other branches of knowledge.

H. F. TOZER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SANSKRIT "AS'VA" "WATER."

Indian Institute, Oxford: Oct. 15, 1891.

Since Skt. as'va (Iran. aspa) is the equivalent of Lat. equus, Goth. aikva, O. Sax. chu-, the equivalent of Lat. agna, Goth. ahva, O. Sax. aha must be Skt. as'vā (Iran. aspa). The evidence for the existence of the two latter words is as follows:

1. Certain Sanskrit names of rivers contain the word as'vā, (as'va) evidently meaning "water, river"—e.g., As'va-vati (cf. Saras-vati), As'va-vati As'va-nadi (a redundant form), As'va-parvā (cf. parvasā, "N. pr. verschiedener Flüsse," P.W., s.v.), As'va-rathā (ratha occurs in the names of several rivers—e.g., rathacitrā, ratha-prā, &c.), As'va-sakrit (where sak- is possibly a transposition of kas-, cf. saka for kasā, "water," P.W., s.v.). Further, As'vā-vati occurs in the Rig Veda (x. 97. 7) as the name of a medicinal herb, and no doubt means the "watery" or juicy plant par excellence. Roth (Geldner u. Kaegi, 70 Lieder d. R.V., p. 174, note 3) suggests apūvatim as the correct reading; but there is no necessity for altering the received text, if as'vā is taken in the sense of "water."

2. Greek forms of Persian names of rivers show the corresponding form asp (Iran. aspa) e.g., Hyd-asp-ēs (Bid-asp-ēs), Zari-asp-ēs, Cho-asp-ēs, Ari-asp-ēs* (?), Eu-asp-la. In tracing the connexion between the Sanskrit river-name Vitastā and the Greek form Hydaspes, it should be noticed that the first change in the name was made by the Persians—viz., Vitaspa* (on the model of river-names in -aspa), and this the Greeks further altered to Bidaspes, Hydaspes.

It would, of course, be possible to extend this list, but I have quoted only those instances where there appears to be some degree of certainty as to etymology.

E. SIBREE.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

BABU HARAPRASAD SASTRI, of Calcutta, has issued in pamphlet form a paper which he read before the Cumbuliatola Reading Club upon "The Vernacular Literature of Bengal before the Introduction of English Education." It appears that the study of early Bengali literature received a stimulus from an address delivered by Sir W. W. Hunter some little while ago to the Calcutta University. Much more of it has been found to exist in MS. than might have been expected; and several works have been printed. The most interesting feature about it—which it shares, indeed, with the vernacular literature of other parts of India—is that it is closely associated with religious sectarianism, and that it represents a reaction against the exclusive devotion of the Brahmans to Sanskrit. Chaitanya, the great religious reformer of the first half of the sixteenth century, and the founder of the Vaishnav (Boishtob) sect, is the source, directly or indirectly, of the greater part of early Bengali literature, his life and teaching being the subject of numerous biographies. Some information may be learnt from these about topography; but of historical works proper there seems to be no trace.

We hope that a translator may be found for an able little book on the "Relations between Grammar and Logic" (Raporturile între Gramatică și Logică), which has just been published by Prof. Lazar Săineanu at Bucharest (Socecu & Co.). It is very lucidly and methodically written, and the author is well acquainted with the latest results of linguistic science. His remarks on the theory of stratification in language are especially suggestive. The second part of the book is occupied with an admirable sketch of the nature and growth of the various parts of speech, illustrated from numerous families of language; and the work is furnished with an excellent index. It may be regarded as one more proof of an increasing interest in the study of the psychological side of language, and of a reaction against a too exclusive devotion to Indo-European phonology.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

HELLENIC SOCIETY.—(Monday, Oct. 19.)

PROF. JEMM, president, in the chair.—Mr. Penrose read a paper on the "Old Hecatompedon at Athens," designed to show, on carefully worked-out architectural evidence, that this earlier temple occupied the same site as the later Parthenon, and that to it, and not, as Dr. Dörpfeld maintains, to the archaic temple which stood between the Parthenon and the Erechtheum, belonged the drums and other architectural fragments which have been built into the north wall of the Acropolis. Mr. Penrose further thought it probable that the very remarkable groups of archaic sculpture which were found on the Acropolis a few years ago had occupied the pediments of the Hecatompedon on his theory of restoration. The paper, which was illustrated with plans and diagrams, will appear in the next number of the Journal of Hellenic Studies.—Mr. Louis Dyer read a paper, also illustrated by numerous diagrams, upon the Vitruvian account of the Greek stage, in which he laid special stress upon the edition of the text published in the sixteenth century by Fra Giocondo, who was not only a learned antiquary and scholar, but also an architect of great eminence. Mr. Dyer maintained that more was to be learned as to the real meaning of Vitruvius from the work of this mediaeval editor than from most of the treatises and editions of modern scholars, especially in Germany, who lacked any practical acquaintance with architectural principles.

NEW SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Friday, Oct. 23.)

DR. FURNIVALL, director, in the chair.—Mr. P. Z. Round read two papers: (I.) "Analogues of the Thaisa Story in 'Pericles.'" (1) The "Historia del rey Canamor y del infante Turian su hijo," published at Seville in 1528, tells how Turian was sailing home with the Princess Floreta, whom he had carried off by stealth from the castle where she was kept in guard, when a great storm overtook them. The ship-master counselled that Floreta must be thrown overboard: at last, however, she was landed on a desolate island, and found shelter there with a solitary nun. Turian, cutting himself off from his fellow adventurers, sailed again and recovered Floreta. The carrying-off belongs to a class of tales such as the wooing of Hild for Iagen in the "Lay of Gudrun," or "Faithful John" in Grimm's folk-tales. The rest of Floreta's story K. Hofmann makes out to be a derivative, like Pericles, of the story of Apollonius; but the combination has resulted in a confusion of motive. A storm may demand a human victim either (a) arbitrarily, as in "Hysmine and Hysminias" of Eustathius or "Thorkill's Voyage" of Saxo, or (b) for wrong-doing, as in the ballad of Brown Robyn's Confession (see the analogues quoted by Prof. Child). In Jourdain de Blaivies, a mediaeval adaptation of Apollonius, there is a similar confusion: the reason given for the casting-away of Oriabel after child-birth is that the sea will not endure a person who is wounded or injured: but the lady herself, like Floreta and the seamen, believes her sin raised the storm. (2) Bonnie Annie in the ballad (Child, No. 24), having fallen in child-birth in a storm, is, by the captain's direction, thrown overboard. She seems to have been chosen by lot, but the incident may have been merely parasitic. The rejection of the adventures before Apollonius (=Pericles) comes to the land where he wins his bride is common to each of these stories, and suggests that the tale originally did not possess the former part. (II.) "The Lear-story in Celtic Mythology." Creiddylad or Creundilad, says Prof. Rhys, was daughter to King Lludd of the Silver Hand, whose equivalent in Irish is Neada of the Silver Hand, king of the tribes of the goddess Danu. The name in its earliest form is Nodens, who is found, from inscriptions, to have been the god of the Romano-British temple at Lydney. Creiddylad, beloved by Gwyn ab Nudd and Gwythur ab Greiddawl (representatives of darkness and the sun), who yearly fight for her hand, is a Persephone, spending her time alternately with the dark and bright deities. Nuada, disabled in fighting the Fir Bolg, had to give up the kingship; Lludd, in Welsh story, is one of the Paramount Prisoners of the Isle of Britain; and Merddin or Merlin Emrys, who is another impersonation of the same deity, has to go into the Glass House in Bardsey, or is imprisoned in a sepulchre or enchanted cloud. The legend embodies the myth that the god of light lies helpless or dethroned during the winter season. Sometimes the captivity of Lludd is told not of him but of the sea-god Llyr, a confusion into which Geoffrey of Monmouth fell. Creiddylad, in Welsh legend, is called the loyal maiden, the noblest maiden of the three isles; but, from the relation in Rhys's Celtic Heathendom, it would seem that Geoffrey alone preserves the tale of Cordeilla's rejection, the ingratitude of the other sisters, and the restoration of Leir by Cordeilla's assistance. The paper was intended only to state Prof. Rhys's conclusions.

ENGLISH GOETHE SOCIETY.—(Monday, Oct. 26.)

ALFRED NUTT, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. R. G. Alford read a paper on "English Critics of Goethe." He pointed out that Goethe began to be criticised in England at an earlier date than was commonly supposed, as far back, indeed, as the year 1790, when William Taylor, of Norwich, whose name was now almost forgotten, commenced writing articles on Goethe in the Monthly Review. At a later date Blackwood's, under Lockhart and Wilson, did much to clear away the misrepresentations contained in Jeffrey's articles in the Edinburgh. When Carlyle appeared on the scene he encountered considerable opposition in his championship of Goethe, notably from De Quincey in the London Magazine. Quotations from several reviews now forgotten caused some amusement at the ignorance and prejudice they exhibited. Carlyle formed his own theory of Goethe, and got many to share it; but it could not be final, nor did he think it could.—A discussion followed, in which Mr. Nutt, Dr. Oswald, and Mr. Kirby took part. Mr. Nutt remarked that it was curious to notice the Tory Blackwood's showing a greater readiness to recognise new lights in literature than the Whig Edinburgh.

FINE ART.

THE GEOGRAPHY OF ANCIENT EGYPT.
Géographie Ancienne de la Basse-Egypte. Par
Le Vte. Jacques de Rougé. (Paris: Rothschild.)

NEW books on subjects of research may generally be set down as either essential, useful, or pernicious. And there is no doubt that this outline, of 176 pages, will enter among the essentials of all who study Ancient Egypt. The aim of it plainly is stated to be the adjustment of the discoveries made under the Egypt Exploration Fund during recent years, and other recent researches, treated in an impartial view along with the earlier and more literary study of the Delta geography. It is only to be regretted that a fuller study of this region was not carried out, to include all the known sites, beside those of official importance. A Græco-Copto-Arabic list of bishoprics, found by M. Revillout at Oxford, and here published for the first time, gives an original value to this work, and places the author in a better position than that of previous writers. Details would be merely technical, but we may indicate here the main results accepted on important points. Andropolis=Kharbata in the new list, to the west of Salamun. The Nikiu-Prosopis question is left unsettled. Tell el-Maskhutah is accepted as being Pithom, and in the Heroopolite nome. Kynopolis in the new list=Bana, south of Abusir, and Leontopolis comes to Saharagit. Târ is fixed to Tanis, in accord with Brugsch; while it is admitted that "the fortress of Târ" is a frontier place, the relation to Sele is not acknowledged. The new list gives Sethron=Bazarut, which it is proposed to fix at Bazartin near Menzaleh. No objection is made to Bouto being at Tell Ferain. Thmuis and Mendes are recognised in the immense double-site of Tmey-el-Amdid. Nebesheh is accepted as Amt of Amt-pelhu; and the eastern worship of Uat is recognised as distinct from that of the nome of Buto. Supt is identified with Saft-el-Henneh; but the Phakusa and Fakus question stands over for further excavations to clear it up. In this subject, as in the history of the arts, the literature, and the ethnology, more excavation is imperatively needed. Money is forthcoming, but excavators are the main trouble to find. Some arrangement for training archaeological terriers and pointers is the first movement now needed towards opening up a wider view. The present volume makes us feel our deficiencies even more than our successes.

W. M. F. P.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN ANCIENT TOMBSTONE AT INISHOWEN.

London: Oct. 26, 1891.

In the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy for August, 1891, there is an account (p. 110) of an inscribed tombstone found within the walls of the old church of Clonca. The stone is well preserved. From end to end extends a Latin cross with the upper limb terminating in "serpents' heads"; while the base is beautifully developed into lilies. On the right of the cross is "a double-handed sculptured sword, full sized, with ornamental pommel and recurved guard." Alongside the sword is outlined a camán and naggy, or the club and ball used in hurley. On the other side of the cross is a carved stem, with a series of ornamental leaves on one side, and corresponding lilies on the other. The decoration is decidedly Gothic-looking, and the letters of the inscription are Gothic Majuscules. Dr. George Sigerson has made out the inscriptions, which are on each of the upper limb of the cross, to be as follows:

FERGUS MAC ALIAN DO RIN IN CLAGH SA,
i.e., Fergus Mac Alian made this stone; and

MAGNUS MAC ORRISTIN IA FO TRI SEO, i.e., Magnus Mac Orristin of the Isles under this Mound (trialh).

This mound covered one of the Norsemen of the Isles; since both of his names are clearly Scandinavian, and the time of his burial was during the period in which the Norsemen held the Sudreyar (Sodor) or South Islands. The name Magnús first appears in Norse history as the appellation of Magnús the Good (died 1024), as the "Olafs Saga Helga" (ch. iii.) shows; and it is there derived from Karla-Magnúsi (Charlemagne). From Magnús the Good "the name afterwards spread to all countries in which Norsemen settled" (Icelandic Dict. Cleasby and Vigfusson sub voce).

The Orristin is for the Norse Thorsteinn, which, following the Celtic Mac, loses its initial Th. Compare McCorkle and McCorkquodale, which are respectively for McThorkell and McThorketel. The name still occurs in Scotland: the Carse of McOrriston appears in the place-names of Perthshire, and it is probable that the Scotch surname Croston is its modern representative, cf. McIsaac and Kissack, &c. It may also give the key to the Manx "Christian," which has nothing to do with the Norse feminine name Kristin. In the genealogies of the chiefs of the Highland clans we find the name appearing. In that of the McNicols we have (Collect. de Rebus Albanicis, circa A.D. 1150) "Eoin Mc Eogan ic (for Vic, genitive of Mac) Eoin ic Nicaíl . . . ic Gillemare ic Seailb, ic Toircill (Thorkell) ic Totin (? Tosti), ic Torstain (Thorsteinn)," &c.

In the "Olafs Saga Tryggvasonar" (Flateyjarbok, vol. i. p. 418), a Magnus, son of Thorsteinn, is mentioned. He was grandfather of Bishop Magnus, who died 1149. No particulars of his career are there given; but the probable date of his death—the end of the eleventh or the beginning of the twelfth century—would, perhaps, be a little too early to correspond with the indications furnished by the lettering and ornaments on the tombstone. I can find no record of another Magnus, son of Thorstain, in the Corpus Poeticum Boreale or in the "Sturlunga Saga." Perhaps some of your readers may be able to throw further light upon this Norse sea-rover, whose "exquisite and unique monument" on the lonely promontory of Inishowen points him out as a Jarl of some distinction.

EDMUND McCLURE.

P.S.—Magnus Barfod, King of Norway, was slain in Ulster in 1103, but he was son of Olaf.

THE IRQANAT OF SHALMANESER II.

Weston-super-Mare: Oct. 9, 1891.

In the monolith inscription of Shalmaneser II., among the contingents of the Syrian alliance, we find the men of Irqanat to the number of 10,000, with ten chariots (Records of the Past, New Series, vol. iv. p. 70), in the array at the great battle of Qarqar.

I have often wondered where we should find Irqanat; for I cannot think it is Arqa, which occurs elsewhere under its proper name, although it is true that the next name is Arvad, the second after that Siana, which I take for Sahiun in the mountains eastward of Arvad, and the intermediate name is Usanat, which may be Uzanieh, south of Sahiun, rather than Us'û far away—"not far from Acre"—for just before we read of troops from Egypt, from Qûc, from Israel, Hamath, and Damascus.

It had occurred to me that possibly Irqanat may be Urganah, west of Antioch (Ourganah, Rey); but the other day, in reading over some notes of my friend Dr. Gwyther's interesting journey to M'arash, I came on a name which startled me as being identical with Irqanat—namely, Yargonat (as he spells it). I wrote to Dr. Gwyther for more information, which he has kindly supplied.

Yargonat is about five hours from Missis, and eight hours from Osmanieh (a town at the foot of the Amanus mountains, just at the point where the road leads up to the Devrishli pass—the same that still higher up is known as the Bagtché pass). Yargonat is on the great plain, so fruitful and abundantly watered by the river Jeihan and its tributaries, and dotted with artificial mounds. "I saw no mound adjacent to the modern village," writes Dr. Gwyther, "nor did I hear of any ruins or antiquities having been discovered thereabouts; but that probably, is because they have not yet been looked for." Dr. Gwyther was impressed with the feeling that the ancient inhabitants of that great and fertile Kilikian plain must have played no unimportant part in history.

Now looking at this region with regard to Assyrian lore, we see that on passing through the Amanus range (modern Giaour Dagh) at the Bagtsché pass, on the east side we should come on the very place that the German explorers have identified with the Sama'la of the Annals (see my letter in the ACADEMY of September 26, p. 266)—namely, Senjerli; and if the Yargonat of the plain to the west be Irqanat, it would either have been subject to the kingdom of Qûc or contiguous to it on the north. I leave this suggestion in the hands of Assyriologists and explorers, and shall be very glad to know whether it has any value. At all events it seems to me worth placing on record.

HENRY GEORGE TOMKINS.

THE CHESTER PIGS OF LEAD.

Lancing College, Shoreham: Nov. 2, 1891.

In the last number of the ACADEMY (p. 390) Prof. Rhys prints his view of two pigs of Roman lead found at Chester (C. I. L. vii. 1204; Ephem. vii. 1121). Instead of DECEANGI he reads DECEANGI, and connects this with Tegeingl, the district between Cheshire and the Clwyd. This district contains Roman lead workings, and Prof. Rhys conjectures for it an ancient name Deceanglia.

I do not like to contradict Prof. Rhys; but I must confess that, when I overhauled the two pigs to discover the L, I could only see an I. There is on each pig one or two marks which might be traces of a worn L—in one case much less probably than in the other. But there are similar marks elsewhere on the surfaces. As it stands, each letter is an I. It may have been L; but before we can say that it was, we must find another pig with L, or prove that Deceanglia is a true and proper form, while Deceangi and Ceangi are impossible. In his Celtic Britain (ed. i. p. 287) Prof. Rhys seems to take no objection to the latter forms, and suggests that Deceangi is connected with Tegeingl, as if the L were due to some other cause.

Meanwhile, the older DECEANGI is capable of interpretation. De Ceangi (s), the usual interpretation, is quite defensible. We have de Britanniis on another pig (C. I. L. vii. 1201); and the omission of the s is exactly paralleled by the De britanni on gold and silver coins of Claudius (Cohen No. 16 and elsewhere). Deceangi in one word, which others prefer, is an easy abbreviation of Deceangium. Tacitus (Ann. xii. 32) is not conclusive, as Mr. Furneaux points out. The spacing of the letters on the pigs and on other pigs, where the name occurs even more shortly put (DECEA, &c.), does not prove one thing or another. The evidence, finally, which is quoted by some writers (Evans, British Coins, p. 493; Vaillant, Saumon de plomb)—viz., an inscription EX KIAN or EX CEANGIS—appears to have arisen from a mistaken interpretation of another lead pig (C. I. L. vii. 1203), where EXKIAN stands for ex kalendis Januariis.

It appears, therefore, that we must wait for further evidence.

F. HAVERFIELD

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

SIR NOEL PATON has just completed a singularly impressive cabinet-sized picture, which derives its subject from the "Vision of the Valley of Dry Bones" of the Prophet Ezekiel. On an upright canvas he has depicted a lonely rocky plain, seen under the livid glare of a fiery sunset. In the foreground, and stretching away into the distance, are strewn the human skeletons, bleached and dry, from which life has long departed; and over them stands the nobly impassioned form of the Prophet, his hands held aloft invoking the potent energy of the heavens—their palms wide open as though to receive the divine gift, when it descends—and his countenance full of such life and vivid inspiration as might well "create a soul beneath the ribs of Death." Though the work, as we have indicated, is small in size, we believe it will rank as one of the most imaginative and successful of the painter's productions. Sir Noel is now engaged upon a large gallery picture, designed for exhibition, and to be engraved: one of those important religious and symbolical subjects that have almost exclusively engaged his brush during recent years.

MESSRS. DOWDESWELL will have on view next week, at their galleries in New Bond-street, Mr. Herbert Schmalz's large painting of "The Return from Calvary," to which reference has before been made in the ACADEMY. There will also be exhibited a series of smaller pictures by the same artist, illustrating a tour in Palestine from Jerusalem to Damascus.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL announce English translations of two more volumes of the monumental work on ancient art upon which MM. Perrot and Chipiez have been so long engaged. One will deal with Persia; the other with Phrygia, Lydia, Caria, and Lycia. Both will be abundantly illustrated.

A "Society of Scottish Artists" has been started in Edinburgh, under the presidency of Lord Justice General Robertson, and with Sir James D. Linton, Mr. John Pettie, and Mr. W. Q. Orchardson as vice-presidents. The society has been "formed with the view of holding an annual art exhibition in Edinburgh, to give inducement to the younger artists to produce more important and original works, by providing hanging space for such works"; and for this purpose the Board of Manufactures have, during April and May next, granted the use of the rooms in the National Gallery, in which the Royal Scottish Academy yearly exhibit. A special feature of the society's exhibitions is to be important loan examples of both British and foreign art; and we understand that several very rich private collections have been placed at the disposal of the council, which is composed, in nearly equal numbers, of painters and laymen.

WE hear that Sir F. Leighton has sent a donation to the rector, the Rev. J. R. Broughton, towards the restoration of the interesting little church of Oake, West Somerset.

THE STAGE.

WE are deprived of the satisfaction of seeing the Daly Company in the "School for Scandal"—the somewhat less classical comedy of "The Last Word" having been found so attractive. The performances of the company in London for the present will conclude with certain representations of "As You Like It," in which the Rosalind of Miss Rehan is recognised, not perhaps as essentially poetic, but as full of vitality and interest. The company is unlikely to appear again in London for eighteen months or thereabouts. It is in the spring of 1893, we understand, that Mr. Daly proposes to open the new theatre in the neighbourhood of Leicester-square, of which the foundation stone was "well and truly laid" by Miss Rehan a few days ago.

At the Prince of Wales's Theatre a farcical comedy called "The Planter"—which, as its very name will suggest to those familiar with the stage of France, has been adapted from the French—has been produced with success. The interest of the piece is, however, very unequally divided. The first act contains little that one may enjoy, except the spectacle of a vessel's deck, the like of which—it might be observed—had already afforded the public some gratification in "Pinafore" and in "The Overland Route." But when the "plantation" is reached, interest and amusement increase. There is negro and other melody, and negro and other humour. Mr. Yardley has so adapted the French piece that, while it is unquestionably inoffensive, it is presumably entertaining to the public. On the first night that excellent and serious actor, Mr. Warren, seemed a little out of place. Mr. Charles Groves attested, as heretofore, his brightness and skill in eccentric comedy, and Miss Helen Forsyth was included in the cast.

"HUMPTY DUMPTY" is the subject of the pantomime which Sir Augustus Harris will produce at Drury-lane on Boxing Night.

A REVIVAL of "Aunt Jack" promptly succeeds the unsuccessful production of Mr. C. Fitch's piece at the Court Theatre. "Aunt Jack" is, at all events, a satisfactory stop-gap, and a stop-gap was urgently required. We may hereafter have "The Magistrate," as we hinted last week. But Mr. Arthur Cecil is engaged for the present.

WE are glad to believe that Mr. Henry James's "American" has now definitely "caught on"—as the ugly phrase goes—at the Opera Comique. The piece, of course, has both serious and comic qualities of a high order, and the interpretation, by a cast of remarkable capacity upon the whole, has gained in finish and force. Mr. Compton, however, does not rest upon his oars; and while "The American" holds the evening bill, there is a matinée every Wednesday, at which "The Liar" and a new little piece of serious aim are performed, as we hear, admirably.

THE Shakspeare Reading Society—of which Mr. Henry Irving is the president, and of which that distinguished and admirable Shaksperian student, Mr. William Poel, is the instructor—announces what is, we believe, a novelty in their annals, a "Costume Recital," which will be given on the ample stage of a somewhat remote suburban hall (the Ladbroke Hall, at Notting-hill) on November 18. It is now some six months, as we understand, since the piece, which is to be recited on the present occasion, was put into rehearsal; and all has proceeded with care. The piece is "Measure for Measure." "We have some novel conditions," writes one who is interested in the proceedings: "novel in so far that we are trying to act the play as far as possible on the lines on which it was run in Shakspeare's time. To be as severely classical as we can it is proposed to give no names of the performers, that the whole attention of actor and audience may be concentrated upon the fulfilment of the requirements of the play." It may be added that the production is in other respects less sternly anonymous; for Mr. William S. Vinning, it is announced, has composed expressly for this occasion the music of the song. The evening is certain to be one of real intellectual interest.

MUSIC.

THE AUTUMN OPERA SEASON.

M. BRUNEAU's opera, "Le Rêve," was produced last Thursday week at Covent Garden. The libretto by M. Louis Gallet is based on M. Zola's novel of the same name. The story of the loves of Angélique and Félicien, the maiden's ecstasies supply, the one a human, the other a mystic element, two of the most powerful factors in opera. The very title of the work would prevent one from expecting anything very dramatic in character; it bears in fact the title of drame lyrique. It will not be necessary to describe the plot in detail; the novel, one of the masterpieces of modern literature, is sufficiently familiar. M. Bruneau's music is modern, and in some respects ultra-modern, in character. The voice is French, but the hands are German; the music recalls Gounod and Massenet, but the workmanship Wagner. This is neither praise nor blame; it simply means that the composer has been influenced by his surroundings, and that, like some of his contemporaries, he has not been able to escape the epidemic of representative themes. Of the latter he makes prominent use, and in so doing enlists the sympathy of those who believe that what was good for Wagner must also be good for composers who come after him. But by following this course he challenges direct comparison. The thematic web leads one at times to imagine that the composer worked from the head, rather than the heart; but then comes the meeting of the lovers, or the powerful scene in the cathedral when Monseigneur Jean, in reply to Angélique's appeal, utters the merciless "jamais," and one feels that M. Bruneau has really something to say. There are, in fact, some very powerful moments; and such moments not only make one forget much that seems dull or extravagant, but also make one extremely careful in pronouncing judgment on what, at first hearing, does not convey a favourable impression. There is one striking feature about "Le Rêve": the stage often attracts attention, so that the music is almost forgotten. Is it because tone and word are so happily blended together, or because the music lacks meaning? This, again, cannot be decided by a first hearing. The opera certainly excited interest, which, had the death scene been carried out as indicated in the score, would have been fully maintained until the close. The end on Thursday suggested Italian opera rather than music-drama. It will be seen by the above remarks that caution is the order of the day. It is easy to run down a work and call it eccentric; it is easy to praise up a work for the very same reason. It is far more difficult to determine whether the cloak of eccentricity conceals true merit within its folds, and whether the moments of apparent inspiration are mere reflections, or the outbursts of genius. The merits of "Le Rêve" seem far to outweigh its faults; and the better it becomes known, the more, I believe, will it be appreciated. Mlle. Simonnet as Angélique was admirable, and M. Bouvet as Jean d'Haute-cœur acted and sang with wonderful dignity. Mme. Deschamps-Jehin and M. Lorrin played their rôles (Hubertine and Hubert) effectively. M. Engel was an earnest Félicien. M. Leon Jehin conducted with marked ability.

M. MESSENGER's opera, "La Basoche," was produced at Mr. D'Oyley Carte's Theatre on Tuesday evening. The composer has written operas before, but this, apparently, is the first one of any note. The libretto, by M. Albert Carré, is amusing. An English Princess mistakes the mock student-king "La Basoche" for the real king of France to whom she has been married by proxy; and Colette, the peasant girl, the wife of "La Basoche," finds herself taken to court in place of the Princess. Further, the scenes at the inn of the Pewter Platter are full not only of fun but of mystery, for each of the two women is anxious to conceal her identity; while in the last act their appearance at the court of the French monarch, both decked out in queenly attire, adds to the merriment and confusion. It is, in fact, a comedy of errors. To describe the plot in detail would only spoil the enjoyment of any readers who may go to see it. Much of the success of the piece depends upon the story, for the work is not an opera, but an opéra comique—i.e., with spoken dialogue. M. Messenger's music is bright, tuneful, and scored with great ability. But it is neither deep nor elaborate, and thus forms a striking contrast to a French work heard quite recently at Covent Garden. Its great merit, however, is its appropriateness; it fits the words, as the French say, comme un gant. The composer is at his best when the jollity is at its highest. In some of the songs the matter may be commonplace; but this is scarcely noticed, owing to the skilful and refined manner in which the music is presented. The graceful dance at the opening of the third act deserves special mention. The performance on Tuesday evening was, on the whole, an exceedingly good one. Miss Lucile Hill, as Colette, achieved a legitimate success; and Mr. David Bispham, who impersonated the Duc de Longueville, sang and acted with marked ability. To these two, indeed, the audience were chiefly indebted for their amusement. Mr. Ben Davies was an effective mock king; Miss Esther Palliser was a showy princess, but evidently found her high part trying. Mr. John Le Hay, the host of the "Pewter Platter" was, as became his rôle, funny. M. F. Cellier conducted in an efficient manner. The mounting of the piece is admirable, but this one expects from Mr. D'Oyley Carte. Quite apart from the music, the charming stage pictures will draw the public. But the piece wants cutting down. There are moments in which the interest flags, and this can easily be avoided. Also, the long wait between the second and third acts ought, if possible, to be reduced. It is a great advantage for light pieces of this kind to be put before the public in a concise and lively manner. At the conclusion of the piece, actors, conductor, composer, stage manager, and manager were called before the footlights.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

A CHORAL setting of Robert Browning's "Women and Roses" was the novelty last week at the Crystal Palace. The words scarcely yearn for music, still less for choral music; but the composer, Mr. C. A. Lidgley, has displayed judgment in the form, skill in the workmanship, and taste in the orchestral coloring. The setting is, indeed, exceedingly effective. Mr. Lidgley was summoned to the platform at the close, and loudly applauded. The programme opened with Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," in which the choir was heard to advantage. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Dora Bernard, and Messrs. Iver MacKay and Ludwig. Miss Bernard, notwithstanding her nervousness, made a favourable debut. Mr. Ludwig's sympathetic bass voice was scarcely under proper control. Mendelssohn's fine work was followed by a still finer—Schubert's Incidental Music to "Rosamunde," or rather an important selection from it. Mrs. Hutchinson sang the "Romance" with feeling, and Mr. Manns and his band rendered full justice to the lovely instrumental movements.

THE opening Popular Concert on Monday evening drew a large audience. The familiar quartet party was only represented by Messrs. Ries and Straus; Mr. Willy Hess was leader, while Mr. Whitehouse appeared in place of Signor Piatti. Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1) was performed extremely well, though scarcely with the usual intensity. M. Paderewski was the pianist, and played Chopin's "Funeral March" Sonata. With the exception of one or two al caprandum effects, the reading was a fine one; the weird and difficult finale, was a technical triumph. A showy and attractive Liszt Etude was given by way of encore. Mr. Norman Salmond sang Handel's "Tyrannic Love," with much taste and feeling. The programme included M. Paderewski's Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Op. 13).

This popular pianist gave his last "farewell" recital at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. There was a large audience and the usual enthusiasm. He gave an interesting rendering of Mendelssohn's "Variations Sérieuses." His reading of the thirteenth variation deserves mention; the notes for the right hand were really played staccato; most pianists take it at so fast a rate that the effect intended by the composer is lost. The principal piece of the afternoon was Beethoven's Sonata in F minor. M. Paderewski was quite in earnest, and though the reading of the slow movement at times lacked calm and dignity, the performance generally was one of great power. In his Schumann pieces the pianist, as usual, seemed to infuse too much of his own personality into the music. In solos by Chopin, Rubinstein, and other modern composers, he was most successful, and at the close of the recital, in response to the enthusiastic applause, he played two additional Chopin solos.

MR. GEORGE GROSSMITH gave a "humorous and musical" recital at St. James's Hall on Monday afternoon. In his new sketch, "Is Music a Failure?" he gave some droll illustrations of music in society and out of it; and in another new sketch, "Playacting," he introduced funny examples of the artificiality of the stage. For nearly two hours he kept his audience thoroughly amused.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

NOW READY, REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF NICCOLO MACHIAVELLI.

By Professor PASQUALE VILLARI, Author of "The Life of Savonarola," &c.

Translated by LINDA VILLARI.

In Two Volumes, containing New Preface and Two New Chapters, with 4 Copperplate, and 29 other Full-page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, 32s.

FINE-ART GIFT BOOK.

THE WOMEN of the FRENCH SALONS. A Series of Articles on the French Salons of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. By AMELIA G. MASON. Profusely Illustrated. Fcap. folio, cloth, 25s.

THE ADVENTURE SERIES.—NEW VOLUMES.

KOLOKOTRONES: Klepht and Warrior. Translated from the Greek, and Prefaced with an Account of the Klephts. By Mrs. EDMONDS. With Introductory Preface by M. J. GENNADIUS, Greek Minister Resident, London.

A MASTER MARINER: being the Life and Adventures of Captain ROBERT WILLIAM EASTWICK. Edited by HERBERT COMPTON. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

A HISTORY OF PLAYING CARDS.

THE DEVIL'S PICTURE BOOKS. By Mrs. J. K. Van Rensselaer. With many Full-page Coloured and Plain Illustrations. Cloth elegant, 25s. net. Just ready.

BY DR. BIRKBECK HILL.

WRITERS and READERS. Educational Lectures. By George Birkbeck HILL, D.C.L., Pembroke College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE CHILDREN'S LIBRARY.—New Volume Just Ready.

THE CHINA CUP, and other Fairy Tales. By Felix Volkhovskiy. Illustrated by Malisheff.

Recently Published.

THE BROWN OWL. By Ford H. Hueffer. STORIES from FAIRYLAND. Trans. from the Greek by Mrs. EDMONDS. Illus. by Thomas Riley.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "HOW TO BE HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED."

THE BUSINESS of LIFE: a Book for Every One. By the Rev. E. J. Hardy, Author of "How to be Happy though Married," &c. Square imperial 16mo, cloth, 6s.

THE PSEUDONYM LIBRARY.—NEW VOLUMES.

Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. each.

EUROPEAN RELATIONS: a Tyrolese Sketch. By Talmage Dalin.

SOME EMOTIONS and a MORAL. By John Oliver Hobbes.

JOHN SHERMAN, and DHOYA. By Ganconagh.

Not ready.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

JAMES NISBET & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

ST. PAUL'S SONG of SONGS: a Practical Exposition of the Eighth Chapter to the Romans. By J. R. MACDUFF, D.D. Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BIBLE OBJECT LESSONS. By the Rev. James Wells, M.A. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo 3s. 6d.

THE PEACE of the CHURCH: being the Bohlen Lectures for 1891. By the Rev. W. Reed HUNTINGTON, Rector of Grace Church, New York. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE CHURCH and HER DOCTRINE. Essays by (amongst others) the Rev. Henry Wace, D.D., the BISHOP of OSSORY, the Rev. Sir EMILIUS LAURIE, the BISHOP of SYDNEY, the Revs. C. H. WALLER, M.A., H. C. G. MOULE, M.A., &c., &c. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

CORN on the MOUNTAINS: a Series of Sermons. By Rev. John Robertson, the Gorbals Tabernacle, Glasgow. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE COMPUTATION of 666, and its Relation to all Anti-Christian Systems; but with Special Reference to a Person—the Coming Anti-Christ—to be overthrown by the Sun of Righteousness. By TWO SERVANTS OF CHRIST. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE NEW LIFE: Words of God for Disciples of Christ. By the Rev. Andrew Murray, Author of "Abide in Christ," &c. Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

AUSTIN PHELPS: a Memoir. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. With Portrait and other Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo.

FIRST BATTLES, and HOW to FIGHT THEM. By F. A. Atkins, Author of "Moral Muscle," &c. Small crown 8vo, 1s.

ABBA, FATHER: Helps to Prayer and Meditation. By the Rev. C. G. Baskerville, M.A. New and Revised Edition. Small crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

LORD EBURY as a CHURCH REFORMER. With Selections from his Speeches and Letters. By the Hon. and Rev. E. V. BLIGH, M.A. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

THE FIRST THING in the WORLD; or, The Primacy of Faith. By A. J. Gordon, D.D., Author of "Ecce Venit," "In Christ," &c. Fcap. 8vo, 6d.

THE WELL-SPRING of IMMORTALITY: a Tale of Indian Life. By S. S. Hewlett, Author of "Daughters of the King," and "None of Self and All of Thee. With 25 Illustrations. Pott 4to, 5s.

PICTURED PALESTINE. By the Rev. James Neil, M.A., Author of "Palestine Explored," &c. With Eighty Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MR. BALLANTYNE'S NEW BOOKS.

THE BUFFALO RUNNERS: a Tale of the Red River Plains. With 6 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

A COXSWAIN'S BRIDE; or, The Rising Tide: and other Tales. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

NEW BOOKS BY EMMA MARSHALL.

THOSE THREE; or, Little Wings: a Story for Girls. With 6 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

IN the PURPLE. With 4 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MY LADY BOUNTIFUL. With 4 Illustrations. Small crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

MISS AGNES GIBERNE'S NEW BOOK.

THE DALRYMPLES. With 4 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ABOVE BOARD: a Tale of Adventure on the Sea. By William Charles Metcalfe. With 6 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

WORK, WAIT, WIN. By Ruth Lamb, Authoress of "One Little Vein of Dross," &c. With 6 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO. beg to announce that Mr. SHORTHOUSE'S New Novel, BLANCHE LADY FALAISE, is now ready at all Libraries and Booksellers. Cr. 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

GLOBE—"The style is so smooth, the tone so high, the atmosphere so rarefied, and the art of the narrative so far skilful, that one cannot choose but read."
SCOTTISH LEADER—"Stands far above the ordinary run of novels. It contains many passages of remarkable beauty, presents the reader with several striking studies of character, and conveys, in the garb of fiction, a powerful moral lesson."
ANTI-JACOBIN—"A work of conspicuous ability, displaying at times genuine beauty of description and masterly analysis of character. It will certainly rank high among the publications of the season."
ANTI-JACOBIN—"A powerful, striking, and fascinating romance."

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

PARTS I. AND II. NOW READY. Super royal 8vo. Each Part 1s. net.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF GREEN'S SHORT HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE.

